Obviously, if nothing happens, a golden opportunity has been wasted. My hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central said that, in both the inspections in which he had been involved, the teachers were left saying, "It has got us right, but it has told us nothing that we did not know." I had another interesting conversation with a mutual friend of ours, who shall remain nameless, who said of LEA inspections, "Not one of them has been a surprise to me." My question to him and to the schools is, "What did you do about it?" It will be no good knowing about it and saying, "They have not surprised me" if nothing is done about it. The fact that they knew about it but the situation is still the same leads me to think that what was missing was the ability to do anything about it. The difficult part, with respect to Ofsted, is knowing what to do about it.

I am proud to say that the Government have opened that debate. I acknowledge, as did my hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield, that the last Conservative Government introduced some of the key measures for assessing performance—SATS, end of key stage results, performance tables and inspection. All that accountability information had to be put in place. What the previous Government never put in place was a school improvement package to go with it. Schools were therefore left on their own.

I agree with most of what my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central says, but on this occasion I agree with the hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. St. Aubyn). It is crucial that Ofsted remains independent. What I worry about most is inspectors coming back and inspecting again. They are not so perfect—no one is—that they might not be tempted to think, "They have done what I said, so it must be right." It is more complex than that.

My hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central hit on what I think is the answer—the local authority and the Government have a responsibility to ensure that the school is not left by itself. The worst thing about a bad

Ofsted inspection report is the loneliness the staff must feel on Friday night and on Monday morning when they return to school. It is the feeling of being alone; they are not one of the majority with good inspection reports and wonder what to do about it. The measures that we have introduced to support those schools are showing results. The local authority must move in, not so much to tell the school what to do, but—this is the key point—to ensure that it learns from other schools that are already doing well. Successful schools are the best teachers, not Ofsted inspectors, advisers or Ministers.

Dr. Harris: Will the Minister give way?

Ms Estelle Morris: I shall when I have finished my train of thought.

Part of the challenge is to make successful links through the extension and spreading of good practice, which enables schools to learn from each other. My hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Charlotte Atkins) referred to a deputy head who had gone to work with a struggling school. That is one way of spreading good practice.

The best way to achieve objectives—whether twinning of heads, or twinning with other schools that have had similar experiences, enabling staff to share good practice or professional development—must be determined not by academic research, but by what works in schools in similar circumstances. We are beginning to build that in. We have developed beacon schools with the mission of sharing good practice. We have given specialist schools the role of working with schools that may not be as strong. We have set up the standards website. Our advisers spend days and weeks phoning schools and saying, "You're weak on that. Do you know the school down the road that is slightly better?" I acknowledge that we are just beginning to try to develop connections with good and improving schools. However, I would sooner go down that road than only have inspectors who inspect, advise and inspect again.

I applaud the school in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central, which said to an inspector, "Can you come in and tell us what went wrong?" I have no problem with that as long as the same inspector does not come back to inspect. In that situation, an individual took on a different role and I have no problem with that. Inspectors, in a different part of their life and wearing a different hat, might contribute to advice about school improvement. Their expertise should not be ignored. I do not care whether inspectors assume a different guise. The key point is that the follow-up must be outside the Ofsted framework.

Dr. Harris: I do not disagree with anything that the hon. Lady has said. I just want to take her back to the thought that some schools knew that there was a problem, so the report would not tell them anything that they did not know. The report allows such schools to access the funding available under the statutory duty of LEAs to support those that are deemed to be "failing". Would it be sensible to ensure that schools can either access that help directly, if they accept that there is a problem, without having wait for an inspection, or call in an inspection, rather than just hope for improvements?

Ms Morris: The hon. Gentleman makes a good point. The Ofsted report states that schools in special measures have a good record. They are leaving special measures more quickly than they did under the regime of the previous Government. For the first time, fewer schools are going into special measures than are coming out. If I remember correctly, about 68 schools went into special measures in the autumn term of 1998 and 47 went into special measures in the autumn term of 2000. The hon. Gentleman was right to say that schools with serious weaknesses are not making sufficient progress. If schools go into special measures, the support mechanism will be there to get them out. The really good news is that they stay out and grow from strength to strength.

Mike Tomlinson said that schools with special weaknesses on the second inspection round sometimes slip into special measures. We recognise that that is a real challenge. As I said, schools and the LEAs should know if they are heading on the downward trail and do something about it. The hon. Members for Guildford and for South Holland and The Deepings (Mr. Hayes) were right: there is so much good quality information in the system that we should all know if a school is heading for serious weaknesses or special measures.

I can ask for the most elaborate performance data on any one of the 24,000 schools in the country and receive the details in two minutes. We have responsibilities to assist such schools, to monitor them before the inspectors visit them and to stop them going into special measures. The hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon is right that the schools have to key into better resources and support.

In January at the north of England conference, I announced up to £70,000 extra for all schools in which less than 25 per cent. of pupils were achieving five A to C grades. The excellence in cities clusters are not just magicked out of the air. It is not a case of, "Where shall we have the next excellence in cities cluster?" They are areas with a high level of free school meals and under-achievement. Our policy is to pile on with the basics of effective literacy and numeracy strategies for all students. An effective key stage 3 strategy is to come. The hon. Gentleman is dead right. Let us use the extra money to pinpoint support for schools that need it most because of deprivation and under-achievement. To date, there has been a tendency to think that those matters go together, but they do not. That has been a failure in the system. We have piled in the money after the failure has taken place.

We must become brave enough to say that, whenever a school goes into special measures, the system has failed—someone should have kept the school out before that occurred. Not until then will we be able to say that we have a good school improvement system. We have put in place a lever that will take us in that direction.

Mr. St. Aubyn: I am grateful to the Minister for her generous comments. As she said, given all the available information, she should know what is going on. Does she agree with the chief inspector's assessment of the situation in last week's report that the increase in standards is at risk?

Ms Morris: Good teachers are essential to the improvement in standards. We have high standards only because teachers are teaching more effectively. We have played a role in bringing that about. If we did not have sufficiently well-qualified effective teachers, standards would be at risk. The Government have introduced golden hellos, training salaries and the paying off of student loans. They have achieved more routes into teaching and developed courses so that people can obtain a degree and be teachers in three years instead of four. We would not have done that if we did not acknowledge the existence of a problem. A lot of resources must be devoted to the issue because, if it is not addressed, standards could fall. We have always made the link between having sufficient well-qualified teachers and high standards.

The hon. Member for South Holland and The Deepings is right to say that the 1994 statistics show that teacher numbers were going down until last year, when the situation began to improve. It has just occurred to me that this is the first report since the last occasion on which the economy was strong. Teaching recruitment fell at the end of the 1980s and the start of the 1990s. Her Majesty's inspectorate did not produce reports then, but it did produce them all the way through the period of economic decline and recession, when teacher recruitment was easier.

The Secretary of State, my boss, always says three things to me. Have we recognised the problem? We have. Are we doing something to solve it? We are. Is there evidence that that is producing a result? There is. I am not going to repeat what I said in two debates on the Floor of the House, but the link to which I referred explains why we are spending so much money. Evidence is beginning to show that it is having an effect: applications are 12 per cent. up on this time last year. Expressions of interest, which have increased greatly, are not included in that figure. Applications have risen by 7 per cent. in secondary schools and by the balance in primary schools.

People should not be churlish, because we admit that there is a problem. Everyone in the House should be honest about teaching with those who are considering careers in the profession. Those who exaggerate the problem by saying that Government measures are not working dissuade people from entering the profession, which does kids, parents and teachers a disservice. The measures are beginning to work, but I am not complacent.

Mr. Hayes: Far from being churlish, I revered the role of the educator during my speech. The Minister has made a good argument in respect of retention, and I acknowledge that there has been progress in maths and English. However, will she now address the problem subject areas? The Library figures show that retention for teachers under 30 is a problem; the proportion of that age group leaving the profession has increased annually since 1995.

Mr. John Butterfill (in the Chair): Briefly.

Mr. Hayes: Paying off student loans of new teachers will not deal with that problem.

Ms Morris: I do not have the figures with me, and I will clarify later if I get them wrong. However, I believe that application numbers rose for all but two subjects—I do not remember which ones—and that applications for those two had fallen by only a small percentage. I am not complacent, but application numbers were up, and the golden hellos caused the first reverse for a while in the decline of maths applications.

I do not want to get bogged down so, if hon. Members will excuse me, I will move on to the subjects of education action zones and pupil behaviour. Too many Opposition Members have missed out the same sentences while quoting from a paragraph of the Ofsted report. The report acknowledges that, for the first time, the instances of bad and destructive behaviour have increased. That provides a warning, because it is evidence based, and we will investigate. Opposition Members have quoted the sentence:

"This year, for the first time in recent years, inspectors report increasing levels of poor behaviour."

However, no one has gone on to quote:

"This is still far from a general malaise, since the proportion of good behaviour far outweighs that which is unsatisfactory, but it is an early warning."

We have taken that early warning, which is why we have been developing initiatives and spending money for the past three years. Bad behaviour does not start on the first day of the academic year—it builds up. There is general building up of bad and niggly behaviour. Low level disobedience sometimes becomes more problematic and teachers find that they can no longer cope. Teachers do not go home in the summer and come back in September and find that behaviour has worsened. There is a general decline, which is why, over the past three years, we have made money available so that we will have pupil referral units within full-time education.

The hon. Member for South Holland and The Deepings omitted the sentence from the report, which states:

"The improving performance of pupil referral units should help with this challenge."

I pay tribute to those who work in our PRUs. They cope with difficult jobs, and their performance has improved—although from too low a base. There are also learning support units—1,000 on-site learning support units—and the mentors in excellence in cities. I cannot find a soul who has a bad word to say about a mentor. Teachers are glad that mentors are there because they can begin to work with children as individuals. We must consider that package of measures together: learning support units, on-site units, full-time education for excluded children, more PRUs, more qualified teachers in them and more money to help teachers to work with the disaffected. I do not want to see worse behaviour. I take the early warning, but I have every confidence that the measures that we will continue to put in place will help us to overcome such problems, although I am not complacent.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield that what will contribute most to reducing bad behaviour is better literacy and numeracy results at key stage 2. Many children who misbehave at secondary school do not have the basic skills to access the secondary level curriculum, and poor behaviour often derives from that.

I shall now deal with education action zones, excellence in cities, key stage 3 and fresh start. The difficult end of the school improvement market is, and always has been, in those areas to which the hon. Member for South Holland and The Deepings referred, which face a multiplicity of challenges. There is acute poverty, low expectation, and no experience of going to university. There is the failure to master skills—often, historically, there has not been an opportunity for good quality early years education. Yet, parents in those circumstances are as aspirational for their children as parents in the more affluent areas.

Some kids who are born into this world with the potential to achieve have almost lost that ability by the age of five. Where there is such multiplicity of disadvantage, it sometimes takes longer to get it right. I have always said, and will say to my dying day, that I would rather try and not make it in the first year than turn my back, which is what happened for decades under previous Governments. If, for example, Ofsted says that in the fresh start programme three children have shown progress and five have not, then I thank God that three are making progress. That means thousands more children will have a better life chance, because in some circumstances, schools have been failing the kids, sometimes for decades.

Where children are not making progress, we will try something different. Some of those referred to in the Ofsted report as not making progress, are now doing so—I receive fortnightly monitoring reports on them. We should never give up, we must be open and honest—just as schools have to be with Ofsted reports. The performance of our initiatives should be put on the table for debate. However, the general spread of the initiatives to raise standards is working. It is working because we have shown leadership as a Government and because we have committed the resources. Above all, it is working because we are lucky enough to live in a country where we have a profession that is prepared to stand up and be counted, to acknowledge good practice and to learn from it. Although sometimes it does so with reticence, it is professional enough to change its practice where necessary to raise standards.

The end result is an education system that is far from perfect, but improving. Certainly, after three or four years under this Government, many more children have the good fortune to be educated in many more good schools. I am happy to acknowledge that Ofsted is one of the organisations that helps us to celebrate that progress and achievement. I pay tribute to it, as I do to both the education service and the Select Committee's work.

Question put and agreed to.

Revenue Support Grant (Norfolk)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Mike Hall.]

9.30 am

Mr. Keith Simpson (Mid-Norfolk): I am pleased to be sitting here under your eagle eye this morning, Madam Deputy Speaker, and I am grateful to have the opportunity to discuss the important matter of the revenue support grant for Norfolk, and local government finance support for Norfolk in general. I welcome to the debate my hon. Friend the Member for North Norfolk (Mr. Prior) and my right hon. Friends the Members for South-West Norfolk (Mrs. Shephard) and for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor), as I do the hon. Members for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) and for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson), who is sitting where the Liberal Democrats usually sit. I do not know whether he is making a statement by so doing.

I also welcome to the debate the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth). I am loth to congratulate him on his promotion because, as a Whip myself, I prefer to think that he has been translated into another sphere. The military historian in me believes that he is in the position of a German general staff officer in about 1942, involved with planning operations and training, who finds himself translated to command a division in the Stalingrad pocket. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions could be roughly compared with that.

My theme today, which I hope is shared by colleagues, is a fair deal for Norfolk. I say that against the background of the outbreak of foot and mouth disease. Fortunately, to date, we have not yet had such a case in Norfolk, but the constituencies of many colleagues have. Many people in the rural communities of Norfolk are terrified of the possible impact that the disease may have on their lives and on our economy. Norfolk is special to its Members of Parliament, not only because we represent constituencies there, but because it is an outstanding county. It is the second largest county in the United Kingdom. Its population is in excess of 700,000—a population that is concentrated heavily in the three major towns of Norwich, King's Lynn and Yarmouth, but one that is spread out over such an enormous county.

The county has an extensive coastline, which reminds me of the joke made by the late Professor Malcolm Bradbury. When he was lecturing at the university of East Anglia, he said that Norfolk was cut off on three sides by the sea and on the fourth side by Anglia Rail. One of our most famous sons, Horatio Nelson, used to talk about going into Norfolk and coming out of Norfolk, as though it was a separate country. At times, the people of Norfolk feel that they are apart from the rest of the United Kingdom. During the past four years, they have faced several severe constraints. Due partly to our geography, even those in the major towns are reliant on the use of motor vehicles.

I found out from the Library that the average availability of one or more cars in the United Kingdom is 66.6 per cent. In my constituency of mid-Norfolk, it is 83.1 per cent. That is not because people in mid-Norfolk have more money than others in the United Kingdom, but because cars in mid-Norfolk are a necessity, not a luxury. Therefore, anything to do with the cost of running a car has a major impact on individuals' finances and on how the county councils and district councils deliver their services. To enable people to move around Norfolk is an added cost that the major unitary authorities do not face.

Understanding local government finance is like understanding the Schleswig Holstein question in the 19th century. As hon. Members may know, the late Lord Palmerston said that only three men understood the Schleswig Holstein question; one had died, one was now mad and he, Lord Palmerston, had forgotten what the question was. If that is true in general, it is so specifically when considering the present Government and the way in which they have financed local government since 1997.

Our debate must be seen against a background of a Government who, I am sad to say—I note that the Minister is trying not to smile about this—have achieved a reputation for spin over substance, and a habit of announcing and re-announcing measures. That also applies to the revenue support grant and local government finance. The way in which the Government have organised local government finance has been detrimental to the shire counties, especially Norfolk. I remind the House that, as a direct consequence of the Government's changes in methodology introduced in 1997, the shire counties will have lost out to the sum of approximately £700 million. Norfolk must face part of that, which puts us at a disadvantage.

Since 1997, council tax in England has increased by three times the rate of inflation. This year, council tax payers in Norfolk will see an increase of 6.25 per cent., which is almost three times the rate of inflation. The Minister for Local Government and the Regions, the right hon. Member for North-West Durham (Ms Armstrong), estimated that the average band D council tax bill would rise by 5.1 per cent., yet Norfolk county council has been forced to agree to an increase of 6.25 per cent. Commenting on this year's local government finance settlement, the Minister said:

> "Given these government increases in grant, I would therefore expect the majority of local authorities to be setting a lower Council Tax this year than last year, when the increase was 6.1 per cent."

Unfortunately for Norfolk county council tax payers, last year the rise was 9.8 per cent., not the Minister's guesstimate of 6.1 per cent. The local government finance settlement that Norfolk has received during the past four years has, with one exception, meant cuts in real terms and progressive increases in council tax. This year, Miss Celia Cameron, leader of the Labour-Liberal coalition running Norfolk county council, has written to the Minister for Local Government and the Regions because she is concerned that Norfolk's revenue support grant will be £4.5 million lower than the council's estimates.

If one examines the RSG allocation for Norfolk in the local government finance budget over the past four years, one sees that, for the year 1998-99, there was a decrease of 0.41 per cent. In 1990-2000 there was an increase of 3.53 per cent., and in the period 2000-01 there was a decrease of 3.48 per cent. This year, surprise, surprise, there is an increase of 9.78 per cent., although I do not suspect that that has anything to do with a general election. Until this year, Norfolk has been in deficit and that has had a major impact on council services. In addition, during the past four years we have received inadequate local government finance settlements, and the council tax payers of Norfolk have seen a reduction in the quality and extent of services that they receive from the county council, for which, ironically, they have to pay more.

Councillors in Norfolk have told me that one of the principal causes of the council tax rises is the impact of Government stealth taxes, such as higher fuel tax, higher landfill tax and new taxes on pension funds that are passed on to council tax payers. Increases in the cost of petro-carbons for Norfolk county council this year are DERV, 6 per cent.; petrol, 4 per cent.; gasoil, 11 per cent.; and kerosene, 29 per cent. I remind colleagues that, in a county such as Norfolk, with a population that is spread out, transport costs are crucial. Those additional costs are separate from any local government finance or settlement. All sorts of extra costs for consultation must also be added, relating to, for example, best value, community strategies, verification frameworks and performance indicators, all of which will cost the council large sums.

Although I approve of the management techniques and robustness introduced by the previous Conservative Governments and continued by this Government, many of us feel that many levels of government are now being managed to death and that there is no direct relation between management costs and output and quality of service. For example, Norfolk police authority is only too well aware that best practice costs it several hundred thousand pounds a year and ties up several valuable members of staff for what is ultimately no real increase in the deliveries not only that it would like but that people in Norfolk expect.

During the past few years, there has been an enormous increase in cuts or deferment of services in Norfolk. We have a £90 million-pound backlog in road maintenance. We have experienced severe cuts in social services, to which I shall return shortly; chaos in our schools, with children being bussed around the county; and badly thought through school reorganisation. We have had a muddle over the waste disposal strategy, and that strategy, along with the moneys allocated to it, will be a major issue in future. Library hours and the availability of books have been reduced.

I should like briefly to touch on an example from the past four years. A result of local government finance awards and council policy was the closure in 1998 of many youth centres throughout Norfolk. In my constituency of mid-Norfolk, the youth centre in the small market town of Aylsham, which has a population of about 4,000, was closed. Colleagues from Norfolk know only too well that, outside the major cities, there is not a lot for young people to do in the country. The closure of a youth centre, where young people congregate to get away from their parents, will probably result in their going elsewhere and trying to get into pubs, which invariably leads to trouble. The gap left by the youth centre that was closed is now being ably filled, at a cost, by a small community centre financed entirely by local churches and surviving from hand to mouth. It is used by not only young people but mothers, in the mornings, and pensioners, and I salute that. I realise that the Government and councils are under pressure for money, but I firmly believe that youth centres are a good way of investing in the future and ensuring that young people have an opportunity to do what they want without being tempted into casual violence and drugs.

The impact on the people of Norfolk is not entirely consequential on Government policy. I believe, as might be expected, that the problem has been compounded by eight years of a Labour-Liberal coalition running Norfolk county council. Obviously, the council has had to make decisions within budget, and we are now living with the consequences. We have seen a growth in bureaucracy, a borrowing of money from the reserves, and time and energy wasted on talk about visions and stakeholders rather than spent considering the quality of service that can be delivered.

The Government recognised that, this year, many county councils faced the prospect of a disastrous rise in council tax, and have attempted to come to those councils' rescue with extra resources. It may seem churlish, but I regard a lot of that money as funny money with strings attached, as do many local councils. We estimate that Norfolk county council should have levied a 10 per cent. increase in council tax this year, but it has levied only a 6.25 per cent. increase. I say "only", although that is three times the rate of inflation. The council has been able to do that largely because it has received extra money from the Government, but also due to some creative accounting in its budget. For example, money has been moved out of the highways reserves and cuts have been made in social services.

I come briefly to the impact made by the Government's failure properly to fund Norfolk, and to the effect on my constituents of the council's problems. The impact will be at its greatest in social services, on which there has been an estimated overspend of £2.7 million. The Government's area cost allowance criteria contain a bias against counties such as Norfolk, where sparsity of population creates problems. The Government have failed to take into account a steady increase in population, especially among the elderly. In my constituency, some 20.8 per cent. of the population is of pensionable age compared with 18.7 per cent. nationally. One might say that that is only a 2 per cent. difference, but on tight budgets such as Norfolk's that can make all the difference between just about getting along and failing to deliver.

Under the council's proposals for next year's budget, the social services budget will see increased charges and cuts. Charges for meals on wheels will rise from £1.80 to £2, the cost of transport to day centres will rise by approximately 50 per cent. and the cost of delivering occupational therapy equipment to people's homes will double. The level of day care is to be cut, and the number of people aged over 65 admitted to residential and nursing homes is being reduced by 150—so do not get old in Norfolk. Rex Humphrey, the chief executive of Age Concern in Norfolk, said:

"We have known for a long time that there are going to be more and more people, particularly over 85 and 90, and we have to recognise that ... My main concern is that the social services is reducing day care while at the same time reducing residential care and there is a mismatch in that position."

It would be no exaggeration to say that we are approaching a crisis in residential care and nursing homes in Norfolk, as a consequence of the policies to which I referred and the 2 per cent. fee increase approved by Norfolk social services. Denise Denis, chairman of the Norfolk Independent Care Homes, said that the rise of 2 per cent. was minimal and that homes would be forced to make staff or maintenance cuts. That is placed on top of the Government's proposed legislation, which places an even greater financial burden on care homes.

As Members of Parliament, we are in favour of the highest possible standards for residential care homes, because elderly people demand the best. However, those who run care homes, in both the public and private sectors, are being driven to distraction by the increasing bureaucracy, which places further demands on such minutiae as the size of rooms, and other matters connected with the facilities.

I began by saying that my theme today was a fair deal for Norfolk. I hope that, by outlining the revenue grant support element of the local government finance settlement, I have shown that Norfolk has done poorly compared with other parts of England. Norfolk, along with other shire counties, is collectively £700 million worse off than in 1997. Council tax in Norfolk has risen by three times or more the rate of inflation to provide either stand-still services or cuts in services. That has been compounded by the way in which the council has taken decisions and examined priorities during the past eight years. I ask the Minister to re-examine the way in which the area cost allowance is calculated, taking into account the particular problems faced by a large rural county, such as Norfolk, with a dispersed population.

People in Norfolk often view London as foreign. In fact, they view Bury St. Edmunds as foreign, but they view London as foreign because our discussions and decisions do not relate to their experience. They think that they come fairly near the bottom of the list when the Government are developing policy. They seek a fairer deal for Norfolk. They do not necessarily want more money than everyone else, but they would like a fair deal in which some of the problems that I have been spelling out are considered.

Norfolk is a marvellous county and I am honoured to have represented Mid-Norfolk for the past four years. We want to do better for its people.

9.50 am

Dr. George Turner (North-West Norfolk): First, I congratulate the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on securing this debate. I served on Norfolk county council for more than two decades and was chairman of its education committee prior to the 1997 election. I therefore especially welcome the opportunity to contribute to this morning's debate.

The hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk has provided a mixture of facts and—as often happens in debates on local govt finance—highly partisan comment about support grant for Norfolk for this year and the preceding three or four years. I shall leave it to my hon. Friend the Minister to deal with much of what the hon. Gentleman had to say about this year's settlement. My hon. Friend already knows of my support for major reform of the standard spending assessment and rate support grant systems that we inherited.

Indeed, the Government have already gone some way to deliver a fairer deal for Norfolk and that should be acknowledged. I was especially pleased when the Government not only initiated research work, but recognised the need and delivered resources for rural policing, taking proper and better account of the sparcity problems. I was also pleased with the grant made available for my part of Norfolk, shared with cross-boundary policing in the fens. Of course, the bottle is only half full; more needs to be done. However, we know from the consultation that has been under way for some time that further reform is on the way. Given the history of dispute across party lines over local government finance, the Government are right to take the time to seek to maximise consensus on introducing a new system.

I have argued for many years—mainly under the previous Government—for a fairer deal for counties such as Norfolk; I shall continue to do so. However, I want to take a different tack from that of the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk. He painted a picture based on recent RSG settlements that distorts the reality and would have the nation conclude that we should change the Government and, by implication, I suspect, return to the old regime under which I suffered.

An analogy with football suggests itself to me—I am not sure, Madam Deputy Speaker, whether you are a supporter, but I find that it helps when discussing financial issues with my constituents. As the season draws to a close, many fans will criticise their team's performance. Few managers or players approach perfection, and armchair critics have an especially clear concept of the ideal, but before calling for the manager to be sacked, most are fair minded and consider various questions. What problems and financial constraints did the management inherit? Is performance improving or deteriorating under the new management? What alternative management is on offer, and with what track record? I wonder whether many fans would turn with enthusiasm to a former member of the worst team in living memory; a man of maturing years but inclined to mimic the young—baseball hat and all—populist to a fault and with a self-confessed 14 pints a day drinking problem. That may not represent the ideal management.

I shall have to be selective this morning, even given the modestly greater time that may be available. I therefore turn to some other facts that were not mentioned by the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk. In particular, we should consider the track record of the present management compared with the previous management. The fairest way of doing that is to ask some of those who are directly responsible for the data that I have used. I asked the financial director of the county council and the treasurer of the borough council in my constituency for a summary. I wanted to compare the four years of the budget set by this Government with the previous four years, which seemed a fair-minded approach. If one makes that comparison, the picture of what has been happening is very different from that painted by the hon. Gentleman.

Before doing that, I want to say that the attack made this morning on the merits of the present county councillors—and, by implication, the attack on King's Lynn and West Norfolk borough council in my constituency—was deplorable. There has been considerable improvement in management and the way in which budgets have been handled in Norfolk recently. The Eastern Daily Press reported on Friday 23 February that an assessment undertaken by Cranfield university school of management, Sunday Business, British Telecom and Management Today, listed Norfolk county council as one of the top 100 UK visionary organisations. It said:

"Norfolk County Council—once one of the worst performing of the rural shires, it has driven itself to the top by an aggressive and ambitious strategy. It is now a reference point for good practice in local government".

The report continues:

"When the Conservatives lost control of Norfolk County Council in 1993 for the first time in 100 years, the new Lab/Lib administration set about reviewing services and overhauling the organisation.

Under new chief executive Tim Byles, the council set up a change management programme, transforming the way it works with schools and forging public/private partnerships and strategic partnerships for economic development and health improvement. A senior manager worked exclusively on communicating the vision to the council's 25,000 staff.

School test results show that pupils in Norfolk are improving faster than almost anywhere else in England, and the region's roads will benefit from a £19.2 million increase in spending—the highest in the country. Technology specialists Capita will help meet targets for e-government and improve the way the council deliver services and communicates with local people."

That is a somewhat different picture of the county council than that painted by the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk.

Mr. David Prior (North Norfolk): Does the hon. Gentleman think that it is good practice to increase the council tax four times more than the basic state pension?

Dr. Turner: I shall come to the hon. Gentleman's point. To be fair, we should compare what has been happening with the track record of the previous Government on council tax and what pensioners received.

First, I want to refer to the information provided by the finance director of Norfolk county council on changes to budgets during the past four years. Local government finance is notoriously difficult. It is necessary to consider not only changes in the headline figures, but changes in underlying rules and changes in responsibilities. I asked for a summary of changes in the revenue budget. The figures this year are remarkably good, which has been commented on. The net figures show an increase in expenditure of £27 million. Hon. Members will not have noted from the speech of the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk that that included a £5.7 million increase in expenditure for social services.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard (South-West Norfolk): Will the hon. Gentleman give way on that matter?

Dr. Turner: I am not taking interventions for the moment, because I want to put the figures on the record.

The figure for 2000-01 is plus £8 million, for 1999-2000 it was plus £9 million and for 1998-99 it was minus £7 million, giving a total for the four years of increased net growth to the council of plus £37 million. I also have the figures for the previous four years, determined by the capping regime, when local democracy was removed by the Conservative Administration. The net growth figure for 1997-98 was minus £11.8 million, for 1996-97 it was plus £4.2 million and for the previous two years it was minus £6.2 million and minus £2.1 million, giving a grand total for those four years of minus £15.9 million in the council's delivery of services. I repeat, that is minus £15.9 million for the last four years of the previous Administration, and plus £37 million in the first four years of this Administration.

I am the first to admit that the bottle remains half empty and that more needs to be done, but the bottle is filling: we are addressing people's needs in Norfolk. I especially welcome the dramatic increases in school investment. The figures are amazingly different from those under which I had to struggle when I was chair of education. The education capital allocations have risen from £4.7 million in 1996-97 to £27.8 million in 2000-01; we do not yet know the full figures for the coming year.

As chair of education, I faced a backlog of £40 million in much-needed work to be done on school buildings. Now, I go to schools and see work in progress, with further funding to come. Improvements are visible to anyone who visits the schools—there are new classrooms, improved decoration, and better staff facilities. Under this Government they have a rosy future.

I want to give right hon. and hon. Members the figures that relate to my borough council, King's Lynn and West Norfolk. The hon. Member for North Norfolk (Mr. Prior) intervened to ask about increases in council tax. Yes, his colleagues in my borough jump up and down, pointing to the 29 per cent. increase in band D council tax and hoping that people's memories are short, but they do not remind the electorate of the 55 per cent. increase in the four previous years. There was a 29 per cent. increase in the past four years under this Government and a net increase in the council's expenditure of about 7.5 per cent. However, there was a 55 per cent. increase in the last four years under the previous Administration, but a net decrease of 6.3 per cent. in the council's expenditure.

Not all is ideal in north-west Norfolk, or with the borough council's budget, but in the last four years of the previous Administration there was an increase of 7 per cent. in capital resourcing, which is most important in respect of the dilapidated housing provision in my constituency, compared with an increase of 79.6 per cent. in capital expenditure in the past four years under the present Govt. To pretend that that is not a dramatic improvement is to ignore the facts, which is what the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk would have us do.

Finally, I want to speak to an issue that is close to the heart of many of my constituents, the policing of crime. I had a meeting last week with the chief constable and the chairman of the police authority to look at what was really happening without the gloss put on it by the Opposition. The chief constable told me that the new money now available to the police authority would increase the number of front-line police officers from 1,400 to at least 1,475 by the end of the year. He explained that the run down in police numbers in Norfolk had been as a result of his policy, initiated ahead of the last election, to address the dramatic need for improved IT and back-up equipment. With the funding now available, not only can he and his chairman continue to invest in that equipment, but they can provide the extra police on the beat that people want to see.

In addition to the extra 75 police officers, the chief constable can free up a further 23 police officers by introducing civilians to do their work. That means there will be another 23 police officers on the beat at the sharp end of policing. He also has extra funding to provide two mobile police stations in my part of the county, each equipped with radio and communications systems. He tells me that he will be able to invest £250,000 into the vehicle fleet. He describes it as old, but I would describe some of the vehicles that I have seen as dilapidated.

The chief constable went on to explain further planned improvements in policing. They include better intelligence services and the potential use of helicopters for some chases, which are notoriously difficult in the fenland area because of the nature of the roads. There are clearly gains from the increases in the Government's support for policing in Norfolk and the changes in the council tax. Under the previous Administration there were far larger increases in council tax and a net decline in spending. Now, although there has been an increase in council tax, which is less than the rate that we inherited, there are also real improvements.

The local Conservatives would have us believe that the improvements to policing, schools and education are as nothing. They say that there is virtually nothing to show for the increases in taxes that they are paying. That implies that one could cut the council tax by 30 per cent. without doing any damage. They need to be open about that, certainly ahead of a general election. It is uncertain whether under the Tories there would be £23 million, £12 million or £6 million for my constituents. It depends on which month it is, whether it is a Tory tax promise or a Tory tax guarantee and on their current wriggling to pretend that they can both spend and cut at the same time. My constituents should beware. The Tories' pretence that there have been no improvements in services implies that cuts are possible. I know that they cannot make cuts without damaging the services.

In summary, returning to my football analogy, not all is perfect with the team and its management. There may be changes in the team, which may have to raise its performance. There are tasks to be completed. We may be in the middle of a league table and have yet to reach the top, but if we compare what is happening under the present management with what happened under the previous management, we can see that progress is being made. It will take time to complete that process. When the fans out there come to take their decision, they will realise that they need to stick with the present team for a little longer if they are to achieve their ambitions.

10.10 am

Mr. John MacGregor (South Norfolk): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on initiating the debate and on the admirable way in which he spoke. He covered so many points that I wanted to cover that I shall be fairly brief, although I want to re-emphasise some of them.

People in rural areas, including my constituency, are astonished that hon. Members in the main Chamber will spend today debating the Hunting Bill. That shows a ludicrous sense of priorities, an astonishing unawareness of what is happening in rural areas and a ludicrous lack of sensitivity. The issues being debated in this Chamber are the ones that concern people in rural areas. That feeling runs very deep and I shall return to it later.

The Government and the ruling parties on Norfolk county council—Labour and the Liberal Democrats—have achieved a combination of heavily increased council taxes. I say to the hon. Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) that vision is all very well, but the facts and the impact on people on the ground are what matters. The heavily increased council taxes have a real impact, while we receive poorer services and there is a further running down of reserves.

I shall deal first with services. Just before Christmas, the leader of Norfolk county council approached us all, I believe, to protest strongly about the impact of Government decisions on this year's rate support grant settlement for Norfolk. We were asked to make representations, which we all did. The hon. Gentleman talked about making adjustments to the area cost adjustment and changes in the formula. However, the change in the formula that the Government have introduced has greatly disbenefited Norfolk. I understand that it is the main reason why we received £4.5 million less in this year's settlement than Norfolk county council had accepted. The Government introduced a change that greatly disadvantaged Norfolk. I just hope that we will not have more such changes.

The implications for services are serious. I shall pick out three services, the first of which is social services. As my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk said, there is a deficit of more than £2 million in this year's social services budget. The implications for pensioners and other poorer people in my constituency are very serious.

I want to draw particular attention to the effect on residential care and nursing homes. We all know that private sector residential and nursing homes are facing serious difficulties through a combination of insufficient fee increases on the one hand and heavily increased costs on the other. I join my hon. Friend in commenting on the impact of the Government's changes in regulations for higher standards in residential homes. We all want higher standards, but we need to be practical and realistic.

I have seen nursing homes in my constituency, both in the public sector—financed by the local authority—and in the private sector, which face substantial increases in their capital costs. That will lead either to fewer places or to the closure of those homes for comparatively minor adjustments over the next few years to comply with improved standards. I have talked to the residents of rooms in those homes, who cannot see how a big increase in costs will greatly benefit them. I have protested about that before. It is important that the Government take on board the need for a sensible transition, because Norfolk risks a massive loss of places in care homes in both the private and public sectors in the next few years. There is a particular issue with Dennyholme care home in Diss, but the situation will be much more serious for private sector care homes.

In the Eastern Daily Press a few days ago, in response to protests from independent care homes, Joan Fowler, the portfolio holder for social inclusion and care in Norfolk county council, said:

"I would have liked to have given them more than 2 per cent. but there simply isn't any spare cash around. The social services overspend is coming down but it is still £1.5 million. Everyone is having to cut back."

That is the reality for social services.

I have some specific questions about highways and fire services. I congratulate the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth) on his appointment. He is certainly moving into a heavily embattled sector. I acknowledge that he did not take part in this year's RSG settlement, but I shall put my questions to him because he is now responsible for defending it.

Norfolk has a considerable backlog of maintenance requirements for its highways. Norfolk is one of the largest counties and has a huge network of roads, yet our settlement for highways this year is 1.8 per cent. That is not only below the rate of inflation, but well below our neighbours' average of 4.5 per cent. and below the shire counties' average of 3.3 per cent. I simply do not understand it. I am told that one reason is the weighting given to heavy goods and the high gearing effect that that exerts. I fail to understand, however, why Norfolk, with its huge requirement for maintenance on highways and its substantial highways network, should receive an increase of only 1.8 per cent. this year. Will the Minister explain why in his reply?

Dr. George Turner: I wonder whether the right hon. Gentleman is ignoring the £19.2 million—almost two and a half times the allocation for previous years—for capital investment in Norfolk's highways? Should not that be taken into account when assessing the moneys available for improving roads in Norfolk?

Mr. MacGregor: The highways maintenance figure, which is important, shows only a 1.8 per cent. increase. That is why I am worried that the working out of the formula is substantially disadvantaging Norfolk.

I also want briefly—so that my right hon. and hon. Friends can join the debate—to mention the 2.8 per cent. increase allotted to fire services for a county whose rural spread imposes heavy demands. The shire counties' average increase is 4.8 per cent. and that of our neighbouring counties is 3.9 per cent. Once again, in view of Norfolk's huge requirements, I do not understand why our county should fare so badly.

The facts on council tax are clear, but the hon. Member for North-West Norfolk did not explain them correctly. Before the general election—apart from 1995-96, which saw an 8.5 per cent. increase—all the increases in Norfolk's council tax were below 4 per cent. Subsequently, the increases have all been way above the level of inflation. It is worth spelling out the details. In 1998-99, the increase in band B council tax was 15.6 per cent.; in 1999-2000, it was 9.76 per cent.; in 2000-01 it was 6.25 per cent. and in 2001-02, it is projected to be 6.25 per cent.

Those are substantial cumulative increases, which take a great deal from pensioners who are reliant on the state pension or have just a little above it. When people move out of council tax rebate, it takes a great deal out of any net increase in incomes gained during the year. Pensioners may well protest further as a result of these increases. They complained during the past three years and I expect them to do so again. The county council has not properly dealt with a major concern that affects pensioners.

The wider impact on rural communities is another issue. We all know that farmers are facing a disastrous crisis with foot and mouth disease. In East Anglia—and particularly in my and neighbouring Norfolk constituencies—swine fever is an additional problem. Furthermore, we all know that farming incomes have declined significantly in the past four years. Yesterday, the Minister, in response to requests for help for beleaguered farmers through monetary compensation or other ways, said in the Chamber that no previous Government had given assistance on foot and mouth disease other than to those whose herds had to be slaughtered. That is true, but previously, particularly in regard to the outbreaks that have occurred during my time in the House, the general position of farmers was very much better. Unlike in the past, farmers have no spare capacity whatever to cope with the current crisis. The relevance of that significant fact to agriculture and all allied trades in Norfolk is often misunderstood: in terms of the national figures for the numbers employed in agriculture, we are much more dependent than other parts of the country on the income flowing in to such activities. Further council tax increases on such a scale, on top of those of the past three years, will be a further huge burden for many families.

My protest is that the Government appear to have removed £4.5 million from Norfolk as a result of some of their formula changes, with particular impact on social services. Like other rural areas, but more than most, Norfolk has suffered at the hands of the Government in the past four years—which is why we are having the debate today, for which I thank my hon. Friend. I hope that the Government will take note of it.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard (South-West Norfolk): I am grateful to be called in the debate, which I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) for having initiated, because the issues raised obviously touch on the lives of people in Norfolk. He gave an admirably clear account of how the Government and a Lib-Lab controlled county council are, between them, failing the people of Norfolk.

I congratulate the Minister on his position and I believe that he will bring good experience and a steady hand to a difficult task. I would like him to answer a question that is being asked in my constituency: are the Government treating urban areas favourably in terms of the revenue support grant to their local authorities? There is a strong suspicion that what happened in the first couple of years of the Government's term of office has happened again this year—rural areas have lost out.

I shall concentrate on the effects of the cuts that my hon. Friend so eloquently described and, like my right hon. Friend the Member for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor), on the care of the elderly and the vulnerable. Ministers like to speak of the continuum of care provided by health and social services, particularly in regard to bed blocking and hospital care.

My right hon. and hon. Friends, and the hon. Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner), will know that the new Norfolk and Norwich hospital is being completed in Norwich and has been hailed by Ministers and others as the means to end bed blocking. It is also an excuse to close several smaller community hospitals such as the Wayland hospital in my constituency. The Eastern Daily Press reported on 16 February that the centre is giving no funds for the additional revenue costs of the new hospital. The chief executive of Norfolk health authority said:

"The centre has been highly prescriptive about what it wants to be achieved but there does not appear to be latitude to pick up the additional . . . costs of the new hospital."

We may have a new hospital, but now the debate is about how people will get there. I do not mean that access and road provision will be a problem, but that the funds will not be available to open the hospital.

Against that sad saga must be set the cuts in Norfolk's social services. One would have thought that, with the seamless and joined-up government that we are now said to enjoy, a situation of the sort that I have outlined would not—indeed, could not—be combined with the cuts in social services that elderly and vulnerable people in Norfolk are having to face this year. Yet, sadly, that is the position.

My right hon. Friend the Member for South Norfolk quoted the portfolio holder for social inclusion and care on Norfolk county council, who said that there is no cash to spare. She claimed that because 351 beds had been closed last year in Norfolk care homes, money would not be available to increase the number of beds in the residential sector to provide more support for people in their homes. At the same time, of course, she is increasing charges for meals on wheels, for home visits from occupational therapists and, even more disastrous, for day care.

At one and the same time, the elderly and vulnerable in Norfolk face the prospect of a new hospital that cannot be opened because the money is not available, a reduction in the number of beds in the residential sector, an increase in the charges that are designed to keep them in their own homes and an increase in council tax for the privilege. I would call that social inclusion. In effect, Norfolk social services department is passing on to the elderly the funding cuts that were imposed on Norfolk people by the Government. The hon. Member for North-West Norfolk asks us to approve the barrage of statistics that he produced; but I am concerned with the experience of people in my constituency, not with a recital of statistics.

Dr. George Turner: Will the right hon. Lady give way?

Mrs. Shephard: Not at the moment.

Like many other areas in Britain, Norfolk has an increasing number of elderly and vulnerable people. About 25 per cent. of my constituents are over retirement age. As my right hon. Friend the Member for South Norfolk pointed out, the social services department is having to fund a possible overspend of £2.7 million by cutting the level of day care. What does that mean? Who deals with day care? A vast army of volunteers give their own time to transport elderly and vulnerable people to day-care centres. The impact on them of increases in fuel costs has already been described. The number of people aged 65 and over being admitted to residential and nursing homes will be cut by 150 and, as I said, those people will face increased charges. It is extraordinary.

The leader of the council said that the council would have to make "tough choices". That is fine for her; her choices are made on paper. The choices that face the families of elderly and vulnerable people are also tough. If their relatives cannot be admitted to care homes—and as we have heard, 150 fewer places will be funded this year—they face tough choices in trying to make up the shortfall, and the anxiety of wondering whether it would be possible to cover the increased charges. Their choices are as tough as those facing Liberal Democrat and Labour councillors in Norfolk. The leader of the council was quoted in the Eastern Daily Press on 15 February as having commented that "the Revenue Support Grant from the Government had been disappointingly low and setting the coming year's budget was a difficult balancing act."

We do not seem to have heard much in the way of solidarity with her from the hon. Member for North-West Norfolk.

The problem that we are considering is not confined to Norfolk. The National Care Homes Association will be lobbying Parliament on Monday. It is concerned about the combined effect of a squeeze on public funds, the national minimum wage, the working time directive, pay increases for nurses and the proposed national standards for care homes. While each of those is justifiable, the outcome last year was the loss of 351 beds in the residential sector in Norfolk; less nursing care in the residential sector, because homes could not afford to employ nurses; less choice for elderly people and their relatives; more travelling for those people, with the closure of homes; and less employment in residential homes.

The National Care Homes Association has posed an interesting question. In Norfolk in 1999 the fee for care was £227 a week. In 2000, the Department of Social Security awarded each person in a residential care home sponsored by social services an increase of £5 a week, which was rightly trumpeted by Ministers as a way of helping the elderly and vulnerable. However, the association points out that the contract price in Norfolk for 2000 remained £227 a week. Where did the money go? Norfolk county council should answer that question.

The current state of affairs in Norfolk is a cause of fear among elderly and vulnerable people and their relatives. Elderly people wonder what will happen to them if they cannot enter a residential home, and how their relatives will cope with caring for them. They wonder how the money will be found to support them at home. Above all, elderly people want to avoid feeling that they are a burden, but the factors that we have heard about this morning will combine inevitably to engender that feeling in their hearts.

Mrs. Marie Farrelly, the co-proprietor of the Feltwell Lodge nursing and residential home, wrote to me on 15 February. She said:

"We are very worried about our business, we haven't had a referral from social services since before Christmas."

She went on to comment that her husband

"has contacted . . . the manager at Downham Market about this and has been told that they are only allowed to refer six people per month for West Norfolk. It looks as though this government has put the elderly at the bottom of the pile and the local government in Norwich are just as bad."

She puts it well and I agree with her.

Mr. David Prior (North Norfolk): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on securing this important debate. There is a danger when one speaks last in a debate such as this that everything has been said but not everyone has said it. I should like to make some extra points.

We hear a lot from Norfolk county council about visions, strategies, long-term plans and best value, but we and others in Norfolk will judge the council on results, not on promises for the long term. People in Norfolk, are interested in how much council tax they are paying and what services they receive in return. During the past four years, council tax has risen by about 40 per cent., which compares with a rise of about 10 per cent. in the basic state pension and 13 per cent. in inflation. So there has been a massive increase in council tax. What have we got for it? The roads maintenance backlog now runs at £90 million. We have heard about pressures on the social services budget and about how vulnerable old people are in Norfolk. Many schools in North Norfolk and elsewhere still have mobile classrooms, and public transport has almost collapsed in many areas. Few people in Norfolk today could put their hand on their heart and say that services have improved during the past four years; on the contrary, for many of us, services have considerably worsened while council tax has increased.

I shall dwell on only two aspects of county council activity. The first is residential homes. A number of traditional residential homes in North Norfolk in places such as Sheringham and Cromer, which have for many years provided wonderful care for older people, now face huge cost increases deriving from future proposals and from employment costs—in particular, the need to pay full holiday entitlement to part-time carers in those homes. There will be a collapse in the number of beds provided in private sector residential homes in Norfolk, which is of real concern when the resources made available for looking after people at home are also under pressure. As my right hon. Friends the Members for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor) and for South-West Norfolk (Mrs. Shephard) have mentioned, many old people are extremely worried.

However, that matter has already been covered; I want to focus on young people. My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk said, "Don't be old in Norfolk." He could also have said, "Don't be young in Norfolk". During the past four years, many youth and community centres have closed, and the few youth centres left—for example, one in Hickling in my constituency—are hanging on by a thread. What has replaced them? The answer is, very little. I can give examples of voluntary groups in North Norfolk that, despite everything, have hung on, but they do so by a thread. My right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk probably knows the Carpenters Arms in North Walsham, supported by the Methodists, which has to beg, borrow and steal a few hundred pounds every week to keep the project open. The Holt youth project is trying to raise money from the East of England Development Agency and the lottery—spending more time trying to raise money through hugely complicated and difficult routes than it is looking after and providing facilities for young people. Another example is the Fakenham sports centre. I can give the Minister hundreds of examples of people who are trying to provide activities for young people, but who are doing so in an extremely arid environment.

It is one thing to provide facilities for young people, but they must also be able to get to them, and there are problems with the availability of public transport in rural Norfolk. There has been a significant reduction in the number of bus services in North Norfolk and no replacement for them through a more highly developed community transport system. As my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk said, for many people the car is a necessity, not a luxury, yet about 25 per cent. of families in Norfolk do not have a car. They face serious deprivation.

There is a general feeling that the Government have understood the deprivation faced by many people who live in big towns, but that they have not come to terms with how many people in rural areas have to live. That is sad. I am particularly sorry that the countryside march on 18 March will not now take place. That would have brought home to the Government how fed up and frustrated those who live in the countryside are.

My final point concerns policing. The lack of local policemen on the streets is probably the biggest single worry for many people living in the market towns and seaside resorts of Norfolk.

Dr. Ian Gibson (Norwich, North): During the past two days, the Eastern Daily Press stated that there will be 75 new police officers in Norfolk, many of whom will be located in rural areas. The hon. Gentleman seems to be denying that move in the right direction.

Mr. Prior: The Government are making up for lost time. The hon. Gentleman made a cheap point. He knows that there has been a significant reduction in the number of police officers on our streets over the past four years. Of course, I welcome any improvement, as I do the extra police officers who have now been promised, but the increase is small. The people of Norfolk want more police officers who live in the local community to be on our streets, not just catching criminals, but preventing crime from happening in the first place. The past four years of Liberal Democrat and Labour-controlled councils have shown how easy it is to spend money and to receive little in return.

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): I am pleased to have the opportunity to contribute to the debate. I join other hon. Members in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on securing it. He has made good use of such a timely opportunity. Others who represent Norfolk constituencies have made excellent contributions to our discussion. It is significant that the Liberal Democrat party has made no contribution to the debate, despite its complicity in some matters that have concerned Norfolk.

My hon. Friend described a serious state of affairs. As he reminded us, Norfolk is the second largest county in the United Kingdom. It has an extensive coastline. It has all the problems that are associated with large distances, sparsity, rural transport and so on. He was right to pinpoint the crucial change in SSA methodology when the Government came into office. That has resulted in £700 million being diverted away from shire counties such as Norfolk. The net result is an increase in council tax of more than 6 per cent., three times the rate of inflation. It was 9.8 per cent. last year and it is not as though that is balanced by any increase in local services. The opposite is the case.

We heard a depressing litany of cuts in services throughout the country. My hon. Friend described in detail some of the other stealth taxes that have affected the council. In many ways, council tax has now become a stealth tax, affecting as it does particularly the elderly and the most vulnerable in Norfolk. My hon. Friend referred to the backlog in road maintenance, which amounts to about £90 million for the whole of the county. He spoke about problems in schools and libraries, the closure of youth centres, real reductions in care and social services, the crisis facing care homes—a problem that is replicated throughout the country, such as in my own constituency—and higher charges for services.

My right hon. Friend the Member for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor) referred to the big jump in council tax, cuts in services, the running down of reserves and how he, along with my right hon. and hon. Friends, had been asked by the leader of the Lib-Lab pact in Norfolk to make representations to Government about the poor deal that Norfolk has received, the £2 million deficit in social services and the significant increase in council tax rises since the Government came to power. He spoke knowledgeably about the combined effect of those and other factors on farming in a community that depends heavily on that industry.

My right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk (Mrs. Shephard) said that rural areas had been losing out, as proved by the figures. She referred to problems with the local NHS, cuts in social services for the elderly and most vulnerable, and increased charges. She said that politicians have tough choices to make, but that individuals and families face even tougher choices, as a result of which people suffer real fear. That situation can be summed up as joined-up incompetence as opposed to joined-up government.

My hon. Friend the Member for North Norfolk (Mr. Prior) also referred to worsening services, focusing in particular on the problems with care homes—not only cuts in funding and references to homes but problems caused by "Fit for the future", and other regulations, which are apparent to the banks as the financial supporters of the homes. He mentioned the effect on the young of closing youth centres. The situation affects people across the spectrum—the young, the old and everyone in between.

The hon. Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner), who spoke from the Government Back Benches, proved graphically that any analogy could be taken too far, in talking about the capping regime under previous Governments having removed local democracy. I will turn to this Government's attitude to local democracy in a moment. With respect, I thought that many of his remarks were intemperate. His final, feeble conclusion was that not all is perfect in Norfolk.

We are discussing a wider set of issues that affect other places apart from Norfolk. The inexorable rise in the proportion of specific grants means that the money made available to Norfolk is often spent on the basis of Ministers' priorities rather than those of local communities. The Government panicked over the impact of its settlement on many local authorities this year. The Times talked about "crisis talks" between the Deputy Prime Minister and the Chancellor, which resulted in an emergency package of £100 million being diverted from the neighbourhood renewal fund, as well as extra bits of money for social services and education. Some of those bits of money are actually recycled or reannounced cash—in the customary style of this Government.

Across the country, a significant difference exists between living in a Conservative-controlled authority area and those dominated by other parties. Conservative councils still have the lowest council taxes; in the coming year, a typical band D household will pay £724 under an average Conservative council, compared with £124 more under a Labour-controlled council, a figure not dissimilar for Liberal Democrat-controlled councils. Norfolk, of course, suffers from the double whammy of a Lib-Lab pact.

Shire councils such as Norfolk have lost out by up to £700 million under the Government, who make a virtue of their so-called freeze on SSA methodology on the grounds that it delivers stability. However, if one is treated unfairly at the beginning of the process, one is treated just as unfairly at the end and during the course of it. The policy cements the unfairnesses that the Government imposed in the SSA settlement when they came to power. We have heard of floors and ceilings, but the Government have tried to tinker on the margins.

When we strip away the rhetoric, there is an element of cross-party consensus, although it seems to have been lost on the hon. Member for North-West Norfolk. My right hon. and hon. Friends and the Lib-Lab pact that control Norfolk all take the view that the county has been treated unfairly. That is true across Norfolk. Clearly, the current administration in Norfolk feels that it has been treated badly. The Government have treated Norfolk shamefully, and there is now a £4.5 million black hole in Norfolk's finances thanks to their approach. My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Norfolk asked for a fair deal for Norfolk. Everyone in Norfolk seems to agree that the one thing that Norfolk does not have is a fair deal. I am happy to endorse the call for a fair deal for Norfolk.

10.50 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Mr. Robert Ainsworth): I congratulate the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on securing this debate. I thank him and other hon. Members for welcoming me to my new position, even if, as he suggested, it is like moving from the staff college to the Stalingrad front. His analogy fails to recognise that while von Paulus was up against the Red Army, backed up by material from the British empire and United States of America, we are up against the modern Conservative party, if that is not a contradiction in terms. It may be a little different. One never knows.

The national spending review in 2000 provided good news for local authorities, with continued increases in grant. The first year of the review set the baseline for the coming financial year, within which we have been able to increase Government grant by £3 billion. In the four settlements since we took office, we have been able to increase the amount of Government grant given to local authorities by £8 billion in total. That is a real terms increase of 14 per cent. compared with a 7 per cent. cut in the four years preceding the 1997-98 settlement. Our priorities, of course, are education and personal social services. As a result, provision for education spending will increase to £1.9 billion next year, which is an 8.1 per cent. increase, and social services will receive an extra £576 million, which is a 6.2 per cent. increase.

There can be no doubt that levels of investment have greatly improved since 1997-98. There is general agreement that the settlement provides welcome grant increases for local authorities. The hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk complained about spin, but was very selective in the figures that he gave for Norfolk. He chose to use those for the revenue support grant settlement rather than those for the total grant settlement. He knows well that that is not the whole picture.

The hon. Gentleman should be pleased to note that in 2001-02, under the settlement, Norfolk county council will receive a 4.2 per cent. increase in general grant, which amounts to £16 million. That is a good increase, which is well above the current rate of inflation.

The hon. Gentleman will also be pleased to note that, on top of that, Norfolk will receive a 26.8 per cent. increase in ring-fenced grants, which is an additional £7.786 million. When those amounts are added together, Norfolk will receive a total increase in Government grant for 2001-02 of £23.867 million or 5.8 per cent.

Mrs. Shephard: I am of course impressed by the Minister's figures. Will he explain how such marvellous news has apparently escaped the Labour leader of Norfolk county council? Why has council tax increased by three times inflation?

Mr. Ainsworth: I shall try to deal with that point. I shall also, in the time available, try to cover all the issues raised by hon. Members. Before I do so, I shall finish setting out the facts. In terms of the total SSA, Norfolk has received an increase of 4.9 per cent., which is in line with the national average increase. Norfolk's education SSA has increased by 5.1 per cent. and its personal services SSA has increased by 5 per cent. The right hon. Lady may wish to note that all those increases are well above the rate of inflation. In the past two years, Norfolk has also received good settlements for its SSA increase: 6.2 per cent. in 1999-2000 and 5.3 per cent. in 2000-01. In the four years since we took office, Norfolk received an average SSA increase of 4.5 per cent. each year, compared with an average annual increase of 2.1 per cent. in the four years prior to that. No one would suggest that inflation has got worse in the latter four years; in fact, it has got considerably better.

My hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) did a good job of explaining the inheritance that Norfolk county council has had to deal with and the priorities that it is trying to implement. As with local government the length and breadth of the country, it is trying its best to juggle its priorities, meet modern needs, move services in the direction of need and catch up with backlogs such as that which my hon. Friend mentioned in education services. My hon. Friend made apparent that backlog and the real problems that the council faces.

The situation in Norfolk will not be all roses—no one suggests that—but it is not as the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk suggested with his partial citing of the figures. There have been bigger increases in central Government support for Norfolk under this Government than there were under the ancien regime that the hon. Gentleman supported, and he should recognise that fact.

Mr. Keith Simpson: The hon. citizen—I am sorry, the hon. Gentleman; I got that in—has not yet replied to the point made by my right hon. Friend the Member for South-West Norfolk. Given what he has just said, how does he explain the rise of 6.25 per cent. in council tax and the vehement protests of the leader of the Labour-Liberal Democrat coalition that the grant is not enough?

Mr. Ainsworth: I hope that the hon. Gentleman recognises that I am trying, in a relatively short time, to answer the points raised in the debate. I have been asked many questions.

The right hon. Member for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor) asked me about the highways and fire calculations—two elements of grant in which Norfolk appears to be well below both its neighbouring authorities and the national average. All I can tell the right hon. Gentleman is that there has been no change in the method of calculating SSAs. We have tried to use the most up-to-date data, so Norfolk's lower than average SSA increases must mean that Norfolk's figures have fallen compared with the national average. The figures have surprised the right hon. Gentleman; if they have surprised the council and it wants to raise the issue because it believes that there is an anomaly, the Department is prepared to consider the matter, but there has been no change in the formula used.

The right hon. Member for South-West Norfolk (Mrs. Shephard) asked whether there had been a bias in favour of urban areas under this Government. That is not the case; there have been no changes in methodology, as she knows. Indeed, since the 1998-99 settlement, the increases for shire areas have been 4.4 per cent. compared to 4.2 per cent. for London and other metropolitan areas, so there has been no bias whatever against the shire areas. Hon. Members know that there have been changes in the area cost adjustment. We have done no more than previous Governments. We have updated the data regarding area cost adjustment. I have not yet heard that it is the position of the Conservative party that we should not have done so. It would be strange if that were its position, because that is not what the Conservatives did when they were in office. Equally, they know that we are due to publish a Green Paper to examine local government finance and these issues will, hopefully, be dealt with at that time.

Mr. Barry Jones (in the Chair): Order. We must now move on to our second debate.

Aviation and the Environment

11 am

Mr. David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire): I note the depth of versatility lurking in our Whips Office. It is remarkable that a former member should spring to a ministerial seat and have responsibilities for such a varied selection of topics as North Norfolk and night noise. It is great to see my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth), in his new role with responsibility for aviation. Indeed, among the rich and varied bequests left in the pending tray for my hon. Friend by his predecessor is the hugely important Green Paper "The Future of Aviation". It invites ideas and views on a wide range of aviation and airport issues that will underpin the publication later this year of the first White Paper on aviation since 1985. During the intervening period, the economic, environmental and political framework within which airports and airlines operate has changed in the most dramatic way.

Today's debate is the first parliamentary opportunity for Back Benchers to flag up their own concerns. In my case, those concerns will be restricted purely to civil aviation and will not include military or defence activities. The changes during the past decade and a half to which I referred include a doubling of the number of planes using United Kingdom airports. Unless that rate of growth is dampened down, in the next two decades Britain will need four new airports each the size of Heathrow, and the number of passengers will rise from 180 million this year to more than 400 million by 2020. "So what?" say those who regard growth in economic activity as an unmitigated good. I expect that they would point to the report in 1999 by Oxford Economic Forecasting that asserted that aviation increased United Kingdom productivity, and that even limited restraints on growth would have serious negative effects. The report included charts demonstrating that the economy in 2015 would be £30 billion or 2.5 per cent. larger if passenger numbers were to be allowed to soar into the stratosphere unchecked by social and environmental constraints. Those forecasts were buttressed by the astonishingly complacent view of the London Chamber of Commerce that "capacity must be provided to meet all reasonable demand."

I believe that the previous Minister responsible for aviation made it clear that the Government reject the predict and provide strategy and are opting for a demand management approach that recognises environmental considerations and political realities and listens to the important aviation lobby.

Present growth rates are not sustainable. Issues that the previous aviation White Paper failed to predict or tackle have been in a holding pattern for too long, circling high above the political arena, although they are now starting to land in the Government's lap, whether or not the Government want them to.

I declare an interest to the extent that East Midlands airport is in my constituency. Last summer, East Midlands airport's own survey showed that there are 5,400 employees in firms on or near the airport site, perhaps 10 per cent. of whom are my constituents. No hon. Member with an airport in his constituency is unaware of the economic significance of aviation and its contribution to constituents' standard of living. Equally, hon. Members' e-mail in-boxes are probably bulging with examples of how those living in airport communities experience damage to their quality of life. The main types of environmental impact are: the effect of aircraft noise on communities near airports or under flight paths; the effect of emissions from aircraft on climate change; local air quality; the effects of emissions from aircraft at airports and of the airport infrastructure that serves them; noise, emissions and congestion arising from surface access to airports, especially from road transport; land take and urbanisation resulting from airport development; and, other environmental effects of airports such as water quality, energy consumption and contaminated land and waste.

Other hon. Members will want to consider noise and climate change, so I shall refer to those matters only briefly before speaking about other concerns in more detail and suggesting the way ahead for the Minister and his colleagues.

Noise from aircraft, especially at night, arouses the strongest feelings of those who are affected by it. Ten days ago, in Kegworth, I addressed a local meeting organised by People Against Intrusive Noise—PAIN. It really is a pain when excessive noise occurs because there is inadequate international regulation to enforce limits on aircraft or inadequate local regulation to control impact around airports.

Last year's consultation paper on noise included some useful suggested changes to the existing noise control powers in the Civil Aviation Act 1982, and my first question to the Minister is: when will those changes be put in place? British tolerance is beginning to stretch very thinly over the cauldron of public protest and there will be direct, European-type action if something is not done soon, especially about night noise.

My local planning authority, North West Leicestershire district council is consulting on night flying limits, which it will ask the Deputy Prime Minister to impose using his powers under section 78 of the 1982 Act. It thereby seeks to safeguard the amenities and the environment of people living around East Midlands airport, not only in its own area but in the South Derbyshire, Rushcliffe and Charnwood local authority areas. The council's proposed controls address the litany of complaints so frequently encountered: a ban on movements by aircraft with high quota-count noise levels; a limit on aircraft movements at night; a reducing night-noise quota; monitoring and track-keeping; early phasing out of the noisiest aircraft; a noise management system with surcharges and penalties and a noise insulation scheme.

Those are challenging topics for debate, but I hope that the new owners, Manchester airport, with its long track record of striving to be responsive to community concerns, will be able to agree a modus vivendi that recognises and resolves those local problems promptly and effectively. The airport recently introduced a consultative forum and noise-preferential routes, and noise and track monitoring equipment will soon be introduced. There is a foundation on which the new owners can build.

The impact of a rapidly changing and expanding aviation industry on global warming and climate change is probably the main threat to the wider environment. In a recent report, the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change expressed anxiety about carbon dioxide emissions from aircraft and about the possible increase in global warming due to condensation trails. Globally, aircraft emissions of carbon dioxide already account for about 3.5 per cent. of all human-induced global warming; in comparison, current United Kingdom emissions contribute 2.5 per cent. More worryingly, with those emissions set to rise at about 3 per cent. a year, the IPCC estimates that aviation's contribution to global warming will be about 7 per cent. by 2050.

Aviation is not covered by the Kyoto agreement and I put it to the Minister that it can no longer be excluded from the policy discussions on climate change as its emissions are now clearly implicated. A recent report entitled "The Plain Truth: Aviation and the Environment", commissioned by Transport 2000 and the Ashden Trust, argued powerfully that aviation must respond as other industries are beginning to do to the challenge of climate change. I hope that the Minister agrees.

At a lower level in terms of height and detail, is local air pollution. Large airports and their aircraft can be major polluters because so many aspects of their operations produce toxic emissions that are a major threat to human health. The Government state in their Green Paper that the effect of emissions from aircraft on air pollution in the vicinity of airports is in most cases less than that from road traffic to and from airports. That may broadly be the case, but as road traffic becomes progressively cleaner, the proportion of total emissions from aircraft will grow and aviation emission standards will have to be raised.

Official data on UK airport emissions is hard to find, but the general American experience and the European experience show seriously heightened levels of air pollution around larger airports. Research in the United States and mainland Europe reveals that airports are comparable to large industrial plants in respect of their toxic emissions. In the US, the top four emitters of nitrogen oxides and volatile organic compounds are chemical factories, refineries, power stations and airports. A study of Frankfurt airport showed that it was responsible for three quarters of all unburnt hydrocarbons in the city. In an area measuring 9 by 12 km around the much smaller Zurich airport, almost 30 per cent. of nitrogen oxides were found to be of airport origin.

One exception to the near invisibility of British data on the all too detectable air pollution around airports is Heathrow. The nearly interminable terminal 5 inquiry heard from the British Airports Authority that present levels around Heathrow were not unlike those at Frankfurt airport. Present air pollutants in a 6 by 8 km area around Heathrow are, according to the BAA, largely attributable to the airport—three quarters of sulphur dioxide, 60 per cent. of nitrogen oxides and almost half of carbon monoxide and volatile organic compounds.

Growth in air traffic linked to the construction of terminal 5—I shall not press the Minister for his predictions about the outcome of the inquiry—would have a worrying effect on air pollution, especially from nitrogen oxides whose levels could be expected to more than double.

Two other pollutants in and around airports are ozone, formed in the presence of sunlight from VOCs and nitrogen oxides, and the particulate matter frequently produced by airports and aviation activities. Both pollutants are associated with a wide range of respiratory diseases and loss of lung function.

When does the Minister expect the publication of the interdepartmental group report on the costs and benefits of measures to improve air quality, which should help to achieve the targets in the national air quality strategy? Will he confirm that demonstrable health benefits to residents in airport communities as a result of reduced air pollution will be a significant factor shaping the development of our future aviation policy?

One of the most insidious and depressing effects frequently linked to airport development is the loss of, or damage to, natural habitats, attractive landscapes, biodiversity and heritage sites, collectively caused by land take—a phrase as unattractive as its impact. Evidence in my own constituency is not difficult to find. When those hon. Members present today are next on the Leicestershire section of the M1, I urge them to look carefully as they drive north from junction 23A—in other words, leaving the civilisation of the midlands or Leicestershire behind—and they will see the beginnings of an urban sprawl that threatens in the medium term to engulf the attractive villages of Castle Donington, Isley Walton and Kegworth. The location of those villages lying close to the east midlands nexus of the A42, the A50 and the M1 has been a key factor, but the nearby airport has certainly been a catalyst for the worsening position. Will the Minister reassure my constituents that much tighter requirements for the use of brown land will reduce to a minimum the land needed for any developments required by the airport and related activities?

Finally, I draw attention to the occasional problems associated with waste disposal and the discharge of water into inadequate drainage systems and water courses, which contributed to the serious flooding experienced last year in parts of the north-west Leicestershire villages of Hemington and Lockington.

What can the White Paper do to reduce the significant environmental costs that are being largely met by those outside the aviation industry? The Minister is a keen walker, and one useful short walk that he might make this afternoon is along the ministerial corridor in Eland house to the office of the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Mr. Hill)—it might even be next door—whose richly varied brief includes responsibility for the nation's rail network, which he seems to be standing up to very well.

The two Ministers might then examine the report "From Planes to Trains", which was commissioned in October 2000 by Friends of the Earth. That looks at realising the significant environmental potential from shifting short-haul flights, both domestic and European, to rail. The pre-Hatfield findings are that the rail routes in the UK that offer the greatest scope for cutting large volumes of air traffic are the east and west coast main lines. There is some limited potential to develop the midlands and the Great Western main lines, but as the majority of domestic air traffic is between the regions and London, rail links between airports outside London offer less scope for substitution.

The extent to which the transfer can take place depends crucially on the level of investment made in the rail network and rolling stock to reduce travel times, and on the provision of rail links to all major domestic airports. That would be achieved most easily in a rail network back under public control, as I am sure that the Minister would agree although he may not confess it now. Obtaining modal shifts from air to rail is one way to apply a gentle brake to unrestricted and harmful aviation growth. I hope that the White Paper will also take a more direct route to regulate environmental impact by improving the planning regimes and policies at local, regional and national level that have proved so ineffective in the past two decades.

The present planning system for airport developments is totally inadequate even when it limits its aspirations to mitigation packages to offset some of the environmental impacts or at most to attempt to slow the rate at which they worsen. I said that I welcome the abandonment of the predict-and-provide planning regime, which seemed continually to approve expansions or to pre-determine them. Long-dormant permissions, granted on appeal with few environmental constraints, as was the case in 1983 in my area after a decision by the right hon. Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King), the then Secretary of State for the Environment, can still be reactivated to the chagrin of those affected.

Statutory environmental impact assessments are not the whole answer either. EIAs, especially when they are commissioned and financed by developers, are immensely variable in their scope, accuracy, detail, clarity and transparency. Those that cover airport developments cry out for a standard, more rigorous and well-defined approach. In any case, EIAs predict a level of impact of activities a decade or more in advance. Whether those estimates are borne out by future events, and whether the mitigation measures imposed prove to be adequate, never seems to be reviewed. I therefore urge the Minister to ensure that the White Paper totally overhauls the airport planning system, which satisfies neither the developer in its speed, cost or flexibility, nor the airport communities in delivering environmental safeguards, nor the planners in providing adequate opportunities to enforce them.

It is generally agreed that the aviation White Paper must be target driven. As the Aviation Environment Federation argues, tough but realistic targets for noise and emissions would protect the environment, reassure residents living under flight paths and ensure that the industry had clear incentives to obtain a much more sustainable and socially acceptable approach. All campaigners recognise that aviation is largely dependent upon a complex arrangement of European and international agreements, so collective action at those levels is crucial.

Britain must press hard for international aviation to become part of the Kyoto agreement on global warming and we must persuade the international community to adopt and implement the standards recommended by the World Health Organisation on noise. The Government also need to legislate for local targets for noise and air pollution levels.

[Mr. David Taylor]

After modal shift and tighter planning and legislative regimes, there remains one powerful way of levelling the uneven airfield that favours the interests of the aviation industry against those of the environment and airport communities—charges and taxes. It is therefore appropriate that this debate is taking place a week before the Budget. I shall send a copy of today's Hansard to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. If we are to manage the demand for air transport in a sustainable way—the present regime clearly cannot—we must ensure that the polluter pays, not just pay lip service to the principle. The aviation industry does not pay the costs of the noise pollution and climate change that it causes. A 1995 study assessed those externalities for the EU at an annual cost of £11 billion. Although charges and taxes seem to be best co-ordinated at European level, the Dutch have shown, through a noise tax at Schipol airport, that it may be feasible to introduce local environmental charging at national level.

The aviation industry does not pay for its pollution or its fair share of taxes. In fact, it is heavily subsidised. The White Paper must spell out the levels of that unjustified subsidy. There is no VAT on the purchase of planes or airline tickets. Vast sums are spent providing surface access to airports, particularly on roads. Worst of all from an environmental perspective is the fact that no duty is paid on aviation fuel. Indirect subsidies at EU level have been estimated at £20 billion annually. Again, changes in fiscal regimes can be achieved only by agreement at European or international levels, but the Government must start to move down that path, lobby for change and negotiate. Aviation has been a tax avoider for far too long. We must be realistic. In the short term, it will be impossible to reach global agreement on fuel taxation, but an OECD aviation fuel tax or a harmonised climate change levy on landing fees should be possible. Some of the revenues raised could go into international funding of projects to tackle climate change.

I hope that the White Paper will draw a vapour trail in the sky beyond which future growth in aviation must not go without addressing the serious environmental concerns that I have described. The frequently heard argument that restriction of aviation growth would inhibit general economic growth must be seriously scrutinised, but many observers believe that it will not stand up to examination. Indeed, it is probable that planning for limited growth would achieve the double top of improved quality of life for airport communities and enhanced standards of living for those who work both in the aviation industry and in the wider economy.

The new owners of East Midlands airport envisage that passenger numbers will treble to 6 million a year and that the number of jobs will double to more than 11,000. It is undeniably a major regional spur to help economic development to take off, but more than 40,000 people live near the airport and are deeply concerned about its impact on their communities and lives. That dilemma is repeated up and down the country as regional airports brace themselves to absorb the surplus growth decanted by the London airports.

I have shown how economic growth versus environmental protection can be made a win-win game. We need clear policies to reduce greenhouse emissions from aviation; fiscal changes to ensure that air travellers and freight hauliers pay the full environmental and social costs of their decision to fly; regulatory measures and incentives to invest in cleaner, quieter aircraft; investment in inter-city rail to reduce short-haul demand; stricter application of regulations governing airport use; and, vital to many constituencies such as mine, a more strategic approach to the consideration of plans for new airports like Finningley in Yorkshire, or expanded ones, such as East Midlands airport. A greater public debate, which does not pit the well resourced aviation industry against cash-strapped communities, is of the essence. There is a pressing need for a huge change in public attitudes and policy towards aviation. The forthcoming White Paper provides an opportunity to address that need for change. I have every confidence that the new Minister will not miss that opportunity.

Mr. Gerald Howarth (Aldershot): I am pleased to take part in the debate as I represent Farnborough, the birthplace of British aviation.

The hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) spent the best part of half an hour criticising one of Britain's greatest 20th century success stories. We were one of the first countries in the world to master the art of flying when, on 16 October 1908, Samuel Franklin Cody took to the skies from Laffan's plain in Farnborough. We remain one of the world's leading aerospace countries, through our manufacture of air frames and aero engines. Our airlines are also second to none. It is therefore astonishing that the hon. Gentleman, who has an airport in his constituency and who has been on innumerable councils in Leicestershire, should tell us what bad news that is.

I hope that he will tell his constituents the bad news that he has in store for them. If his recommendations to his ministerial colleagues were accepted—although I do not expect for a minute that they will be—the price of his constituents' air tickets to Ibiza, Florida or wherever would go up by 50 per cent. The hon. Gentleman's speech was seriously devoid of practical suggestions, other than that we should switch from plane to rail. That process is already happening and the privatisation of the rail industry will ensure that the process accelerates faster than it would have done had the railways remained under the dead hand of nationalisation.

Mr. David Taylor: No one, least of all me, is suggesting that the economic and social importance of East Midlands airport to the people of the region, and south Yorkshire and beyond, is not considerable. The proposed measures would enhance the profitability of the airport and its value to the region. Conflict between improved environmental considerations and economic performance is not inevitable.

Mr. Howarth: I am interested to hear the hon. Gentleman flatly contradicting himself. He said earlier that we needed to increase taxes on what he calls the polluters, that people need to pay more, that the cost of aviation in terms of its alleged pollution needs to be more transparent, and so on—and now he says that of course he welcomes that investment in his constituency. I am sure that he does, and that when he goes back to his constituency he will find that the Conservative candidate there will, like the Chancellor of the Exchequer, be armed with a copy of Hansard, showing the hon. Gentleman's rather Luddite view on the development.

Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): Does the hon. Gentleman deny aircraft pollution? Does he deny the effects on global warming or the effects of environmental pollution generally, particularly noise pollution, of which my constituents in north London are well aware? Surely it remains the policy of his party, along with others in the House, that the polluter should pay.

Mr. Howarth: I had hardly got into my remarks when the hon. Lady intervened. Of course I recognise that there is inevitably some pollution. There is a degree of pollution from motor cars, for which the motorist pays. Under the Government, the motorist pays extremely heavily—much more heavily than under the previous or the next Conservative Government, after May or whenever that will be.

However, Parliament needs to try to balance out the conflicting interests. I fear that, in trying to achieve a balance, the hon. Gentleman has skewed his argument so far in one direction as greatly to inconvenience the travelling public, whether the business community or holidaymakers. Air travel is a necessity for business people and one of the great joys of life for leisure travellers. It has opened up the world and given people easier access to distant regions, which once would have been impossible. I suppose that one could go to the far east with P&O, but one would need more than the four weeks holiday that most people get. Air travel gets people to such destinations more quickly.

Mr. Taylor: I thank the hon. Gentleman for giving way yet again; he is most generous. The core worry and our dominant concern is the night noise produced by freight aircraft, particularly the older variety. Dealing with that will not imperil or threaten package flights or holiday makers.

Mr. Howarth: I understand the point that the hon. Gentleman makes. When in London, I live about 300 yd north of runway 27 right. I happen to be an aviator, and I hope that the hon. Gentleman understands my description; I mean the northern parallel runway at Heathrow. I am well aware that jumbo aircraft arriving at 4 am during the summer can disrupt people's sleep patterns. I understand that; I am talking about getting the balance right.

The hon. Gentleman seems unwilling or unable to acknowledge the efforts that the industry has already made, particularly in the United Kingdom. For instance, improved burn technology and air frame efficiency and better operating procedures have cut the consumption of fuel per passenger mile in the past 40 years by no less than 70 per cent. That fantastic achievement was achieved in part by the International Civil Aviation Organisation regulations on noise, and the fuel crisis of the 1970s may have helped; but it is also the result of the industry's determination to operate more fuel-efficient aeroplanes. It did not happen by accident. It needed investment.

The Government have lauded their investment in the aerospace industry. For instance, Rolls-Royce has received another £250 million to develop the 900 and 600 variants of the Trent engine. It is hoped that those engines will produce even further efficiencies in power performance and reduce fuel consumption and, therefore, pollution. The aircraft will also become quieter. Everyone must know that aircraft have become less noisy. One needs only to hear a Boeing 707 go past to know that—although the only ones to be seen nowadays are probably owned by corrupt and incompetent African dictators, of which there are quite a few. However, at air shows one can hear the difference between a 707 or a B52 and an Airbus. It is amazing to see an Airbus go overhead at that incredible angle and seem just to hang in the sky.

Credit ought to be given to the aerospace industry, and we should certainly sing the praises of the British industry. I am sure that you would be extremely upset if I did not mention the contribution made by your constituents at Hawarden, Mr. Jones, where the Airbus wings are made. They have joined others across the United Kingdom to ensure the success of the British aerospace industry by making more efficient and quieter aircraft. The aircraft entering airline fleets today are typically 20 decibels quieter than comparable aircraft of 30 years ago. Ours is a success story.

I agree with the hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire about the ludicrous nature of our planning arrangements. I congratulate the Minister on obtaining his position as Aviation Minister. Will he please ensure that the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions looks urgently at the matter? We cannot go on dealing with planning procedures in this Neanderthal fashion. The terminal 5 inquiry has been going on for five or six years and has cost hundreds of millions of pounds. The issue is simple. Of course there are passions on both sides, but there are arguments for T5 and against it; let us hear them and make a decision. We should stop fiddling around in this extraordinary way, damaging the United Kingdom's economic effectiveness and continuing the uncertainty for people who live in the environment of Heathrow.

I agree with the hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire on the planning issue. If he wants to stop night flying at Heathrow, then fine; let us find a brand new airport, as has been done in Munich. We would need a brand new greenfield site. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman would like to tell us what part of North-West Leicestershhire would be suited to the new site.

Caroline Flint (Don Valley): Finningley.

Mr. Howarth: I shall be happy to give way if the hon. Lady wants to tell us about that. I gather that she will do so later. I flew in and out of Finningley when it was an RAF airfield, so I know it.

South-east England will not be given another airport. Under present planning arrangements, another airport is not realistic. The attitude of the antis is understandable. Who wants a socking great six-runway aerodrome taking up square miles of crowded countryside in south-east England? We must maximise the benefit of what we have. Heathrow was the most successful airport in Europe because it was revolutionary. It had two parallel runways when no other airport in Europe did. Charles de Gaulle now has six and we are being overtaken by our continental partners. It is not realistic to consider an alternative new airport for London. We need to make the most of our assets and try to accommodate the demands of business and leisure travellers within the constraints of existing airports.

The hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire talked about people who live near airports. We have new arrangements at Farnborough, which is the designated business airport for the south-east of England, as the Minister knows. It has now been agreed that a company called TAG, more familiar to the public as TAG McLaren, the Formula 1 operation, is to turn the aerodrome into the executive jet centre for south-east England, with 28,000 movements. That figure is causing my constituents some concern. The figure for Heathrow is something like 420,000. My constituents are concerned that the site will turn into another Heathrow, although that is simply not going to happen. I understand the worries that people express, but in any estate agency properties are marketed on the strength of easy access to Heathrow or East Midlands airport or the prospect of easy access to Finningley. The public want that access. What is at stake is the reconciling of the different demands.

We have a great deal to be proud of in our aerospace industry. It has served our people well and enhanced Britain's competitiveness. Good air links are a vital factor in companies' investment decisions about the United Kingdom. Without them—if we price those involved out of the market—we shall seriously damage the economy. That is the context in which we must consider the burdens that we are willing to impose on our industry, to its detriment against competitors.

Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): Noise is one of the prime problems for Londoners today. Despite what the hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) has said, it is not only the noise produced by an individual aircraft that needs to be considered but the overall pattern of aircraft movements in London.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on having secured today's debate. I agree with absolutely everything that he said about wider environmental damage and climate change taxation. However, I shall refer to noise.

HACAN ClearSkies, the Londonwide campaign on the matter, suggests that 1 million Londoners are now affected by aircraft noise. Some of that noise comes from City airport, but the vast majority comes from Heathrow, where between 75 and 80 per cent. of the year prevailing winds mean that aircraft fly over London.

Like the hon. Member for Aldershot, the Department asserts that there has been a decrease in the amount of noise. We have reason to believe that the investigations and records that the Department makes and keeps are inadequate in assessing the current position, as I shall explain.

The noise data maps collected by the Department measure only the noise of take-offs, not landings. Take-offs have become quieter, but the big increase in complaints in recent years has related to landing aircraft. The data do not include noise of less than 57 decibels, yet in large areas of London people are complaining about noise levels of 54 decibels or less. The data do not take account of the number of planes, which is a continuing problem despite individual planes becoming quieter. The area measured is based on a study conducted more than 18 years ago, and it takes no account of what is happening today. Parts of London that were not previously affected are seriously affected this year and have been for the past five years, my constituency, Lewisham, Deptford, in south-east London being a case in point.

Furthermore, the hour between 6 am and 7 am, the busiest and noisiest hour of the day, is not measured. Londoners want the few aircraft that fly in and make the greatest noise in the early hours of the morning to be completely banned. I am sometimes woken in bed in south-east London, many miles from Heathrow, between 4 am and 5 am. The economic value of such flights is extremely small, and Londoners are insistent that that economic price is too great a price to pay for people constantly being woken in the early hours of the morning.

The numbers affected are much greater than the Department's data suggest. The United Kingdom data suggest that only 158,000 people are affected by noise of more than 60 decibels around Heathrow and Gatwick. However, there are several reasons for believing that that is a serious underestimate. Most notably, no account is taken of people who live under flight paths but not in the immediate vicinity of airports, my constituents being a case in point. A more recent study of noise levels around Heathrow shows that many more people are disturbed by aircraft noise. That study, which was conducted by the European Environment Agency, found that 440,000 people around the airport are exposed to noise of more than 55 decibels.

I have several questions to ask the Minister. I wanted to refer to the World Health Organisation, but I know that other colleagues want to speak. The WHO has shown the severity of problems ranging from insomnia and stress to mental disorders in adults and retarded learning among children subjected to intense aircraft noise around airports. The WHO proposals specify safe noise levels that are well below those operating at our major airports. Do the Government or industry have plans that offer a realistic prospect of reducing aircraft noise to the safe levels recommended by the WHO? What progress has been made on the European Commission's plans to draft a noise directive that would have further implications for aviation in this country? Can the Minister confirm that radar controllers' video map centrelines have been extended from 15 miles to 20 miles from Heathrow? When will the new night-time arrangements that his predecessor announced on 21 December last year be put in place? Does he have any idea when we will hear the result of the terminal 5 inquiry? Finally, what plans are there to extend proper noise monitoring to areas such as my own, in south-east London, which are not near an airport but are under flight paths?

Mr. Simon Thomas (Ceredigion): I congratulate the hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on introducing this important subject into the debate today and for the comprehensive way in which he covered the subject.

I shall concentrate my remarks on the effect of aviation on climate change. As we had a debate in Westminster Hall on climate change before the COP 6 talks in the Hague, it may be best if I do not read into the record all the effects of climate change. I simply note that the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change has recently said that the effects of climate change in its worst-case scenario have doubled. The Government acknowledged that, when the Deputy Prime Minister said that the report from the IPCC showed that we risked major irreversible changes unless we significantly cut emissions of greenhouse gases.

Some 96 per cent. of the deaths from the changes resulting from natural disasters happen in developing countries. We in the western world must think about the impact of our activities on those countries.

Does aviation have an effect on climate change? International freight is projected to grow by 70 per cent. between 1992 and 2004 because of increased global trade. That is one of the fastest-rising causes of greenhouse gas emissions at the moment. In effect, international trade is getting a free ride because those emissions are untaxed and excluded from the Kyoto principles. Members of the Conservative party who have great concern for the farmers, as I do, know that a reason why our farm produce is under-priced is that it is so cheap to import by air freight. Therefore, there is a good sustainable environmental reason, as well as a local economy reason, to support British farmers by reconsidering what aviation is doing to farming in this country.

Aeroplanes emit 2 per cent. of all man-made CO_2 released into the atmosphere and some nitrogen oxide, which creates ozone—a potent greenhouse gas. The IPCC has developed a measure for calculating the effect of aircraft emissions, which the organisation calls "radiative forcing". The emissions, being at a higher altitude, have a higher warming capacity. Using that formula, the IPCC calculated in 1992—since when we have experienced growth—that aviation emissions contributed 3.5 per cent. of the effect of global warming. That is the equivalent of the entire CO_2 output of Canada. Canada is involved in Kyoto, but aviation is not. Clearly, that situation needs to be addressed in future talks on global warming.

Emissions of CO_2 are set to double by 2015, and nitrogen oxide emissions will rise by 96 per cent. The Government have acknowledged in their global change programme that by the year 2050, we should have reduced CO_2 emissions by some 50 or 60 per cent. The Deputy Prime Minister said that that should be our target, but I cannot understand how we can approach that target without including aviation within it. The aircraft industry has made a huge social and economic impact. We have until 2050, but let us start planning now so that there is an incremental change within aviation. No Member has suggested an overnight change that might frighten many whose economies and livelihoods depend on aviation. However, we have an opportunity to start planning now within international agreements to include aviation, as with any other form of transport, in environmental considerations.

Some argue that economic benefits are such that we cannot curb air growth. The same arguments could be advanced about the economic benefits of road traffic. However, during the past 20 years, road traffic has increased at a greater rate than economic growth. Air traffic is increasing similarly because it is so cheap to use air for both freight and passenger traffic.

Freight, in particular, undermines our own local economy. That was brought home to me by a recent constituency case. My local authority is considering an application to allow an MOD facility at Aberporth to become a civil aviation facility. Although it would be located in Blaenannerch, a rural village in remote west Wales, it would become the second largest civil airport in Wales—second only to Cardiff. I echo the comments of the hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire about the planning process, which seems completely inadequate in terms of allowing local residents to have their say and make a real assessment of the impact of such a facility.

The environmental impact assessment has been funded by the developer, which means that local residents have no faith in it. It talks of reaching 8,800 flights from Aberporth within two years, increasing by 10 per cent. each year thereafter. That is clearly taking United Kingdom statistics and applying them to a remote site in west Wales. I do not share the same worry as some local residents about such figures, although I appreciate their concern at the potential growth in air flights. However, we are not talking about west Wales decanting from London. Aberporth is a five-hour car journey from London, so I doubt whether people will fly into west Wales to relieve pressures in south-east England. We are two hours from Cardiff.

Will the Minister explain the role for small civil airports, particularly in remote areas such as west Wales? I have some faith in the application because it is linked to a technology park and a move away from an MOD facility to a Civil Aviation Authority-controlled facility would be an improvement. In terms of the environmental impact, I have slightly more faith in the CAA than the MOD. My constituents want to know how the Government see aviation fitting into sustainable development. The Green Paper entitled "The Future of Aviation" mentions regional plans, and places them in a Welsh economic context.

There is no doubt that aviation has an effect on climate change, but that it is missed out from all international considerations. That is a clear sign that the problem must be addressed. The aviation industry must be part of sustainable development. All other industries are, and the aviation industry—important though it is in the economy—should not have an advantage over other parts of the economy. Several steps can be taken. As the hon. Gentleman said, there is no tax on aviation fuel. That may be prohibited under the Chicago convention, but an emission charge tax may be considered in terms of how we can internalise the full costs of the flight, including the environmental costs.

The industry has improved noise emissions. It has done so because it knew that the Government were interested in noise. Until now, not so much attention was paid to noise emissions. Perhaps the industry can work with the Government in improving emissions, but I should like to see some form of charges so that some of the older freight aircraft that are in use pay for their effect on the environment. We must also examine the removal of unfair state subsidies. There is a VAT exemption on air tickets. It is possible that Air France puts direct state subsidies into its operations. Let us consider the infrastructure involved in constructing an airport. A road alignment must take place for even the small airport that has been suggested for my constituency, and that will have to be paid for by the local taxpayers, many of whom are upset that we are using objective 1 money.

My understanding is that airports are excluded from the provisions of integrated pollution control, which were introduced by the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Will the Minister reconsider the matter? Why should airports be excluded when factories and other industrial processes are not? Airports have an effect in terms of local air pollution and climate change. It is worrying that airports are not included in IPC, which is the highest standard of pollution control in this country. Airports should be included.

The autumn assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organisation will provide an opportunity to press such issues. The Government have at least flagged up some of the concerns in their Green Paper, and I am grateful that they are aware of those matters. International standards for aircraft emissions have been agreed in the past through the ICAO, and it can be done again. With more work, international aviation can be included within our Kyoto targets. Given the disappointments in the Hague, some might feel that, if we cannot even address the current situation, more should be done on climate change. However, it is a clear omission if international aviation cannot be included in our Kyoto targets. I hope that the Minister will listen to the concerns expressed by Members today, and consider how to factor them into the Government's future programme and the White Paper.

Caroline Flint (Don Valley): I welcome my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth) to his new position as Minister, and I thank my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) for securing the debate. I am pleased to see my hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, North (Mr. Hughes), one of my local colleagues, who shares my interest in seeing Finningley fulfil its potential in the growing industry of airports and aviation.

As Members may have become aware, the proposed Finningley airport is in my constituency. I am pleased to hear that the hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) flew in, and I am also pleased to hear that he flew out again. There is no doubt that many Members who have an interest in aviation are aware of the superb facilities at the Finningley site, which has one of the longest runways in the United Kingdom. It is a shame that the previous Government, who decided to close that excellent facility and advanced a proposal for yet another prison—there are already three in the area—did not use joined-up thinking to realise its potential for recycling millions of pounds of public investment. Stories abound that Manchester airport was interested in Finningley as its second runway at the time. We might have avoided a huge public inquiry in relation to that site if Finningley's potential had been recognised earlier.

I understand that airports must be good neighbours. I am not naïve enough to believe that there is never a conflict between short-term commercial interests and effective environmental controls. I have made a detailed submission to the Department in relation to its paper on the future of aviation and the separate consultation on aircraft noise.

More than 50,000 people have written to the council in support of Finningley being developed as a civil airport, and 500 people have written in against it. That is 100 to 1 in favour of the site rising from the ashes to be a major contributor to the local economy. That is what it signifies to many people who lived and worked with the RAF for many years. Whether the site meets its potential again is a question of sustainability. Considering the numbers who are against it, never have so few tried to thwart the ambitions of the many. I think that I am the only Member of Parliament who has presented to the House a petition of more than 20,000 people, in this case against a public inquiry into the proposed airport development.

Several simple proposals could significantly improve the environmental sustainability of UK airports. First, on a macro level, the Government should aim to reduce the average journey made by consumers to airports that provide an appropriate service. Each region should seek to provide suitable services for the majority of its residents. Government policy should deal with those regions where existing airports demonstrably fail to achieve the level and range of services to meet local needs. Yorkshire and the south-west are two such regions where new air services are desperately required. Where necessary, Government should recognise the availability of suitable brownfield sites—the hon. Member for Ceredigion (Mr. Thomas) made that point well in respect of the development of the Ministry of Defence site in his constituency—and we should certainly consider using former RAF airbases. Where new airports are needed, we should avoid greenfield development.

Each region should guarantee a long-haul capacity. At present, we have too few airports capable of long-haul travel, unevenly distributed throughout the United Kingdom. Our objective should be to have between 12 and 15 long-haul airports. Without those, there will be a rising trend of passengers travelling to the south-east or Manchester to take long-haul flights.

All of that is fully in keeping with the Government's other worthy objective of maximising the potential of regional airports to assist in economic regeneration for each region. The Government should develop sustainable access to airports and financially reward those that achieve the highest rates of access via public transport and means other than cars. Rail-bus-air intermodal hubs should be created wherever possible. Two means of achieving that are diverting major inter-city rail lines through airports and locating parkway stations at such interchanges. One Government target should be to reduce long road journeys to airports—mainly in the south-east—and the overall distances travelled to airports.

Every airport should have noise quotas applied and all new airports should match or better the noise controls of comparable airports. All airports should be given a timetable for meeting agreed minimum standards via nationally determined quiet operation policies and noise control programmes. Enforcement of noise controls should be separated from commercial considerations. The imposition of penalties on airports and airlines for breaches of noise controls or departure from noise preferential routes should be independent of the airport and local authorities, and should perhaps be administered by the Civil Aviation Authority. The present system discourages enforcement of noise controls for commercial reasons—especially, I regret to say, if the airport is partly or wholly owned by the local authority. Minimum noise standards should apply irrespective of how few or many residents are affected. Each household should be accorded the same minimum protection.

Freight should be encouraged by rail and then by air, rather than by road, and each region should be able to offer appropriate air freight services—Yorkshire and Humber makes a poor contribution in that respect, thereby adding to the number of freight-related journeys by road to airports further afield. The Government should deter and discriminate against internal flights that can more sustainably be undertaken by rail. However, the Government should not cap passenger numbers, which would only thwart legitimate consumer aspirations for international travel and have the effect either of driving up the price of travel as supply was restricted, or of driving passengers abroad to meet their air travel needs—neither is in the national or consumer interest.

The best way to improve airport capacity is to adopt policies to increase the number of regional airports that can provide long-haul as well as European flights, thereby increasing the chances of significant market penetration. That would assist in meeting the objective of reducing internal flights and short flights to European hubs, such as Amsterdam and Brussels, before a long-haul leg.

Government policy should seek a diversity of ownership and market penetration in the interests of competition and of the consumer, and of raising standards, including environmental standards. Policy should prevent a duopoly developing, with BAA and Manchester dominating the market and preventing the growth of other airport consortiums, especially in long-haul travel. By ensuring that, we will not only increase consumer and airline choice but raise standards through competition in this growing area of our economy.

12.3 pm

Mr. Steve McCabe (Birmingham, Hall Green): I, too, congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on securing this debate. It is important that airport authorities never underestimate the impact of airports on local communities, nor should they evade their environmental responsibilities. However, I stress that we should not view developments at Birmingham international airport as totally a gloom and doom story, because the airport authority has made strides in recent years and provides a model of airports engaging in sustainable development but still entering legally binding agreements that protect the local community. Credit should be given for that.

Like my hon. Friend, I am conscious of airports' impact on jobs. Birmingham international airport employs as many people as MG Rover's Longbridge plant. Hon. Members will recall the shock waves that went through this House when Longbridge recently came under threat.

I want to focus on a couple of matters relating to noise. I, too, have noticed that noise levels in general are reducing thanks to the introduction of quieter aircraft, which is particularly important. My hon. Friend mentioned PAIN, and said that night flights are one of his core concerns. Birmingham airport operates what is probably one of the most stringent night flying policies in the country. Operators whose aircraft exceed agreed levels are fined the equivalent of a full runway charge, and the money thereby generated is diverted into local community schemes. Those sums are reinforced by a £50,000 annual grant paid by the airport, so it is not true to say that air operators do not pay. Stringent agreements can be entered into, and by and large operators observe them. Where they fail to do so, the money generated through fines can be recycled into local communities.

As is doubtless true of airports throughout the country, Birmingham has invested a lot of money—about £500,000—in monitoring and tracking equipment to ensure that aircraft follow noise preferential routes. In 1999, about 98 per cent. of aircraft taking off from Birmingham did indeed follow such routes. By investing in the right equipment and engaging in the right agreements, it is possible to ensure that local communities are protected.

Reference was made to American studies on pollution and the impact on health, but Professor Roy Harrison of the University of Birmingham, who is a leading authority on the subject, has also done some interesting work. His two-year study of respiratory disease in the area around Birmingham international airport, which involved some 9,000 people, concluded that there were no significant health risks. In fact, where respiratory illness and similar conditions were found, they were as likely to be associated with smoking and housing conditions as with the airport itself. The air quality monitoring scheme at Birmingham international airport has revealed pollution levels that are lower than those at other sites monitored by Birmingham city council. Therefore, we should not automatically make such claims about airports.

Reference was made to surface transport, which is a crucial factor in ensuring that local communities do not suffer as a result of attempts to develop airports. The bus network in Birmingham has been expanded extensively to serve most of the surrounding areas. The airport itself is building a dedicated public transport interchange that is linked to Birmingham railway station, and as my hon.

[Mr. Steve McCabe]

Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) said, such developments are crucial. It is also investing £10 million in an environmentally friendly people mover, and is engaged in green commuter plans that are crucial for staff who commute to the airport. It is therefore clear that there are steps that airports can and should be encouraged to take.

In conclusion, I agree about the importance of protecting local communities and ensuring that the environment does not suffer when airports develop and expand. However, we should not underestimate the positive impact—in terms of jobs and other factors—of airport developments and we should not negate the efforts of airports such as Birmingham international to respond to the concerns of local communities.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (in the Chair): Before I call the hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Moore), may I ask him to be extremely brief? I had intended to call him earlier, but he did not rise in his place. We must allow the Opposition spokesman and in particular the Minister adequate time to reply.

12.10 pm

Mr. Michael Moore (Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale): I am grateful to be called, Mr. Winterton, and I apologise for failing to catch your eye earlier. I thought that I had made my intentions clear. I acknowledge that significant contributions are yet to come from the two Front-Bench spokesmen and I look forward to hearing them.

I congratulate the hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on securing the debate and raising an issue that is vital to this country's transport debates, but is regularly ignored in debates about sustainability. We must acknowledge—and I do nothing to detract from it—that aviation is a great UK success story. Its growth has been phenomenal and is expected to intensify in the next few years.

Too often, however, the environmental and social aspects of the sustainability equation have been either less well understood or not debated at all. The Green Paper, "The Future of Aviation", sets out some of the important arguments. I look forward to hearing the Minister's response and I belatedly welcome him to his position. Last year, he and I spent some time considering the transport legislation. As he was often not able to speak at all, it is a rare treat to hear him twice in one morning.

The Oxford economic forecasting report has already demonstrated the economic success of the aviation industry but, as the hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire pointed out, many serious concerns have been expressed about the limitations of that report.

We have had a measured debate, which has taken account of the delicate balance between environmental and economic issues. Hon. Members representing constituencies with airports have made valuable contributions. However, there can no longer be any escape from the need to tackle noise pollution, local air pollution and, as the hon. Member for Ceredigion (Mr. Thomas) pointed out, the effects of global warming and climate change.

The Liberal Democrats accept that—directly or indirectly—aviation contributes hugely to the economy of this country and of the world, but it is not without cost. The British Airports Authority itself recently suggested the need for a sustainable aviation forum.

The "polluter pays" principle cannot be ignored and should be closer to the heart of aviation policy than it has been in the past. My hon. Friends have been vigorous in their opposition to terminal 5. Perhaps we can tempt the Minister to comment on it today. Urgent measures should be taken to deal with climate change in the international context, which means considering the introduction of an international aviation fuel tax.

The Green Paper starts the debate, which we hope the Minister will continue; and when the White Paper finally arrives, we hope that it will measure up to the task.

Mr. Robert Syms (Poole): Thank you, Mr. Winterton. Let us hope that you are soon appointed Mr. Deputy Speaker officially.

I congratulate the hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on securing this important debate. As my hon. Friend the Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) said, aviation is one of Britain's greatest success stories—not only in manufacturing aircraft, but in respect of airlines and airports. British aviation is second only to the United States of America. It contributes £10 billion to our economy, 1.4 per cent. of gross domestic product, and it directly employs 180,000 people and supports the jobs of a further 380,000 people. Despite criticism during our debate, it contributes £2.5 billion in taxes and represents 11 per cent. of UK export services.

The industry has been successful because it has allowed itself to innovate. In recent years there have been developments such as low-cost airlines, the growth of the charter market and the expansion of some regional airports. The Confederation of British Industry said that airport links with the rest of the world are crucial for any company or business that wants to invest in the United Kingdom. The industry has an excellent safety record, which I hope will continue.

There is no question but that air transport has an environmental impact and the forecast growth in air travel requires steps to be taken to tackle the issue. A rational debate is required, the starting point of which is that global aviation consumes 12 per cent. of fossil fuels burnt by the transport sector, and road transport 75 per cent. As a result of improved burn technology, air frame efficiency and better operating procedures, consumption of fuel per passenger mile over the past 40 years has been cut by 70 per cent., which is a substantial improvement.

Aircraft are becoming quieter, and aircraft entering the fleet today are typically 20 decibels quieter than comparable aircraft 30 years ago, a reduction in noise annoyance of about 75 per cent. and a massive shrinkage of noise footprints around airports. Great progress has been made in the matter.

The industry's role has changed, and aircraft manufacturers appreciate what they must do in future years. My hon. Friend the Member for North Essex (Mr. Jenkin) spoke about aircraft noise recently. He said:

"At present, aircraft noise is assessed against an absolute measure: decibels. However, the disturbance a noise causes depends upon the loudness in relation to the background noise. The noise of flights into Heathrow has little impact over West London, alongside traffic and other, daytime noise. But at night, London's suburbs are deadly quiet, and there are parts of the countryside that are noted for their tranquility. Some special areas are designated as such, citing their tranquility. There is absolutely no provision for tranquil areas in present policy. Public support for aviation depends upon the way these questions are addressed. The next Conservative government will not only expect the growing number of aircraft in our skies, as technology continues to improve, to have less and less noise impact. We will also adopt relative systems of measurement for assessing the impact of aircraft noise. Furthermore, we will create a presumption that low flying air traffic should avoid tranquil areas and tranquil periods. This will not change much—or indeed anything— quickly, but it may lead to some significant changes at the margin."

Terminal 5 and airport policy have been mentioned; if we have a difficulty, it is with strategic planning for airspace and airports. Governments of all colours have not always been willing to grasp the nettle, because of the four or five-year cycle of parliamentary elections and the longer-term cycle required to develop airspace. The terminal 5 inquiry cost between £70 million and £85 million and since it began, Charles de Gaulle airport has completed a third runway and started a fourth. Schipol will have five runways by 2003, yet the five London airports combined have only six runways. There is a problem, especially in the south-east, of ensuring that capacity is met. Those issues need to be addressed and it is difficult to set out a sensible regional strategy; it is a pity that we cannot look at things strategically, across the whole country, until we know the result of the terminal 5 inquiry.

Airport operators can do a great deal about improved surface access; we heard that pollution caused by cars going to and from Heathrow may be more than that caused by the aircraft. The airline industry is a profitable industry, and so are airports; what is needed is a balancing factor to ensure that profits go into improving the infrastructure for passengers and reducing the environmental impact around airports. There are numerous examples, such as the London to Heathrow express rail link and Manchester airport's development and public transport strategy, which should be pursued to develop a more sustainable policy.

Overall, if air traffic is increasing, it is sensible to try to accommodate it with investment. The only effective way to dampen down demand, as the hon. Member for North-West Leicestershire recommends, is by taxation or by putting people off flying. People have a right to travel. We hear stories about rip-offs in the selling of cars and fuel, but here is an efficient industry that is delivering good value in terms of flights and packages so that people can move around the world. The criticisms we have heard today are unfair. We have a successful industry and if we work with it to ensure improved environmental standards and investment it should not be beyond the wit of the fourth largest economy in the world to allow people to travel and to improve environmental standards.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Mr. Robert Ainsworth): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire (Mr. Taylor) on securing the debate and on the comprehensive way in which he dealt with both the global and local issues. I will try to answer the points that were raised, but I am fairly certain that I will not get them all in. I give a commitment to write to hon. Members about any that I miss.

Our consultation paper, "The Future of Aviation", published in December, raises a comprehensive range of issues for the longer term, with the environmental implications of the industry right at the heart. We must seek to minimise the impact of aviation on the environment. At the same time, our present and future policies must and do take account of the economic benefits from a strong and competitive airline industry and from enabling capacity to be provided where it is economically and environmentally justified. That is emphatically not the same as what has been termed, perhaps simplistically, "predict and provide".

We must look critically at the environmental dimension, and that is what we are doing. However, we must also recognize that demand arises because people want to fly for business, for holidays and to visit friends and relations. Whether aviation growth is sustainable is a decision for Government. We have recognised that responsibility, but it also involves personal decisions on how, and how often, we want to travel. We are therefore consulting very widely.

Responses to the consultation paper are due by 12 April. We are not just waiting passively for people to respond. We are actively involving representatives of the industry, and environmental and residents' groups, in the various strands of work as they are developed. We have commissioned a series of studies of airport issues in six regions of the UK. The studies assess the economic, environmental and social impacts, and we shall balance all those factors before reaching a view about whether additional capacity should be provided, either at a particular site or at all. Again, I stress that there is not a blanket commitment to meet demand and then just to mitigate the environmental effects. The demand management option is on the table.

We are working towards a White Paper on air transport looking about 30 years ahead, which will set a course that the aviation industry, its users, and those affected adversely by its operations, can follow. As most hon. Members here will know, jet aircraft are subject to noise certification requirements agreed through the International Civil Aviation Organisation. The noisiest subsonic jets—those certificated to chapter 2 standards—are already being phased out and, apart from minor exemptions, may no longer operate in Europe beyond March 2002. That has already delivered significant benefits, but we have to move on.

The Government have been prominent among those in ICAO who have argued for tighter standards for new aircraft. After much hard technical negotiation, in January this year CAEP—the Committee on Aviation Environmental Protection—agreed on a set of recommendations to the ICAO council. The headline in respect of noise is the agreement on a new noise standard for new jet aircraft 10 decibels lower—cumulatively across the three certification points—than the present chapter 3 standard. The new standard will apply from 2006.

I make no secret of the fact that we had argued vigorously for an even more stringent standard than the new one, which will consolidate the technical progress in engine and airframe design achieved by the industry. We shall continue to work in CAEP for a more stringent long-term standard and for action to prevent noise from increasing in the short term. For three years we have been arguing for a standard that ensures improvement in future designs and for a phase-out programme covering the noisiest chapter 3 types. They are generally the oldest aircraft, including many of those hush kitted to meet the standard.

As well as reducing noise at source, our policy includes mitigating its impact around airports. Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted are designated under section 80 for the purposes of section 78 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982. That provision gives the Secretary of State powers to impose requirements on the operators of the airport, and of aircraft using it, for the purpose of limiting or mitigating the effects of noise. The requirements imposed include departure noise limits—which for daytime have been reduced with effect from this week; the new night-time limits come into effect next month—night restrictions, noise preferential routes for departures and certain regulations for the management of arriving aircraft.

Hon. Members will be disappointed if they expect me to comment on the Heathrow terminal 5 decision process beyond noting that the inspector's report is being carefully studied in the Department. A mass of evidence on environmental matters was submitted to the T5 inquiry, which the inspector has had to consider.

My hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire expressed a keen interest in the possibility of East Midlands airport being designated for the purposes of section 78, as North West Leicestershire district council and others have requested. Although I am not entirely unacquainted with the east midlands region, I am sure that everyone will understand that I cannot comment in detail on that request. The council and the airport are still discussing the noise controls at East Midlands airport. Now that the airport's sale has been completed, subject to clearance by the Office of Fair Trading, it may be possible to expedite the dialogue somewhat. We shall take a decision when all parties' representations have been considered.

Currently, the Government impose controls only at the three London airports. Elsewhere, we continue the long-standing policy that operational noise controls are best addressed at local level as far as possible. Many larger airports tend to model their controls on those at the designated airports, modified to suit local circumstances. Noise charges, set by airports themselves, are also used at the London airports and elsewhere.

We are considering improvements to the regime for non-designated airports. Separately from the consultation on the strategic issues for the White Paper, we have consulted on legislative proposals to strengthen those aerodromes' powers to control noise. We propose to repeal section 5 of the 1982 Act, whereby the CAA could be required to address environmental factors when licensing an aerodrome, and replace it with a new power of designation with an emphasis on locally agreed noise amelioration schemes. That will continue the broad policy of local resolution and add to the incentives to find effective and appropriate voluntary controls, with the possibility of central Government intervening where necessary. The paper was published last July, and the consultation period closed in October.

I apologise for being unable to move on to the issue of emissions, which is very important and was raised by my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Leicestershire and the hon. Member for Ceredigion (Mr. Thomas). I make a commitment to write to my hon. Friend about the situation with regard to emissions and about where the issue fits into Government policy in international negotiations and the work being done in the run-up to the publication of the White Paper. I shall write to all hon. Members who have contributed to this debate.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (in the Chair): Order. We now move to the next debate.

Regional Policies (Dorset)

12.30 pm

Mr. Christopher Chope (Christchurch): I am grateful to the Minister for Local Government and the Regions for agreeing to respond to the debate. I understand that on Friday she will address the south-west regional assembly in Exeter, in a debate on the south-west; she comes from the north-east, and both it and the south-west are badly affected by foot and mouth disease. I hope that she agrees that the current foot and mouth crisis shows that regionalism is an irrelevance. In the jargon of the management consultant, Government regional policies add no value; indeed, the bureaucracy, centralisation and interference with local decision-making involved in regionalism engender a significant waste of scarce resources and are a drain on local communities. Nowhere is that truer than in Dorset.

I am also grateful to the Minister for responding because she has the greatest responsibility for decisions on the distributions of taxpayers' money to local government. Today I am giving her the opportunity to apologise to the people of Dorset for the consistently unfair discrimination that the Government have exercised against them. Why does a band D householder in Dorset pay 50 per cent. more towards the cost of the police than a similar householder in Hampshire? It is not because the police service in Dorset is any better than that in Hampshire but because the Government's formula is unjust. Why does a band D household in Dorset pay some £45 more towards its county council than such a household in Hampshire?

Hampshire can afford to spend more per pupil on education. One might think that that would suggest that Hampshire council tax payers had higher bills, but the reverse is true. Why is that? This year, Dorset's education standard spending assessment has risen by less than the national average. The county council is forced to spend about 5 per cent. above that SSA, but is still not able to afford to fund its pupils on a basis comparable to that of Hampshire. That is partly because the Liberal Democrat county council insists on holding back too much money at the centre, but also because the Government's funding formula discriminates against Dorset for being in the south-west. In 2001-02, £132.50 less per pupil was spent in Dorset than in Hampshire on pupils aged between 11 and 15 and £82 less per pupil was spent on pupils aged between five and 10.

Why have the Government awarded a special cost-of-living supplement to nurses working in Hampshire when they have denied it to those in Dorset? My hon. Friend the Member for Poole (Mr. Syms) has campaigned strongly on that issue because he has Poole hospital in his constituency. All Dorset Members of Parliament are united in their opposition to the Government for their unjust handling of that. When Dorset and Hampshire were both members of Wessex health authority, they received equal treatment. However, now that the Government have forced Dorset into the south-west, nurses living and working in Dorset not only pay higher council taxes, for the reasons that I have just given, but are paid less.

To add insult to injury, for the third year running, the additional funding made available by the Government to Dorset health authority is significantly below the national average, despite the fact that Dorset has a rapidly expanding population, a high proportion of whom are elderly. Indeed, Dorset receives less than its fair share on many counts—not only for health, education and police, but for district council services. One is bound to ask whether the Government are engaging in pork-barrel politics. It seems that because no Labour Members of Parliament represent Dorset seats, the Government are taking it out on the Dorset people by starving them of an equal share of resources.

Why else are the Government discriminating against the two district councils in my constituency—East Dorset and Christchurch—in their concessionary fares policy? No less than £54 million of taxpayers' money was made available to pay for the Government's compulsory concessionary fares policy. How much of that money reached the people who live in the East Dorset and Christchurch district council areas? Not a penny of that £54 million has been made available to East Dorset council, despite the fact that a high proportion of pensioners live there, and only £20,000 has been made available to Christchurch council; yet the additional burden of concessionary fares costs about £150,000 in East Dorset and £93,000 in Christchurch.

Christchurch has been running a system targeted on those in greatest need, which costs about £72,000 a year. The Government have now imposed a new system that would cost up to an additional £230,000 if the council could afford it. Christchurch has thus been forced into providing the minimum reduced service laid down by the Government, and many of those who benefit under the concessionary fares scheme will now lose out because the council can no longer afford it. The Government do not seem to realise that many elderly people cannot get on buses—it is physically impossible for them—and that a voucher scheme that would enable them to use taxis would be much more attractive. The Government have removed Christchurch council's local discretion; they have instead imposed a new burden, and they expect that burden to be funded through the council tax.

Mr. Robert Syms (Poole): I congratulate my hon. Friend on his robust defence of Dorset, which I fully support. It is ironic that many of the elderly who are supposed to benefit from concessionary fares will now be paying far more in council tax for that benefit.

Mr. Chope: Indeed, they will. In Christchurch, about 32 per cent. of households are pensioner households; in East Dorset, the figure is about 25 per cent. The Government are expecting those pensioner households to pay more council tax. Council tax poverty—when householders have to pay more than 10 per cent. of their income on council tax—is a fast growing problem in Christchurch and Dorset. I suspect—my hon. Friend the Member for Poole will know—that it is probably at its worst among pensioners who live in the more rural parts of Dorset. While the Government continue with such regional policies, we shall have to work within that framework when representing our constituents.

I gave the Minister of State's private office notice of some of my concerns about the impact of the latest draft regional planning guidance on my constituency. After extensive consultation and an independent panel inquiry, it seems that planning guidance is being altered at ministerial whim. I shall illustrate that by referring to the status of Bournemouth international airport. In 1999, the south-west regional planning conference proposed as part of policy 12 that

"Policies should support the further growth of Bournemouth International Airport as a sub-regional Airport and employment location."

After consultation and public examination before a panel appointed by the Secretary of State, the panel reported that the regional policy guidance should contain a policy to achieve

"the continued development of Bournemouth International Airport as an important airport for the region and as a major strategic employment site".

The Secretary of State now proposes a further change in the wording, so that the policy would support

"the continued development of Bournemouth International Airport as an important airport for the region and as a site for airport related development".

That last minute change of wording has caused consternation in Christchurch district council and Dorset county council, and among local businesses. It is also opposed by the regional development agency. The change is not supported by evidence, yet the process purports to be evidence based.

I have given the Minister notice of my intention to ask where the proposed change of wording originated, so I hope that she will be able to answer. The introduction to the paper that set out the proposed changes in December stated:

"This consultation draft is based on the draft approved in July 1999 . . . It takes account of comments from consultees in autumn 1999 and, in particular, the panel report on the public examination held in March 2000 of key issues raised by consultees."

However, neither the planning conference nor the panel suggested the changes that are now being proposed for incorporation by the Government. Indeed, the Government seem to be making up the rules as they go along.

Why is the Secretary of State proposing the change in status? The reason that he gives is that "the role of Bournemouth Airport should be recognised but its development potential should not be minimalised by the development of inappropriate activities on the site. It is important in this location, therefore, that future development should have a strong need to be located at or near this facility".

No one really knows what those words mean. Surely the best judges of how to use the airport should be its owners and the present tenants and lessees of the land. Suspicions are mounting that the significance of the Secretary of State's wording was not thought through. Indeed, in the latest draft the Secretary of State "invites comments from parties on how this might be achieved".

Perhaps he could begin by explaining, through the Minister of State, why the change is necessary in the first place. At the same time, he could explain what the words mean.

The Government say that they want Bournemouth international airport to be recognised as having regional importance. However, the regional air service studies that are being undertaken clearly envisage the airport serving a catchment area far beyond the confines of the south-west region. Indeed, some people fear that the aim of the regional air service studies is to meet airport demand in the south-east by supplying additional capacity in the south-west. The results of the regional air service studies could be of major significance, yet they are not to be published until after the date of the expected general election and after the closing date for further representations on the regional planning guidance. Is it unduly cynical to view the Government's timing as calculated to deny local people and their elected representatives effective input into the major decisions that may already have been taken within Government but which have not yet been shared outside, for fear of frightening the electorate?

The A31 presents another example of the Government's high-handed treatment of my constituents and those of my hon. Friend the Member for Poole, as well as the rest of the people of Dorset. The south-west regional planning conference said that policies should "support the Port of Poole and associated regional and local transport links, particularly the A31-Poole link."

The panel reported that the regional planning guidance should seek to achieve

"the continued development of the Port of Poole including the improvement of regional and local transport links and in particular the A31-Poole link."

The A31-Poole link is important to my constituents in Ferndown, because it will bring them traffic relief. However, the Secretary of State has proposed in his latest draft regional planning guidance that references to the A31 link should not be included,

"as this scheme is being progressed through the local transport planning process".

If only it were. However, it is not.

On 14 December, the Secretary of State issued the results of the first full local transport plan settlement, which was undecided about the Poole bridge scheme. Care was taken to explain that, even if a favourable opinion were to be adopted on the Poole bridge scheme, there should not be a read-across to the Poole-A31 local link. All that has been offered is the possibility of a meeting between the local council and the regional office. All that I can say is, "Big deal." That is another example of the Government's ignoring the recommendations of the planning conference and the report of the panel, which examined the issue in detail and the evidence. What is the point of an evidence-based process if the Government tear up the recommendations and do what they like?

The boundary of the south-west region does not serve Dorset well, but I do not have time during this short debate to discuss that in great detail. The Government have decided to divide the south-west into four sub-regions. I have asked some parliamentary questions about that and have been told that the sub-regions cannot be defined by constituency or even by which constituencies are situated in more than one sub-region. We know that there are four sub-regions, which overlap. I have asked—I have not received a reply—whether the south-east spatial sub-region of the south-west extends into the south-west spatial sub-region of the south-east. The Minister has refused to answer that question, which is important to my constituents. The Government are imposing rigid, regional boundaries that are creating a host of anomalies.

If the Government want to insist on this regional nonsense, they could try to make the people of south-east Dorset feel part of the south-west by improving the road links between south-east Dorset and Exeter and Bristol. I do not know what means of transport the Minister will use when she goes to Exeter on Friday, but when she gets there, she might bear it in mind that to travel from Christchurch to Exeter takes the best part of two and a half or three hours in the summer. Someone representing Christchurch at a regional assembly would have to spend five or six hours travelling. It would be quicker to travel to London for a meeting and even quicker to travel to the so-called south-east regional headquarters that is emerging in Guildford.

Regionalism does not work in the south-west. We know that it is the means by which the European Commission hopes to destroy the individual nations of Europe; its agenda is to divide the United Kingdom and then to divide England by imposing top-down structures. The model that suits Dorset and England better is one in which local communities govern themselves through a network of truly local councils and are represented in Parliament by Members of Parliament who can hold Ministers to account. That is what our debate is all about.

The Minister for Local Government and the Regions (Ms Hilary Armstrong): I congratulate the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) on again obtaining an Adjournment debate on Dorset. Not much of his speech was about regional policy and most of it concerned local government, which is not part of the regional programme. He obviously could not find enough to say about regional policies to fill the time available. I shall attempt to deal with the substance of his comments.

The hon. Gentleman continually says that the Government have already made decisions; the conspiracy theory survives. The only reason for his believing that is that he acted in that way when he was in government. I have no experience of the Government working in that way. I am sorry that he continued to push the cynical conspiracy theory until, eventually, we heard his real reason for fearing regionalism. He believes that it will draw us closer to the European Community. His hatred of that is such that it totally colours his perspective. That is very sad. If he ever comes to the north-east, he will see that people were interested in regional policy long before the European Union became interested, and long before the Government introduced a regional policy.

The hon. Member for Christchurch probably cannot remember, but when his Government took power, there were strong protests from people who sought a more regional approach and the equivalent of the Scottish Development Agency for the English regions. That suggestion was rejected by the Conservative Government. The regional policy is not just a whim of the Government but one that comes from a clear understanding of what is going on in the regions now. It is important to address imbalances from a regional perspective.

Our commitment to opportunity for all demands a new regional policy. Greater prosperity and rising employment, which I know has been a feature of life for many people in Dorset in the past three to four years, does not automatically mean fairer sharing of prosperity across regions, cities or neighbourhoods. We know that all too well. However, unemployment and child poverty have fallen in every British region since 1997, although I accept that unemployment remains higher in some regions than in the south-east.

Six out of eight English regions have incomes per head below the European average. We can ill afford to view regional prosperity as an optional extra, to be established only after we have established another tier of government. There is nothing inevitable about regional inequalities and incomes, employment or opportunity. We can achieve balanced growth and rising prosperity not only in one or two regions but in every region and city. However, that requires a new approach to regional policy.

Mr. Syms: Does the Minister realise that regional inequality is growing because the Government are giving us less grant? Hampshire gets more money; Dorset gets less. That applies to both Christchurch and Poole.

Ms Armstrong: I shall come to inequalities in local government funding in a moment. Given what the hon. Member for Christchurch said, I need to make it clear why the Government have approached these matters from a regional perspective. It is necessary to back regional and local enterprise and initiative by exploiting indigenous strengths in regions and cities. Regional policy must be bottom-up rather than top-down, and further steps are required to deliver greater accountability and scrutiny both regionally and locally.

The hon. Member for Christchurch referred to local government finance. He will know—I am criticised by my hon. Friends for this—that we have not substantially changed the local government funding system since the general election. We use the system that the Conservative Government operated of standard spending assessments that are linked to need, levels of scarcity and many other things that reflect the position in different areas. He will know that I am not content that that always gives us the best outcome possible, but we have been able to ensure that in Dorset there are now only 219 infants in classes larger than 30, whereas there were 3,736 in such classes in 1997. There are 9,314 people waiting for in-patient operations compared with 12,371 in March 1997. I understand that there was an increase of 8.3 per cent. in 2000-01 and 7.9 per cent. in 2001-02 in the Dorset health authority allocations. The hon. Member for Christchurch will acknowledge that no such increases occurred when his party was in power, and I reject his view—

Mr. Chope rose—

Ms Armstrong: If I am to answer the hon. Gentleman's questions, I must make progress.

I was somewhat confused by the hon. Gentleman's remarks about Bournemouth airport. The wording of the regional planning guidance is subject to a consultation process that will not be completed until 14 March, so it would be inappropriate for me to say what the final wording will be. As with all consultation exercises, it is important that we listen to the views of everyone and respond to them, and the views that the hon. Gentleman has expressed today will be taken into account. He asked why we rejected the local panel's recommendation on the green belt around Bournemouth airport. The matter was recently reviewed through the development plan process, and green-belt status would not prevent development of the airport. For example, its situation in the green belt has not inhibited extensive expansion of Bristol airport, which has significantly higher throughput than Bournemouth airport.

The hon. Gentleman said that the change to a policy to support "airport-related development" was not recommended by the panel. However, as he subsequently acknowledged, that phrase was intended to indicate that no one was anticipating general development. I doubt whether the hon. Gentleman himself would want housing or industrial development on that site. As I understand it, he wants effective development of the airport and its associated functions, but as he knows, availability of land for development on the periphery of Bournemouth is limited. If land were used for general development, the growth of the airport might well be restricted, which is why the draft regional planning guidance supports airport-related development. However, that does not preclude other development. Primarily, the matter is one for the local district plan, which, as I understand it, states that land with airport access should predominantly be used for aviation-related activities that require such a facility. If the hon. Gentleman can demonstrate that the planning guidance runs contrary to the genuine concerns that he has expressed, we will be able to achieve the right wording. However, I suspect that rather more heat than light has been cast on the issue today.

The hon. Member for Christchurch also referred to the road and transport plan for Dorset, Poole and Bournemouth, and asked why the proposed A31 link to Poole had been cancelled. With the reinstatement in 1995 of the A31-A35 trunk road, Poole has retained a core trunk road that is in close proximity to its port. The Government Office, Poole borough council and Dorset county council have discussed the matter constructively, and in the light of those discussions the councils will consider how best to take the matter forward. The local transport plan settlement recognised the importance to the area's regeneration of a second crossing for Poole harbour, and we look forward to examining the councils' proposals in July.

Dorset, Poole and Bournemouth submitted their first local transport plans in July 2000 and subsequently received substantially increased funding, but it is for Dorset county council to determine its local investment priorities and to bid as part of the local transport planning process. No proposals were made for improved links to Christchurch, so we could not fund them. Cross-boundary issues must be considered by Cornwall, Dorset and Hampshire county councils and by the Government offices. They are discussing those matters, and it is important that they do so. The hon. Gentleman said that he wanted to see questions settled locally. Those are precisely the mechanisms that we have put in place, and I hope that those involved will work co-operatively to address the issues.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (in the Chair): Order. Time is up. We must move on to the next debate.

National Minimum Wage

Angela Smith (Basildon): I am pleased to see my hon. Friend the Minister for Competitiveness here. I know of his commitment to issues affecting the rights of those at work, and I hope that he will give a sympathetic response to the debate.

We all have days when we wonder why we wanted to be Members of Parliament in the first place, and it is easier to find the reason on some days than it is on others. When I was appointed as a member of a Committee that considered a statutory instrument about daylight saving hours, I did not feel—important as that matter is—that such matters were a motivating factor in my having become a Member of Parliament. However, when I was appointed as a member of the Standing Committee that considered the National Minimum Wage Bill, I felt that I was dealing with one of the major reasons why I got involved in politics, because it was an issue of fairness and equality.

During the 1997 general election campaign, the Conservatives claimed that the minimum wage was one of 10 good reasons not to vote Labour. On that basis, during the next campaign they will probably say, "Don't vote Labour because it will spend money on schools and hospitals." We believed the minimum wage to be economically and morally right. The Tory party believed that it was wrong and predicted gloom and doom for the economy. It is worth spending a few minutes assessing which of those two views was accurate. Someone recently said that in theory, theory and practice should be the same, but in practice they rarely are. In this case, the Tory theory certainly did not work in practice.

In Basildon and East Thurrock more than 1,400 people have benefited directly from the national minimum wage. In reality, the figure is probably much higher, because many employers, when they realised that the legislation was about to be introduced, raised their wage rates to the amount that they expected the minimum wage to be—or, indeed, higher than that. Low pay is more widespread in Essex than it is in the south-east as a whole, and my constituency has benefited significantly.

One of the biggest fears was that the minimum wage would cost jobs. The scaremongering story was put out that creating a floor in wages would price the low-paid out of employment. We were told by the right hon. Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) that it was the height of irresponsibility, and the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow)—I have notified him that I am quoting his comments—confidently asserted:

> "The truth is that a national minimum wage will not create jobs, but destroy them".—[Official Report, 1 December 1997; Vol. 302, c. 103.]

and that it would be a "calamity". A Conservative party press release stated:

> "The minimum wage, even if set at £3.60 an hour, will fuel inflation and necessitate further interest rate rises."

I am sure that at the time those who made such comments believed them to be true.

The Committee that considered the National Minimum Wage Bill has the distinction of having had the longest sitting of this Parliament, and probably of other Parliaments. It sat throughout the night more than once, on one occasion until 1 pm the next day. Conservative members of the Committee left us in no doubt that they were appalled and horrified by even the suggestion of fair pay. They argued against a minimum wage for pensioners, the disabled and those in the voluntary sector—all tactics to try to prevent anyone from benefiting from something that they now cannot say that they would do away with. They argued late into the night, through the night, into the next day, through to the next day and into the next.

That was not merely token opposition but full-blown opposition to the minimum wage, based on the deep-rooted belief that it was wrong. Their acceptance of the policy must be one of the biggest U-turns in history—although I admit that my experiences on the Committee give me some cause for doubt. However, they were right to make the U-turn. The evidence is there for all to see. The minimum wage was welcomed by businesses across the country that had previously been undercut by cowboy workers. Before the introduction of the legislation, a man who owned a private security firm that employed quality workers was a regular visitor to one of my surgeries. He was desperate to see the national minimum wage introduced because he feared that cowboys would undercut him and his business would go bust. I am pleased to say that he has not felt the need to come and see me since the introduction of the legislation.

Fears that enforcement would be too difficult were unfounded—only six enforcement orders have been needed in the eastern region. The Low Pay Commission thinks that the majority of businesses have met their obligations on the minimum wage.

What of the other predictions? There has not been a sharp upwards step in earnings and inflation has not soared—in fact, it has gone down. Unemployment was the issue that caused the most worry. Tory scaremongering that the national minimum wage would cost more than 1 million jobs was unfounded. Since its introduction, we have more than 1 million extra jobs in the UK economy, so by any standards—even Tory standards—it has been a success.

The Minister will agree that the rate will continue to be debated. I support an increase in the overall rate, but the issue that I want to address today is the youth or developmental rate. When the national minimum wage was introduced, workers aged 18 to 22 were covered by a lower developmental rate. Last year, the adult rate increased by 10p an hour, while the developmental rate increased by 20p to £3.20, which narrowed the differential from 60p to 50p. That was welcome, but the time has come to consider removing the developmental rate to ensure that workers aged over 18 are covered by the adult rate.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wentworth (Mr. Healey) will recall a debate on the subject when the National Minimum Wage Bill was in Committee. The proposal would not mean that everybody was paid the same, but it would ensure the same floor under everybody's wages, which would prevent poverty pay. The then Minister of State, Department of Trade and

[Angela Smith]

Industry, my right hon. Friend the Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney), stated that the clause allowing for a lower rate for those aged under-26 was

"essentially an empowering measure . . . It is important that we have the flexibility and discretion to ensure that when the Low Pay Commission comes forward with any proposals on young people in this category, we can take account of them if we are desirous of accepting them."—[Official Report, Standing Committee D, 27 January 1998; c. 367.]

It was made clear that there should be no differentials for location or type of employment. The Government wanted the opportunity to listen and take account of the specific recommendations of the Low Pay Commission on younger people. The commission feared that the national minimum wage would price younger workers out of the employment market. Therefore, it was right to be cautious and monitor the employment market to see what occurred. I understood the fear that there would be problems in the youth job market, but those fears proved to be groundless. Youth unemployment has fallen to levels that many doubted were possible. In my constituency—the new deal has played a great part in this—youth unemployment has fallen by 94 per cent. The figures sound unreal, but the evidence is clear if one talks to young people in Basildon, where employment has risen to record levels.

The Low Pay Commission reported:

"We propose to monitor the progress of the developmental rate with the longer term expectation of linking it only to formal, accredited training."

That link has not yet been made for young workers. The second report of the Low Pay Commission in February 2000 stated:

"The developmental rate for young workers has meant a pay rise for many young people while not affecting their employment opportunities."

Ministers have rightly stressed that the developmental rate should be kept under review. Therefore, I hope that the Minister accepts that there is evidence to review the operation and consider making changes.

Modern business trends show a move away from age-related and time-served pay scales towards those based on performance and competence. In 1996, 51 civil service organisations abolished age-related rates—including the Cabinet Office and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, neither of which is known for being ahead of its time. Even McDonald's does not make a distinction on pay for those aged over 18.

The Trades Union Congress has found isolated examples of employers cutting their rates of pay for young adults as a result of the new law. The practice is not widespread, but it is not in the spirit of the law. The British Youth Council has said that workers should be paid equally for work of equal value. They do not want to encourage the employment of young workers on short-term contracts as cheap labour, displacing more expensive, older workers. The youth forum of the Trades Union Congress has taken an active role and it has described the national minimum wage as a landmark achievement. We all concur with that. The youth forum welcomes the right to a minimum wage, but believes that it stops short of delivering for younger people. Its argument is simple and based solely on fairness: to introduce a blanket exemption from the full minimum wage, based solely on an individual's age, is discriminatory.

Many organisations, including trade unions, understand the purpose of a training rate, but in this day and age it is not only young people who undertake training in their employment and there is no reason to use the need for training to justify a differential youth rate. The suggestion that age and training are linked is not necessarily true. An 18-year-old in a burger bar—we are back to McDonald's—is less likely to receive training than IT workers in their late 50s. The Government's skills task force found that employees in the hotel and catering industry were less likely to have training programmes, although that is the largest employer of younger people.

The youth rate has not worked as a development rate and the Low Pay Commission found that a quarter of 18 to 24-year-olds were in jobs without formal training. Its latest report states that there is "little change so far in employers' training policies in response to the"

national minimum wage.

What do young people think about the differential rate? I held a youth forum in my constituency and invited young people from Basildon and East Thurrock and sought the views of young people throughout my constituency on this and other issues. I have also received views from the TUC's youth forum, the British Youth Council and the General, Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union. It is clear that the view of younger adults, many if not most of whom are already receiving the higher rate adult minimum wage, is that everyone aged 18 and over should receive the same rate. Even those who are already receiving the higher rate believe that everyone should be covered by it. It is interesting that the new earnings survey states that the median earnings of those aged over 18 is above the adult rate of the national minimum wage.

One reason for having one rate instead of differential rates is the cost of living. Young people, whether in full-time education or on a low wage, must pay the full price for services. Transport costs in particular hit young people hard and there are no bus passes for younger people as there are, rightly, for pensioners. Young people who try to live independently often have the same housing, transport and food costs as older people, but for those on a low rate of pay, the transition to adulthood can be more difficult and delayed because they cannot take on the same responsibilities.

The lower rate also means that younger workers may have to work longer hours, damaging their chances of continuing education in out-of-work hours. The Government are committed to extending and encouraging lifelong learning, but it is more difficult for young people on the lower youth rate. At the age of 18—not 21—people are entitled to vote, marry without parental consent, serve in the armed forces and are deemed in law to have reached the age of complete responsibility. I believe strongly in linking rights with responsibilities and if young people have those responsibilities, they should also have the right to the basic rate of national minimum wage.

I believe that 16 and 17-year-olds should all be in full-time education or a combination of work and training that allows them to continue to gain skills and education. However, the reality is that many 16 and 17-year-olds have part-time and holiday jobs, as I did and as have many of my constituents. My hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Pond) recognised that in his excellent Bill to introduce stricter regulations and tighter controls on the working conditions and hours of young workers. Some hon. Members believe that it is always wrong for 16 and 17-year-olds to work. However, that is not realistic because approximately two thirds of 16 and 17-year-olds work and 60 per cent. of them are in full-time education.

If we accept that younger people will work and that it is right to provide protection in terms of working hours and conditions, it is also right to offer some protection against exploitation in pay. Whereas employers in a high proportion of high street retail stores pay those over 16 adult minimum rates and more, rates of pay for 16 and 17-year-olds have been recorded of as low as £1 an hour. We must close a loophole that allows employers to take on younger workers at the expense of the over-18s, and we must not condone exploitation. We do not want to tempt 16 and 17-year-olds away from full-time education into full-time employment.

A sixth form in Suffolk that conducted a survey about the employment of sixth formers gave me some interesting information. The survey found that some employers sought to replace full-time adult staff with part-time teenage staff to reduce overheads. Many employees are under pressure from employers to work more hours during free study periods and after school, and they worry that if they refuse to do so they will lose their jobs. They feel pressured because of their low rates of pay. I recognise that the issue of 16 and 17-year-olds in work is complex, but I hope that consideration can be given to providing some wage protection to that age group.

It was a major step forward in April 1999 when we introduced the national minimum wage, giving protection to workers for the first time. On the night that the final Bill was passed in the House of Commons, some guests from America were having dinner with me. I was nipping back and forth to the Chamber, and they said, "What is the fuss about? Are you uprating the national minimum wage?" It was beyond their comprehension that, before the Labour Government came to power, we had no floor under wages. They could not understand that we had never introduced such legislation. Those days have gone, and everyone now accepts that it is right to have such a floor. The Government should be proud of their record. It is also a foundation on which to build.

I hope that I have outlined the reasons why I consider that the current exemptions and different rates are unfair and do not fulfil our commitment to balancing rights and responsibilities. Many 18-year-olds are already receiving a higher rate, so employers are moving in that direction. The higher rate will have little or no impact on jobs, and I ask the Government to consider moving that rate to offer all adults the same legal wage protection. I know that the Minister has an excellent record on such issues. I hope that he will be sympathetic, and I welcome his comments.

The Minister for Competitiveness (Mr. Alan Johnson): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Angela Smith) for providing a further opportunity for us to debate the national minimum wage in this Chamber. As she said, it is one of the Government's most popular policies, and a manifesto commitment that has been carried out with—it is not an exaggeration to say—spectacular success. That success was by no means universally predicted. My hon. Friend was one of the shock troops, as was my hon. Friend the Member for Wentworth (Mr. Healey), when the Bill was considered in Committee. She explained eloquently the kind of opposition that the Government faced in introducing a minimum wage.

Although it is fair to say that I have an excellent track record on the issue—as my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon was kind enough to say—I am afraid to admit that I went to TUC congresses year after year in the 1970s and, with my colleagues, voted against a national minimum wage. The success of its introduction must be seen in that context. The last time that we were in power, it was not only employers that were opposed, but the trade union movement as well, with one or two honourable exceptions. We were worried about jobs and concerned to preserve our precious differentials. When we look back at those arguments now, a blush should come to our cheeks. Nevertheless, it is important to recognise the context in which we introduced a national minimum wage, as my hon. Friend says, for the first time in the United Kingdom, whereas other countries such as Japan, America and some in Europe have had one for many years.

My hon. Friend the Member for Basildon is also right to point out that the issue has become a positive U-turn zone for members of Opposition parties. It was not only Her Majesty's official Opposition who went through a policy process known as the Portillo process, in which, immediately before Treasury questions, the shadow Chancellor decides whether any policies should be changed, and immediately changes them. I have pointed out many times, including during the debate on the statutory instrument that increased the minimum wage last year, that the Opposition are not wedded to a national minimum wage with no regional variations. They have spoken on several occasions about small firms being exempted from the national minimum wage. My hon. Friend is right to say that the national minimum wage would not be completely safe in their hands.

Let us not forget that the Liberal Democrat party has made a spectacular U-turn on the issue. When the Bill was going through the House, the Liberal Democrats argued that there should be a regional minimum wage, not a national minimum wage. Such a concept was so bizarre that it would have led to so many problems throughout the country and place genuine burdens on business. It would have been extremely difficult and bureaucratic for a company to operate a different minimum wage from a company a few yards down the road. Indeed, the Liberal Democrats now agree with a national minimum wage.

The national minimum wage has been extremely successful, as has been the influence of the Low Pay Commission, which is monitoring the impact of the national minimum wage. Its job is to consider it not on the basis of formulae or headline figures, but of movements in earnings, the impact on the economy and the effect on some low-pay sectors. The fact that it is a minimum wage, without sectoral and regional variations, makes the commission's job more important. It must carry out a careful analysis, as it has done in all the reports that it has submitted thus far. It announced in its press release of 31 January that it intends to produce its third report sooner than its terms of reference proposed, which is early March this year rather than July.

The Government have already announced that we will implement changes to the rate in October 2001, so that businesses have plenty of notice of a new rate. Businesses have argued consistently that they need the longest possible warning period. Having collected all the evidence that it requires to recommend a new main rate, which will be volume 1 of its report, the commission's recommendations should be made public at the earliest moment. We welcome that decision. We can expect the rest of the report, which is particularly relevant to the arguments advanced by my hon. Friend, by May. That second volume will deal with the youth rate and the effect of the minimum wage on young people generally.

I welcome the debate. It is not about whether we should have a national minimum wage. We have gone well beyond that. It is about the level at which it should be set, whether there should be a separate youth rate for 16 or 17-year-olds and some other elements that I shall try to cover today. It is customary to ask whether hon. Members want the good news or the bad news. Unfortunately for the balance of the argument, there is nothing but good news. The latest figures from the Office for National Statistics confirm that between 1.2 million and 1.5 million low-paid workers and their families have benefited from the national minimum wage. It was introduced only in April 1999. Women have been particular beneficiaries of it. In its first year of operation, the gender gap closed by 1 per cent., and that cannot be put down to anything other than the national minimum wage. The gap is now narrower than ever before.

Part-time workers have seen an improvement in their position, with the national minimum wage having been at least partly responsible for stronger growth in average part-time weekly earnings. The regional pay gap is also closing, a point that is close to the hearts of my hon. Friend the Member for Wentworth and myself. For example, earnings increased by 4 per cent. in Wales, by 4.7 per cent. in the north-east of England and by about 4.3 per cent. in Yorkshire and Humberside compared with the national average increase of 2.3 per cent. That is almost the first change in many years to what has been referred to sometimes as the north-south divide. We must ensure that people throughout Britain share in the country's economic prosperity. More than £3.2 million worth of underpayments have been secured for workers since April 1999 as a result of our enforcement orders.

My hon. Friend the Member for Basildon was right to say that we have had huge success in enforcing the national minimum wage. All that has been achieved without the slightest evidence of any damaging effects on the economy. It was said that the national minimum wage would lead to job losses. A million more people are in employment now, and we have a national minimum wage. It was said that the national minimum wage would increase inflation. Inflation is at its lowest level for 30 years. Long-term interest rates are at their lowest since England won the World cup. More importantly, it was argued that the minimum wage would feed through into price increases. Price rises are at their lowest since 1974. Wherever we look for the evidence, it suggests that the national minimum wage has had a positive impact on poverty pay without affecting the economy. Indeed, many arguments suggest that it has been extremely beneficial to the economy—not least the argument made by my hon. Friend. Companies are ringing our hotline number—0845 6000 678—to have the collars felt of some of their competitors who, they believe, are still paying less than the minimum wage and thus unfairly competing with them on poverty pay. That has certainly been an issue in the fish processing industry in my constituency.

It was evident both to us and to the Low Pay Commission from the start that setting minimum wage rates for young people was the aspect that presented the greatest risk of an adverse impact on employment. As the minimum wage had been introduced over many years in many other countries, we could analyse all the information about how it had worked. That demonstrated that the effect was most keenly felt for younger age groups and gave us reason enough to proceed with caution. We are also anxious that the minimum wage should support rather than hinder training and education.

My hon. Friend the Member for Basildon says that it was right to be cautious in introducing the measures. It is right to continue to be cautious, because we must continue to ensure that the minimum wage is not only established but grows roots, and that no political party, whether on the right or the left of the spectrum, will ever dare interfere with it again.

It is in that context that we asked the Low Pay Commission to reconsider the matter. Its first report pointed out the dangers of setting one rate for everyone over the age of 18 and of setting a rate for 16 and 17-year-olds. That was not merely a Government argument; it was the Low Pay Commission's argument, based on its analysis.

We increased the minimum rate for young people by 6.7 per cent. in June last year. We shall be cognisant of evidence and analysis from the Low Pay Commission, which consists of representatives of the Confederation of British Industry, the TUC and several academics led by Professor Bain, who has done a remarkably good job.

Although our actions are based on the Low Pay Commission's recommendations, we are not obliged to accept its suggestions. For example, the commission's advice was that 21-year-olds should receive the adult rate. At present they count as young people. There are good reasons for our decision, which was not motivated by any animosity towards 21-year-olds; we were all 21-year-olds once. However, we shall await the commission's next report to decide whether our position needs revising in the light of that report.

Our fear was that there was a spike, or peak, of youngsters coming through the system. Lots of evidence suggests that if young people lose a job at 22 or 23 years of age and experience unemployment, that has a long-term effect on their future employment prospects. In taking a cautious approach to the matter, we wanted to see how that blip in the population developed through the system and to be absolutely sure that employment prospects would not be damaged. That is why we decided not to implement that part of the report.

All those issues are being re-examined. It is a specific part of the Low Pay Commission's job in its next report to consider young people, including 16 and 17-year-olds, who we believe should be in full-time education. We have a tremendous problem—which other countries do not have—of 16 and 17-year-olds leaving school to go to work. That is what the educational maintenance allowance is all about; that is the right priority, and there is definitive evidence to show that giving the minimum wage to 16 and 17-year-olds would militate against our priorities.

We will consider the matter again; we understand the arguments. The Low Pay Commission's report will inform our decisions, and I welcome the debate generated by my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon this afternoon.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (in the Chair): The Minister finished exactly on time. I congratulate him.

Bedford Hospital

1.30 pm

Sir Nicholas Lyell (North-East Bedfordshire): I am glad to have the opportunity to introduce this debate on Bedford hospital. My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire (Mr. Sayeed) cannot be here, but he associates himself with what I have to say. I am also glad to see the hon. Member for Bedford (Mr. Hall) in his place.

Bedford hospital hit the national press on Sunday 14 January, when a local newspaper, Bedfordshire on Sunday, published a sensational picture, widely syndicated in national newspapers, showing bodies on the floor of the chapel of rest at Bedford hospital. One of the bodies was partially uncovered to show the legs and part of the head of the deceased. There was, rightly, widespread concern at such an unacceptable situation.

On Tuesday 16 January, the Secretary of State came to the House to answer a private notice question tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox). The Secretary of State rightly described the situation as unacceptable, and informed the House that the initial findings of an investigation begun on the Sunday by the eastern region office of the NHS Executive had identified and that the chief executive, Mr. Ken Williams, had "stepped down". He said that the final report would be published and placed in the Library. However, he went on to tell the House then and there that the situation had nothing to do with funding and everything to do with the failure of management. The clear implication to the world was that the failure was the responsibility of the chief executive, and he had rightly agreed to fall on his sword. That was it; it was a problem unique to Bedford and the fault of management; the report might be of marginal interest but, in effect, the matter was done and dusted.

As soon as I read the newspaper reports, I took the opportunity to speak to the chairman of the region, Mrs. Rosie Varley. There had plainly been strong pressure from the very top for immediate action. She told me that Mr. Williams had agreed to stand down. I confess that I was not happy, but the impression was given to me that somehow the practice had been allowed to become a regular occurrence; that no competent chief executive could have failed to have known what was going on, and that although everyone liked Ken Williams—there were considerable suspicions that the half-covered body had been something of a set-up—he was none the less right to have agreed to go.

When I questioned the Secretary of State on 16 January, I pointed out the excellent work that had taken place in Bedford hospital during the 10 years that Ken Williams had been chief executive, and his own hard work above and beyond ordinary working hours to help patients in difficulty. However, when I questioned the adequacy of the mortuary facilities, the Secretary of State indicated dissent. He insisted that the problem had nothing to do with cash—nothing to do with a shortage of resources—but everything to do with top management at the hospital.

[Sir Nicholas Lyell]

I must tell the Secretary of State that the belief in Bedfordshire is different. One thing is common ground: that what was shown in the photograph, and in particular the fact that one of the bodies was uncovered, was unacceptable. However, views are very different about the fundamental causes, exactly how the situation came about, where responsibility should lie and what is a fair and proportionate reaction.

The Secretary of State now knows that the chief executive has strong support at every level in the hospital. He has received a letter signed by no fewer than 70 members of the medical staff committee—I think that that represents the whole committee—asking that Ken Williams be reinstated, and I understand that a petition supporting Mr. Williams has received more than 800 signatures from people working at the hospital. Above all, a strong feeling exists that, when the story broke, there was an almost immediate demand for a head on a plate.

It was said that the result was unfair, and that the particular incident was a set-up in which the chief executive and senior management were deliberately kept in the dark while the press was informed. Problems of adequate mortuary facilities at times of pressure are widespread in the NHS and Bedford's antiquated mortuary has been known as a problem to management at regional level for not only years but decades. Problems of underfunding were specifically set out in the original reports of the inquiry by eastern region, but were deliberately removed from the report before it was published at the insistence of the Department. Indeed, the fact that the report has been altered was, in substance, admitted both in an answer to a parliamentary question that I put down, and by Mrs. Kate Phipps, who chaired the inquiry, during a recent interview on the "Today" programme.

The debate seeks answers to a series of questions that, unless properly addressed, will lead to an unfair result. The background to the matter is a growing fear in the NHS, which is becoming all too well founded, of a steady growth of a blame culture. I am not happy about it. If things go seriously wrong, those who are genuinely to blame must take responsibility, but if we are going to be tough we must also be fair. The questions that I raise must be answered if justice is to be done and seen to be done.

Bedford hospital made real improvements during the years when Ken Williams was its chief executive. Its buildings have been upgraded, notably its marvellous Cygnet maternity and paediatric unit, and its new accident and emergency unit, opened in 1997 by the then incoming Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson). Relations between medical staff and administrators have improved, and the strong feeling among other staff is shown by their petition.

On other objective fronts, the hospital has won a series of awards. Cleanliness was a matter of recent concern in the NHS; Bedford hospital is the eastern region beacon site for cleanliness. In December 2000, it won a charter mark for its hotel services. It is among the top 10 for the lowest hospital mortality in the region. Recently, it won the Bedfordshire borough council heartbeat award for food hygiene and healthy eating. It has supported Dr. Rob Thomas in his efforts to become hospital doctor of the year for his cancer services, which is of huge credit not only to him but to the hospital's support for him. It is a well-run hospital.

I come now to the mortuary facilities, of which the Secretary of State's statement to the House of 16 January fails to paint a fair picture. Like more than 100 other hospitals in the NHS, Bedford's mortuary facilities are antiquated. Under the present Government and the previous Government, of which I was a member, resources have been concentrated on front-line medical functions. Bedford has been significantly underfunded for decades, being either the worst or second worst funded trust in the whole of the eastern region, and consistently behindhand in the necessary catching up as money gradually came out of London to the provinces.

The health authority in the region was fully aware by the end of 1997 that non-clinical revenue costs were underfunded. The right hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, when Secretary of State, was expressly told about that when he opened the new accident and emergency department. A letter from the Department, dated 22 June 1997, states:

"I recognise that a significant contribution to Bedfordshire's problems is the distance between current funding and the capitation target."

The author of that letter was none other than the present Secretary of State when Minister of State.

Many mortuaries throughout the NHS are out of date. I say that not to blame the Secretary of State, who inherited the position, but to emphasise that that needs to be taken into account in doing justice to those who manage the hospitals. According to the chair of Clinical Pathology Accreditation (UK) Ltd., which supervises mortuaries, more than one third of the 300 mortuary and post-mortem facilities that were visited had significant problems relating to their mortuary conditions,

"some of them comparable to those at Bedford hospital trust".

The statement continues:

"What Bedford needs is a new mortuary and so do many hospitals across the country."

The CPA chairman fairly described staff at Bedford hospital as

"doing their level best against a background of underinvestment and underfunding."

Those were important matters to take into account, yet they were simply not mentioned in the published public report—and neither were the circumstances in which the photographs were taken.

I do not blame the press, which exists in a free society as a watchdog for the public. However, if justice is to be done, the circumstances in which the press was tipped off must be carefully considered. Mr. Willy White, the regional representative of Unison, freely admits that he deliberately told the press rather than the management, let alone senior management. In doing so, he deliberately breached the hospital's whistle-blowing policy, which he had helped to write only six months previously. His excuses were that it was a long-standing problem and that he was aggrieved over unfair treatment of another member of staff, Monica Carmichael. She is entitled to fairness and her case has properly gone to appeal, but the present problem was not of long standing.

The temporary mortuary had been installed only at the end of December and for four days it had been out of action due to a build-up of a partial vacuum with which anyone with a fridge freezer is familiar. We all know that freezer doors cannot be opened if warm air has got in. That should have been put right more efficiently, but how can that be laid at the door of senior management unless they were told about it?

Mr. Patrick Hall (Bedford): On the temporary mortuary unit hired and then purchased by the hospital, does the right hon. and learned Gentleman agree that, although it has the capacity for 24 bodies, it could be used for a maximum of only eight because of its siting and certain health and safety rules? Does that not suggest mismanagement of the use of that particular unit? If it had been used fully, we would not have seen the bodies on the floor of the chapel of rest in the mortuary. Does the right hon. and learned Gentleman accept that that problem should be acknowledged and addressed?

Sir Nicholas Lyell: The hon. Gentleman is right about the temporary mortuary units, which are not perfect. They have health and safety problems, but they were used in a dozen NHS hospitals with approval before Bedford bought this particular unit. It was a problem, but not a hanging offence, and it had not been drawn to the chief executive's attention.

Much was made by the Secretary of State of the new guidelines issued in May 2000 and of their breach by Bedford hospital. I assumed from listening to the Secretary of State that those guidelines had made it clear that in no circumstances should bodies be stored in places such as the chapel of rest. It is not a consecrated chapel, just a nice little room. However, the guidelines do not say that at all. These much vaunted guidelines say no more than:

"any NHS Trusts should ensure that mortuary capacity is adequate to meet peaks in winter deaths and take steps to provide additional facilities where this is likely to be required. Temporary mortuary facilities must meet minimum standards to respect patients' dignity; refrigerated vehicles and trailers must not be used."

There is not a word about chapels of rest.

Let me explain exactly where the chapel of rest is. It is in a secure area. It is a small room, not consecrated, but reasonably nicely furnished, immediately adjacent to the mortuary itself. There is no question of it being open to the public. The only specific point in the guidelines was the prohibition of the use of refrigerated lorries.

Finally, on the basis of the facts, there remains a strong suspicion at Bedford hospital that the uncovered body had been deliberately placed there by someone to sensationalise the photograph. I do not blame the press; they photographed what they were shown. However, it is strongly believed by most of the staff, and others, that the scene was set up by the Unison representative because, as he said, he felt vindictive about the handling of another union case involving a member of the Manufacturing, Science and Finance union.

There are further worries in relation to that case. The Secretary of State is a member of, and is sponsored by MSF. There are fears in Bedford that what was seen as his personal over-reaction may have resulted from lobbying on the subject by Mr. Roger Kline, who worked closely with him in the past and who, like Mr. Willie White in the first 48 hours after the story broke, was loudly demanding the dismissal of the chief executive.

I am asking the Secretary of State to have the matter looked at again by an impartial arbiter, perhaps a Queen's Counsel with experience in the national health service and employment law. There is a widespread feeling in Bedford hospital, at every level and regardless of party affiliation, that the full truth has not come out and that justice has not yet been done.

As I said at the outset, the practice of storing bodies in an unrefrigerated area, albeit a secure one next to the mortuary, is not appropriate to modern conditions. The fact remains that priorities for funding over the years—it is not only this Government's fault—have been elsewhere. There remain scores of hospitals where mortuary facilities are inadequate, as they are in Bedford. The suggestion of the Unison official in the press that the chief executive should simply have indented for a new mortuary was unrealistic. Indeed, such a request was made 10 years ago. He could not possibly have been expected to know what was deliberately not reported to him.

When such problems arise, it is essential that they should be corrected for the future, but it is also important that the response should be proportionate, or confidence will be destroyed and morale undermined. If a manager is to be scapegoated in these circumstances, it will permit injustice not only in this instance, but will fail the staff of the health service as a whole.

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. John Denham): I congratulate the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell) on securing the debate on Bedford hospital. I also acknowledge the presence of my hon. Friend the Member for Bedford (Mr. Hall).

We need to look at the outcome of the investigation into the circumstances that led to the storage of bodies on the floor of the chapel of rest, although as the right hon. and learned Gentleman said, the chapel at Bedford hospital is not consecrated. This is a matter of great concern locally—indeed, it was of great national concern at the time the photographs were published. I can assure the right hon. and learned Gentleman that the incident and the continuing debate are of great concern to me, and I welcome the opportunity to explain the facts surrounding those distressing photographs and to reassure him of our commitment to in-patients at Bedford or other hospitals to ensuring that they are treated with respect and dignity at all times. That must continue in the inevitable number of cases that arise when people die in hospital. It was in the interests of patients that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State asked for a full report into the circumstances surrounding the incident. Patients need to be confident that, in a patient-centred NHS, what happens behind closed doors is of the same standard as that which can be seen on the wards.

Most people found the published photographs shocking and it caused anguish to many, not least the constituents of the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire. It cannot be right for bodies to be left lying on floors over a period of days, in some cases, when people believed that their relatives were being looked after in a dignified way. The pictures showed that the patient's dignity was not respected in a way that we all have a right to expect in today's modern NHS.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was as horrified as everyone else when he saw the photographs and he promised the House that a full report of the investigation would be placed in the House of Commons Library. The eastern regional office of the NHS executive had begun to carry out an investigation within hours of the photographs being published, and its preliminary findings confirmed that a fuller investigation was needed. It is worth saying that the investigation team included a non-executive director from Bedfordshire health authority; it was not solely a team put together from within the regional office. The team interviewed more than 60 people, ranging from the porters and managers at the hospital to the coroner and representatives from the newspaper who took the pictures. The investigation confirmed that those recently bereaved had been caused additional distress at the thought that their relative might have appeared in the photograph. It also became clear that a serious breach of hospital security had been committed.

In addition, the investigation established that some of the bodies had been there for some days, that this was not the first time that bodies had been stored in this way, that rules of patient confidentiality were broken, as one of the deceased could be identified from the photograph, and that the handling of coroner's cases was potentially compromised. The porters, it was established, were not involved in the purchase of the additional body storage facility and that had contributed to the problems with that facility.

It is worth reminding the Chamber that, by the time of the incident, trusts had received two sets of guidance—health service circulars 1999/239 and 2000/016—which detailed action to be taken in respect of mortuary facilities. HSC 2000/016, issued in May 2000, set out the arrangements required by NHS trusts to ensure that mortuary capacity was adequate to meet peaks in the number of winter deaths and to take steps to provide additional facilities where those were likely to be required. It also stressed that where temporary mortuaries were required, they should meet minimum standards to respect patients' dignity.

However, that guidance was not brought to the attention of staff involved in the handling of bodies, despite its having been reinforced at a regional meeting of chief executives in November 2000 and during winter planning meetings between the regional office and local health care systems. As a result, there was no recognition of the urgent need to repair a fault on the door of the additional mortuary facility. The report states:

"From the evidence provided it is clear that the practice of placing bodies on the floor of the chapel of rest had been custom and practice for more than five years. Consequently, the Trust failed to treat the deceased with dignity and respect".

It has been suggested that the root cause of this whole issue is one of funding. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already made clear in the House, that is not the case. Storage was available in the additional facility, which meant that the floor should never have had to be used. The floor was used because of a management failure to make it clear to all staff that the deceased should be treated with dignity. As the use of the floor had become custom and practice over a period of years, there was consequently no sense of urgency in getting a fairly minor problem with the doors resolved.

Things are changing in today's NHS and some of the practices common in the past are no longer acceptable. This is just such a case. Having pointed out that the alternative provision had been made, but there was a management failure to tackle the problems that arose in the additional facility, let me address the issue of funding.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: When one is considering fairness, would the Minister agree that the senior management can deal with a matter only if they are told about it? Is it not quite clear that they were not told?

Mr. Denham: Clear guidance set out in health service circulars was made available to chief executives right across the NHS. That guidance, in the eastern region, as elsewhere, was reinforced in the whole series of activities that now surround planning for the winter period. Everything was done to ensure that the chief executive of every trust understood the importance that was attached to the issue within the NHS, given the criticism that the NHS had received in previous years over the use of inappropriate temporary mortuary facilities. It is against that background that the events that I am describing should be seen. Indeed, it was when confronted by the findings of the preliminary investigation and public anger and concern that Mr. Williams felt it right to stand down from his post in the interests of the hospital.

On the funding issue, Bedfordshire has moved further from its weighted target allocation in recent years, but it is worth looking at what has been done with the resources. Bedfordshire will have received increased resources of £92 million, an increase of more than 30 per cent. since 1997, after taking account of the growth announced for 2001-02. Even after allowing for inflation, that has enabled more than £60 million to be invested in services. Bedfordshire has also benefited financially from the designation of Luton as a health action zone.

In recent years, the health authority has lived within its resources, and the trust has balanced its income and expenditure, so Bedfordshire has enjoyed a substantial real increase in NHS resources. Following a report in 1997 by the accrediting body, CPA, the trust upgraded its post mortem facilities. The report did not refer to the capacity of the mortuary, but since then, the trust has bid twice for pathology modernisation money without raising the expansion of the mortuary's capacity. The trust has never put forward a business case for a new mortuary; nor has the trust board raised the mortuary as a problem.

The investigation report acknowledged that the trust has less mortuary capacity than other, similar-sized hospitals and that it recently lost accreditation for its pathology services, including the mortuary, because of core facilities. It is clearly in everyone's best interests that the problem is tackled as soon as possible. The regional office has been asked to work closely with the trust in developing plans for a modern and enlarged mortuary facility.

I return to the events that took place. The report states:

"On this occasion, additional mortuary capacity was available, but was not being used because of a door defect that was not rectified for four days. This was because of confusion about accountability at middle management level and poor communication between departments".

The failure of the door of the additional mortuary was never treated as an emergency, which is why it took four days to put right, and must be seen against a background in which it had been custom and practice to use the chapel of rest.

It has been suggested that the incident was the result of a conspiracy to discredit Ken Williams or to seek revenge against him. The investigation was not able to establish that that was the case, but irrespective of whether there had been action or activity of that sort, there was a management failure in respect of mortuary facilities and that would not be changed, whether or not people had acted with malicious intent or bad faith in the case.

The professional staff interviewed by the report team were unanimous in saying that there was an open policy in the trust and that they were confident that staff concerns would be listened to. That view was not shared by all the non-professional staff interviewed; some porters and union officials feared recriminations if they persisted in expressing their anxieties. It is clear that there have been difficulties in relationships following the dismissal of a member of staff last year and the trust will need to address that matter over time. No one was prepared to admit to the investigation team that he or she had allowed Bedfordshire on Sunday access to the mortuary and there was no opportunity to question people about their motive in taking the course of action rather than raising their concerns with trust managers. Neither the editor nor the photographer from Bedfordshire on Sunday would say how they gained access to the mortuary, although they agreed to state the days on which the photographs were taken. That enabled the bodies in the photograph to be identified, as required within the investigation team's terms of reference, but it failed to open any other avenue of investigation to the team.

There were suggestions that parts of the final report were left out of the version placed in the Library. The report laid in the Library was that written by officials in my Department and the investigation team stands by that report. Before it was completed, an early draft was shown to the trust to ensure that there were no factual inaccuracies and it was amended accordingly. The draft report was added to and edited as the investigation team worked on completing the final document. I have been assured by the chairman of the investigating team, Kate Phipps, that nothing of relevance was removed or left out of the final report and it is therefore a true reflection of the findings of the investigation.

The investigation of the incident does not end here; the body that was clearly identified in a photograph was a coroner's case, which was the responsibility of his office until released to the family. The coroner—

Sierra Leone

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mrs. McGuire.]

9.30 am

Mr. Mike Gapes (Ilford, South): Today, I shall speak about an important matter: the situation in Sierra Leone. Four weeks ago today, I was privileged to go to Sierra Leone with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis). I shall refer to various matters arising from our brief visit and draw attention to wider political, economic and military issues affecting the region.

My abiding memory—I am still coming to terms with it—is of a visit to the amputee camp in the middle of Freetown, where 226 people who have had arms or legs or both hacked off by Revolutionary United Front terrorists are living with their families in a self-help community of around 1,000 people. It is financed and assisted by international development agencies and supported by a number of other organisations and Governments, including ours. I was introduced to some of the people living there. A little girl called Marie Koroma was brought to see me. She is about two and a half years old; when she was 13 months old, her left arm was chopped off by an RUF terrorist. That is the reality in Sierra Leone that we must deal with. It is essential that our commitment and that of the international community and the United Nations are maintained for as long as necessary.

Sierra Leone has an interesting history—for many years, it was a positive history. The country was founded by freed slaves, and throughout our colonial administration its people held the British in high regard. They have now had almost 40 years of independence, but ordinary Sierra Leoneans ask what they have to celebrate; they say that those years have been wasted. The country was agriculturally self-sufficient and exported agricultural products. It has a difficult climate and fosters diseases such as malaria, but, like other countries in the region such as Gambia, it has potential for economic development based on tourism. However, that has suffered enormously in recent years.

I shall not go into the history of the conflict, preferring to concentrate on the future. However, it is worth recalling that in May 2000 my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) introduced a debate in the Chamber during which he drew attention to the importance of explaining to people in this country our actions in Sierra Leone, the reasons for those actions and the fact that our commitment may not be short term. I was fortunate to speak in that debate, and I am pleased to be able to raise the issue again today after having had the opportunity, for the first time, to go to Sierra Leone and see what we and others are doing.

In 1999, the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs produced an important report which, although concerned mainly with other matters, referred to the situation in Sierra Leone. It provided an important historical introduction by setting out the context and explaining how the democratically elected Government of President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah came to power in 1996. Since then, there have been several coups and attempts by different groups to overthrow democracy.

As the report makes clear, and as everyone to whom I have spoken has confirmed, Sierra Leonean society consists of many different tribal groups and is 65 per cent. Muslim and 35 per cent. Christian. However, the people live harmoniously and the conflict has nothing to do with tribalism or religion. I asked a military commander in the Sierra Leone army—judging by his name, I suppose that he was a Muslim—about this issue. He laughed and said, "My wife is a Christian, my deputy is a Christian, and his wife is a Muslim."

Despite the nature of that society, there is conflict. It is based on one factor: greed for diamonds. The 1999 report from the Foreign Affairs Committee quotes one witness saying that "some people would argue that diamonds have been the curse of Sierra Leone."

Diamonds have financed a conflict that has throughout centred on control of the diamond mining areas and the activities of a foreign Government—the regime of Charles Taylor in Liberia—who are using the RUF as proxies in Sierra Leone to control Sierra Leonean diamonds and profit from their export and sale.

None the less, having visited Freetown and some of the surrounding areas, my message is positive, not pessimistic. I saw children smiling and waving as they went to school dressed in their pristine school uniforms. I saw the little kiosks that are being set up on the beach to sell Coca-Cola and ice cream to tourists whom the people believe will one day visit Sierra Leone. I am told that where a few months ago there was nothing, there are now signs that the people are returning to normality.

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): We are listening attentively to the hon. Gentleman's moving description of his visit to Sierra Leone, and I am pleased to hear that he gleaned some cause for optimism from it. Was there any evidence to suggest that British Government efforts to stem the flow of blood diamonds have been successful? I am sure that we all want progress to be made in that respect.

Mr. Gapes: I saw no such evidence. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Minister will respond to that question when he winds up.

We visited an area known as Wilberforce, which has a major, albeit rather basic, hospital that treats a variety of people; military personnel financed by the Department for International Development are playing a key role in its medical services. Among those in the hospital beds were members of a rebel faction—the West Side Boys—who had been injured in the conflict. To judge by the history of the conflict in Sierra Leone, people from the other side are not usually taken to hospital to be treated and allowed to recover, so their presence was an interesting sign of returning normality.

[Mr. Gapes]

Another interesting aspect was the way in which community activities such as schools were coming back together.

Important work is being carried out by our people in Sierra Leone. We are making a significant contribution, working in support of the United Nations, as well as playing our own distinctive role. We are making a small contribution to the United Nations force and as observers in the UN operation, and we are the lead country in the establishment of the international military advisory team. Our most significant role is in the short-term training programme to rebuild and establish democratic, competent, accountable and efficient armed forces for Sierra Leone. The problem in recent years was that the drug-crazed, diamond-fuelled factions were able to mobilise far more people and have a much greater impact on society than the badly trained and badly equipped official forces of the state. State power in the country almost disintegrated.

In May last year, when the Secretary of State for Defence made his statement in the House, the RUF was in the suburbs of Freetown and it controlled almost the entire country. We went in initially to evacuate our civilians and other European Union civilians; we then started the process of consolidation, held the airport until the UN forces came to take it over and began to work to establish and restore the state power of the democratically elected president and his Government—all vital work.

In less than a year, 6,500 people have been trained by our armed forces. We were fortunate to visit the area in which that training is carried out by Gurkha soldiers of the British Army. A young member, aged about 20, of the Sierra Leone army who was being trained by Gurkhas said to me, "These Gurkhas are very good men—very tough. Please keep them here. Please train all Sierra Leoneans with Gurkhas." I walked around the area with Major Ashok Kumar of the Gurkhas, a namesake of my hon. Friend the Member for Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East (Dr. Kumar). Children and adults shouted out, "Hello, Ashok."

British people walking down the street got the same positive reaction. We are incredibly welcome and there is great support for our actions. As we passed along the streets, people would shout out, "Hello—thank you!" In all my visits to places around the world, I have never seen a reaction like that. In certain countries, at certain times, British citizens have not been quite so popular. I emphasise the popularity of what we are doing, which is vital to the future of Sierra Leone.

The British joint taskforce under Brigadier Jonathan Riley, those who are working with the Sierra Leone army and those who are carrying out the vital training mission have an important role to play. I was pleased by the recent announcement by the Secretary of State for Defence that the short-term training mission, which was due to end in the spring, is to be extended to September 2001. To take forward the programme in the long term, we intend to form with the Canadians an international mission, which we hope other countries will join.

What is the programme's future? When the Secretary of State for Defence spoke in the House on 23 May 2000, he said that we would be in Sierra Leone

"no longer than is necessary."—[Official Report, 23 May 2000; Vol. 350, c. 863.]

However, in the Select Committee on Defence on 7 February 2001, in reply to a question that I asked, he said:

"We will stay for as long as we are needed."

I welcome that change of tone and emphasis, because our impact on Sierra Leone is proportionately greater than our impact on any other country.

We have for many years had long-term commitments in Cyprus, we have a long-term commitment—albeit unintentional—in Bosnia, it appears that we are developing a long-term commitment in Kosovo, and British forces have other long-term commitments in other parts of the world. However, our commitment to Sierra Leone is more important than any of those in terms of its impact, its long-term potential and the gratitude of the people, which is something that we have not always received. That is not to decry the work we do elsewhere, but emphasises the vital difference that we are making in Sierra Leone.

I am proud that we are considering staying for as long as we are needed, but we need to tell the British people why that is necessary and to demonstrate the benefits of our involvement. I am concerned about several difficulties. Until I went to Sierra Leone—now I speak as the chairman of the all-party United Nations group—I had not fully appreciated why British forces in Sierra Leone were not flying the UN flag. Following my visit, I have a better understanding of the situation and believe that our relationship with the UN is correct. The development of the UN peacekeeping operation was not optimal—indeed, there was well-documented tension between the Nigerians and the Indians; the latter have now left Sierra Leone. There have also been problems, which I shall discuss later, with the deployment of the UN force and its future role.

I have received a letter from Oxfam that raises several other concerns. Despite the ceasefire agreement worked out in Abuja last November, it appears that UN forces are unwilling to move into areas previously or currently controlled by RUF rebels, even though the agreement states that they should. The Sierra Leone Government are keen for that to happen, but it is not happening and there are serious questions to be asked about when it will happen. Until it does happen, significant areas—perhaps one third of the country—will remain outside the ambit of the legally elected Government of the country, and it will be impossible to reintegrate the country as a whole.

In a similar vein, at what point will the Abuja process lead to the demobilisation and disarming of the rebels? To that difficulty, which is inevitable in all conflicts, two approaches can be taken: try to negotiate the solution, or try to win a victory. At this stage, the Sierra Leone forces are probably not strong enough on their own to be able to win or hold the territory, but the problem must be resolved at some point. We know from experience that the RUF did not abide by previous agreements. There is enormous resistance to loss of control of the basis on which such organisations are run and financed—diamonds.

The situation in the neighbouring countries is also a cause of concern. One of the consequences of the effectiveness of our operation and the deployment to Sierra Leone of 10,000 UN troops, which number is supposed to increase, is that the RUF rebels have switched their focus. There is now a bitter conflict across the border in Guinea, and the Government of Guinea are fighting hard against the RUF. As a result, refugees who previously fled from Sierra Leone into Guinea are now trapped in a very small area between Guinean forces and RUF forces. It has been stated in the press that as many as 400,000 people are in danger of starvation because they are not receiving necessary food supplies. This week, some convoys reached part of the area with food for between 1,300 and 10,000 people, but it has been reported that hundreds of thousands of people are trapped between the conflicting forces. A corridor must be opened to allow those people to return to Sierra Leone, away from the conflict.

It is vital that more work is done for those people internally displaced in Sierra Leone, not refugees across the border. There are reports of large movements of people away from the areas in the north-west towards Freetown and Lungi, where there is an airport. That is inevitable because of the British presence and the deployment of UN forces in Freetown and beyond. Such areas and those within the ambit of the Sierra Leone Government offer security and the potential for a good life whereby people live without the threat of suffering. A great effort must now be made to help refugees in Guinea and internally displaced people in Sierra Leone. They must be fed, provided with transport and safe routes and moved into liberated areas. Such areas are growing all the time—indeed, we visited a place that had only just become open as a result of recent changes. However, such matters are taking time: as the liberated area spreads in one direction, conflict arises with the other side and the population is squeezed in between those areas.

It is essential that the international community, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, international aid agencies and non-governmental organisations can undertake their work securely and get through necessary resources to those who need them. Recently, some NGOs expressed anxiety about the security of their personnel in some areas. I would welcome a response on that matter, as it is clearly vital that they are able to do their job. We are making a great contribution to the security of Sierra Leone and NGO personnel do important work, often funded by the Department for International Development or other Governments in the European Union and elsewhere.

I should also like to mention public opinion in Sierra Leone. This week, I read a report of a seminar that was organised by representatives of what they call civil society in Sierra Leone. That report is strongly critical of the UN's role and calls urgently for more robust action to meet threats and deal with such problems. A cause of wider anxiety is the question of what effective action will be taken against the sponsor and host of the RUF, Charles Taylor's regime in Liberia. I understand that sanctions were supposed to be implemented against Liberia; the Governments of Guinea and of Sierra Leone strongly pressed for that, but not all other Governments in the region supported it. Can the Minister confirm the decision reported in the press this week to defer by two months the implementation of those sanctions? What is the current position and what is our Government's attitude? What steps are being taken to stop the blood diamond trade and introduce economic and other sanctions on Liberia, whose sponsorship, funding and organisation have lain behind the problems in Guinea and Sierra Leone in recent years.

I should like to ask about our future role and commitment to Sierra Leone. During our visit, I met President Kabbah. One of the interesting questions raised in our discussion was how we, as a functioning democratic society with civil control over the military, could contribute to the development of pluralistic multi-party democracy in Sierra Leone. In 1996, Sierra Leone had a democratic election in which lots of different parties stood. On the second ballot, the president was elected with nearly 60 per cent. of the vote, having received about 37 per cent. in the first ballot. However, Sierra Leone's political system is obviously undeveloped and political campaigning is impossible in large parts of the country.

The decision to postpone the next presidential elections was absolutely correct, as a free and fair election would be impossible in the current circumstances of conflict. That postponement gives us a great opportunity. I hope that our Government, through their support for the Westminster Foundation for Democracy and other measures, will send resources, training missions and teams to help to build a pluralistic democratic political culture in Sierra Leone. Civil control of the military is a vital issue not only for Sierra Leone but for Africa generally. I remember the book by Ruth First, "The Barrel of a Gun", in which she explained the role of the military in African societies. We must develop a political culture in west Africa and elsewhere based on democratic control of the armed forces. The recent changes in Nigeria are welcome, but such changes can be transient or temporary. We must make sure that we achieve a functioning democratic civil society in Sierra Leone in the long term.

During my visit to Sierra Leone, I was incredibly impressed by the commitment of our people there. I witnessed our efforts to defend a democratic Government, establish security and provide the foundations of future prosperity and democratic society. A lot has been done, but there is still a lot to do that will require a long-term commitment on our part. We must remember that Sierra Leone is a Commonwealth country with which we have long been associated. It is good that Canada, another Commonwealth country, is making a contribution. but the commitment to help will also require support from our EU partners and others, including, of course, the UN.

In the UN forces there are Kenyan troops; there is a potential for a deployment of Pakistani forces; and Nepalese forces have recently carried out an inspection mission to decide whether to deploy troops, which would be welcome, as Gurkhas are already in the area with the British Army. In addition, many other countries, including Jordan and India, have made significant contributions in the past. We must not forget the major contribution made by Nigeria, whose forces have suffered huge casualties during the many years of the conflict in Sierra Leone. International commitment and effort is required, and I am proud that the United Kingdom is playing a vital role. I hope that that will continue for as long as we are needed.

10.2 am

Dr. Julian Lewis (New Forest, East): I congratulate the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) on his initiative in applying for this debate, on his success in securing it and, above all, on the sincerity and comprehensiveness of his presentation. I also thank the Secretary of State for Defence, who kindly invited members of the Select Committee on Defence to accompany him on what was essentially his second trip to Sierra Leone since Britain became so heavily involved. Not only that, but when we were there, the Secretary of State took every opportunity to keep us fully involved in all that was happening in some of the more sensitive briefings, and, as the hon. Gentleman mentioned, gave us the opportunity to meet President Kabbah. We were both grateful for that.

President Kabbah made a good impression on us all. He struck us as a man of great calmness, thoughtfulness and, in so far as it is possible to make judgments on a short acquaintance, integrity. I could not help reflecting on the tragedy in which his country finds itself. It is one example—there are so many in international affairs—of the road to hell being paved with good intentions.

As the hon. Gentleman said, every time that we were seen in parts of Freetown, there would be shouts of welcome such as, "You are welcome here. Thank you for being here. Thank you for coming." It is strange that if there were to be a referendum in Sierra Leone today on whether the people would be better off as a colony under British rule, or in their present state of oppressed independence—

Mr. Gapes indicated assent.

Dr. Lewis: I see a wry look of agreement on the hon. Gentleman's face. There can be no doubt that they would wish that they were still a part of the supposedly exploitative British empire of the past. That empire would not have stood for the sort of terrorism and banditry that has had such terrible effects on the people of Sierra Leone in recent years.

When I visited the amputee camp with the hon. Member for Ilford, South, I was reminded of why the early evidence of Nazi atrocities in the second world war was not believed. The disbelief was a reaction against what was seen in retrospect to have been baseless atrocity propaganda from the first world war, which centred most memorably on the story of the Belgian babies' hands. When the Germans invaded Belgium in 1914 and violated Belgian neutrality, there was a story that they cut off the hands of Belgian babies so that they would not be able to hold weapons when they grew up. Subsequently, it was thought that no such injury would be survivable by such a young child. The Gentleman and I know that such injuries are survivable. As he pointed out, they are survivable even by a child as young as Marie Koroma, who was 13 months old when her left hand was chopped off in that bestial way.

We were told that the purpose of such atrocities was to terrorise the population—to show them that that was the sort of treatment that they could expect if they dared to support the legitimate Government of their country. It was intended to deny support to the Government force, and, undoubtedly, to encourage chaos and force people to flee from their homes. It is believed that about half of the 4.5 million inhabitants of Sierra Leone fled from their homes within the country, and that about half a million fled beyond the borders of the country.

The Gentleman stated clearly that the motivations are diamonds and exploitation. As far as can be seen, the activity is being fuelled by the interference of a country outside the diamond area—Liberia. Its leader, Charles Taylor, seems to be playing a strange game. Apparently he has a habit of ringing up President Kabbah every so often and making friendly inquiries about whether he can assist on minor matters. He professes to be in favour of steps towards a peaceful settlement and expresses concern about the degradation, terror and misfortune being inflicted on the Sierra Leonean people.

I would like to join the hon. Member for Ilford, South in pressing the Minister to spell out clearly, for the benefit of all hon. Members, the Government's assessment of the role and activities of President Taylor and Liberia in the troubles in Sierra Leone. If they believe that President Taylor and his agents are responsible for what is happening in Sierra Leone, what steps are they taking—and what steps do they propose to take—to put pressure on Liberia to cease its malign interference in Sierra Leone?

When we were in Sierra Leone, we were told that 600 British military personnel were taking part in the training mission. If it is possible for 600 British military personnel to achieve a genuine and—to use a vogue word—sustainable change in the circumstances of the people of that unfortunate country, that is a good investment of time, effort, money and British personnel. We have an historical connection with Sierra Leone; we arguably have a continuing moral responsibility for the country, even though with the ending of its colonial status we sadly—one might say—no longer have a legal responsibility. Many of my right hon. and hon. Friends worry about the overall effect of undertaking individual commitments that are in themselves worthy but which may cumulatively lead to an enfeebling of our capabilities to intervene militarily in other theatres, should other crises arise. Therefore, we must keep in mind the intended end game for this intervention.

What scenario does the Minister envisage for liquidating this commitment by the end of the autumn? If the Sierra Leone army is by then perfectly capable of re-establishing and maintaining control over the country, I shall be pleased to hear it. However, that is an optimistic prediction; there is a long way to go, although much progress has been made. The briefings that we received when we were in the country suggested that, as a result of the international presence in general and the British presence in particular in training the Sierra Leone army, between 40 and 50 per cent. of the land area had been brought back under Government control, pacified and stabilised. That would be a great achievement.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) asked the hon. Member for Ilford, South what progress had been made in cutting off the flow of blood diamonds—as she put it—from Sierra Leone. Given that the diamond areas are the ones most heavily infested with RUF forces and are relatively close to the border of Sierra Leone, the likelihood is small of impeding that flow for any considerable time. We are certainly unlikely physically to have stopped the flow.

Will the Minister tell us whether that can be achieved successfully? Is it being attempted through international arrangements controlling what happens to the diamonds after they leave the country?

The people behind the horror in Sierra Leone have a sense that the writing is on the wall. The reports that filter back into Freetown from the diamond mining areas inform us that the rate of diamond extraction is being accelerated dramatically. That suggests that the people involved are aware that their opportunities for exploiting the mines may not last indefinitely.

We need to be reassured that the Government, in undertaking a worthy mission, can be certain that a stable situation will be the result at the end of their intervention. Those who have disturbed the peace, terrorised the population and sought to exploit the country's potential wealth to their own sectional advantage must be sure that, not only have they failed in their endeavour, but that they will never be allowed to do something of that sort again. If it is the case that the RUF's campaign would have been unsustainable without the external support of Liberia and its president, the only hope of arriving at the situation that I have just described is to show the people who are fundamentally and ultimately responsible for what happens inside Sierra Leone that outside that country they cannot escape retribution for what they have done.

The Government favour the setting up of an international criminal court. I have always supported them in that endeavour. My final request to the Minister is therefore that when all this is over and an international criminal court is set up, those who did what they did to little girls like Marie Koroma—a myth in 1914, but reality in the 21st century—will be brought to justice before the bar of world public opinion.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark, North and Bermondsey): I am grateful for the opportunity to speak in this debate and to the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) for initiating it. I apologise that I was not here to hear the start of his speech; I had a constituency meeting that had to take place this morning. However, as he and others will know, I have sought to maintain an interest in this subject during my time in the House, especially recently, and so wanted to add a word or two in support of his speech. Let me make it clear that mine is very much a Hughes Back-Bench speech and that it in no way trespasses on the greater authority that my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten) will have if he catches your eye, Mr. Cook.

My links are in many ways far less credible than those of either of the hon. Gentlemen who have already spoken, for the simple reason that, despite my best efforts, I have not yet paid my first visit to Sierra Leone. Having hoped to go there in January, I now have a firm resolve to go in May—other things permitting—and very much look forward to that visit. Many Sierra Leonean nationals live in my constituency—the number has been hugely swelled by the civil war, during which people have felt obliged to leave for the United Kingdom. One reason that I feel that I understand something of what has occurred is that among those people are two party colleagues of mine who are councillors in Southwark: a Sierra Leonean national, Councillor Columba Blango, who with his family is obviously involved with the community; and Councillor Derek Partridge, who is the former high commissioner to Sierra Leone. With such expertise at one's fingertips, one will not go too far wrong. Many other active members of my community are in direct and regular contact with Sierra Leone.

Britain has the pivotal external role in Sierra Leone. I do not understate the huge contribution of Nigeria, of which it is rightly said that it gave voluntarily and to great sacrifice, but, as has been said, Britain is the country to which Sierra Leone looks for help in its hour of need. Sierra Leone is probably more loyal than almost any other Commonwealth country. I agree with the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis): were there to be a referendum on whether Sierra Leone should remain independent, its people would probably vote to become part of the United Kingdom again. That means that we must, as the Government have attempted to do, respond to the request for us to play a key role—not one that restrains the development of democracy and peacebuilding among the nationals and those who will stay in Sierra Leone, but as a means of securing and strengthening the democratic process. People must not feel that they will not have our support when they need us. The military peacekeeping process and the civilian peacebuilding process are equally important.

As the comments of the hon. Member for New Forest, East made clear, peace and reconstruction in Sierra Leone cannot happen if it is destabilised by pressures from outside its borders. Liberia acts as a hugely destabilising force. Secure frontiers are essential to prevent the growth of rebel forces and the exploitation of politics and economics. Without them, a rich, fertile and successful country will be pillaged and ravaged by others for their own interests. The Commonwealth and the United Nations should endeavour to achieve secure frontiers, so that other countries cannot exercise malign and oppressive influences.

Mrs. Gillan: Is the hon. Gentleman aware of reports that Burkina Faso has been involved? Can he shed any further light on that? Will he join me in asking the Minister to outline the destabilising factors that continue to exert influence within Sierra Leone?

Mr. Hughes: The hon. Lady is right. Several countries in west Africa have exerted influence. A key question—I would be grateful for an early ministerial response—is whether the Government are making clear to the new American Administration the importance of supporting and upholding democracy in Sierra Leone and of providing no permissive encouragement to other regimes to behave in ways seen in Guinea, Burkina Faso and Liberia.

My next point was central to the comments of the hon. Member for Ilford, South. Everyone accepts that the postponement of the presidential election that was due this year is understandable under the constitution of Sierra Leone. Another factor that unites Sierra Leone and the United Kingdom is that we both confront the prospect of elections in the near future, and both may be postponed for a while. As I understand the position in Sierra Leone, there is constitutional provision for a six-month postponement. There is no desire to evade democratic procedure, but there is an urgent need to ensure that free and fair elections are possible. They are not possible when so much territory is not safe for travel.

Many people—not only colleagues in Southwark, but charities such as Christian Aid—believe that it is essential to build up democratic processes and especially the next generation of leaders in Sierra Leone. Multi-party democracy is new, but unstable because of its newness: it must be given the chance to flourish. The people of Sierra Leone may need to renegotiate the constitution: theirs is not a constituency-based system, nor one in which the Executive is accountable to the legislature. Those are serious weaknesses. Building a multi-party democracy depends on the ability of people and structures to overcome those weaknesses. Bodies such as the Westminster Foundation for Democracy and the British Council—both of which are supported by the Government—the voluntary sector, charities and others have a key role to play. Hon. Members can contribute through the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association and other agencies.

I have two questions for the Minister. First, is there, to echo the words used by the hon. Member for Ilford, South, a continuing commitment to the normalisation of affairs in Sierra Leone and to building peace, even though it may be a long and hard road? The commitment must be secure; if it is not, much good work will be undermined. Secondly, will the Government continue to search for more and better ways of supporting, both directly and indirectly, people who can build up the democratic process? There is a danger of a democratic deficit in the next generation of leaders. People need to be encouraged and enabled to be strong leaders in difficult territory. Sierra Leoneans in this country are grateful for the Government's interest. It must continue. Britain has the key role to play.

Mr. Mark Oaten (Winchester): I start by joining other hon. Members in congratulating the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) on raising an important subject this morning. His knowledge and his stories were moving. It was invaluable for all of us to hear him and the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) report back on what they saw during their visits. Liberal Democrats are strongly committed to supporting the Government initiatives in Sierra Leone, which have provided an example of our troops at their best and the role that we can play internationally. Many people are proud of that.

Sierra Leone represents a crucial test for our policy in this region of Africa. If we can get it right in Sierra Leone, lessons can be learned for other parts of Africa. It is therefore critical that we reinvigorate our efforts in west Africa in the next few months. The hon. Member for Ilford, South touched on the increasing problems in Guinea, which are a reason why today's debate is so important: there is a need to step up our activities in the area. In a complex situation, we have reached the difficult and critical point at which we must decide whether we are satisfied with our achievements, or whether we should step up our involvement to tackle some of the humanitarian issues to which I shall refer later.

Liberal Democrats support 100 per cent. the Foreign Secretary's statement that "Britain will not abandon the people of Sierra Leone to the mercy of murderous thugs".

It is good that the Government made that clear so quickly. There are two clear objectives. The first is to sustain the legitimate Government of a Commonwealth country; hon. Members have mentioned our historic connections with the area. The second objective is to protect innocent civilians from the brutality of the rebels in the area, try to restore law and order and ensure that human rights are not violated. We strongly support that twin policy.

The Government were right to become involved in providing advice and training in the region, and we have heard how welcome that advice is. The 600 individuals who are out there training show that we punch above our weight, and their work has obviously had an enormous impact on Sierra Leone's army, which, it is reported, has become much more effective. I also welcome the Government's recent announcement that they are happy to make that commitment run through to September, by which time the international military advisory and training team, supported by the Canadians, will be able to carry on that effective work. None the less, I should like an assurance from the Minister that September is not a fixed date and that we will withdraw that support only when we are absolutely confident that the IMATT can perform to the same standard as our personnel. Frankly, I have my doubts about that. We have heard about the role of the Gurkhas, and I would be extremely anxious if the Department wanted to stick to the September deadline regardless of the circumstances.

Liberal Democrats differ from the Government on involvement on the ground: we should like British troops to be part of a United Nations force. I know that the Government have rejected that and I understand the concerns voiced by the hon. Member for Ilford, South, but we are worried about current UN capability in the area. About 2,000 troops left recently when the Indians and the Jordanians decided to withdraw. Those countries that remain part of the UN force do not have the skills and the abilities that we could bring to it. We have heard about our training role, and it seems a great pity that that skill is not to be transferred to the UN forces so that we could play a critical role on the ground, especially as failure could prolong the difficulties in the region. Although I entirely understand the Government's anxieties about our troops being involved in a prolonged campaign, matters might be brought to a head quicker if our troops were involved in the UN force rather than confined to their current limited, albeit welcome, role.

On the subject of back-up for the troops, the Minister will be aware that 112 military personnel serving in Sierra Leone are suffering from malaria and that 15 claims for compensation have been made. The Government have set up a tri-service board to investigate and report on the matter, but I ask the Minister to offer a few words of comfort and to give an absolute assurance that our troops will be protected from malaria, although I know that it is difficult because of the time scale involved and because troops are moved around. Furthermore, will the Minister publish the full text of the tri-service board's report? Press releases and background papers have been issued, but we would have more confidence if the full text were made available to reassure us that everything possible was being done to protect troops from malaria.

Other hon. Members mentioned the difficult situation in Guinea. It is comforting that in the southern part of Sierra Leone, to which the hon. Member for New Forest, East referred, the Government seem to be in control; and we played our part in making that happen. However, as a consequence, trouble has moved northwards and into Guinea. The Independent this week carried alarming reports of the humanitarian difficulties affecting refugees who left Sierra Leone for Guinea. The United Nations has described that crisis as the largest in the world at present.

I am especially anxious about the region known as the "parrot's beak" and I would welcome the Minister's views. It is flanked by rebels on both sides and hemmed in by hostile Guineans to the north. There are several refugee camps in the region, each with a population of several thousand—the biggest, in Kolomba, has 30,000—all of whom are in extreme danger and face hunger because of lack of supplies. Fighting is intensifying as the rainy season approaches, and there is grave concern about what will happen when it kicks in. Food envoys to the camps have been attacked by rebels and one camp was without food supplies for four months. The refugees, who face attacks as rebels move into the area, are not welcomed by some in Guinea, who say that they are bringing the war from Sierra Leone. President Conte of Guinea has not used the most helpful phrases about those individuals, who are trapped between two forces.

What discussions has the Minister had with his colleagues at the Department for International Development about humanitarian aid and the role of the United Nations in that difficult territory? United Nations staff have been kidnapped and killed in the region, which is highly volatile. Although much has been achieved in the south, and despite the humanitarian concerns, there is a reluctance to move into an area in which hostilities are occurring.

I join my hon. Friend the Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) in urging that consideration be given to our long-term exit strategy. What is the Minister's view about Britain's involvement in setting up democratic structures? My hon. Friend made a helpful suggestion about the role of the Westminster Foundation for Democracy and the British Council. Liberal Democrats support the Government's stance, but we are anxious that we have reached a critical point. Are we happy to let matters rest, or are we prepared to make a commitment to continue the training beyond September if we believe that others cannot train as well as we can?

We urge on the Government our belief that the situation will most effectively and speedily be resolved by UN troops playing a full role. That would send a strong message and put skills on the ground to deal with the problems in the region. Will the Minister also comment on what humanitarian aid we can give to help to address the difficulties emerging in Guinea?

10.35 am

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): I echo the congratulations to the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) on securing the debate, which is long overdue. Sierra Leone seems to have slipped off the Government's agenda over recent months. I pay tribute to him and to my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis), who showed personal courage in visiting an area in which our troops are deployed, no doubt bringing them succour, and seeing the situation at first hand. Nothing—certainly not reliance on reports—replaces witnessing events on the ground. My first question to the Minister, whom I welcome to his new post, is what plans he has to follow in their footsteps by visiting Sierra Leone. I also congratulate the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), who has continuously shown great interest in the matter. I endorse his remarks about the British Council and the Westminster Foundation for Democracy. I am worried about the fact that the British Council is being greatly run down in Africa; many of our posts there have closed because of the Government's changes.

We all share the desire for peace, security and the return of harmony to Sierra Leone—that is a given. We all endorse what the hon. Member for Ilford, South said about his visit to the amputee camp and Sierra Leone's potential. This weekend, I went to Zimbabwe and saw the situation there. I spent a similar amount of time in Zimbabwe as the hon. Gentleman spent in Sierra Leone, and witnessed the destruction of another African country with great potential. As in Sierra Leone, many of the problems of Zimbabwe reflect the desire for wealth and power, particularly through the diamond trade.

The Gurkhas, who have been tremendously praised in the debate, are a phenomenal division of our armed services. They have contributed greatly to our deployments throughout the world, not least in Kosovo where, during my previous visit, I saw them building shelters for our troops, who are doing a first-class job there. The Opposition give our troops who are deployed abroad every support and praise.

Sierra Leone is indeed a sad country. Until the 1990s it was reasonably stable, but then occurred the disastrous series of coups that led to the recent troubles. It is incredible that until the end of the 19th century the level of education in Sierra Leone was higher than it was in this country. Today, however, despite its phenomenal mineral wealth and the potential about which we have all heard, it is one of the poorest countries in the world with a derisory gross domestic product and a male life expectancy of merely 37 years.

I do not have much time to speak—I want to hear the Minister's response to the questions that other hon. Members have asked—but I wish to raise one issue that has not been mentioned: the progress of the Lomé peace agreement. I hope that the Minister will put some flesh on the bones of that agreement and tell us what progress is being made. Specifically, I should like to know what efforts have been made to transform the RUF into a political party, as was part of the agreement, and whether that transformation is happening. The disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration of former combatants is a key part of reconstruction, so perhaps the Minister could let us know what progress is being made on that front. Furthermore, the release of prisoners of war was due to take place; has that happened? I hope that the Minister will also tell us about humanitarian assistance throughout Sierra Leone, which was another objective of the Lomé peace agreement.

We have not heard about the truth and reconciliation commission that was to be set up; perhaps the Minister can inform us of the latest position on that. My hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, East raised the prospect of bringing before an international criminal court the perpetrators of some of the horrendous crimes that have been committed. We would all support that aim, but part of the Lomé peace agreement was an amnesty for crimes committed before the agreement's signature. I should like to know about the progress of those amnesties, how many have been granted and to whom. Another part of the agreement related to the exploitation of natural resources in Sierra Leone. It would be helpful to have an update on what legitimate exploitation has taken place. We know of the doubts that still hang over the illegitimate use of diamonds and possible intervention and interference by neighbouring countries, but I hope that the Minister will tell us what has been happening legitimately on that front.

On the question of the military deployment, it has always appeared to Opposition Members that the Government have been making policy on the hoof on Sierra Leone. We have had constant reassurances that we would perform certain tasks and go no further, but a few months later those tasks seem to expand. Mission creep has taken a strong hold on the Government's policy in Sierra Leone. We have evidence of that in recent announcements. On 19 December last year, the Secretary of State for Defence said:

"We are making preparations for the short-term deployment of a surgical team to Sierra Leone to cover the possibility of a gap in medical cover" because of the withdrawal of certain UN troops. He went on:

"The team will be withdrawn as soon as possible once alternative arrangements are available."—[Official Report, 19 December 2000; Vol. 360, c. 89W.]

Will the Minister update us on the team's status, what alternative arrangements have been made and the likelihood of its being withdrawn in the near future? In another written answer published Friday 26 January—not so long ago—the Secretary of State made yet another announcement that we were increasing our presence in Sierra Leone, saying:

"We plan to increase the IMATT's overall size from the 90 posts originally envisaged to 126."—[Official Report, 26 January 2001; Vol. 361, c. 725W.]

That seems to follow the established pattern of the continual upgrading and reassessment of the tasks that British forces are in Sierra Leone to complete. Will the Minister enlighten the Opposition as to who is making those assessments, why they appear to be so inaccurate and why the tasks and expenditure in that area continuously expand?

Mr. Oaten: Will the hon. Lady confirm whether she is for or against the increased activity?

Mrs. Gillan: I cannot answer that question at this stage, because of the scant information available to the Opposition. I am searching for further and better particulars because I think that it would be more helpful if, instead of adding like topsy to announcements on an ad hoc basis, a longer-term game plan were laid out for the information of both Members of Parliament and, more importantly, British armed services serving abroad. Will the Minister think longer term rather than shorter term, as seems to be the Government's major problem? I want to leave time for the Minister to respond, but I hope that he will undertake to write to Members who have contributed to this debate if he cannot respond to all the questions asked today. The reconstruction and peaceful reconciliation within Sierra Leone concerns all of us.

Finally, the memorandum of understanding signed with Sierra Leone provides for written notice of termination of three months if we are going to withdraw our troops. Will the Minister tell us whether that memorandum of understanding is still in place, or whether it has been added to or amended? We want to make sure that we contribute positively to the rebuilding of Sierra Leone, and that our service personnel are fully backed up by the House in carrying out their duties on behalf of this country. I hope that the Minister will provide the reassurances that we seek.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Brian Wilson): First, I join other hon. Members in paying tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) for securing this debate, which has been extremely useful. It may surprise hon. Members to learn that one does not necessarily become an expert on everything just by becoming a Minister. Listening to today's debate has been an important part of my learning process about Sierra Leone. I single out my hon. Friend and the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) for their outstanding contributions, which reflect the fact that they have been to the country, experienced and seen it. There is no substitute for that and both hon. Gentlemen articulated their experiences effectively. The hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) asked whether I intended to visit Sierra Leone. If I am privileged to be in office long enough, I shall visit the country. I am to visit west Africa next month, but the precise itinerary has yet to be determined. If I do not visit Sierra Leone on that trip, I expect to do so on a future one.

There is a fairly broad consensus, especially on the fundamental point that it is right that we are in Sierra Leone. It is a small country, it is poor and its people have suffered appalling brutality. However, it is a democracy, it has an abundance of natural resources and it has a vibrant and energetic people. Our purpose in Sierra Leone is to reassure those people that they have not been abandoned, and to help them to achieve the peace that they need to develop their country's potential.

It is incomprehensible and deeply depressing that a country so endowed with natural riches can be described as the poorest in the world, but the figures produced by the United Nations speak for themselves: in Sierra Leone, life expectancy is 37 years; of every 1,000 live births, 316 babies die and for every 100,00 live births, 1,800 mothers die. Those bald statistics are a sad reflection of a civil war that has lasted more than a decade and anchored Sierra Leone to the bottom of the United Nations human development index. Poverty has bred poverty as the economy has collapsed, leaving a young and disaffected population clamouring for non-existent jobs. The terrible conflict has caused the needless deaths of thousands of innocent civilians and resulted in some of the most barbaric atrocities of modern times: thousands of innocent people, including babies, have had limbs hacked from their bodies, and more than half of Sierra Leone's population of 5 million has been displaced. It is difficult to imagine the suffering endured by the people of Sierra Leone.

Our presence is intended to send a powerful message to the Revolutionary United Front about our determination to bring the conflict to an end. How that happens is the choice of the combatants: the sooner they realise that they have no hope of forcing themselves on the people, the quicker we can undertake the huge task of lifting the country from its knees and restoring the people's capacity to build a better future for themselves. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State described our strategy for Sierra Leone in his statement on 6 June. That strategy has not changed: our priorities are to repel the rebels, restore the peace and rebuild the country.

Mrs. Gillan: Before he leaves the subject of the RUF, will the Minister tell us what progress has been made under the Lomé peace agreement and the transformation of the RUF into a political party?

Mr. Wilson: Under the terms of the July 1999 Lomé accord, the RUF is entitled to form a political party, but its leader, Foday Sankoh, broke that accord in May 2000 and we believe that he has lost the right to any further involvement as a political leader. The RUF must appoint a new leadership if it wants to participate in elections, when they are eventually held.

Our priorities remain to repel the rebels, restore the peace and rebuild Sierra Leone. They are the necessary elements for sustainable long-term development and represent the essence of our commitment to the people of Sierra Leone. My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South and others referred generously to our military assistance to Sierra Leone, which is fundamental to our goal of providing the Government of the country with the means to defend its people from brutal rebel attacks. Since June 2000, British forces have trained and equipped 6,500 soldiers. On 26 January, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced that the training will continue in its present form until September, by which time a total of 8,500 men will have undergone instruction. That programme has begun the development of an effective and accountable Sierra Leone army.

It would be remiss of me not to place on record, even at the cost of brevity, a tribute to the dedication of the men and women of the 2nd Royal Anglian, the 1st Royal Irish, the 1st Prince of Wales Own and the 2nd Royal Gurkha Rifles. I refer to all our forces involved in providing first-class training and support to the new Sierra Leone army. Incidentally, I shall write to hon. Members about all points to which I have not referred, including the point made by the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten), who asked about malaria provision for our troops.

Mr. Oaten: Is September a cut-off deadline, or one that will be reviewed?

Mr. Wilson: I am coming to that. When the regiments have finished their work, an international military assistance and training team—IMATT—will take responsibility for longer-term training, but that does not signal the end of our involvement in the new army. Britain will continue to play a major role in IMATT. I hope that the hon. Gentleman is reassured.

Britain will remain at the forefront in providing training and advice to the Government of Sierra Leone and in helping to build the structures necessary to ensure the democratic accountability of the new army. We shall continue to strengthen and redefine the role of Sierra Leone's Ministry of Defence, paying special attention to aspects of civilian control. Our assistance does not end there. We are also helping the United Nations mission in Sierra Leone. In addition to the 15 military observers, we have, at the request of the United Nations secretariat, provided a senior officer as chief of staff as well as another six officers to perform key tasks within the mission. In addition, our rapid reaction force is ready to come to the aid of UN peacekeeping operations anywhere in the world, including Sierra Leone.

We shall maintain an operational headquarters in Sierra Leone until the end of 2001. Through military exercises, we will continue to remind the rebels that our over-the-horizon rapid reaction forces are never far away. We hope that further bloodshed will not occur. A negotiated solution is not impossible. We welcome the Abuja ceasefire that was signed in November 2000 between the Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF, and we would all like to believe that the new agreement has reawakened the prospect of a negotiated settlement. I do not need to remind hon. Members that Sierra Leone has suffered many disappointments in the past five years. In 1996, the Abidjan accord collapsed, as did the Conarkry peace accord in 1997 and the Lomé peace accord in 2000. Although those agreements provided a realistic basis for peace, the persistent duplicity of the RUF undermined each of them. Although I am encouraged by the Abuja ceasefire, the history of false starts causes me to regard that new agreement cautiously.

A credible disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration process is urgently required to encourage combatants to disarm. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development has focused particular attention on that vital component of the peace process. The United Kingdom has developed model pilot projects that will provide visible evidence of the benefits in store for combatants when they have laid down their weapons and been demobilised. We shall continue to support the Sierra Leone Government, the World Bank and others in developing incentives designed to persuade combatants to give up the fight.

I am pleased to say that Britain played a leading role in the adoption of UN Security Council resolution 1315, which paved the way for the establishment of the special court for Sierra Leone. It has been created to deal with those who bear the greatest responsibility for the heinous crimes under international and Sierra Leone law that have been committed in recent years. That court is being established at the request of the Sierra Leone Government, with the support of the international community through the United Nations. It will have a crucial role to play in demonstrating the determination of the international community to bring to justice all those who are responsible for such crimes. I hope that I have answered a point that has caused concern to hon. Members.

Mrs. Gillan: Will the Minister tell us how that court fits in with the amnesties for crimes committed prior to the Lomé agreement? What is the status of those amnesties?

Mr. Wilson: The special court will deal with only a limited number of the most serious offenders. In parallel, we are supporting the establishment of a truth and reconciliation commission, which will play an important role in establishing the facts of what has happened in Sierra Leone. It will provide a forum for those involved in the conflict on all sides to set out the truth. By definition, a special court would not deal with all matters and an amnesty is perhaps part of the overall mix.

Britain was also a key player in the adoption of UN Security Council resolution 1306, which imposed a ban on the import of all rough diamonds from Sierra Leone not controlled by its Government's certification scheme. That was a robust and imaginative response to Sierra Leone's tragedy, and sends out a powerful message about the need to end the trade in conflict diamonds. We shall continue to work to secure a worldwide certification scheme to halt the flow of illicit diamonds that fuels conflicts.

The hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham asked what progress had been made in reducing that trade. I am pleased to report that the Sierra Leone Government recently reported to the United Nations sanctions committee that there has already been a small but significant increase in the number of diamonds passing through the Government's control. We shall build on that. More widely, the United Kingdom remains at the forefront of international and UN activity on the creation of an international certification regime, which will prevent conflict diamonds fuelling wars elsewhere, including in the Democratic Republic of Congo and Angola. That was a matter in which my predecessor was particularly interested and I intend to carry on that interest.

Malign external influences not only make our work in Sierra Leone much harder, but threaten the stability of the wider region. UN Security Council resolution 1306 established an independent panel of experts to examine violations of the UN arms embargo and links between the trade in diamonds and arms in Sierra Leone. It clearly identifies President Taylor of Liberia as a prime supporter of the rebels, supplying arms and equipment in return for diamonds. We are determined to ensure that measures are adopted to put pressure on President Taylor to end his connections with the rebels. Liberia's support for the RUF has been largely responsible for the conflict in Sierra Leone spreading to Guinea. I will write individually to hon. Members who have spoken in the debate to explain our policy in Guinea. Although it is important to set out our record on that matter, time does not allow me to do so today. I hope that what I have said to hon. Members and what I will add in writing will satisfy them.

Shipbuilding (South Coast)

11 am

Mr. David Chidgey (Eastleigh): I am pleased to have an opportunity to lead this important debate on shipbuilding on the south coast. Hon. Members of all parties with constituencies in that area and further afield share my concern about the potential destruction of an industry that has been a major factor in our regional economy for many years. The hon. Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson) has already sent his apologies for not being able to attend. I am sure that many of those present are hoping to contribute to the debate to reinforce our widespread concern, and I hope that they will not take offence should I refer to their constituencies in passing.

Shipbuilding on the south coast has a long and illustrious history. Not for nothing is Portsmouth known as the home of the Royal Navy. From the very beginning, the south coast of Hampshire has been a major centre for warship building. Centuries ago, the New Forest provided the hearts of oak for the old wooden hulls. Nelson's Victory and many other ships of the line were built in the shipyards along our coast. The tradition has lived on throughout the centuries with the naval port at Portsmouth and the commercial port of Southampton becoming the prime drivers of economic success in our region. A wealth of engineering and manufacturing industry has developed around those two great ports, ranging from building railway locomotives in my constituency of Eastleigh to manufacturing submarine and power cables in Southampton and Eastleigh and an advanced electronics industry.

As a student apprentice in the Portsmouth dockyard back in the 1960s, I was part of a work force of more than 22,000. The Vosper Thornycroft yards at Portchester and Woolston employed at least another 5,000 people. All those yards were, at that time, building ships for the Royal Navy. Together with the port of Southampton, the victualling yards, the armaments depots and the range of support services for the naval and merchant fleets, the industry in our region employed approximately 100,000 people. It is no wonder that Hampshire had, and still has, the most defence-dependent economy of any shire county.

Underpinning the shipbuilding industry was a large, well-trained and highly skilled work force. At any one time, some 1,000 apprentices were under articles in Portsmouth dockyard, and there were at least a further 300 at Vosper Thornycroft, providing a constant stream of new talent for the industry. It is a matter of record that shipbuilding in the United Kingdom has seen massive decline. Over the past 60 years, the tonnage of merchant ships being completed in British yards has fallen from more than a quarter of world tonnage to approximately 1 per cent. According to a paper produced by the Shipbuilding Forum, our merchant shipbuilding industry has been reduced to:

"A small industrial sector concentrating on niche markets for specialist high added value ships such as off-shore oil exploration vessels, local ferries, dredgers and tugs."

A once mighty industry has been reduced to making dredgers and tugs. An industry that employed many hundreds of thousands now employs fewer than 30,000 throughout the nation. The number employed at Portsmouth dockyard, now only a naval base, has reduced from 22,000 to approximately 2,000, and the number employed at Vosper Thornycroft has reduced from 5,000 to only 1,200, with half that number now threatened with redundancy.

Dr. Julian Lewis (New Forest, East): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the Government could have helped Vosper Thornycroft in Southampton by giving an assurance about the type 45 programme, which the company has desperately been seeking?

Mr. Chidgey: The hon. Gentleman anticipates some remarks that I hope to make strongly and lucidly later. If he will bear with me, I am sure that he will support my comments.

An industry that once boasted dozens of firms building warships throughout the United Kingdom is now reduced to two prime contractors: BAE Systems in the north and Scotland and Vosper Thornycroft in the south.

I can well understand the concerns of hon. Members with constituencies in the north of England and Scotland, where shipyard jobs have become dependent on MOD orders, but I am equally concerned about the need to retain and strengthen competition in this specialist industry, to foster innovation and to ensure that the Government and the taxpayer get the best value for money. I am sure that hon. Members will realise that that concern is shared not just by employees and employers but by trade unions, who as a matter of policy agree that competition is best for our industry.

Mr. John Burnett (Torridge and West Devon): My hon. Friend cites a number of shipyards, but I ask him to bear in mind Appledore shipyard, which is in my constituency. It is globally competitive and an excellent shipyard that provides excellent value for money at the smaller end of shipbuilding.

Mr. Chidgey: I well understand my hon. Friend's robust and reliable support for the excellent shipyard in his constituency. Appledore has a sound reputation throughout the world, but if he can recall, I spoke of prime contractors for shipbuilding, which is why I said that there are just two. Of course, much fine work is done at Appledore, which works closely with shipbuilders in my area, and long may it continue to do so. While I share the concerns of hon. Members whose constituencies are in the north of England and Scotland, my role today is unashamedly to put the case for shipbuilding in the south—the home of one of the two remaining warship prime contractors.

A recent book entitled "Warships for the World" states:

"Royal Naval vessels built on the South Coast made a major contribution to naval operations during the 1991 Gulf war."

Five locally built Hunt class mine counter-measure vessels

"played a vital role in clearing lanes through extensive minefields off the Kuwaiti coast, while HMS Gloucester"—

one of three type 42 destroyers built by Vosper Thornycroft—

[Mr. Chidgey]

"shot down the only Iraqi missile aimed against Allied naval vessels."

That is a matter of record, but what is perhaps more important is the export record achieved in our local yards in Woolston and Portchester by Vosper Thornycroft. It is a unique record in the British shipbuilding industry. Since the 1960s, Vosper Thornycroft has sought and won orders around the world. It has sold vessels to Malaysia, Kenya, Brunei, Singapore, Nigeria, Holland, Sweden, Panama, the Bahamas, Guyana, Trinidad and Tobago, Italy, Oman, Venezuela, Tunisia, Qatar, Egypt, Jordan and Brazil. That record is unsurpassed by any other shipbuilding firm in this country. The book continues:

"Shipbuilding on the South Coast has a long and highly successful record. In 1937 VT built as a private venture the very first motor torpedo boat—MTB 102—which served as a prototype for large numbers of vessels that served throughout the Second World War."

To bring us up to date, during the 1960s it developed the technology for the first glass-reinforced plastic royal naval warships. In the past few months, as the Minister will know, it has been contracted to design and construct the world's first trimaran warship demonstrator, the RV Triton. That is an unsurpassed record, not just according to the textbooks but in the perception of the South-East economic development agency.

Mr. Iain Duncan Smith (Chingford and Woodford Green): The hon. Gentleman mentioned the trimaran. Members of the public may not realise that one of the other participants involved in that programme is the United States, through the Darpa Organisation. Interestingly, the Americans placed the order for that advanced design and test vehicle in the shipyard to which he refers. That should not go unnoticed.

Mr. Chidgey: The hon. Gentleman must have visited the Woolston shipyard not so long ago to have such detailed information. He is absolutely right. The Americans are watching this exciting new development with great interest, and are, I understand, providing much of the instrumentation that will assess and evaluate the vessel's success.

As I have said, shipbuilding is important for our region. Our economic development agency says that defence and marine technology are major business sectors in the south-east, with high growth and high value potential. That is why SEEDA is working so hard with the industry and with key groups such as research institutions and training providers to develop a favourable economic and competitive environment, but it needs Government support to do that. In particular, competition needs to be encouraged and sustained in the defence market. That is crucial, because it keeps the pressure on improved productivity and cost control, which benefits not only taxpayers but the competitiveness of UK firms as a whole in an increasingly robust export market.

The benefits are clear. We have in Vospers the United Kingdom's leading warship exporter, with some 273 ships supplied to 34 countries in the past 30 years, and £1.5 billion worth of export orders won in the past 10 years. That statement may sound like it comes from a company brochure, but it comes from our economic development agency, which appreciates the value of the industry in the heart of our region.

Vospers is at the heart of a cluster of marine industries with world-class potential. The marine sector includes many small firms, which are often technology based with high growth potential. The presence of the company, with its direct link to the naval procurement programme, stimulates innovation among many suppliers. Severing that link would jeopardise the technological investment on which competitiveness increasingly depends. The impact will be felt not only in my constituency but among a vast catchment of firms that operate in the south coast maritime industry cluster. That is why SEEDA launched and supported the campaign for south coast shipbuilding. It brings together private companies, local authorities, Members of Parliament and members of trade unions in a partnership approach. It is an excellent example of how an economic development agency should work, and I applaud its efforts.

Vospers and the other marine engineering companies have a bright future in the south-east. They can maintain and create many business opportunities and jobs, given the right support. We want the Government to support that vision through fair competition, not preferential treatment. To use a hackneyed but vital phrase, we merely want a level playing field. We want to be able to compete equally with the others.

In the region, shipbuilding and repair involves eight companies that account for £225 million a year in turnover. Shipbuilding and repair secures £100 million a year in exports, and employs more than 3,000 people in the south-east. It is a growth industry worldwide. Some 2,400 new ships are built every year worldwide. I understand that the Department of Trade and Industry is keen to double shipbuilding and increase ship repair by as much as 30 per cent. in the United Kingdom. The south-east plays a major part in the sector.

Further shipbuilding losses will have a knock-on effect throughout the entire marine industry sector, including ports such as Southampton, where port-related activities contribute £1.3 billion a year to the local economy, and more than 10,000 direct and 6,000 indirect jobs would suffer severely.

The process of shipbuilding and repair and yacht building in the region has led to the development of several world-beating educational institutions. Southampton has its Oceanography institute and its university and other support organisations such as Marine Tech South, all of which have come from the support of the marine engineering industry cluster.

In spite of the decline in British shipbuilding, it is a growth industry worldwide, and our shipbuilders should be out there competing for a stake in a rough, tough marketplace. That is why the Government, the home market customer, should use their purchasing power to ensure that, through fair competition and the award of warship contracts, the industry develops, innovates and becomes more productive. That can be achieved only through competition.

I endorse the Government's claim that they intend to do precisely that—foster and enhance competition in the industry. They say frequently that they support competition generally and within the UK defence market—specifically for the type 45 destroyer programme. In a Ministry of Defence memorandum dated 25 February 1998 to the Select Committees on Defence and on Trade and Industry, the Government stated:

"Competition remains fundamental to obtaining value for money... Where competition is not viable for prime contracts, competition at the sub-contract level is encouraged."

I see that I have caught the Minister's attention. On pages 38 and 39 of the joint report of the Defence and Trade and Industry Committees—HC675, Session 1997-98—it states that when considering such long-term implications of procurement decisions, the MOD includes factors such as "the implications of the creation of a future monopoly".

The Government's introduction of smart procurement does nothing to change that, because it encourages the development of partnerships with industry. Ministers and officials therefore continue to emphasise the importance of competition. It is against that background that companies in the defence industry have to make major investment and employment decisions. The declared Government strategy for the type 45 destroyer programme is in line with their general policy.

It was with delight that we heard the announcement of the order on 11 July last year when the Secretary of State for Defence said:

"Our approach in this programme will ensure that experience in type 45 construction is spread between BAE Systems Marine and Vosper Thornycroft. That will assist future competition for follow-on ships... Provided that satisfactory arrangements can be agreed between the prime contractor and the two shipbuilders, we intend that the first and third ships will be assembled by BAE Systems Marine and the second ship by Vosper Thornycroft. Both companies will be able to compete independently for the assembly of batches of follow-on ships.—[Official Report, 11 July 2000; Vol. 353, c. 701-2.]

The big question, which I hope will feature in our debate, is what role the Government should and must play to ensure that that is achieved.

The Secretary of State and many of his colleagues have repeated those views. The Minister may recall that on 12 February 2001 he stated:

"There has been no change to date in our policy"—

so I wonder what happened on the 13th, 14th and subsequently—

"which is to conduct a procurement exercise involving both yards, under the direction of the prime contractor. That remains the policy."—[Official Report, 12 February 2001; Vol. 363, c. 17.]

However, a new factor calls into question the Government's commitment to competitive procurement of the type 45—the unsolicited bid submitted by BAE Marine to construct all 12 vessels. The Government maintain that their policy is unchanged, but at the same time they are considering a completely new strategy—giving BAE a monopoly in the design and construction of destroyers and frigates.

The Government previously expressed considerable support for competition in the type 45 procurement programme, but in another memorandum provided to the Defence Committee, the Ministry of Defence stated:

"Competing for follow-on ships in batches increases the pressure on tenderers to reduce prices. Savings of around 30 per cent. were achieved between the First of Class vessel of the Type 23 destroyer and the 14th hull of that class and we do not believe that these savings would have been as large without the pressure of competition. We anticipate achieving a similar level of savings in the Type 45 programme."

Again, I emphasise the reference to competition.

On page 56 of the Defence Committee's eighth report—Session 1998-99—the MOD went on:

"The potential savings which might be achieved if the entire class was ordered as a single batch can only be the subject of speculation, since this would be an unprecedented departure from current practice. Such an approach is unlikely to be adopted for a number of reasons. Firstly, warship design naturally evolves through the life of the particular class, for example, to take account of changing operational requirements. Formulating a contract with time, cost and performance parameters to anticipate design changes would be impracticable especially in terms of the commitment and risks involved in a programme of this complexity. Secondly, the industrial implications of such an approach could lead to a single supplier dominating warship procurement to the detriment of competition in the medium/long term."

If that is the Government's position, why are they taking such a long time to consider the unsolicited bid? Why did they not discard it at the outset as not in keeping with their policy?

In answer to a question that I tabled, the Minister will recall that he said:

"The BAE Systems Marine unsolicited proposal is still being assessed but if it is accepted, the DFM contract would need to be re-negotiated."—[Official Report, 30 January 2001; Vol. 362, c. 99W.]

That is shorthand for saying that the statement that Vosper Thornycroft would have a fair share of the work was to become meaningless and that Government policy for strengthening competition in the United Kingdom warship building industry was to be abandoned.

The fig leaf that the Government are using to hide their embarrassment seems to be the proviso that fair work share on the first of class for the type 45s depends on the prime contractor, BAE Systems and the two subcontractors reaching agreement. BAE Marine and Vosper Thornycroft must reach agreement on cost and risk sharing. However, by awarding the DFM contract to BAE Systems without first insisting on a back-to-back contract with BAE Marine and Vosper Thornycroft for the subcontract work, the MOD has put all the aces in the hands of BAE Systems. In that game of poker, all that BAE has to do is raise the stakes and sit tight. Vosper Thornycroft is running out of construction work and shedding 100 or so workers as every month goes by, so it is obvious that, in six months' time, it may no longer have the capacity to bid effectively for type 45 work.

Incidentally, one reason why Vosper Thornycroft is short of work is that it subcontracted the construction of two new multi-role survey warships for the Royal Navy, worth £130 million and sustaining 800 jobs for about three years, to the Appledore shipyard in the constituency of my good and hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett). Vosper Thornycroft did that because it expected to need the capacity in its yards for the promised work on the type 45 destroyers. To use a common phrase, that is being shafted—if I may use such an expression in this context.

Dr. Julian Lewis: Propeller shafted.

Mr. Chidgey: That might do. I will move swiftly on, Mr. Cook, rather than incur your disapprobation.

[Mr. Chidgey]

We often talk in this place about low politics, which seems to come with the territory, but there is also such a thing as low commerce. There is no doubt in my mind that BAE Marine submitted its unsolicited bid for the type 45 destroyer with the benefit of knowledge of Vosper Thornycroft's expertise and intellectual development. I have been in industry long enough to know how important those aspects are in retaining one's competitive edge and that we do not give away our skills, techniques and intellectual property lightly. Surely that knowledge was revealed only when the two companies were working together under the Government's instructions to collaborate for the first of class ships for the type 45 destroyer. It is naïve to believe that Vosper Thornycroft would have revealed its expertise in, for example, modular construction, without the assumed protection of the Government pledge that it was to be contracted to design and build the second type 45 destroyer and would be substantially involved in the first and third.

More times than I can remember, Ministers have replied to questions of a similar ilk by saying that that remains the Government's preferred strategy for fair work sharing on the type 45 or that it is their intention that Vosper Thornycroft should undertake a significant amount of the work. If the Government sit back and wait until September, when decisions must be taken on the construction programme for the type 45, the only game left in town will be to negotiate a contract directly with BAE Systems Marine. Shipbuilding in the south of England will have been destroyed and with it any effective competition for warship building in the United Kingdom.

I do not blame BAE, which is pursuing a sound commercial strategy in the interests of its workers and shareholders. The Government must take the blame for allowing the strategy to succeed against the interests of competition, the warship building industry and the taxpayer, who will foot the inflated final bill.

The Under-Secretary is a gentleman who shows great patience and carefully considers the questions put to him. Rather than giving us the usual Front Bench platitudes, I hope that he will give a firm commitment that the Government will discard forthwith the unsolicited bid for all 12 type 45s from BAE Systems Marine as anti-competitive, and instruct the chief executive of the Defence Procurement Agency to intervene on the DFM contract and insist that negotiations with Vosper, stalled by BAE, will restart immediately. I hope, too, that the Government will instruct the chief executive to redefine reasonable cost parameters for work-sharing strategies under the DFM contract in the light of his letter dated 31 January, which stated:

"Although it could be argued that there is some additional cost for the first three ships inherent in this strategy,"— work sharing—

"we believe this to be easily outweighed by the benefits of subsequent competition for which it provides."—[Official Report, 31 January 2001; Vol. 362, c. 184W.]

It is time that the Government put their money where their mouth is. Ensuring a competitive strategy for the type 45 is an issue that affects the future of shipbuilding in the south of England and has serious implications for the whole of the United Kingdom shipbuilding industry.

In case hon. Members are in any doubt about BAE Systems' ambitions in this regard, I shall quote from the company's briefing setting out its warship building strategy. It states:

"For some time now we have been seeking to develop a long-term warship building strategy in partnership with the UK Government. A key element of the partnership concept would be the award, clearly subject to the value for money test, of all of the Type 45 platforms and a further batch of Astute submarines to our Marine business. Furthermore, we have recently submitted an unsolicited proposal to the UK MOD for the construction of two Auxiliary Oilers at Govan which could be financed either by the government or by ourselves."

A raft of proposals is set out for BAE Systems to become the sole provider for the Government in the warship building industry. Clearly, BAE makes a case that it believes to be sound for the company and for the Government, but it deliberately stifles effective competition for future generations of the warship building industry.

If Ministers continue to ignore our pleas and avoid the issue, they will be responsible for closing the most profitable and innovative shipyard in Britain. Safeguarding the future of shipbuilding on the south coast is vital; it will benefit the Royal Navy, the taxpayer and the entire British shipbuilding industry.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Frank Cook (in the Chair): Order. It has become common practice—indeed, almost an agreed protocol—in 90-minute debates that Front-Bench Members commence their winding-up speeches 30 minutes before the end of the debate. As so many hon. Members are rising, I appeal for brevity.

11.30 am

Dr. Alan Whitehead (Southampton, Test): I will not repeat the detailed comments of the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on the issues surrounding the debate. Instead, I wish to emphasise that shipbuilding on the south coast concerns not only Southampton or Portsmouth, but the whole economy of our part of the world. The issue should not be viewed as a contest between the south coast and the north of England because it concerns the future strategy on defence procurement and the building of warships in the United Kingdom. As the hon. Member for Eastleigh set out, that strategy is particularly well served by ensuring that the contract for type 45 destroyers is delivered on the basis of the existing strategy of smart procurement, which involves Vospers and BAE sharing the work.

Anyone attending a football match in Southampton—which is, these days, a particularly successful premiership club—is struck by the fact that Southampton fans usually sing songs directed not at the opposing football team but at Portsmouth football club, whichever side Southampton is playing. I am sure that the same happens at Portsmouth football club—albeit with smaller crowds. People outside the area might think that Southampton should fight for its shipyard and therefore oppose Portsmouth on that issue. However, Members representing Southampton and Portsmouth constituencies are united in their concern. My hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson) is unable to be present, but he has done an enormous amount of work on the issue. A range of people of all parties in our part of the world is united in the wish to ensure a future for shipbuilding on the south coast, wherever it happens to takes place. I am sure that we all agree on that important point.

The hon. Member for Eastleigh set out a number of the substantial spin-offs that arise from shipbuilding on the south coast. It is important to the local and regional economy, jobs and skills. Many of the people who worked at Vospers and have obtained jobs elsewhere have enhanced the south coast's ability to build a first-class range of ships, not just Vospers warships. Shipbuilding is also important, as I said, to our national defence procurement strategy because we need to ensure that competition is maintained in the procurement of defence vessels. That creates a problem in regard to smart procurement, however, because only two contractors in the UK can effectively undertake the work for UK warships—assuming that one wishes to keep it in UK yards. The Ministry of Defence obviously feels that that is important and I thoroughly subscribe to that. It is difficult to conceive of perfect competition when only two yards or companies are competing, because they will know about each other's strategies and activities. Indeed, one may believe that those two yards should continue to provide competition, but the idea that one puts the other out of business, thereby extinguishing competition, undermines that principle. A smart procurement strategy therefore needs to be developed.

I found it particularly encouraging that the Government's strategy for the delivery of type 45 destroyers took the issue into account. They decided that the first three ships should be built jointly by the two yards so that the learning curve would be jointly steepened. Competition would then proceed from the end of the building of the third of class, and the overall objective of building the best ships at the lowest price over a period of time would be achieved. That sound and sensible strategy was set out to the Defence Committee last year. It was confirmed in an Adjournment debate before Christmas and was recently underlined to my right hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) and me when, together with a number of workers from Vospers shipyard, we spoke to a Defence Minister.

The strategy depends on the simple observation that there will be two yards for the entire period of the procurement of 12 vessels. If at any stage one yard ceases to exist, the whole strategy will be undermined. The appointment of a prime contractor is important to ensure that knowledge is shared at the end of the development of the third vessel and competition can proceed. If, as the hon. Member for Eastleigh emphasised, that prime contractor owns two of the yards that are competing for the contract, a problem arises. Obviously, Chinese walls are needed, but how strong and soundproof are they in practice? An unsolicited bid has been mentioned, which suggests that they are not that strong.

I have some sympathy with the Government over receiving that unsolicited bid. Of course they must entertain it. They cannot simply throw it out of the window, as they would be accused of not taking all factors into account in the competitive procurement process. Under the overall logic that has been set out, once that unsolicited bid has been entertained, it must be rejected because, by its success, it undermines the whole idea of competition in procurement in shipbuilding. It is important to ensure that the prime contractor does what was agreed and announced by the Government and that we have a genuine period of collaboration on those first three vessels, sharing out the work equally.

There is an important asymmetry in the process. Vospers wants the status quo to be preserved on competition and the procurement process. BAE consistently comes up with suggestions that may change that process. Indeed, The Observer of 25 February reports that BAE has yet again suggested that the Government should simply give it the contracts for two naval support ships. Vospers suggests that a competitive tendering process should be carried out and properly evaluated, with the contracts going to the successful tender.

A strategy that ensures that jobs and skills are retained on the south coast also secures the national interest. It ensures, too, that people do what they said that they would do. That is what we are asking for in this debate, and what Vospers is asking for. At the earliest stage possible, the security of that contract must be ensured so that the prime contractor does not wear down Vospers simply by procrastination. It is in the national interest that first-class ships, which Vospers—along with BAE—has a proud record of building, are secured for the British Navy. The Navy should have those vessels on the basis of a smart procurement contract, which ensures that first-class vessels are built at the lowest price achievable, with the rolling out of a contract over the full life of 12 vessels.

Mr. Christopher Chope (Christchurch): I wish to express my solidarity with the points that have been made by the hon. Members for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) and for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead). My involvement with Vosper Thornycroft goes back some 18 years, during which time we have had a lot to celebrate: the success of the privatisation, the company's role as the lead yard for Hunt class mine sweepers, its continuing success in export markets and the diversification programme, which involved moving into aerospace. Vosper Thornycroft Aerospace is headquartered in Christchurch, in my constituency, so my interest in the firm continues, though in a different location.

Vosper Thornycroft is a strong and successful company. Throughout the years I have lobbied on behalf of the company and, as the Member for Southampton, Itchen, I worked hard at that. The yard was in those days just outside the Itchen constituency, situated in Eastleigh. However, the Government and their officials have tended to take the success of the company for granted and to allocate Ministry of Defence work to less successful and less competitive yards. We encountered that problem on the south coast under the Conservative Government, and I argued strongly with Ministers that we should have a level playing field. I told them that it was counter-productive to give work to less successful and less competitive yards, simply because they happen to be located in the north and in areas of higher unemployment.

[Mr. Christopher Chope]

The success of that policy, pursued vigorously by the Conservative Government, has been vindicated. One may consider what happened with the Hunt class programme. The company began by being the lead yard; it would have loved to have the contract for the whole programme, from start to finish, without any competition, but it had to compete each time against another yard. It was successful each time and each time quoted a price much lower than it had been on the previous procurement. The hon. Member for Eastleigh mentioned that over the period of the type 23 programme overall savings were made of about 30 per cent. My recollection is that during the Hunt class programme, it amounted to about 60 per cent. less for the last one produced than for the first one. That was a result of the continual competition throughout the procurement process. It is depressing to think that the Government are even toying with the idea of giving one contract for the entire programme to a monopoly supplier. I urge them to abandon the notion immediately and have faith in competition and south coast shipbuilding.

Mr. Mike Hancock (Portsmouth, South): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on having the good fortune to win the ballot and secure this debate. We have already proved that it was needed; there is widespread cross-party support for the view that shipbuilding is essential to our area's history and future. We could become emotional when talking about the past, but for those in jobs there is no future in the past. They must have something to look forward to, and I hope that today's debate will secure that for them.

At present, there is confusion. BAE Systems wants a stranglehold on military shipbuilding in the United Kingdom. It is unhelpful when its company brief states:

"For some time now we have been seeking to develop a long-term warship building strategy in partnership with the UK Government. A key element of the partnership concept would be the award, clearly subject to the value for money test, of all of the Type 45 platforms and a further batch of Astute submarines to our Marine business. Furthermore, we have recently submitted an unsolicited proposal to the UK MOD for the construction of two Auxiliary Oilers (AO) at Govan which could be financed either by the government or by ourselves on the basis of a private finance initiative type arrangement."

The Government have said on several occasions in the past year that warship construction in the United Kingdom needs a fair and flat playing field on which all shipbuilders can participate. They have said that they want open competition and the ability to judge each bid on its merits. However, the company suggests that it is all but in bed with the Government and wants a completely closed shop in the construction of warships for the United Kingdom.

Those who have so far spoken in the debate were right to have retraced the history of Vosper Thornycroft and to congratulate the company on its achievements. Its record of success in selling ships overseas was built on the fact that it also constructed ships for the Royal Navy. If a company cannot sell to its own navy, why is it trying to sell overseas? If it is not competitive and good enough for the Royal Navy, what makes it believe that it is good enough to sell ships to another country's navy? It is difficult to convince overseas purchasers to buy ships in such cases. One cornerstone of Vosper Thornycroft's success is its ability to sell abroad, which is based on its successful record with the Royal Navy.

When I was a child growing up a stone's throw from the dockyard gates in Portsmouth, 48,000 civilians were employed in the dockyard. The industry was huge. That whole area of south Hampshire relied heavily on what happened in the dockyard. We are down now to fewer than 1,000 directly employed craftsmen in ship repair and maintenance on the naval base. Many of us in Portsmouth saw the relocation of Vospers operation from the Woolston yard in Southampton to the naval base in Portsmouth as a great opportunity—not only, as the hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) said, for Portsmouth, but for the population of our part of south Hampshire, which stretches from the Sussex border to the edge of Southampton Water, along the New Forest coastline.

People will travel to work in such jobs. They do now, and they will in future. The yard's move to Portsmouth gave Vospers something that it did not have in Southampton: the ability to build bigger vessels. The type 45 is a great opportunity for the south coast to come alive again. We must think about the sort of ships that have been built in the dockyard, from the first dreadnoughts to Andromeda in the 1960s, the last ship built there. Vospers has a proud history of shipbuilding and the move was an opportunity to return to it.

I do not want the Minister who makes the decision about the type 45 and offshore patrol vessel contracts to take a Nelson-style approach, and put the telescope to the blind eye. He must not see only one option. Clearly, there are two options that could and should provide an opportunity for on-going competition. If the BAE Systems option is taken, Vosper and Appledore might not be around the next time that the Royal Navy is looking at shipbuilding. We need to grasp opportunities, not squander them. We have a great opportunity to fulfil the Government's ambition, and there are three good reasons why we should.

First, it is good for the UK and good for the Royal Navy for Vosper to be given an opportunity to do what the Secretary of State described on three occasions in the House and before his original statement in the middle of last year when he spoke to the Defence Committee. He gave a commitment that ships would be built in a partnership with more than one company. It is never good to put all the eggs in one basket. If competition is to mean anything, it should be fair and the rules should not be changed because someone decides to put in another bid after the competition was supposed to have closed. I cannot understand why the Government are even considering that option. Having 12 ships built by one company for one price, which would be fixed now, cannot be in the best national interest. It would cost the nation dearly over a 10-year period. There certainly would not be any savings.

Secondly, fulfilling the Government's ambition would be good for the cities of Portsmouth and Southampton and for all the businesses in and around the area that have flourished because of Vosper's success. Thirdly, it would be great for jobs—not only existing jobs but those that will be created if part of the contract for type 45 and offshore patrol vessels is secured by Vosper. It would provide opportunities for youngsters who want to develop skills and interest in shipbuilding, which the area would otherwise lose.

This has been an important debate, and I hope that the Under-Secretary will answer some questions. What justification is there for placing orders with BAE Systems Marine without competition? Does he believe that all orders should be subject to proper strenuous competition, which is open to all? Is he aware of other unsolicited bids for shipbuilding construction, about which we have not yet been told? We have been told only about the type 45.

When does the Minister expect the decision to be made? That is the critical issue. We know that the Royal Navy desperately needs such vessels and that at least two companies are desperate for the work. I thought that the Government were desperate for a decision to be made. It is important that the Under-Secretary gives a clear indication that the decision will be made in the near future. Whatever evaluation is being made of the unsolicited bid, I hope that it can be put through the wringer quickly. I hope that jobs will not be lost. The longer the process goes on, the more people will see the opportunities for them to stay in work evaporating. Vosper must be conscious that some of its employees will start to drift away without the opportunity of continuous work. They might take up opportunities to work elsewhere. I hope that the Minister will restore confidence and show that the Ministry of Defence has not written off warship building on the south coast. The people of our area have had a commitment to this country for generations. They were there when the country needed them, and now the country must repay that loyalty. We have played our role in the defence of the realm and we now want to see the Government play fair by the people of Portsmouth and Southampton. The best way to do that is by making a quick decision that brings the second type 45 and at least a share of the offshore patrol vessel contract to Vosper Thornycroft, sooner rather than later.

Mr. John Burnett (Torridge and West Devon): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey). He made some powerful points in an excellent speech. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) and the hon. Members for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) and for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) on their speeches.

Much of the discussion concerned competition and the fostering of competition. My hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh made a point that I, gently, correct. He mentioned that only two prime contractors remain for shipping contracts in the United Kingdom, but we at Appledore were prime contractors in 1995-96, when we constructed HMS Scott, the Arctic survey vessel. Had we been successful in our bid for the alternative landing ships logistics contracts—either for one or both—we would have been the prime contractor. We would have extended our covered yard by 50 yd, and we would then have been in a position to tender for larger classes of ships, which the Government knew. They would have then had exactly what they wanted—more yards in the United Kingdom to compete for work.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh was right to say that we need fair competition—an ability to compete equally with other yards. After agreeing them, will the Government put the details of successful tenders in the public domain, so that competing shipyards can evaluate them to ensure that what happened was fair and that equity prevailed? The Minister will also be aware that the cost of tendering for vessels is huge. In order to encourage competition, will the Government consider underwriting part of the cost incurred by selected but unsuccessful tenderers?

Appledore has tendered for the contract to build three offshore protection vessels, which will be similar to the two that it has just completed for the Irish navy. I am told that the Irish are delighted with the vessels that we have constructed. Furthermore, I am told that Ministry of Defence officials have been on board at least one of the Irish offshore patrol vessels and were impressed by it. The officials have nothing but praise for the vessels that we have constructed.

Sadly, Appledore runs out of steel-cutting work in August this year, and lay-offs will begin. Appledore has had only one prime contract with the Ministry of Defence in the past 15 years, which was for HMS Scott. Recently, when I met the Secretary of State for Defence with Mr. Jim Wilson, the managing director of Appledore Shipyards, the Secretary of State referred to the HMS Scott contract. He said that Appledore had built a fine ship, on time to a fixed price. He said that he wished that he could say that about most other MOD contracts. All that I and the magnificent work force and management ask is for our tender to be considered on the basis of fair competition and value for money.

Dr. Vincent Cable (Twickenham): My colleagues, especially my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey), have made an elegant and detailed defence of south coast shipyards, and I do not want to duplicate what has already been adequately covered. There are two issues with which the Minister must deal in the broader realm of policy. The first issue concerns competition policy. A dominant firm is dangerous in any industry. That applies as much to computer software as to naval vessels. Dominant firms are dangerous because, ultimately, the consumer suffers a detriment. In this case the consumer is the Royal Navy and, ultimately, the taxpayer. In this industry there is a diversity of suppliers and it has already been explained in some detail why that is an important way of protecting the industry and the consumer from abuse by a dominant company.

My hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) has just touched on the other important issue. There is a need for transparent, consistent, above-board processes of bidding and tendering. I was struck by a letter written by five of my colleagues to the Prime Minister a fortnight ago. My hon. Friends the hon. Members for Eastleigh, for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand), for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), for Romsey (Sandra Gidley) and for Winchester (Mr. Oaten) wrote to him about the contract. One passage says:

"There are strong concerns that the bid has been made with the benefit of privileged knowledge shared by Vosper Thornycroft in their expectation of being design partners under the government's brief, rather than as competitors."

[Dr. Vincent Cable]

Any suggestion of that kind would immediately rule out an unsolicited bid as completely contrary to open competitive tendering processes.

The matter does not simply exist in isolation; I have encountered the problem recently on other naval contracts, as has my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and West Devon. A few months ago a series of bids were made for the alternative landing ships logistics contracts. A company in my constituency, along with Appledore, put in a bid for the contract, having had been encouraged to do so by the Ministry of Defence. It went through a detailed and complex process and invested heavily in design and preparation work. The company was then told, at the very last moment, that the bids were not being taken further, for reasons that seemed to have nothing to do with cost or quality. That is why my hon. Friend was so right in insisting that tenders should be published. The participants in the bidding process should be able to see clearly what the criteria are.

Mr. Burnett: I do not know whether my hon. Friend saw the leader in the Financial Times on Monday 30 October 2000, entitled "Sentiment and shipbuilding". He may have noticed the point made at the start of the article to the effect that "in spite of 'smart procurement' reforms, the old-fashioned political fix still takes precedence over value for money."

Dr. Cable: my hon. Friend has put the point more brutally, but I am sure, much more accurately than I did. We all want reassurance that the bidding procedures employed by the Ministry of Defence will be transparent so as to preserve the values of competitiveness crucial to the long-term viability of the industry. It is unfortunate that the shipbuilding industry has become so highly reliant on the Ministry of Defence. However, it is precisely for that reason that the Ministry must establish procedure that ensures competition and makes certain that any bidding procedures are transparent and commercial.

Mr. Iain Duncan Smith (Chingford and Woodford Green): Like other hon. Members, I do not want to take too much time as the Minister will want to have reasonable time to respond to the many detailed points that have been made.

I start by extending the usual courtesy and congratulating the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on securing the debate, although it should be held on the Floor of the House as this is an important matter. I congratulate, too, all those who spoke, many of whom referred to the proud history of shipbuilding on the south coast, although I do not want to talk much about that. In the past, in times of war and conflict, the United Kingdom has relied on vessels built in the shipyards on the south coast. We owe those yards a debt of gratitude, but gratitude is not enough. It is surely about what can be done and how good those who produce such equipment are in the usual competition process.

We are talking about a serious problem, which highlights the general debate about shipbuilding in the United Kingdom. To take up an earlier point, the debate is not about being against a particular yard in the United Kingdom. I have visited yards in Barrow-in-Furness. I have visited Cammell Laird in Liverpool and Vospers. At Appledore, I met a tremendously gung-ho, go-ahead team who really impressed me and made me believe that shipbuilding had a future in the United Kingdom. It is like that everywhere one goes. Those organisations understand the difficulties; they just want to ensure that there is fairness.

I want to tease out how the Government should approach such contracts. The type 45 contract was announced last July, when it was clear that it was going ahead. As the Minister knows, I welcomed that announcement at the time. I wish to put it on the record again that I welcome the decision and congratulate the Government's decision to end the Horizon programme. It was a difficult decision to make, but it was justified and reasonable. The issue is not one of party politics. To go it alone to produce what is necessary for the Royal Navy was the right decision.

I take issue, however, with a previous speaker who said that the matter is about competition, similar to that in the computer industry. There is a difference. The scale of the market is not the same. Also, the fact that, by and large, the Government are making the purchase, tends to skew the process. We must accept that this is not about the clear competition that one would expect on the high street, but about competition to keep procurement across a range of shipyards and to make sure that the prices are right.

I turn now to the problems faced by Vospers. After the contract was placed, there was a period of silence. In December, the Prime Minister said that the Ministry of Defence had received an unsolicited bid from BAE Systems. Martin Jay, who even now is not that far distanced from the debate, said:

"The next few months will tell us whether the government remains committed to competition in defence procurement, or would prefer to rely on a single relationship with BAE Systems".

There are two major problems. The decision will not be taken until at least September and construction may not start until 2003. As the hon. Member for Eastleigh said, the longer that drags on, the less likely it is that Vospers will be in a position to offer such competitive tendering and be able to provide the sort of ship that is required as part of that early batch of three. By the time a decision is reached, there may be only one way for the Government to go. Dragging heels over the matter will create a major problem.

I am also aware that Vospers has announced redundancies, which will involve up to 650 employees in the Woolston shipyard. That will have a huge knock-on effect. In the great scheme of things in the United Kingdom, the loss of 650 jobs will not cause a massive raising of eyebrows, but it will have a huge knock-on effect on the south coast in specialisations and skills and in being able to produce the quality of work of which Vospers is capable. It will also have an effect on Appledore, which wishes to continue in shipbuilding.

Securing a portion of the type 45 programme was an important feature for that shipyard and, more generally, for skills in the south coast region. I refer the Government once again to their own comments on competition. I know that they have already been mentioned once or twice, but they bear repeating. The Ministry of Defence told the Select Committee:

"Competing for follow-on ships in batches increases the pressure on tenderers to reduce prices. Savings of around 30 per cent. were achieved between the First of Class vessel of the Type 23 destroyer and the 14th hull...We anticipate achieving a similar level of savings in the Type 45 programme."

The Ministry of Defence is now in the bizarre position of having announced an award, but having to contravene its own guidelines on competition and the placing of orders within the shipbuilding industry.

What is the real reason behind these developments? First, without any doubt, I see the hand of the Treasury at work. Part of the problem precedes the type 45 contract. The Minister will recall what happened to the contract for the roll on/roll off ferry. We warned that allowing four such ships to be constructed in shipyards outside the UK would have a serious knock-on effect on future orders. We can now see that happening.

Yards in Govan and Liverpool rightly believed that they were highly competitive and expected to achieve, within a UK bidding process, at least part of the award of those contracts for ship construction—but they did not. Having wrongly awarded the contracts overseas, the Government then scratched around to look for other vessels that could be constructed in those yards. That put pressure on the south coast: the business went to yards that might not, under usual circumstances, have been awarded the contracts. We now see the same process happening with the type 45. The pressure is on to provide work for yards in Scotland that could have been expected to have a clear programme of work—but did not. Short-term decisions taken a month ago clearly have a knock-on effect for later contracts and for skills on the south coast.

The most bizarre and worst of all reasons is the whiff of pork barrel politics surrounding the decision. Many Scottish Labour Members of Parliament are under pressure, particularly from the Scottish nationalists. They are, quite justifiably, complaining—and I supported them on the roll on/roll off ferry award—that work should have been allotted to those yards and that the effects would be devastating if it were not.

It is no coincidence that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whose Department is responsible for demanding that the Ministry of Defence carefully examines the unsolicited bid, also happens to originate from the same area and is so close to those whose primary concern is about the next general election. We are all politicians in this Room and we all understand that. It is not as though it has not been done before. The worst aspect is that it was done on the back of bad decisions by the Treasury and has resulted in the impending and serious crisis for shipbuilding on the south coast.

Will the Under-Secretary explain why he refuses to take an early decision on the unsolicited bid? Why will he not return immediately to the Ministry's own guidelines on competition? If he does not, serious problems will arise. He cannot simply gamble that Vospers will be successful enough to survive and that the impact on the south coast will be less serious than the impact in Scotland. That would be a terrible decision, which most people would view as highly political and retrograde.

I hope that the Minister will rise to declare that he will no longer accept the unsolicited bid, that we should get on with the original order, that BAE should get on with its work with Vospers, that the type 45s will be brought into service as early as possible, and that highly important and competitive shipbuilding should continue on the south coast.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Dr. Lewis Moonie): Until the contribution of the hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith), I disagreed with little that had been said. It is unfortunate that in a debate attempting to shed light on the subject, an Opposition spokesmen for a party that in government single-handedly virtually destroyed our armed forces over a period of 18 years starts whining, complaining, and crying crocodile tears on behalf of an industry for which it did little—certainly during the latter half of its term in office.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on securing the debate. I particularly noted his remarks about the long history of shipbuilding on the south coast and its association with the Royal Navy. The shipbuilding industry near my constituency is in a similar position, so like him I am well aware of the long traditions involved. I welcome the opportunity to speak on a subject that is important to all involved in the shipbuilding industry. The hon. Gentleman and hon. Members of all parties have, rightly, articulated their constituents' concerns and, as I said, I disagreed with little. I will endeavour to answer as many of their questions as I can in the short time allowed, although I have to add the caveat that, because many of the matters that we are debating are at a delicate stage of evaluation, I will occasionally be limited in what I can say and so will not necessarily be able offer the complete assurances that they want.

Our commitment to the UK shipbuilding industry was clearly demonstrated in the strategic defence review. We have embarked on the largest warship building programme for decades. In the past nine months, the Government have placed orders for two survey vessels with Vospers, which the company subsequently decided to subcontract to Appledore; a prime contract for the design and build of the first three type 45 destroyers, with BAE Systems as prime contractor; and the design and build of two alternative landing ships logistics—ALSLs—with Swan Hunter (Tyneside). My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has also announced that, subject to the negotiation of satisfactory terms and conditions, the BAE Systems marine yard at Govan will receive an order for an additional two ALSLs. As is well known, we intend to contract with Andrew Weir Shipping Ltd., a British-based company, for the 25-year private finance initiative strategic sealift service.

Mr. Hancock: Will the Minister give way?

Dr. Moonie: If I take interventions, I will not get through the necessary points.

I think that all hon. Members would agree that, taken together, those orders and announcements represent good news for the Royal Navy and for our shipyards, creating or securing several thousand jobs in yards and ancillary industries. There is more to come: during the next few years, orders will be placed for the follow-on batches of Astute class submarines and type 45 destroyers, and for the detailed design and build of future aircraft carriers. Those will be the largest surface warship projects of recent years. The UK manufacturing industry has an excellent opportunity to participate in advanced technology programmes, which we hope to place for competition across the UK, north and south, reflecting the strengths of individual companies in shipbuilding and other areas.

Our plans also include a programme known as the future surface combatant to replace the current type 22 and type 23 frigates, submarines, and a variety of other vessels. They include the potential supply and support of offshore patrol vessels for the Royal Navy, using money-saving procurement methods. Proposals have been received, including some from Vospers. Those are currently under evaluation and, subject to a satisfactory outcome, we expect to place a contract shortly. The backdrop is therefore healthy—indeed, it is unprecedented in recent times.

Yards with the technical capacity to build naval ships are scattered widely throughout the country, including the south coast. Many of those yards would like to be considered for the simpler type of ship, but advanced warships such as submarines, destroyers and mine countermeasure ships are always likely to require specialist skills and facilities. In the north, for instance, our nuclear-powered submarines have for many years been exclusively constructed at Barrow-in-Furness, whereas in the south, Vosper Thornycroft has established a pre-eminent position in the construction of mine countermeasure ships.

I pay tribute to Appledore shipbuilders of north Devon. With a standing work force of only 540, Appledore has proved that it can make a substantial contribution to shipbuilding in this country. Under subcontract to Vospers, it is building our new survey vessels—highly capable new ships that, thanks to improved sea-keeping, will be able to carry out survey work in the rough waters of our western approaches for about 90 per cent of the year. That work is expected to sustain around 800 jobs with Appledore and its suppliers for the next three years. I encourage the company to maintain its efforts to participate in MOD work, while continuing to seek out commercial and naval work from other customers. That broader customer base should remain a key element of all our shipyards' strategies.

The honourable Member for Eastleigh commented extensively on Vosper Thornycroft, and I shall concentrate mainly on that company. I hope that my summary will allay some of his concerns and those of his constituents about the overall picture. Hon. Members may be aware that the Ministry of Defence recently signed a memorandum of understanding with Vosper Thornycroft to explore further the possibility of the company relocating its steel warship building business from its current location in Woolston, Southampton, to land leased at Portsmouth naval base. That proposal would allow Vosper Thornycroft to expand its facilities using surplus assets within the naval base, and increase the extent to which it can participate in the construction of larger warships.

If Vosper Thornycroft decides to proceed with the move, which remains a commercial decision for the company, it will make a major contribution to our drive to modernise and rationalise warship repair and maintenance throughout the United Kingdom. That will contribute substantial savings against the defence budget to fund the front-line improvements outlined in the strategic defence review through the warship support modernisation initiative. It should bring benefits at Portsmouth to the Ministry of Defence and to the company by reducing costs and improving efficiencies, while at the same time improving the support provided to the front line.

As hon. Members know, Vosper Thornycroft is involved in type 45 procurement because of its record as a designer and builder of innovative warships for the Royal Navy and various foreign navies. The company has been building ships at Southampton for more than 100 years, supplying 270 ships to 34 countries in the past 30 years. Its performance in exporting warships is particularly noteworthy: in the past 20 years, it has successfully built ships for the navies of Egypt, Kenya, Oman, Qatar, and Saudi Arabia, to name but a few. Its building of the Hunt and Sandown classes of mine countermeasures ships in glass reinforced plastic for the Royal Navy has put it at the top of the world league for building these extremely sophisticated warships.

The Vosper Thornycroft group is a fine example of diversification, having used the experience it gained in shipbuilding to expand into new markets and reduce its dependence on warship contracts. That effort has been highly successful, with 67 per cent. of the group's turnover in the last financial year unrelated to new ship contracts. I am pleased that Vosper Thornycroft still wants to continue shipbuilding and its commitment so far to the design of the type 45 destroyer is evidence of that, as is its commitment to reforming its facilities to undertake the efficient building of those vessels.

We appreciate the shipbuilding community's anxieties about the lack of short-term work, despite the orders that have been placed by the Government. Bearing in mind the inevitable fluctuations in the ordering pattern for Royal Navy warships brought about by their long service life, we review the capacity of United Kingdom shipyards to undertake our forward programme, but it is not an exact science. The change to more modern methods of modular construction, the differing mixes of skills required for particular ship types and the way in which any particular shipbuilder will undertake the work make precise projections difficult. There is sufficient capacity in current UK shipyards to undertake our requirements, but that capacity cannot be sustained solely on the order book from Her Majesty's Government. That is why we give the strongest support to naval export orders.

We shall continue to seek to adopt commercial best practice whenever possible in design, manufacture, maintenance and marketing. We hope that that will allow predominantly warship yards to take on commercial work and vice versa, to assist in smoothing out peaks and troughs. I stress that adoption of commercial practices does not mean that we will relax any element that would compromise our ships' ability to perform their operational role. Operational effectiveness remains paramount.

The Government have a clear interest in maintaining a competitive and efficient shipbuilding industry. However, the first concern of the Ministry of Defence must be to provide our armed forces with the best possible equipment at the best value for money for the taxpayer. It is up to the yards themselves to be as efficient and productive as possible to compete for Ministry of Defence contracts and for other orders. Our order book, even on the scale now in prospect, cannot sustain the UK shipbuilding industry on its own. Ministry of Defence work provides an opportunity; companies with shipbuilding interests must reach beyond that for commercial and export work, which will in turn feed back into greater efficiency in a virtuous circle. That is, and will be, the most effective mechanism to ensure job security.

The shipbuilding situation changes frequently for many reasons, including the pressures placed on yards in a highly competitive market. That is not new. The important thing is to win the orders. Vospers won the order for the survey vessels and decided to subcontract the construction of the vessels to Appledore. Changed circumstances, however, have left it with a shortfall of steel construction work in the short term. The Government can and will provide strong support to shipbuilders in their search for other customers, but we cannot compensate for a lack of success in securing orders from them.

I said that I would talk about the unsolicited bid that we received from BAE Marine Systems for an alternative procurement strategy on the type 45 programme. For some time, the Government's policy has been to maintain a competitive base for warship building within the United Kingdom. The uncertainty that that causes for jobs is well understood and it is clearly a worrying matter for the work force both at Vospers and on the Clyde. As with any proposal that may offer better value for money for the taxpayer, we are bound to consider it, so we are doing so carefully, looking at the full range of issues that such a proposal raises in consultation with other Government Departments. The prime contractor has now passed his assessment of the proposal to the MOD.

I should like to give a clear statement about the outcome of our assessment, as hon. Members have requested, but I cannot. The assessment and evaluation of the bid is continuing and no decision has been made. We will come to a decision on that difficult issue as soon as possible, and I assure hon. Members that they will be informed of the outcome at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Chidgey: I understand the Minister's problem, but can he tell us whether the Government are in discussion with BAE Systems on developing a long-term warship building strategy in partnership with the company? If so, is any other company being invited into those discussions?

Dr. Moonie: As far as I am aware, that is not part of the current discussions, which focus purely on the bid. Obviously, it is part of the company's long-term strategy and no one can blame BAE for trying. It is operating in the same commercial environment as everyone else.

Returning to the other points made by the hon. Member for Eastleigh and by my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead), I can assure hon. Members that the prime contractor's work is closely overseen by the Defence Procurement Agency. In addition, Vospers has clear visibility of the developing design—indeed, it is leading the technical design team. That is working well. Work that Vospers is to undertake on first of class is clearly understood by the prime contractor, by Vospers and by Marine, and the contract pricing reflects that. That has not changed since it was articulated by the Chief of Defence Procurement on 21 December last year.

Vospers has agreed that it is difficult to contract while the design is immature. It has joined with the prime contractor and Marine to develop a detailed cost model for type 45 to allow a commitment to be made to it by September and enable its investment to go forward. That work is going well. It is to be reviewed in the next couple of weeks by the Defence Procurement Agency, by Vosper, Marine and the prime contractor. I can assure hon. Members that although the process might appear to have stalled, it is still progressing satisfactorily. That is of no great comfort to a yard that has a temporary shortfall of work, but there is nothing that we can do about that. The time scale for the steel construction was always fairly fixed. The hiatus is unfortunate but it is not the fault of the DPA, the Ministry of Defence, nor the company involved in the type 45 process. We are doing our best to move matters forward.

The prime contract for the first three ships was placed last December. It assumes a division of work between Vospers and BAE Systems Marine that will allow them both to gain experience and compete effectively for subsequent ships. That remains our intention. We are evaluating the bid from BAE Systems. In due course, when it has been fully evaluated, I will report on the results.

Mr. John McWilliam (in the Chair): Time is up. Before I call the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), I should like to say that although I do not know who the young lady was who handed a piece of paper to the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon, but as she was not a Member or a Doorkeeper, that was grossly out of order.

Social Services (Calderdale)

12.30 pm

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): I ask your permission, Mr. McWilliam, for my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Ms McCafferty) to speak after me. We share the local authority area of Calderdale and many of the cuts in social and other services proposed by the ruling Conservative group affect both our constituencies.

Since I asked for this debate some time ago, the Conservative group has backed down from making certain cuts and has decided to use some of the money from the housing transfer budget to save certain vital services. We must ask why the Conservatives have caused so much anxiety to many vulnerable people when, if we are to believe them, the money was there all the time.

The U-turn on the proposal to close the Scope outreach centre is very welcome, but I put on the record a warning that the Conservative council retreated from the cut only because of the wonderful campaign mounted by Janice Crabtree, the co-ordinator, her staff, the relatives and friends of the service users and, most importantly, the users—people such as Mr. Mark Pollard. He wrote to the Evening Courier in Halifax saying:

"I attend the service at the Bembridge Park Centre two days a week, on Mondays and Wednesdays. I learn about computers, literacy and numeracy, creative writing, cooking and drama.

This has allowed me to learn and develop things that I never dreamed of because I have cerebral palsy and visual impairment.

I have been able to publish poems, have a voice and opinion about things and to actually feel that I am a member of society.

If the service is closed what I have learned would be lost because I would not be able to get the same support that I get from this service as I know there are no services that can meet my needs to the same level."

That was a wonderful entreaty not to close the service. I am pleased for Mr. Pollard and the other users that there has been a retreat from the proposed cut. As hon. Members can see from that letter, the Scope outreach centre truly supports people with cerebral palsy and other physical disabilities so that they can achieve their individual potential. It is a centre of excellence and should never have been considered for closure in the first place. The Tories on Calderdale council had to listen and they have changed their mind.

Similarly, there was a proposal to close three adventure playgrounds that provide a good social service in areas in which there are many children and in deprived areas. A vigorous campaign was fought to save the playgrounds. Again, I pay tribute to the people such as Colin and Janice Jagger, who campaigned and fought so hard to save them. The Tory leader, Councillor John Ford, now says that they never intended to close that vital service for children, but I simply do not believe him. The massive campaign to save the playgrounds went on for two months, so why cause so much anxiety and fear among those communities for more than two months if they never intended to close them in the first place? The Tories could simply have said, "That is not true."

Welcome though the reprieve is for those services, many more face the axe. I am very concerned about the proposal to end free school milk. Since the Labour Government entered office, the eradication of child poverty has been a priority: 1 million children have been taken out of poverty and the Government plan to take another 2 million out of poverty in the next few years. School milk is an essential service for young children, particularly those with a low-income background. It provides vital nutrition, it is cheap and the take-up rate is almost 100 per cent. I call on councillors such as Mohamed Choudry and Shakir Saghir in St. Johns, Lorraine Stott in Mixendon and others to oppose this nasty little cut, which will save only £90,000. If they vote for the cut, they will harm children. The so-called independent councillor in Calderdale, Colin Stout, continually refers to his independence, so why is he taking the Tory whip on such a cut? It is disgraceful.

Another cut that looks small in monetary terms but would cause an enormous reduction in a vital service is the decision to axe £12,570 from the drugs and alcohol residential rehabilitation budget. That would be a disaster in the face of the increasing problem of drugs in Halifax and the Calder Valley. The mobile response team will be cut by £100,000, even though that service offers a lifeline to elderly people living in the community. My hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley will go into more detail, but we have both visited the scheme and know its worth.

Cuts to such vital services will threaten the excellent work of the health and social affairs committee set up by the former Labour council. The council is one of five that have achieved beacon status for joint working with the health services. That sort of initiative is rare and is included in the 10-year national health service plan. Labour-controlled Calderdale council introduced joint working in 1994 and it would be tragic if the committee's excellent work was threatened because of cuts in the grant to the voluntary sector, which I shall now address.

The proposed cut in the grant to advice centres has encouraged the citizens advice bureau to try to outbid two other voluntary organisations—Rhodes street advice centre and the DART advice centre for the disabled. Sadly, the CAB appears to have done a deal with the Tories, although I have warned it that if it sups with the devil, it will need a very long spoon. Calderdale DART is an advice centre for people with disabilities; it offers the excellent specialist service that is needed if, as we all want, disabled people are to remain in the community. One of its users wrote to the Halifax Evening Courier stating:

"I am particularly incensed to see that the local authority has encouraged voluntary organisations to try to outbid each other in the competition for funding....

As a client of Calderdale DART I have nothing but praise for the service it provides. Advice is accurate, clients are given polite, courteous treatment and more so. DART's motto seems to be that if it can't help it knows someone who can!

I have an assigned advice worker which prevents me having to explain my circumstances every time I contact DART. They will visit me in my own home, as my disability prevents me accessing office-based advice centres.

I have on several occasions also attempted to obtain advice from the CAB. The telephone help line is continually unavailable; apparently only 26 per cent. of its calls are answered."

That shows the pressure on the citizens advice bureau. I am not criticising it for that, but it is ludicrous to suggest that it could take over two specialist services.

The other advice centre that will close if the cut in the voluntary sector goes ahead and there is an amalgamation is the Rhodes street advice centre. It is an invaluable service in the middle of the Asian community and the co-ordinator, councillor Mohamed Najib, who ran the centre as a volunteer for years, and his staff of five offer advice on social services, housing, health, immigration and a host of other subjects. They deal with 14,000 queries a year and the suggestion that the CAB could replicate that service is nonsense. To go down that road is to play into the hands of right-wing extremists on Calderdale council.

Finally, I shall mention another service for retired people highlighted by the Liberal Democrat spokesman on Calderdale council. There is a possible cut in the budget for Matham Road bowling club and Ackroyd bowling green. Elderly people use those facilities and the council will save only £8,000. Meanwhile, it is spending £80,000 to ask the people of Calderdale for their ideas on best value—it is spending £80,000 on a public relations exercise while cutting two well-used and well-loved bowling greens.

The Tory budget contains many cuts that would harm young, disabled or elderly people. Tory councillors who fought last May's election on promises to improve services should examine their consciences. They ought to put the interests of the electorate who voted for them first by voting against this awful budget.

Ms Chris McCafferty (Calder Valley): We have heard from my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) that the Tories who run Calderdale council are guilty of incompetence and heartlessness in drawing up their budget proposals. I am of course delighted by the reprieve of services such as road safety education, recycling facilities, adventure playgrounds and especially the Scope outreach service, but, as my hon. Friend mentioned, credit for that is due to local people who have campaigned vigorously against the cuts. There is no credit due to the Tories for withdrawing proposals that should never have been made in the first place.

The original Conservative budget proposals caused massive dismay and concern throughout Calderdale. In particular, the proposed cuts to the Scope outreach centre and the mobile response unit caused anger, outrage and fear among people who depend on those vital services. Indeed, it appears that some of the cuts were not even required. It is hard to believe that the council's financial position could have changed so much in only three weeks. The satisfaction of seeing some of those services saved should not hide the long-term damage that will be inflicted by the Tory budget, because many damaging cuts remain.

The Tories still propose to decimate the mobile response service by cutting its budget by more than half. They have failed to indicate how the same level of service can be provided. Therefore, they are putting 2,500 vulnerable elderly people at risk by their actions. They are continuing to ignore the health of young children by scrapping free school milk, they are reducing the alcohol and drug rehabilitation budget and—this is an idea from the dark ages—they are closing 22 public toilets, which will make life difficult for the elderly, diabetics and anyone with poor bladder control.

There are also serious doubts about the long-term future of services. The Tories have given social services extra funding for one year, but that could mean cuts of up to £1 million next year. They have piled further pressure on social services by failing to give them adequate funding for contracts. Perhaps they know that they will lose control of Calderdale next year, so they are happy to pile up problems for the party that takes over from them. It is an uncaring and short-sighted budget from an uncaring and short-sighted party.

I should like to give an example of the damage that the Tories' heartless proposals would cause. The mobile response team is part of the community alarm service. A team of staff are on call 24 hours a day to go out immediately to people who press their alarm button because they need help. They may have fallen or need help getting back into a chair or bed. They may be unwell and need someone to check and reassure them. They may have had an accident or have some other care need, in which case the response team will visit, assess their problem and provide appropriate help. The team makes a real difference to the quality of life of older people. Without it, there would be no choice but to call an ambulance or other emergency service, which would mean that many of the older people would quickly end up in either hospital or long-term care.

The Conservatives still want to decimate the team by cutting more than half the budget. However, they have no idea how that might be achieved or what might replace the service, and they have had no discussions with the charity that provides the service. Last week, my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax and I met the staff. Like many who work in social care, they are totally committed to the people whom they help. They are at a loss to understand how anyone can treat their work and the service that they provide with such contempt.

It is perhaps ironic that Calderdale was recently awarded beacon status for its joint work with health. Of course, that reflects policies and initiatives that were implemented by the previous Labour administration. However, the Tory budget proposals and the way in which they were prepared must cast doubt on how long Calderdale will retain beacon status. There has been no consultation with health and voluntary sector partners, some of whose grants are being cut. No thought has been given to the impact of such actions on the priorities and agendas that have been established. Calderdale authority is not generously, or even adequately, funded. Social care staff have said that they are deeply disillusioned with the way in which the authority treats the social services department. Their belief that they are treated as second-class citizens is reflected in the fact that the authority is finding it difficult to recruit staff.

We are awaiting publication of the social services inspection of services for older people, and it is perhaps unfortunate that the report will not be published until the budget process has been completed. It is widely believed that the report will criticise the department's performance in many areas. It is unlikely that it will make a case for cutting expenditure on vital services, but actions that officers might take to address any criticisms in the report will be undermined at the outset by Tory budget proposals that will further damage morale and funding.

[Ms Chris McCafferty]

My hon. Friend the Member for Halifax and I have made it clear that we will support council representations to the Government for further assistance, but only if it is honest about the financial situation and its proposals' impact, and if it ceases to target its proposed cuts on the most vulnerable. To date, our offer has been ignored. It seems that Calderdale Tories are more interested in political gestures than working together to benefit vulnerable people.

I ask the Minister to consider the problems that Calderdale faces. This year, Calderdale enjoyed a very generous financial settlement—the second highest secured by a metropolitan borough. However, historically, Calderdale has been underfunded because of decisions taken in the 1980s on the structure of local government finance. I hope that that issue will be addressed in the future, but is targeted help available now? Could such help be accompanied by further vigilance in seeking to protect the vulnerable in Calderdale from the impact of the budget proposals? I urge the strongest possible action to ensure that Calderdale council meets its targets and achieves the standard of services that local people have a right to expect.

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. John Hutton): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on securing this important opportunity to debate social services spending plans in Calderdale. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley (Ms McCafferty) on her important contribution.

Both my hon. Friends will agree that social services provide a hugely important range of services for some of the most vulnerable in our society, particularly children and the elderly. They can also help by dealing directly with the very real issues of social exclusion and deprivation that continue adversely to affect too many of our communities and fellow citizens. Those are very important responsibilities, and I believe that it is the Government's task to ensure that those crucial services are properly resourced and operate within a framework that promotes greater independence, opportunity and choice, and which raises the quality of front-line services. However, it is the job of local authorities such as Calderdale to provide and plan for the necessary front-line services to meet the needs of local communities, and to demonstrate clear improvements in both quality and accessibility. Those are the essential criteria against which any proposals for social services expenditure must be judged.

I turn first to the issue of resources. The Government have substantially increased the resources available to local councils to ensure that they are better able to discharge their duties. I should like to say more about those new resources, highlighting how Calderdale has benefited. Through the spending review announced early last year, over the next three years the Government are increasing by an average of 3.4 per cent. in real terms the resources that are available to councils with social services responsibilities. That increase compares with an average real-terms growth in social services resources of just 0.1 per cent. per annum during the previous Parliament.

The people of Calderdale will be among those who benefit from the substantial increases in resources provided for social services. This year, the funding made available through standard spending assessments is just over £32 million—5.1 per cent. more than in the previous year. We recently announced that those resources will increase again next year by a further 4.4 per cent.—substantially above the rate of inflation. In addition, the council will gain from the significant increases in new and on-going special grants that we are making available. In December, the Secretary of State for Health announced that a further £100 million, on top of the figures that I have quoted, would be made available for social services spending in 2001-02. Calderdale council will benefit by an extra £378,000 from those additional ring-fenced resources.

We have provided significant additional resources for children's services over the past few years. Last year, we introduced, for the first time, a grant to improve the range and quality of children's social services provided by local councils. In the first year of that grant, Calderdale received £260,000. It received a further £410,000 this year, and next year the grant will rise to £1.026 million. Other services have received additional resources. For example, Calderdale's carer's grant has more than trebled over the past three years. The grant totalled £75,000 in 1999 but will rise to £259,000 next year. Similarly, the council's mental health grant over the same three-year period will have risen from £331,000 in 1999 to £597,000 next year.

I hope that both my hon. Friends accept that the Government have provided significant new and additional resources to Calderdale council. In 2001-02, adding together what has been allocated through standard spending assessments and the new ring-fenced grants, the council has been provided with more than £36 million to spend on its social services. Exactly how those substantial sums are spent is for the council to decide. Local councillors must weigh up how much should be allocated to social care services, taking into account Government targets and what local users and carers want. It is the council's responsibility to manage those resources carefully and sensibly, so that maximum benefit accrues to people who require social services in Calderdale. That is the challenge facing all councils at this time of year as they set their budgets for 2001-02.

My hon. Friend the Member for Halifax rightly decided to raise her concerns at a time when it seemed that Conservative councillors in Calderdale intended to impose swingeing cuts on the social services budget, putting many vulnerable people at risk. Like my hon. Friend, I was worried when that prospect was brought to my attention. However, I understand that following recommendations made last night as a result of the concerns that she and others had raised about the proposals, councillors have revised their budget allocations and have stepped back from taking a number of decisions which would have caused considerable anxiety to local people. I know that she and my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley remain concerned about some of the decisions that Conservative councillors appear to be intent on pursuing, and I fully understand that. The yardstick against which those and any other decisions are to be judged will be the extent to which they enhance community well-being and help to meet the needs of vulnerable people in Calderdale. It will be for local people to make any such judgment and to express it through the ballot box.

The Government will continue to look carefully and closely at the performance of social services in Calderdale to ensure that progress is made in meeting the national objectives that we have set. I assure both my hon. Friends that those objectives are not optional. They were set for the clear purpose of raising the standard of social services in every part of the country, and Calderdale is no exception. We expect every council to take the necessary steps to meet those standards, because that is the right way in which to end the lottery of care that has been apparent in social services for far too long.

I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax recognises that Calderdale can point to progress in improving its performance in a number of important areas. On children's services, for example, the council's performance in providing stability for looked-after children has improved significantly, but only one in three children leaving care did so with any educational qualifications. That is not good enough and we shall look for significant improvements in that important indicator.

In Calderdale, few people with learning disabilities are helped to live at home, although the number is gradually increasing. The same picture emerges for people with physical disabilities or mental health problems, and residential care services are acknowledged to be poor. Some inspections of residential homes for adults were not carried out within the statutory time scale, and the number of people entering residential care in Calderdale is much higher than the national average. That needs careful attention.

Everyone accepts that it is better for people to be helped to live in their own homes. Unfortunately, in Calderdale, the number of people receiving intensive care to allow them to live in their own homes fell last year against the national trend. That is a matter of concern and I shall look to the local authority to make greater efforts to bring its local performance into line with that in other parts of the country.

Calderdale is to be congratulated on achieving beacon status for partnership working in health. It will be necessary to ensure that high-quality services and strong partnership working are maintained when the reconfiguration of local health services has been completed.

In summary, Calderdale is at the start of a long journey in the development of good social care services. That will require a strategic, long-term vision of what needs to be done. That vision will have to be embraced by elected Members and the local community. It will take time, commitment and further investment, not less.

Mrs. Mahon: Will the Minister look particularly at the joint working between the local authority and Calderdale health care trust, because together they have done such good work? If the cuts jeopardise that, it would be sad for all those who have worked so hard.

Mr. Hutton: I agree strongly with my hon. Friend; I had intended briefly to mention intermediate care developments in Calderdale.

This is not the time to contemplate cutting funding for crucial, front-line social care services. Rather, it is time to review whether every pound is spent to maximum effect, whether better commissioning practices might release further savings, whether the balance between cost and quality is right, and whether current services are delivering the outcome sought by local people.

I referred earlier to the new policy framework within which we expect social services to operate. Central to that policy framework is the development of a new range of intermediate care services designed to prevent avoidable admissions to hospital, to enhance rehabilitation and faster recovery from illness, and to enable as many people as possible to live independently in their own homes. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax is anxious to see development of the new services in Calderdale and to ensure that the budget reductions proposed by the local Conservatives do not impede developments in that important area. I share her concern. We have made significant new resources available through the national health service plan, which are filtering through to services in Calderdale. For example, the Calderdale primary care group will benefit next year from a specific allocation for intermediate care of more than £150,000.

A substantial component of the £900 million announced in the NHS plan relates to resources provided to local government. In determining funding for social services to be made available through the standard spending assessment over the next three years, we took account specifically of additional council investment in services that promote independence, particularly for older people. The local government settlement makes provision for that over the next three years. The deployment of money provided through the standard spending assessment is, as my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax acknowledged, a decision for councils in the light of local circumstances.

There has been significant development in intermediate care services in Calderdale and all the service providers who have been involved in that deserve congratulations. A range of new services is coming on line which will enhance the care and support available to older people. It would be tragic if any of that was put at risk because of short-sighted decisions that local Conservative councillors might be tempted to make.

My hon. Friend the Member for Halifax has done her constituents a substantial service, as has my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley, in raising these matters this afternoon. We shall continue to take a close interest and watch over what is happening in Calderdale to ensure that the proper national objectives that we have set for social services over the next three years are delivered for the benefit of her constituents and of those of my hon. Friend the Member for Calder Valley.

Children's Health

Mrs. Marion Roe (Broxbourne): The Minister will know that I served as Chairman of the Select Committee on Health for five years and that, in 1996-97, that Committee undertook an inquiry into children's health. I have maintained my interest in the matter and I am delighted to have this opportunity to raise matters of concern with her.

First, I seek an assurance from the Minister on the needs of children explicitly described in the booklet, "Your Guide to the NHS", which bears little resemblance to the old patients charter. It emphasises patients' responsibilities to the NHS, as well as their rights. However, the guide makes no explicit reference to the health needs of children, unlike the "Charter for Children and Young People", which was issued in 1996 during the Select Committee's inquiry into services for children and young people. I should welcome the hon. Lady's comments on whether there has been an omission and whether the Government are prepared to rectify it.

Another matter that causes concern relates to children in adult wards and intensive care units. What assurance can the Government give that the needs of children who are ill and in hospital are not being ignored? Unfortunately, basic principles of care that have been acknowledged by all Governments since 1959 and highlighted by the Select Committee's inquiries into services for children and young people, such as children on adult wards, are still being ignored.

The Government have increased finance for paediatric intensive care, but children are still being routinely admitted to adult intensive care units following elective surgery, because some surgeons still ignore Department of Health guidance and undertake specialist surgery on children in hospitals without the appropriate facilities. Careful monitoring of paediatric intensive care, as promised in the Department of Health guidance in 1997, seems to have omissions because children who are admitted following elective surgery do not seem to be identified.

The Select Committee was shocked to discover that children's community services, which have been supported by every Government since the Platt report in 1959, are still not universally available, with about 40 per cent. of the United Kingdom being without a service. I welcome the Diana, Princess of Wales children's community teams for children with life-threatening or terminal conditions, but eight teams for England, although important, is a small contribution compared with what is needed. Many children with acute illness or following surgery remain in hospital because no children's community nursing service is available locally.

I shall quote from the Select Committee's third report, which states in paragraph 49:

"The overall intention must be to introduce as soon as possible a home nursing service provided by appropriately qualified staff and available to all children requiring nursing interventions and their families. For many years there has been such a nursing service for adults in their own homes. We consider that, as a matter of principle, sick children need and deserve no less."

I would welcome the Minister's response on that.

As for child and adolescent mental health, following the Select Committee's fourth report, the Government allocated money to that wholly inadequate service. However, the removal of child and adolescent mental health services from children's services, which has links with children's social services, education and children's health services, into newly-established mental health trusts, which are focused on the needs of adults and are unconnected with the range of agencies concerned with children, causes some concern. Unfortunately, the reality is that a stigma is still attached to mental health services, so some families may not wish to have the stigma of services from a mental health trust.

In addition, due to the paucity of services, children with mental health difficulties are admitted to acute paediatric wards, which are in a different trust. I ask the Minister, is this shift to services focused primarily on the needs of adults for the convenience of managerial organisation and professionals rather than the needs of children and their families?

There is a role for a children's commissioner—we now have a Children's Commissioner for Wales—although only one with a clearly defined role. The children's commissioner should be entitled to monitor the interests of children looked after by statutory services. He or she should also have a wider function in relation to the work that affects children that the Government carry out across all Departments.

Children—almost uniquely in society—are unable to participate in the democratic process. Adults make legislation and regulations that affect them, both directly in terms of provisions dealing with children and indirectly through the way in which we legislate to support the family. It is therefore right that an independent person should have the remit to examine legislative proposals across the range of Departments and to represent the interests of the children who will be affected by them. In that way, those interests will properly be taken into account in the workings of government and the legislative process.

I welcome the children's taskforce, but I have concerns about the needs of children who are sick within the NHS. The children's taskforce appears to focus on prevention and young people who cause specific difficulties, such as pregnant teenagers. Of course, I acknowledge the importance of prevention. Indeed, the Select Committee second report states:

"The rewards of good health care in childhood, especially health promotion and preventative interventions, are unique because the benefits may last a life time, and may be passed on to future generations."

There is, however, considerable concern that the needs of children who are ill are not being appropriately considered, but lumped together with adult services.

As a Member of Parliament who is interested in the issue, I must inform the Minister that I have been unable to obtain more than a photostat copy of the children's taskforce booklet and introduction. I should be grateful if I could have some copies of it in its true form, rather than having to rely upon that. I telephoned the lady whose name appears in the booklet to ask for copies, but unfortunately I received no reply. I should be most grateful if the Minister could help.

One aspect of quality health care that the Select Committee praised was integrated services for children without traditional barriers between hospital and community services. They included acute services, such as neo-natal intensive care and hospital in-patient and out-patient care, and school nursing and community services, such as community children's nursing services and services for children with learning disabilities or mental health problems. As the staff involved include therapists, a child receiving, say, physiotherapy in the community for his cerebral palsy would, following surgery, receive treatment from the same physiotherapist while he was an in-patient in the acute hospital.

One of the themes identified was that services are too often organised for the convenience of staff and, sadly, such services are now being broken up to fit managerial convenience instead of children's needs. The emphasis on primary care trusts is resulting in community aspects of children's services going into the primary care trust, in mental health going into adult-focused adult mental health trusts, and in acute services going into adult-focused acute hospital trusts. Children therefore become a small part in adult-focused services, with staff that are educated and experienced in children's needs divided and increasingly isolated.

The Government recently announced their intention to set national standards for children's services, which is to be welcomed. I hope that early dates for the publication and implementation of those standards will be announced, as that would ensure that children's needs are not overlooked in services designed primarily for adults. A national service framework for all children would ensure that children's needs are not overlooked through services designed for adults, with children fitted in or, on a disease basis, tagged on to services that are geared primarily toward adults.

I am most grateful for the opportunity to place on record the anxieties that I and many others have about children's health. We look forward to the Minister's response and the addition of more information to that which we already have on the policies that the Department of Health, the hon. Lady and her colleagues will implement.

1.13 pm

The Minister for Public Health (Yvette Cooper): I congratulate the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) on having secured the debate and choosing it to discuss an issue about which I feel especially strongly and which is extremely important for both the Government and the House. I pay tribute to the work that she has done with the Select Committee on Health and subsequently on children's health, an issue on which she has campaigned and worked for a long time.

The matter is extremely important to the Government, not simply from the point of view of children's health, but because children's health is so closely linked with other aspects of children's lives. Perhaps more tangibly than at any other stage in life, social, emotional and educational development are closely linked to health. That is especially true in the years when children are very young. Health in the early years can affect health throughout life, and health problems that develop in childhood can haunt people throughout their lives. The deep-rooted health inequalities in society often stem not simply from childhood but from pregnancy. The Government therefore regard children's health as a priority.

In responding to the points raised by the hon. Lady, I shall set out some of the progress that has been made and some of the measures that are already under way. I shall also outline some of the work that is being planned for the future in relation to the children's taskforce and the standards she mentioned towards the end of her speech.

A major programme of work is being planned to draw together many of the individual strands of children's health into a single national service framework for children. The national service frameworks have been developed as major programmes across the health service. NSFs are currently in place for mental health and coronary heart disease, and although the cancer plan had a slightly different genesis than NSFs, it sets out comprehensive standards of care and treatment in a similar fashion. The full range of care, from prevention to treatment to palliative care, is covered for conditions that are the big killers in society. We are keen to apply the same comprehensive approach to children's health. I strongly believe that the national service framework should not only be about children's heath services, but that it should include prevention and health promotion and cover many of the service issues raised by the hon. Lady.

We are still at an early stage in developing and determining the scope of the national service framework. A major consultation will be needed: parents, children and young people will be subject to extensive consultation as part of the process. The children's taskforce will play a major role in that work. We are currently at the stage of determining what issues should be included. I shall outline a few of the areas in which work is already under way, which will need to be fed into the national service framework, and cover some of the other areas that the national service framework will have to address in more detail.

We have taken considerable action on prevention, which, as the hon. Lady said, is extremely important. The rolling-out of the meningitis C vaccine programme is an example: we are the first country in the world to introduce a nationwide meningitis C programme. Managing to introduce it and offer the vaccine to everyone under the age of 18 in the space of 15 months is a huge tribute to the NHS, especially school nurses and those working in primary care who implemented the programme.

Work has also been done on promoting healthy living for children, especially in relation to access to fruit and vegetables and a healthy diet. Today, we roll out the next wave of the programme to provide free fruit in infants schools. Experts recommend five portions of fruit and vegetables a day to help to prevent cancer, heart disease and asthma in children. Research shows that, on average, children only have about two portions a day and children in low-income areas have considerably fewer. The provision of free fruit in infants schools across the country will make a major contribution to increased access to fruit and vegetables and a healthy diet, and to improving children's nutrition and long-term health.

Work has been done in relation to maternity services, and the sure start programme is tackling ill health and promoting health among families and children in the early years—for those under four—ensuring proper access to immunisation programmes and health care and, importantly, signposting to specialist services when health problems arise, ensuring diagnosis at the earliest possible moment, and proper support and provision of the expert services required in low-income areas.

The hon. Member for Broxbourne referred to acute care and community care. She is right to say that we introduced additional funding in 1997 to improve paediatric intensive care. To date, an additional £51 million has gone into building up the strengths of centres providing the highest level of care to the most critically ill children to ensure ready access, to develop specialist retrieval teams and to increase funding for specialist skills, especially nursing skills. We are now considering what further improvements we need to make to the level of local hospital support for that system to meet the needs of children who require high-dependency care. We must also consider neo-natal intensive care, in which expert work is under way that we can feed into the national service framework. We have made clear our intention to expand critical care—we have made major improvements during the past few years—but we need to be especially sensitive to the issues of neo-natal and paediatric intensive care.

The hon. Lady asked whether particular areas or consultants were following best practice. We know that that is in place in many areas—there are some excellent examples—but we also know that there is wide variation in the care provided, which is unacceptable. That is what drives the national service framework. In coronary heart disease, cancer and other areas, the national service framework has set national standards that every area must follow, which can be followed up through clinical governance and inspection mechanisms and the NHS performance management framework to ensure that they are properly implemented. The national service framework for children's services will provide us with the levers to ensure that every area is able to adapt and start to follow best practice, which we know is in place in some areas. That will take some time and we should be realistic: identifying best practice and developing the right standards will take time, but it will provide us with a powerful mechanism as the work takes place.

The hon. Lady also mentioned community care for children. That is especially important because, no matter how ill children become, most families want to care for them at home and most children will always be more comfortable at home. We should provide whatever services we can in the community. Through the national service framework, we shall need to consider the developing role of health visitors and school nurses, work on which has already begun as a result of the "Saving Lives" White Paper to improve the public and family health role of such services. Again, we need to consider what further work can be done and what further role such services can play as part of the national service framework.

We also need to consider support not just for prevention but for those children who become sick or have problems, whatever they may be. The hon. Lady referred to Diana nurses—we strongly support their work and are keen to learn lessons from it when providing care across the country. We are also keen to ensure proper palliative care support for children in the tragic circumstances in which it is needed. That is being considered as part of the current wave of consultation on the new opportunities fund to determine what additional care and support can be provided.

The hon. Lady referred to child and adolescent mental health services. A considerable amount of work has been done; national targets in health and social care for child and adolescent mental health services were introduced for the first time in 1999, under the national priorities guidance. In the past two years, we have invested £50 million of additional funds in the modernisation fund and the mental health grant to help to achieve those targets. For a long time, mental health was not regarded as a serious problem for children, because it was felt that they would simply grow out of it, which is not the case. More work must be done to extend the best practice in some areas to the whole country. Capacity, reform and the provision of services must be considered.

We are committed to the growth of NHS capacity across the board as part of the NHS plan, putting extra investment and extra staffing in place to deliver services, although we must be realistic about the time it will take to deliver necessary improvements. However, we need not simply to expand capacity, but to reform the way we do things by setting national standards and focusing on children's needs. We need to focus on prevention, not simply on treating the sick, and to work in partnership with schools, families and the community. Work with children cannot be done by the NHS alone.

A theme from the NHS plan that we must consider in the context of children's services and children's health is that current professional roles may have to change and professional barriers that have been in place for a long time may have to come down. Much work is being done in that sector at present, and we are keen to ensure that it links with other action across Government. The health service should not work in isolation; we must consider social services, the obvious area of support, but also education and support for those with learning difficulties.

We must acknowledge that inequality and poverty are the root causes of children's ill health. My view is that a commitment to abolish child poverty will have more impact on children's health than any other Government measure. We have already made progress in that respect by taking 1 million children out of poverty in the course of this Parliament, which is a huge step forward, but there is an awful lot left to do. Many children still need help and support, but in the long run, action on child poverty will improve children's health. Health inequalities are partly to do with the causes of ill health, but also relate to children's and health services. Services for children in low-income areas must be as good as the best in the country, which has, too often, not been the case.

A huge programme of work is under way on the lines suggested by the hon. Lady, and we have an amazing opportunity, through the national service framework, to take matters further in the next few years. We want to ensure that there is post-natal and maternity support, as well as support for children throughout their childhood. We have an ambitious programme, which will make for an interesting time in the next few years. I welcome the hon. Lady's contribution to the debate and thank her for raising these issues. I am sure that she will continue to do so as this work carries on over the next few years.

Mr. John McWilliam (in the Chair): Before I call the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne), may I compliment him on where he has chosen to sit? It was intended that Members should not split and sit according to their party. A debate across the Floor is much more helpful than trying to talk to the back of someone's head.

Basford Group Pension Scheme

1.30 pm

Mr. Desmond Browne (Kilmarnock and Loudoun): Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for your kind words. I am grateful for the opportunity to raise in the House of Commons this very important issue for my constituents. For the last quarter of a century, manufacturing industry in my constituency has undergone the most radical change. Thousands of jobs have been lost in what were often considered to be lifetime occupations. No sector has suffered more than textiles, which dominated employment in the Irvine valley. Over the years, we have lost more than 400 jobs. The collapse of Basford Home Textiles, a part of the Basford Group, that went into receivership in June 1999, was a severe enough blow for the 38 workers who were made redundant, but they consoled themselves to some degree with the thought that at least their accrued pension rights in the group pension scheme would contribute to their standard of living at the time of retirement. The 99 employees retained by the successor employer also thought that their position was safe. Consequential to the receivership, the pension scheme had to be wound up. That process has revealed to the employees just how misplaced even that small amount of optimism was.

Mrs. Margaret Dawson, of Darvel, worked for many years in the industry both for Basford and their predecessors. She planned to retire at 60 and had a fair idea of what her pension would be. In 1995, the scheme was altered to equalise the normal retirement age for all members at 65. She knew and understood that the change forced on the scheme by the European Court case of Barber v. Guardian Royal Exchange would have a detrimental effect on her benefits. However, before she retired on 2 July 1999, the Basford Group went into receivership. The immediate effect of the commencement of the winding-up of the scheme on 26 May 1999 was that the new trustees, acting on the advice of the scheme actuary and pending clarification of the funding position, took a decision not to consider any early retirement requests.

Mrs. Dawson, who is a formidable woman, persisted with her request for early retirement and eventually, on 30 March 2000, the trustees agreed to pay her the guaranteed minimum pension. That figure is significantly less than the benefits she expected from the scheme, as set out in the figures she was given when she made her initial inquiries about early retirement. Now, almost two years after the date of her retirement and three years after her 60th birthday, she has no clear idea of what her final pension will be, and will not know that until the funding position of the scheme is finally known. She survives on the basic state pension, supplemented by the guaranteed minimum pension. She is confused, feels betrayed and rightly has a burning sense of injustice.

Bobby Armour of Kilmarnock also worked for Basford, but left before the receivership. He has a deferred pension in the scheme, and is still in employment but is nearing retirement age. He is also a victim of the uncertainty, as he cannot work out what his accrued benefits are worth. Furthermore, he cannot transfer his Basford pension to another scheme, as the value of the scheme has not yet been quantified, and a true transfer value cannot be assessed. He is in an almost identical position to David Ralston, another Darvel resident who is still working in the industry—in the firm that took over from Basfords in Darvel. Like Mrs Dawson, Bobby Armour and David Ralston also feel betrayed and have a burning sense of injustice.

Those three cases are but examples of the circumstances of many of my constituents affected by the closure of the Basford plant. Over the past two years, there have been a series of comprehensive announcements from the independent trustee, Mitre Pensions Ltd., and the members' interests have been rigorously pursued by the General, Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union, and in particular the regional organiser John Easdale and their shop stewards Eunice Callender, Paddy Quigley and Jim Raymond, who is now a local councillor.

Investigations by the independent trustee have uncovered a catalogue of actions in the last few months of the existence of the group that directly affected the pensions of all the employees, and which may leave some pensioners with as low as 48 per cent. of what they paid for. It appears that the trustees ignored advice from their actuary about the level of contributions necessary to maintain the funding requirement of the scheme and investment advice from their fund managers. Furthermore, the owner of Basford, Maurice Cresswell, who was also the chairman of the trustees of the pension fund, at a time when the only other trustees were directors of the company, persuaded the other trustees to buy two premises already owned by him, at a cost of some £560,000 to the fund—a figure that, not surprisingly, came in at about 5 per cent. of the fund's value.

Those actions, along with non-payment of employer contributions of at least £150,000 during 1998-99 and a delay in paying employee contributions during the same period, left the fund some 12.3 per cent. short of the value required to sustain the pensions of its members. Given that current pensioners are better protected than deferred pensioners on the winding-up, deferred pensioners will take a bigger loss, which is estimated at up to 28 per cent. by the new independent trustee, Mr. Iain Talman of Mitre.

Even those figures are still provisional, as the fund managers, Aon Consulting, have not yet been able to provide accurate figures on which to base decisions concerning the scheme. The winding-up of a pension scheme is not a simple process, but it is not helped by delays that are avoidable. The necessary actuarial valuation was promised within six months of the winding-up date. It took a full year, and even then it had to be redone. A second actuary was employed, but he resigned before he could report. A third actuary has been instructed, and his report is awaited, but the uncertainty for pensioners continues.

There has been an unexplained delay in claiming the outstanding employer contributions from the national insurance fund. Despite the fund managers having been aware of the valuation, and therefore the level of the missing funds, since last summer, it would seem that they only began the process of recovery before Christmas. That has further delayed the final valuation of the fund. Indeed, it has been difficult for anyone to find out anything from Aon Consulting. In his earlier announcements, the independent trustee encouraged members with questions about their specific entitlement to consult the fund managers as the first point of contact. I am repeatedly told that requests for information have been fruitless. I wrote to them on 20 December last year asking a number of questions relating to the scheme. On 7 February this year, I wrote again seeking a reply. I had not even had the courtesy of an acknowledgement. To be fair to them, that omission was corrected by a holding letter of 13 February, but I am still awaiting answers. If the Member of Parliament cannot get answers from people who manage the pension funds when there is a clear, direct, constituency interest, it does not augur well for ordinary members of the public.

The whole process has been one of delay after delay, and all this time more and more charges are being made on the scheme, lessening its value again and again. In his latest announcement, the independent trustee said that "any member wishing to contact ... the independent trustee or the scheme administrator should feel free to do so on the understanding that both are professional organisations that receive remuneration from the scheme for their services."

The scheme will also have to bear the cost of additional investigations and expensive legal advice about whether there is a legal claim in respect of any or all of the actions that have caused the shortfall.

The buildings that were purchased from Cresswell were the subject of a series of transactions of labyrinthine complexity. There may also have been a deliberate attempt to make them not resaleable, because access to one of the buildings was retained by the owner, who is also the chairman of the trustees and the man who owned the company. To date, only one of the buildings has been sold. Until the second building is sold, no assessment can be made of the loss or, more unlikely, the gain to the scheme from the property transactions alone. At the same time, some assessment has to be made of the likely rental income that should have accrued to the scheme from the buildings. but which did not. For some inexplicable reason, the trustees allowed the company to get out of a notional leasing deal for one of the buildings, which was due to last for 10 years, without penalty after two years. Alternatively, an assessment should be made of whether other investment of the £560,000 purchase price would have been more beneficial to the scheme, and whether that is what the trustees should have done with the money in the first place.

Another cause of uncertainty is the fact that now, almost two years after the company went into receivership, no assessment is yet possible of whether legal action may help to recover part of the deficit. Mitre is properly taking legal advice on this matter, but in a letter to me of 9 February, it stated that "this has proved to be more complex than was first anticipated. This has required substantial amounts of investigation and this continues to occur. There will be a further meeting with our solicitors shortly at which point a decision should be made as to whether any actions can be raised."

The members would rather have the certainty than the potential for litigation against someone who may turn out to be a man of straw.

None of the members of this scheme has benefited in any way from the changes implemented by the Pensions Act 1995, never mind the protections legislated for in the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act 2000.

Undoubtedly, had those members had the benefit of that legislation, the history of this scheme would have been different. However, that does not mean that there are not legitimate questions that the members are entitled to ask of the Government. There are lessons still to be learned from their appalling experiences.

Will my right hon. Friend consider setting up a pensions safety net fund, similar to the redundancy payments fund, to protect the investment of ordinary people whose pensions have been damaged through no fault of their own? This proposal has been put to me forcefully by the GMB, and on the face of it seems a much-needed reform. I am aware that the Government continually review the level of protection needed for vulnerable pension scheme members such as the Basford employees. I know that, as part of the consultation on security for occupational pensions, the Government are in dialogue with the industry, and that the Institute of Actuaries and the Faculty of Actuaries have proposed that solvency insurance could have a role to play in protecting members of underfunded schemes in the event of the insolvency of the sponsoring employer. Can my right hon. Friend say whether the Government intend to follow that recommendation? If they do, it may come too late for the Basford pensioners, but it would go a long way to giving some protection to others who may find themselves in a similar position in future.

The winding-up of this pension scheme has taken almost two years now, and the end of that process is not yet in sight. I am told by some of my colleagues that it is not unknown for the winding-up process to take significantly longer than that. One of my hon. Friends told me that, after seven years, a pension scheme in his constituency is no nearer being wound up. The process itself is a significant drain on the resources of the scheme. The powers given to the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority to direct schemes on winding up may provide a less complicated and less expensive method of getting answers than the courts presently provide. When will those powers be brought into force, and what steps can the Government take to assess the performance of pension fund managers such as Aon, who hold themselves out as independent experts, both in their stewardship of the schemes, and in their performance when things goes wrong and delays are caused?

What is happening about the reform of the minimum funding requirement? If the minimum funding requirement ensured that there were sufficient assets to meet the liabilities of a fund, it would solve many of these problems. However, evidence suggests that it does not. Are the Government any nearer to determining their priority in relation to the minimum funding requirement? Is it to be greater security for the public's occupational pensions or greater investment freedom for schemes and investment fund managers in line with the Paul Myners review?

What proposals does my right hon. Friend have for improving the level of communication to scheme members when an occupational pension scheme winds up? The Department of Social Security undertook a research project into this issue prior to the implementation of the Pensions Act 1995. In the Basford case, the frequency and comprehensive nature of the announcements of the independent trustee is admirable, but his correspondence is still remarkably complex and difficult to understand. Yesterday, I had to read through the announcements two or three times before I could understand even the basics, and from my experience they are examples of good communication in such a situation.

Many other questions require to be asked in this particular case, but they can be posed only when the work of the administrator in winding up the scheme, and of the independent trustee in assessing culpability, is completed. In the meantime, any steps that the Government can take to ensure that other pension scheme members do not suffer the fate of my constituents, the Basford pensioners, will be warmly welcomed by them and by all other pension scheme members across the country.

The Minister of State, Department of Social Security (Mr. Jeff Rooker): I agree with your initial comments, Mr. Deputy Speaker, about the seating position of my hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne). I did not like the former arrangement in this Room, and greatly prefer the present one.

I congratulate my hon. Friend on introducing his case. I am sorry to hear about what happened, and I recognise that scheme members must be beside themselves with worry. Many hundreds of people—pensioners, payers or deferred members—are involved.

It may not be parliamentary or ministerial to say so, but the case that my hon. Friend described stinks. I hope that my hon. Friend will appreciate that because many of the issues are on-going, what I am able to say is limited. I shall do my best to explain the system currently in place to protect pension schemes. Some aspects are under review and some changes have already been made. I also want to respond to as many specific points about the Basford case as I can.

The vast majority of UK pension schemes are set up under trust law. The basic duty to run a pension scheme lies with the trustees, not the company or the Government. The trustees must ensure that the rules of the scheme are followed and comply with the law.

The framework of trust law was reinforced by the Pensions Act 1995, which resulted from the Maxwell scandal. It introduced a series of measures to protect members of pension schemes, placed extra duties on trustees and set up the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority. We are actively monitoring and reviewing the Act's provisions in order to build on existing measures.

OPRA is the independent pensions regulator that investigates complaints when occupational pension schemes do not comply with the Pensions Act 1995. Anyone can report a pension scheme to OPRA if they believe that it is not being run properly. The scheme auditor and the actuary have a statutory duty to blow the whistle when they have reasonable cause to believe that the 1995 Act is not being complied with.

I have not checked the latest figure, but the last time I looked into it, there were about 120,000 pension schemes in this country. It is certainly a huge number. OPRA operates as a reactive regulator when people make complaints. We have examined and strengthened some of OPRA's operations through legislation that has not yet come fully into force.

[Mr. Jeff Rooker]

My hon. Friend raised concerns about the actions of the trustees and the actuaries involved in the Basford Group case. When Basford Textiles became insolvent, the insolvency practitioner appointed a statutory independent trustee. The previous trustee no longer acts as a trustee in relation to the scheme. The last actuarial valuation of the Batsford Group scheme was in 1996 and the next was due on 1 May 1999. The trustees sought 25 extra days as the wind-up of the scheme was due to commence on 26 May 1999. That valuation was completed on time by 26 May 2000.

When I started to get to grips with the minimum funding requirement, I mistook it as a solvency test. It may appear that way to a lay person, but there is no doubt that it is not. Pension schemes must be adequately funded to cover their liabilities. The 1995 Act introduced the MFR, which requires defined benefit schemes—schemes based on final salary—to hold a minimum level of assets to meet their liabilities.

We recognise that matters have changed since the minimum funding requirement was introduced. It came into force in 1997. As my hon. Friend acknowledged, many of the issues that affected his constituents are not covered by the 1995 Act, which had not come fully into force at that time. The Government consulted on the future of the minimum funding requirement and are currently studying the responses.

Coupled with that was the Myner review set up by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Given that he is about to make a major speech in the House in the not too distant future, he may or may not have something to say about that. The report has been received, and the consultation on the minimum funding regulation concluded at the end of January. We have been considering the responses to that consultation, because we must make an early statement about whether we will do nothing or do something, so that people know what is happening.

Pension contributions should be paid promptly and at the right level. In 1996, the actuary of the Basford Group scheme recommended a rise in employer contributions from 8.7 per cent. to 10.2 per cent., to take effect from April 1997. The trustees decided not to take the actuary's advice and did not increase the employer contributions. That may seem a small rise, but it represents a 20 per cent. increase. Under the minimum funding regulations, which have come in since the 1995 Act, a schedule of contributions must be set out clearly. That schedule must be certified by an actuary. If those regulations had been in force when the Basford trustees took the decision, it is unlikely that the actuary would have been able to certify that level of contributions. The actuary would have been obliged by law to report the situation to OPRA. A real problem has arisen, which predates the change in the law, by refusing to increase employer contributions by 20 per cent.

The trustees monitor the payment of contributions on the scheme's payments schedule and must tell OPRA and scheme members when contributions have been paid late or not paid at all. There is a firm rule about that. As my hon. Friend knows, there was a failure on the part of the employer to pay the contributions in the Basford case. I understand that a notice went out from the independent trustee to all members of the Basford Group scheme in July 2000 stating that all employee contributions had been recovered.

At present, there is no legal requirement for trustees to include members of pension schemes. Legislation went through the House last year, which will come into force later this year or early next year, whereby a minimum of a third of the trustees of a pension scheme must be members of the scheme. They may be pensioners, active members or deferred members, but they must be members of the scheme. In future, a group of trustees cannot be employer dominated.

The Pensions Act 1995 introduced restrictions on employer-related investments, such as shares in the company, land or property owned by the company. Clearly, that was the result of the Maxwell scandal. In May 1999, the independent trustee of the Basford scheme voiced doubts to OPRA about the appropriateness of several actions of the previous trustee in connection with the purchase and use of properties in 1996—a point that my hon. Friend raised in some detail. Those property dealings may have constituted a breach under the 1995 Act. Unfortunately for the scheme members, that Act did not come fully into force until 1997.

When things go wrong, it is only right that measures are in place to protect members of a scheme. I regret that many of the problems of the Basford scheme occurred before the 1995 Act came into effect. My hon. Friend realises that his constituents have a hell of a problem. Hopefully, it is being sorted out with the trustees. I note the delays that he listed, and I shall make it my business to ensure that I follow them up through OPRA and my officials. It is unacceptable if Members of Parliament do not receive replies. There is almost an implied threat that, if inquiries are made, the scheme will be charged. The only people making any money out of the situation are the professonals who are examining the problem, whereas the members of the scheme feel that their pensions are under threat, and they contributed to those pensions.

Measures are in place for redundancy payments schemes when a firm has become insolvent. If, on winding-up, the scheme is not fully funded under the minimum funding requirement, the amount outstanding becomes a debt on the employer, and the trustee must pursue that amount. Of course, the Pensions Compensation Board was also set up under the 1995 Act. It has not made many payments to date—I declare an interest, because one recent payment was in respect of a company in Birmingham that employed some of my constituents and those of my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden).

Members must be protected from fraud and dishonesty. Provisions for compensation were introduced in the 1995 Act. The Pensions Compensation Board pays compensation to an occupational pensions scheme if it suffers a reduction in its assets because of dishonesty when the sponsoring employer is insolvent. Improvements to the pensions compensation scheme were contained in the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999, which is due to come into effect shortly.

My hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun asked about consultation on the minimum funding requirement. As I said, we hope to make an early announcement about suggestions that have been made for mutual insurance for the industry. There are pluses and minuses, but we are actively considering that option, because since the 1995 Act was passed, gaps have been clearly identified that we want to close. The time that has been taken to finalise the case is an issue, and I give my hon. Friend my personal assurance that I will follow that up myself. The Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act 2000 introduced a package of measures for schemes in wind-up, which are intended to introduce more accountability into such schemes and to extend OPRA's powers in that regard. Again, the Act will come into force early next year—I know that these things are always later this year or early next year, but we are dealing with a huge industry. Millions of people are in pension schemes—there are about 120,000 pension schemes—so we must be careful about changes, and take time to consult even after the House has passed the main legislation.

Most pension schemes are extremely well run. The best run schemes from my experience are those in which members are involved as trustees and there is a free share of information, in which they watch with eagle eyes what happens to investments, especially if it appears that the company concerned is using some of the funds. We cannot legislate initially for every eventuality, so sometimes we legislate as we go along, filling the gaps, which is why we constantly review the framework.

I have great sympathy with the issue raised by my hon. Friend, and I am glad that he has given me the opportunity to put on the record some of the measures we have already taken and to signal future announcements. I understand that OPRA is at present satisfied that the independent trustee is doing everything in his power to rectify the situation by collecting as much money as possible for the scheme, which was clearly underfunded when it refused to increase employer contributions by the recommended 20 per cent. There is a major problem with underfunding, but OPRA will continue to monitor the scheme until it is fully wound up. I will ensure that if I can open a door or kick a door open, I will certainly do so in the interests of my hon. Friend's constituents.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at two minutes to Two o'clock.

NHS Mental Health Services

[Relevant documents: Fourth Report from the Health Committee, Session 1999-2000, HC 373, and the Government's response thereto, Cm 4888.]

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Hutton.]

2.30 pm

Mr. David Hinchliffe (Wakefield): I appreciate the opportunity to discuss the report, which makes an important contribution to the mental health debate.

I thank the Committee for its hard work during the inquiry. I also thank the many witnesses who provided oral and written evidence. That was very helpful to the Committee's deliberations, as were the visits that it was allowed to pay to a broad range of establishments and agencies—I thank them too. Thanks are also due to the specialist advisers on the inquiry: Professors Bob Bluegrass, Tom Burns and Ray Rowden, Ms. Angela Greatley and Mr. Chris Vellenoweth.

It is not usual to express appreciation for the work of individual Committee staff, but I would like to thank Katherine Wright. Some of my colleagues will know her from her work in the House of Commons Library. She was seconded to the Committee for the period of the inquiry as a specialist assistant. I also thank all the Committee staff for their help.

I want to explain why the Committee undertook the inquiry. I was not the only member of the Committee who thought that mental health policy lacked co-ordination and that, occasionally, there were inappropriate placements. I had seen that in my constituency, which has two prisons, a regional secure unit and a psychiatric unit. I visit them frequently, and I have discovered that some people have been placed in the wrong institution. That is why I began to ponder how we might develop a better arrangement to ensure that such people were appropriately placed.

In an inquiry into the regulation of the private health sector, the Committee visited a private hospital in York. Everyone was struck by the preponderance of young black men in the hospital whose homes were 200 miles away in London. It seemed very wrong to us that they had been placed there, rather than nearer to their homes, and we felt that race and gender might be playing a part.

The Committee also felt that there were discrepancies in the ability of different areas to offer care in the community. For example, on a visit to north Birmingham, the Committee was impressed by the extent to which it was possible, through assertive outreach, to care coherently and constructively in the community for people with severe problems. However, other areas do not have enough in-patient beds. Sadly, my constituency is one such area: patients from Wakefield are placed in a private hospital in Cheshire because our in-patient facilities are under too much pressure as a result of a lack of appropriate alternative facilities in the community.

The Select Committee was concerned that some people high up in the Government have commented that the care in the community policy has failed, and that the pendulum has swung too far from hospital to community. We needed to examine the reality of that claim, so we undertook a wide-ranging inquiry that looked at the transition points in mental health services and the ability of the different sectors to cope with patients. Our terms of reference were deliberately very broad.

The inquiry examined the definition of mental disorder because the Select Committee thought that the criteria that people with mental disorders had to meet to access services could be the first hurdle to overcome before patients ended up in the right part of the system. We looked at how users of the system regard its services. We considered the effects of the new national service programme and the delivery of general mental health services, and that included an examination of the current proposals to overhaul the legal framework of mental health that would allow compulsory treatment to be given in the community as well as in hospital. We considered proposals to create a specific legal framework for people with severe personality disorder who are deemed to be dangerous. Finally, we examined how the transition is managed between general mental health services and more specialised services—for example, those for children and adolescents and secure mental health services.

I stress that I recognise that that is a contentious area. If we consider our history of treating successive generations of people with mental illness, we can see that attitudes and definitions have varied considerably. A few years ago, I visited a museum in my area that was organised by someone who had worked for the Stanley Royd psychiatric hospital for a long time and I found a book that defined the diagnoses of patients who had been admitted to a Poor Law lunatic asylum in the 19th century. I was interested to see that a large number of mental health cases consisted of people suffering from "political excitement"—it was one reason for detention in the asylum.

As some hon. Members know, I worked for the mental health services in professional social work for many years. I will always remember the move towards care in the community that began in the 1970s, and the practice of removing people from psychiatric hospitals—women in particular—who had been detained all their lives because they had been deemed "moral defectives", even though they were not mentally ill. I have met more moral defectives during 14 years in this place than during all my years in the mental health services. My point is that definitions are value-based.

The Select Committee was well aware of the values that influence how we define mental disorder: definitions are frequently gender-based and race-based. We made one specific recommendation about definitions. We felt that there was a need to improve services for people with dual diagnosis; they are people who might suffer from a mental disorder and substance abuse, or a mental disorder and learning disabilities. We felt that such people were poorly served by the present arrangements. I am pleased to report that the Government agreed that greater priority should be given to that.

We felt that it was crucial to involve users and carers in all aspects of planning and delivering mental health services. We found an acceptance of the role of users and carers, which was a welcome shift in emphasis from the attitude of recent decades. However, we were warned that the reality of such a consultation is sometimes suspect. Karen Campbell of the Manic Depression Fellowship was scathing about the limited impact that user involvement often has. She said in evidence to us:

"I think we have reached a stage, as people who use mental health services, of thinking, you ask us to come to meetings and listen to what we say, but very, very rarely—I can count it on two fingers—does what we say make a difference."

We recommended that users should have much greater input in the training of mental health professionals. Again, I appreciate the fact that the Government have accepted the recommendation.

We were particularly concerned by the evidence that mental health services do not adequately meet the needs of ethnic minority patients. Some of my colleagues might speak in more detail about that. Our concern was not simply that black patients are more likely to be in the compulsory part of the mental health system, but that the services offered are often inappropriate or insensitive. Our recommendations included developing race awareness among NHS staff, designating NHS trust board members to take active responsibility for making services more culturally aware and expanding early intervention and interpreting services.

We looked at the effects of the national service framework and the delivery of general mental health services. The Committee was impressed by the impact of the framework, which was generally welcomed within the system as a positive development. However, we received evidence from a variety of witnesses about the low quality of much in-patient care. On some visits, we saw evidence that, materially, the system does not offer a great deal to patients in the wards, despite caring staff who were doing their best to function within the existing regimes. The system leaves much to be desired.

The Sainsbury Centre suggested to us that the pressures on acute beds were so great that the environment was untherapeutic, that services lacked clear goals and that links with community services were sometimes poor. We proposed that a capital modernisation fund aimed specifically at improving environmental standards on in-patient wards could make a significant difference to the quality of life for patients.

We spent considerable time looking at proposals to change the existing legal framework of mental health. We all accept that there is a need to modernise the law as it relates to the detention of patients within the mental health system. The current system is outdated. It is largely based on legislation passed in 1959—the Mental Health Act 1959—when the system was institution-based rather than community-based. We felt that any legislation replacing the Mental Health Act 1983 should have a broader remit than merely setting out when compulsion will be permitted; for example, through ensuring a right of access to a mental health assessment, an acceptance of the principle of reciprocity and a right of access to advocacy services. The Government are reviewing the latter point, and I hope that there will be positive proposals in due course.

We support the philosophy underlying the recommendations of the expert committee on the reform of the 1983 Act, in contrast to the proposals set out in the Government's Green Paper. We saw some distinctions between the expert committee's recommendations and the Green Paper. We recommended in particular the inclusion of the principles of non-discrimination and respect for autonomy in any new legislation. We felt that further work should be done to investigate the viability of a capacity test and that there should be provision for the use of crisis cards and advance directives to help individuals in crisis to signal their preferences regarding treatment, which they might not be able to do at the time that they need treatment.

We felt that there should be greater emphasis on the importance of the health benefit for the individual if compulsion is considered. The legislation must be operated in such a way that patients would receive a demonstrable health benefit. We also felt that compulsion should be used only as a last resort.

We discussed the contentious issue of community treatment orders. As a Committee, we accepted the arguments about the benefits of such orders, which would compel individuals to accept treatment even if they are not detained in a psychiatric hospital. However, we felt that that should be coupled with the safeguards that were set out in the expert committee's report.

I recognise the difficulties facing any Government when addressing policy for the difficult matter of dangerous people with severe personality disorder. It raises enormous problems and challenges. The evidence that the Committee received about the Government's proposals was remarkably uniform, and mental health professionals expressed considerable doubts about the proposals on several grounds: first, the civil liberties implications of detaining people who are deemed to be untreatable, yet who have not committed an offence; secondly, the resourcing and staffing implications of setting up a third system between the Prison Service and the health service; and, thirdly, the validity and reliability of the diagnosis of dangerous severe personality disorder.

The evidence that the Committee received from the Institute of Psychiatry was typical. It emphasised that severe personality disorder is not a clinical definition, and that the severity of a personality disorder bears no relation to how dangerous a person is. We welcome the recognition that the Home Office proposals on dangerous people with severe personality disorder are primarily a criminal justice matter, but we were concerned about the inappropriate use of a quasi-medical definition.

We were also concerned about apparent confusion over the term "untreatable". When I worked in mental health, I occasionally undertook compulsory admissions, and the issue of treatability has always been contentious. Two main conclusions were drawn from the evidence that we received: first, there is no professional consensus, either among psychiatrists or psychologists, on whether personality disorder is treatable; and secondly, the debate surrounding treatability is concerned with the lack of available resources.

We rejected both options in the Home Office proposals because they seemed to be illogical and unnecessary to achieving the service enhancement that we agreed was necessary. We recommended that research should be initiated on the treatment of antisocial personality disorder, and that adequate facilities should be made available within the national health service for people who suffer from a recognised disorder and who would benefit from treatment. We also recommended that further thought should be given to the proposal of reviewable sentences that would provide for those who are deemed to be a danger to the public but who are genuinely not amenable to treatment within the NHS. We further recommended that a definition similar to that used in Scotland—should be used in the English proposals to clarify that they are concerned with offending behaviour, rather than a mental disorder.

"serious violent and/or sexual offenders who may present a continuing danger to the public"—

Mr. Philip Hammond (Runnymede and Weybridge): I am sorry to interrupt, but I wish to return to the issue of capacity.

Since the Committee's report, the Government have produced a White Paper. Will the hon. Gentleman tell us what he thinks about the safeguards that the Government have proposed for people who do not actively object to treatment, but who are deemed to lack the capacity to consent to it? That is the issue of the Bournewood judgment. Is he satisfied with the Government's proposals?

Mr. Hinchliffe: The report makes it clear that the Government have not gone as far as we proposed, although I understand that there has been movement since the original Green Paper.

We were very impressed by the witnesses from the expert committee, who spent considerable time developing their arguments on that matter. It is a hugely complex area, and I recognise the Government's difficulty in ensuring that there is a system that addresses the acute problems that patients occasionally have. We also need to anticipate psychiatric provision in 10 or 20 years' time. As I have pointed out, policy circumstances change in that we may move further towards community provision—I hope that we will—and any new mental health legislation must take such change into account. That is extremely difficult and this is a tough area with which the Government must deal, but the Committee felt that the expert committee had offered a way forward that had not been picked up in the Green Paper.

When looking at the challenge posed by the transition between elements of the service—especially between services for children and adolescents and adult mental health services—we found that clear systems linking them were the exception rather than the rule. I should have liked to have had more time for that part of the inquiry, because the problems that we saw showed that much work had to be done. We felt that the present system offered the worst of both worlds.

The evidence that we found suggested that the lack of a nationally agreed target age for transfer does not enhance local flexibility; it simply creates a patchwork of incompatible services. We recommended that the Department of Health should consult on a target age for transfer that would allow local flexibility where necessary, but would prevent the current extraordinary position in which 16 and 17-year-olds might be eligible for neither service.

The most radical solution to the problem of transition was the proposed creation of a youth service to look at provision for young people aged between, for example, 16 and 25. We felt that that proposal was attractive in many ways; it would avoid the need for transfer at a time when adolescents are especially vulnerable, and could encourage the development of specialist services identifying the onset of psychosis in late teens. We therefore recommended the commissioning of research on the viability of such a service and, in the meantime, the monitoring of the adequacy of current transfer arrangements.

Finally, we looked at transitions between secure and general mental health services. The Committee was concerned about the human rights implications of patients staying far longer than necessary in the higher levels of security, because of a lack of appropriate provision elsewhere. We received evidence from both Ashworth hospital and Broadmoor that patients were being detained in those high security special hospitals when they did not need to be there. They could have been helped in low-security, even community, placements quite safely and to greater benefit to themselves.

Those human rights implications were raised with us more than once by senior staff, who acknowledged that there had been inappropriate placements on a wide scale. We recommended that the action already being taken to assess the needs of individual patients should be completed as speedily as possible, and that, if short-term funding was necessary to provide appropriate placements, it should be made available. We were also concerned at the apparent lack of hard information on the numbers and types of alternative beds required to deal with patients of the kind that we met, particularly in the special hospitals. We recommended that the Department should publish firm figures on the number of secure beds that will be available, separately identifying short-term medium-secure, long-term medium-secure, short-term low-secure and long-term low-secure beds.

I welcome the fact that the Government have commissioned a review of medium-secure provision and forensic networks of care that will identify gaps in capacity. However, the Committee significantly differs from the Government—and I have raised this point in the Chamber with successive Secretaries of State—in that it feels that the Government should seriously consider the recommendation of the Fallon committee that the three special hospitals should be replaced by eight smaller regional units.

Having been in Parliament long enough to have heard this recommendation being made in response to problems that have occurred in the three special hospitals on other occasions, I strongly support the Committee's view that the Fallon committee was right. The Government should look again at the issues raised by that and other inquiries. We found a widespread view that the three special hospitals had been allowed to develop independently of the rest of the NHS, leading to isolation and a culture that is sometimes more akin to that of a prison than a hospital, with the resultant recruitment difficulties.

Although our visits to Ashworth and Broadmoor made us sceptical about the so-called special expertise that is alleged as a benefit of the special hospitals, we felt that the arguments for a genuinely regional focus to secure care were overwhelming. We concluded that reform and improvement to the special hospitals is probably not workable. I welcome the steps taken by the Government to link the special hospitals more clearly to the regions in which they are based, but we want them to go further and make much more meaningful the ability of patients to move through the system, be that up, down or wherever is appropriate to their needs.

After hearing the evidence, the Committee strongly supported the principle of an entirely separate service for women. Some of it shocked us, and my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mrs. Gordon), who visited Broadmoor with me, might speak about that in more detail as she spent more time with the women patients. We felt strongly that the Department should bring forward its women's strategy urgently. We know that it commissioned work, supported by an expert group chaired by Dame Rennie Fritchie, to examine issues surrounding women in high-security hospitals. It is a pressing issue, which I urge the Minister to examine as soon as possible.

We had serious concerns about standards in prison health care centres and supported the proposal of the chief inspector of prisons that any prisoner who needs specialist mental health services should be transferred to the national health service, if necessary under temporary licence.

I apologise for speaking at some length on what was a comprehensive inquiry, which found many positives. I picked up on some of the negatives because Select Committee inquiries work by drawing attention to negatives and pressing the Government to address them. I welcome the fact that the Government are already examining some of our points.

I commend particularly the staff that we met in a range of agencies and hospitals. They were doing an extremely good job in difficult circumstances with some very disturbed people. Having worked in the system, I have some insight into the problems that those people face. The House owes a great deal to those dedicated people, and we should recognise that far more than we do.

We should also strongly commend the user groups, which have developed relatively recently and have given a long-overdue voice to those who were frequently ignored. A number of patient groups gave evidence, and it was among the most moving and important that we heard in the inquiry. I welcome the steps taken by successive Governments in the direction of more civilised treatment of the mentally ill but much more still needs to be done. The Health Committee recognises that and I think that the Government do too.

I would like to express a personal view, having worked in the mental health system. Vast numbers of people who would previously have been institutionalised can now lead more normal, positive and meaningful lives through the efforts of successive Governments to create a more humane policy. Our present situation is summed up for me by the most memorable quotation that we heard during the inquiry. It came from David Joannides of the Association of Directors of Social Services. He said:

"Community care has not failed, it has failed some people."

It is important that we continue in the direction of enhancing and strengthening community care, addressing the failures and protecting patients and the public. Hopefully, we will move towards a more civilised system than we have had in the past, even in my lifetime.

2.58 pm

Mr. Simon Burns (West Chelmsford): I am pleased that the Health Committee devoted one of its major reports of the past Session to mental health. All too often in the past, although to be fair not under the present Government or in the last few years of the previous Government, mental health was the Cinderella service of the NHS. It tended to get brushed under the carpet with regard to funding priorities and public and ministerial attention, because it is an unknown quantity and because of the stigma attached to it.

I hope that I will be forgiven for speaking on a narrow issue: paragraphs 63 to 66 of the Health Committee report, which concern stigma, and the Government's response. Other hon. Members will want to discuss other important issues and I do not want to duplicate their remarks.

I have been concerned for a long time about the raw prejudice and stigma attached to people suffering from mental illness. Most of us, as individuals, are genuinely caring. If we hear that a member of our family or a friend is suffering from cancer or has flu, we are naturally responsive. We want to find out how that person is and offer our best wishes for a speedy recovery.

Many people, however, do not understand mental illness. That fact, together with the way in which mental illness is categorised in society, makes people frightened of suffering from it—although 20 per cent. of the population will suffer from a form of mental illness at some point in their lives. Fear and ignorance mean that many families do not want others to know if a family member is suffering from mental illness. They fear the reaction that it will evoke. Many sufferers of mental illness want to hide it from their friends, perhaps from their family, and certainly from their employers, for fear of what may happen to them. It is unforgivable for a civilised society at the beginning of the 21st century to have such a prejudice, misunderstanding and fear. I welcome any move to open up the subject of mental health and break down those barriers.

Our report made a number of recommendations in that area. They include the crucial role to be played by education. If young people can be persuaded during their formative years to accept the problems of mental illness as they accept those of other illnesses, it will be a great step forward. The Government's response mentioned the initiatives being taken, through the Department for Education and Employment and the Department of Health, to start that process, which began last autumn. I welcome that positive step forward.

The matter cannot be resolved simply through education. Paragraph 63 of the report contains a quotation from Dr. Mike Shooter of the Royal College of Psychiatrists, which reads:

"The members of the users and carers group in the college, for example, have said to me when they have listened to the philosophy of a campaign like that,"— a campaign for greater education—

"that it is very laudable but in the end it will not help unless they"—

the sufferers of mental illness—

"can get insurance, unless they can get a job, unless they can get a mortgage without running up against the sort of institutionalised stigma we were talking about before."

That statement is important because it opens up the reality of stigma, which is not just fear, prejudice and ignorance displayed through individuals' comments. That quote pinpoints the real-life, daily problems that people face and that can crucially affect the improvement of their quality of life and their chances of having a fresh start in society. Education is important, but we must do more to help people with insurance, employment prospects and day-to-day living needs. We cannot simply say, "Do more in education and the problem will be resolved", because it will not be.

Another problem will be understood by any Members of Parliament who have faced it in their constituencies. When a health authority's proposals to establish a hostel in a residential area are known, prejudice—completely ill-informed more often than not—immediately erupts in that area. It is time for all Members of the House and other elected figures at local and national level to stand up and be counted. It is easy to jump on to the political bandwagon of saying no to a hostel in a residential area, but in my experience, nothing more is heard about hostels after they have been established and proper supervision, with back-up services, help and support for their residents, is in place.

The horror stories put about before hostels are established to try to prevent their opening never materialise as fact, and never would. The prejudices of individuals who want to prevent hostels from being opened create a climate of fear that bears no resemblance to reality. It is time for politicians at all levels to have the guts and courage not to say no as an automatic, knee-jerk reaction to hostels. Integration into the rest of the community is important. I still passionately believe that care in the community is the correct policy. It is a civilised policy that has moved with the times. Long-term hospitals that tried to hide the problems of mental illness by locking people up and giving them an unacceptable quality of life were an affront to civilisation.

Mr. Hinchliffe: The hon. Gentleman is making a passionate and strong contribution. The Committee has argued about the Fallon inquiry recommendations on moving more towards regional provision. In all seriousness, how do we tackle the difficulties that any Government would face in doing so? My area has a regional secure unit. I am on board with everything in the hon. Gentleman's philosophy, but how would he feel if one of the Committee's recommendations were a proposal to create a regional secure unit in Chelmsford? Politicians have to face such challenges.

Mr. Burns: The straightforward answer to my Chairman's narrow question is that my view would depend on where in my constituency the recommendation for the medium-secure unit was. I would have no problem with a hostel in a residential area—I accept that hostels are not medium-secure units—as it would basically be a house like any other house with multiple occupancy. A medium-secure unit would have to be put in the right place, as would a prison. One does not put them in the middle of residential areas. One can put such units in areas all around the country, with proper security and protection so that local communities can live side by side with them, just as they can with prisons. There is a prison in the hon. Gentleman's constituency and I have one in the centre of Chelmsford. It causes my constituents no problems, because it is secure.

I still believe strongly in the philosophy of care in the community. It is an affront to lock up the people that we are discussing. The Minister could confirm the irony that, under the old policy of simply locking people up, throwing away the key and hoping that no one saw the problem, there were more deaths and personal injuries among patients than there are now with them in the community.

I do not intend to make a party political point. What I am talking about happened under the Government in which I served, as it has under the present Government. The trouble with care in the community is that while fewer violent incidents are happening, the fact that they happen out in society and that public inquiries are held afterwards, means that there is greater publicity and public awareness. Sadly, such horrific incidents have happened—often as the result of blunders—that it is feared that such things happen all the time. Also, to return to the problem of stigma, members of the public are sometimes fearful of totally harmless persons who live in society while suffering from a degree of mental illness, because it is relatively new to encounter such people. In the past they would have been locked up, out of sight and out of mind.

As to the horrific incidents that have occurred, of which there have been too many, the policy of care in the community has to an extent gone out of synch. There has not been enough protection of the public in some limited instances. That fact has engendered a complete lack of public confidence and brought the policy into disrepute. We need now to build up public confidence in a principle that is right. I agree with the Government—and I would dearly have loved the previous Government to have taken the same line, had the parliamentary arithmetic and the time available allowed it—that matters need to be tightened up with respect to people suffering from mental illness who are allowed to remain free in the community. We got things wrong and the present Government have done so too; but, to be fair, it could be argued that the existing legislative regime has placed the Government in their present position.

The hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) referred to the issue of untreatable patients, and I want to take a slightly different angle on it. The state should have more powers to protect the public from people who are untreatable. I remember vividly from my time at the Department of Health two instances when it was contacted about two individuals aged over 18—which was of course a fundamental issue—who were coming out of secure units. Because they had not committed a crime or caused any problems, there was nothing that the state could do to keep them in a secure environment to protect them or, even more importantly, the public.

In one case in particular, social services from the relevant local authority, the police, the consultants dealing with the individual and, for some odd reason, the Prison Service begged us to find a way to keep the young lady in a secure environment. It was only a question of time, in their professional judgment, before she would harm someone because of her illness, which was untreatable. It was deeply frustrating that there was nothing that the Department of Health could do. The law was the law, and because she had not offended, she was to leave the secure unit and return to the community. Ironically, in that case, the Home Office, to put it crudely, got everyone off the hook and managed to find some way within the law by which the lady could move from the medium secure unit to Rampton.

I accept that human rights and individual civil liberties are relevant and I should be the last person to say that we should brush aside an individual's civil liberties to satisfy the tabloid press or public opinion. However, we must never lose sight either of the civil liberties of the public or their right to be protected from people who are untreatable and particularly dangerous.

Mr Hammond: My hon. Friend used the term "untreatable" several times. Considering the Select Committee's recommendation that further research be done into the treatability or otherwise of personality disorder, and on examining the White Paper, that seems to be a key area that needs further exploration. Is my hon. Friend using the term "untreatable" after careful consideration? Has he reached the conclusion that people with this condition are untreatable, or does he have an open mind on that?

Mr. Burns: Rightly or wrongly, I use the term. As my hon. Friend knows, I am not medically qualified to answer his question. However, as someone who has had limited experience of dealing with these individuals, I have come to the conclusion that whatever research one conducts, there is a category of people in the country who are totally untreatable. Unless dramatic breakthroughs in medical science occur, there is no chance—in the short term—of finding treatment for such people. It is an unfortunate quirk of fate or of circumstance.

In conclusion, we must all—Ministers and Members of Parliament—work together to break down the stigma associated with mental health problems and ensure that raw prejudice, which in many cases is rather unpleasant, is tackled. That must be done, but not simply through education. The Government have a role, not in a nanny state way, but through trying to solve problems of employment, housing, insurance and so on. The state also has a role in dealing with community feeling, ensuring that fears are broken down and that people are better protected from those individuals who have done so much to undermine the basically correct policy of care in the community.

Mr. John Gunnell (Morley and Rothwell): I rise to speak on the use of electro-convulsive therapy in the national health service, about which I have been concerned for a long time and which comes within the framework of the Select Committee's activities. In view of my impending retirement, this is probably my last opportunity to make this particular point, which is another reason for my wishing to speak.

The Minister will be aware that I made proposals for changes in the rules on ECT in a ten-minute Bill entitled the Electro-convulsive Therapy (Restrictions on Use) Bill, which I presented in December 1997. I subsequently withdrew the Bill, following discussions with the then Minister with responsibility for mental health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng). He felt that it would not be appropriate to tinker with the Mental Health Act 1983, and that my concerns would be better raised when consideration was given to reforming the 1983 Act as a whole. We have now reached that stage, and I am well aware that Ministers have given consideration to the position of ECT in the range of treatments available or required for patients under the Act.

During Health Committee hearings and visits, ECT was not often raised as an issue. However, I recall one meeting with patients at a south London hospital in which an 18-year old woman spoke of the devastating effect of compulsory ECT treatment on her mental health. The use of ECT has now declined, but I am uncertain whether there are still patients who receive ECT without their consent and without another doctor being asked for a second opinion. That doctor should, of course, be independent of the doctor who requested the treatment. I believe that another professional opinion is required before treatment.

I am unaware whether exact records are now kept of all those who receive ECT, including whether they consented to such treatment and the outcome of the treatment in the short and long term—or at least in the medium term. It is important to have exact information on the effects of ECT to justify its continuing use. I am not alone in having such worries. A number of hon. Members, whose constituents had received ECT and who subsequently raised the matter with their MP, have talked to me about their concerns, most notably my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Bradley).

I want to raise a completely separate issue that arose after the Health Committee visit to Broadmoor. The Committee was impressed with the positive approach of the chief executive and of many of the staff whom we met. I was, therefore, concerned to receive a letter dated 31 January 2001 from Len Dunn, the honorary secretary of the Broadmoor hospital staff recreation club. He wrote about the threatened closure of the club. The letter has not been widely circulated, which is why I bring it to the attention of the House today. Mr. Dunn wrote:

"I should like to draw your attention to the planned closure by the Broadmoor Hospital Authority of our Staff Recreation Club which has been in existence for nearly 140 years and is currently enjoyed by some 1,400 employees and their families.

Broadmoor Hospital Authority wants to demolish the club to make way for the relocation of its Training and Education Centre as part of its Hospitals' Estate's Disposal Strategy and has now issued proceedings against the Club. We are urging the Authority to reconsider its options.

We believe that the closure will be highly detrimental to the recruitment and retention of staff, exacerbating an already severe shortage. It is a popular facility where hospital staff can unwind after the stress of a highly challenging job. It appears to 'fly in the face' of current government initiatives which advocate 'supportive family-friendly' practices. Furthermore it will be a considerable loss to the community as the club regularly hosts local charitable events.

We maintain that there is ample room within the Broadmoor Hospital Authority to house both the Training and Education Centre and the Club. We are prepared to look at ways of contributing financially to assist with an alternative plan, and would welcome consultation and the opportunity to participate in meaningful negotiation."

That letter spells out the concerns of staff working at Broadmoor—concerns that I share. The staff are important and have a highly challenging job; not many of us would want to do it. I imagine that the Minister has a copy of the letter, but if not, I can let him have one. What is his response to the letter? I am sure that the Minister appreciates the staff as much as we do and that he is as concerned about their well-being as we are. I hope that he will respond to the request for consultation.

Mr. David Amess (Southend, West): I congratulate the Chairman of the Select Committee, the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe), on his speech. He spoke for us all about the unanimous report and covered all the issues, but that will not stop me from making my own points.

I was moved by the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) about stigma and I entirely agree with what he said. I also agree with the remarks of the hon. Member for Leeds, West and Morley (Mr Gunnell) about electro-convulsive therapy. I have one such case at the moment: someone, not in my constituency, was given the treatment and asked to sign for it when he or she were not in the right frame of mind to know precisely what he or she were doing. Eighteen doses of the treatment were given, and a relative of the patient involved is extremely upset about it.

The hon. Member for Wakefield and I share an interest in mental health because of our constituency experiences. Members of Parliament know that often the inspiration behind the many groups that are formed is someone with a loved one affected by an illness or trying to cope with a problem. Mental health groups are no different.

There are not huge numbers of votes for parliamentarians in discussing the state of our prisons, but we should discuss such a matter, even if it is not of great interest to our constituents. Mental health is like that, too: people do not want to get too involved in the issues. As a newly elected Member of Parliament I vividly recall visiting South Ockendon hospital, where I saw sights for which I was unprepared. I had gone along to a hospital event, where I bought bird baths, nesting boxes and so on, which all looked lovely, and then I saw how some of the people were cared for, which was pretty grim. I had not realised that people really were put in straitjackets and restrained.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for West Chelmsford that in some cases it is difficult to know what is best for people, but restraining them in the way that used to be done at South Ockendon hospital is not acceptable. We must not forget that these patients are human beings, too.

We have all met people with mental health problems. Tragically, four weeks ago a friend of mine, a deputy head who was highly intelligent, committed suicide during school hours. I had no idea of his state of health. His wife told me that on the day he committed suicide he had received a letter telling him that he had been awarded the MBE. For whatever reason, he had a tremendous feeling of inadequacy. The 2,000 mourners at his funeral said it all: he was a fantastic chap.

At our constituency surgeries, hon. Members meet many people—I choose my words carefully—who seem a little unusual in the way that they present their case. One of our colleagues was nearly killed as a result of what happened at a constituency surgery.

Members of Parliament get depressed. I occasionally get depressed when I look at Labour Members, and when I look at the opinion polls, I feel even worse, but I am an optimist. I salute all the Committee Members for their efforts in producing the report. I agreed to be a member of a Select Committee because I felt that our debates on the Floor of the House had become a bit of a blunt instrument, and Select Committees were a sharper way of dealing with matters.

There is no point in our spending three hours in Westminster Hall debating these matters, and the Select Committee interviewing wonderful experts and having the help of the support staff—I went all round the country looking at all the different facilities—if a few weeks after our report is issued, the Government send us a nice reply and the whole thing is forgotten. That has always gone on, so I am not making a point about this Government. The Health Committee has dealt with these matters calmly and its recommendations are excellent, but I suppose that I would say that.

I should just like to highlight five of the recommendations in the summary. Point (f) states:

"There have been undeniable failures in service since the policy of care in the community was first launched. But we feel that it is both misleading and unhelpful to state that the policy of care in the community has failed"—

this is a unanimous report agreed by all members of the Committee—

"as the Government has done on a number of occasions. We urge the Government to make clear in the language it uses ... that care in the community is a positive policy and one which it supports."

When the Conservative Government delivered care in the community, I thought that it would cost a huge amount of money and I wondered whether we had thought it through. It has indeed cost a huge amount of money but the Health Committee certainly supports the policy.

Paragraph (h) refers to joined-up government. I hate that expression. It means everyone working together. Sadly, not everyone in the mental health services in south-east Essex is working together. I sought the opinion of a number of individuals in the area. A consultant psychiatrist said:

"reducing suicide rates is a very important issue. Southend...needs...semi-informal services...which can really rise to the challenges of the mental health problem in the community."

[Mr. David Amess]

A patient who harms himself says:

"The day I left hospital I felt really alone. I couldn't phone the ward for support and felt alone. Instead I had to phone the Samaritans who told me to take up knitting."

The Samaritans do a splendid job, and it is unfortunate if someone said that. I received a letter from a constituent who said:

"I have no idea where my husband could go for help now, as every door seems to be closing in his face and his mental state is becoming more fragile as a consequence".

A general practitioner said:

"David, there is a lack of consultants and conditions in the wards at Rochford are pathetic and I strongly feel that it needs urgent attention."

There are gaps in the services in south-east Essex and the various agencies clearly have a problem talking to each other. I do not have a magic wand but if the Minister and his officials care to look at our recommendations and can deliver some of them, it would make a huge difference.

I recently received a letter from a constituent who said:

"In 1999 I had problems and because I could not talk about them I was taken to Runwell hospital".

I know that at least three hon. Members know that hospital. It is an old asylum that has been threatened with closure for 10 years. Nothing happens. Most of the buildings are a disgrace to the modern national health service. I do not suggest that there are huge pots of money, but someone needs to come up with a solution to the problems at Runwell. My constituent continues:

"I hated it in there. In December 1999 I was allowed to return home on the condition I accepted help from a Mental Health Team Co-Ordinator and, that I had a CPN give me an injection monthly. I didn't want someone from Mental Health to visit."

My constituent now learns that she is no longer to receive help from her splendid support team.

Opposition Members talk endlessly about point (p), which deals with staff shortages. All hon. Members have received a briefing note from the Royal College of Psychiatrists, which underpins that recommendation. The Royal College said:

"The proposals, if implemented fully, would have significant implications in terms of personnel and training. In the light of the 14 per cent. vacancy rate for consultant psychiatrists there is much work to do in attracting people to the mental health professions:

The proposals would also be extremely costly financially—we are concerned that care and treatment will be based not on the needs of patients but on what can be 'afforded'."

Point (s) of our recommendations states:

"We are aware that the National Institute for Clinical Excellence... is currently considering guidelines on the management of schizophrenia".

Hon. Members have also received the briefing note from the Zito Trust, which tells us that NICE has recently announced the details of its inquiries into the treatment of schizophrenia. The Zito Trust believes that it is an opportune moment for that debate—perhaps the Minister will confirm whether that is right. The Zito Trust states:

"NICE will be appraising atypical anti-psychotics. Atypical drugs for the treatment of schizophrenia dramatically improve patient outcomes, have fewer debilitating side effects and result in better compliance for patients. In nearly two thirds of patients, older typical medicines are associated with some terrible side-effects (including muscle tremors, rigidity, uncontrollable movements and restlessness which in many cases continue even after the treatment has ended). These side effects are one of several causative factors leading to patient non-compliance that can have serious consequences for both patients and the general public."

The trust is concerned that

"pending NICE's guidance being launched many patients will be denied the effective, newer treatment they deserve. It is our view that this will put at risk patients who will have a lower quality of life because of inappropriate treatment and it is our deep concern that they may fail to take their medication as a result."

The final point is point (t), in which the Committee talks about a range of suitable accommodation—an issue that my hon. Friend the Member for West Chelmsford touched on. The Health Committee report is very worth while, but if it ends up covered with dust and with no one taking a blind bit of notice of it, we will have wasted our time.

Dealing with people with mental health problems is a huge challenge. All the time one meets people who are in a deep depression; their carers are in despair that they cannot get the right help. Such help and support may not exist. I am sure that the Minister and his team will meet positively the challenges raised and the solutions recommended by the Health Committee's report.

Mrs. Eileen Gordon (Romford): I echo my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) in thanking all the witnesses who took the time to give us evidence and the special advisers and Clerks who worked with us on the report. They did a great job.

I was proud to be a member of the inquiry. Hon. Members will probably share my heartening experience that whenever the issues are discussed, I find that people welcome the report as an advance in the dialogue on mental health issues. That has been recognised by the Government, health professionals and, perhaps most importantly, by user groups, which very much welcome the report's recommendations. I suppose that every member of the Committee who took part in that long inquiry had different impressions of, or headlines for, the things that they saw and the people to whom they spoke. I shall highlight some of the impressions that were left with me.

Many changes are taking place in the national health service, both in the structure of mental health facilities and in provision. With my hon. Friends the Members for Hornchurch (Mr. Cryer) and for Upminster (Mr. Darvill), I met representatives of the North East London Mental Health trust on Tuesday. After April, it will be responsible for providing mental health care for more than 1 million people. I was impressed by the trust's values and by what it intends to do, which echoes the work that we did and the Government's response.

Perhaps I can digress for a moment to pay tribute to Sandra Knowles, the chief executive of the Barking, Havering and Brentwood Community Health Care NHS trust. Despite the fact that she is doing away with her job by handing it over to the North East London Mental Health trust, she has worked tirelessly to ensure a seamless transition for staff and service users. Her team has worked incredibly hard and I hope that, on 1 April, the users of the services will not notice a difference.

I reiterate what the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) said—for too long, mental health services have been a Cinderella service. It is a case of "out of sight, out of mind." We had a huge institution in Brentwood to serve the local constituencies—Warley hospital. Thankfully, it is on its last legs and new provision is being made. It was the most awful place and had an impact on the whole community. Even as children, we were warned about Warley hospital. If we went to Brentwood, we would run past it. As the hon. Gentleman said, a stigma has been attached to mental health and is still prevalent.

Much has happened since the start of our inquiry. I very much welcome the national service framework that has been established by the Government, because we are all trying to move towards a holistic approach to people who need mental health care. That can only be good for them and the rest of society. A major issue to emerge from the report was the way in which we involve the users of the services. For too long, professionals have been telling people what is good for them. Increasingly, however, users have a strong voice and make their views known. They are being heard, and I hope that they will be listened to and have an input into policy.

I was shocked that the holistic approach had not been used up to now, which is shown by employment and housing issues. People with a mental illness may have episodes of illness. They may be well and, with a little help, find a job. They may be in work, paying rent and making their way in life, but then have an episode of illness, which means that they have to stop working. That has an impact on housing and disability benefits, for example, and they have to go through a cycle of reapplying for benefit each time. It should be recognised that these people have been there before, that it will be a pattern, that they will not work permanently, and that circumstances are difficult for them. People who are ill and have to go through this process are at their most vulnerable and are often unable to cope.

I hope that the advocacy service will take off, so that people will have someone to help guide them through the process. Through the Government's initiatives on one-stop shops, people can have their benefits sorted out in one place rather than having to trudge from one office to another, each time having to explain what is wrong with them over and over again, which is obviously distressing.

Mr. Hammond: The hon. Lady has spoken about people who are able to go back to work but subsequently have another period of mental illness. It also works on the other side of the equation. One of my constituents is a severe schizophrenic and a double amputee as a result of an accident that occurred while she was in the care of the mental health trust. She is an in-patient sometimes, but lives in the community at other times. Every time she comes out of hospital, she has to go through the whole bureaucratic process again, filling in enormously long forms. The system does not seem to recognise that such people are unable, by definition, to cope with that problem every time they return to the community.

Mrs. Gordon: As I said, it is a real problem that has not yet been solved. It seems common sense to get to know and understand each individual as a person. It is sensible to have someone at the one-stop shop who recognises a person and knows what help might be required. It should not be necessary to go through the process over and over again. Carers also have to go through the process with the people they care for and it is extremely distressing.

The role of primary care in mental health issues is important. We know about special hospitals and prisons, and the statistics are interesting. One in four GP consultations has a mental health element and 90 per cent. of mental health problems are cared for in the primary care sector. We must therefore ensure that GPs and any specialists who work with them are aware of the issues. We do not want people told to go away and take up knitting, as the hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess) mentioned. Some GPs truly understand the issues and can deal with mental health within their surgeries, but many others do not.

With the formation of primary care groups and primary care trusts, GPs are able to work together and share information on best practice. The new mental health trust in our area will mean that mental health issues and care will move up the agenda. If one in four people has mental health aspects to their problem—stress, for example—it should be picked up at the primary care stage. We all know that the earlier a problem is diagnosed, the easier it is to deal with.

The hon. Member for Chelmsford, West has already dealt well with stigma, but I want to discuss one example. Someone told me at a local MIND meeting that, while waiting at a bus stop, she got chatting to the person next to her. After they had exchanged views about weather or the lateness of the bus, she mentioned that she had not been well, and when asked what the problem had been said, "I have been in Warley hospital," which as I have explained is a local mental health facility. The other woman immediately turned her back and moved away. Such unfounded fear of mental illness still exists. It was unnecessary and cruel for the woman I met to have had to suffer that. We must do more to educate the public about mental health problems. In my locality, MIND does an excellent job of informing people of the facts about mental health.

Mr. Hammond: Does the hon. Lady agree that we need to get the public to distinguish between the great majority of people who suffer from mental illness and the tiny minority of them who are potentially dangerous? Does she think that the Government's proposal to create a new definition of mental disorder that embraces not only people with mental illness but people with a learning disability will be helpful in reducing the stigmatisation of the whole group?

Mrs. Gordon: I hope that any measures that the Government take will focus on reducing stigma and educating people. That is so important. As the hon. Member for West Chelmsford said, we must start early in schools to provide information. People suffer from stress; we have enough stress in this job and it is the same for many people in other jobs.

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. John Hutton): I did not intend to interrupt my hon. Friend's remarks but it is important to put the record straight. I hope that she is aware that the definition of people who are to be treated compulsorily that we propose in the White Paper "Reforming the Mental Health Act" will not include people simply because they are learning disabled. The idea that it will is completely wrong.

Mrs. Gordon: I thank my hon. Friend for clarifying that point.

The voluntary sector has already been discussed, but I want to mention its important work. It emerged in the evidence that the Select Committee heard that voluntary bodies are always walking a funding tightrope. They may have annual funding and every year—or, for a three-year project, every three years—they must undergo the same process, wondering whether they will be given the money. Local groups live on a knife edge most of the time, worrying about the following year's grant and what services they will be able to provide. I hope that the Government will examine that issue and give voluntary groups some security with respect to the future. They make an invaluable contribution to patients' care.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield mentioned the women's services. I visited the services at Broadmoor and Ashworth. The staff there were doing their best and working hard. Much good work was being done, but it was repeatedly highlighted that most of the women patients should not have been there—it was inappropriate for them. It is so sad that people should be in Broadmoor—however caring the staff are—when they do not need to be. Indeed, some women are moved to medium-secure units but because those facilities are also inappropriate they eventually end up back at Broadmoor. There is nowhere else to go.

Many of the women in special hospitals have been abused sexually or physically for most of their lives. However, women form only a small part of the population in medium secure units, so when they are moved there, they tend to be put in mixed units or even on the same wards as men. They find that threatening. The units are debating whether to have women-only accommodation or a mixed structure with separate facilities for women, so that they can retreat into a comfortable and safe environment. That needs to be sorted out, because the director of women's services at Broadmoor told us that 60 per cent. of the women in her care could be looked after in the community or on assertive outreach. It is shocking that those women can be locked away when they could be in medium or low-security facilities.

As there are so few women in that sector, they are put in special hospitals and, as we know from the three cases that were mentioned, they can end up far from their communities and sometimes from their children. When we were at Broadmoor, we heard that, after the Fallon report, heavy restrictions were placed on the men because of the various incidents that had occurred there, with visiting children being abused. Obviously, the staff had to tighten things up and put in more security. However, the women in the women's unit suffered the same security despite there being no evidence that they would have harmed the children. Indeed, it would have helped their rehabilitation and their prognosis for better health if their children and friends with children could have visited. Those restrictions were inappropriate. A separate strategy is needed for women in special prisons and secure units. Women's groups have the necessary knowledge to help decide the best way forward.

I wish that we had had time to cover other areas. It is an intense report and we covered much ground. We dealt with the problems of the transfer from child services to adult services, caused by the fact that adolescents are kept in fairly small units but when they suddenly reach the cut-off date they are sent to somewhere harsh like Broadmoor. I hope that we can revisit that aspect, because we need to take a more intensive look at it. Nevertheless, I am pleased with the report and the Government's response and I am glad to have been a part of it.

Mr. John Austin (Erith and Thamesmead): I am sorry that my hon. Friend the Member for Morley and Rothwell (Mr. Gunnell) has had to leave us, because he said that today's speech may be his last contribution in the House. I hope that it is not. I knew the hon. Gentleman before I became a Member. We all recognise the enormous contribution that he has made not only in the House but for the benefit of the people of west Yorkshire, as my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) knows.

Mr. Hinchliffe: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for referring to our hon. Friend the Member for Morley and Rothwell (Mr. Gunnell). His contribution to the Committee's work was remarkable. He has had a great deal of experience in health and social services matters. He chaired a social services committee and served on the Health Committee, and his contribution was positive in every inquiry.

Mr. Austin: I welcome the way in which my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield introduced the debate. I also thank the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) for his balanced and rounded speech, and for his concentration on the border issues of mental ill health, especially stigma. Public safety issues are important, and no one wants to underestimate the tragedy of homicides and suicides, but all members of the Committee share concern at the fact that media focus on such events prevents a rational discussion of issues such as the location of hostels for people who present no real risk to anyone in the community. Those people are probably vulnerable individuals themselves. That focus also makes it more difficult to tackle the stigma problem.

The Committee is concluding its major inquiry on public health issues. The most important determinants of health are economic, social and environmental. Access to employment, training, housing, security and social interaction are key elements for the promotion of good health. Those who lack them are more likely to suffer physical and mental ill health. However, those who suffer mental ill health have more difficulty in accessing them. As the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge (Mr. Hammond) and our report said, such people face difficulties in re-accessing the benefit system.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield referred to unequal or inappropriate treatment on grounds of race and ethnicity, and my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mrs. Gordon) referred to the same problem in terms of gender. Witness after witness gave evidence of the fact that health services, especially mental health services, suffer from institutional racism. As my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield pointed out, patients from ethnic minorities tend to access services later than their white counterparts although they may be more severely ill. They are more likely to be detained than treated as informal patients, are over-represented in the secure system and are often provided with inappropriate or insensitive services. They are more likely to receive physical treatments, and less likely to be offered counselling and other non-physical treatments.

That is not news. Our inquiry has not suddenly uncovered that information, as it was well documented 10 or 15 years ago by people such as Roland Littlewood, Maurice Lipsedge and Aggrey Burke. We met Roland Littlewood during the course of our inquiry when we visited NAFSIYAT. Little seems to have changed for the better in terms of discrimination and institutional racism. I am glad that the Government have begun to consider the matter, especially in the wake of the Macpherson inquiry.

Our inquiry found that many of the most appropriate services for ethnic minority communities seemed to be provided by voluntary and community-based organisations. My hon. Friend the Member for Romford pointed out the severe difficulty in continuity of funding. We made a firm recommendation on that, and I am pleased that the Government have taken it on board in their response. I agree with her on gender issues, and ask why there are so many women in special hospitals whom even my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health admits should not be there. That is also recognised in the White Paper, which is pleasing. We have heard that the director of women's services at Broadmoor believes that 60 per cent. of the women in her care could be looked after in a less secure environment.

As my hon. Friend pointed out so vividly, women who are difficult to manage but are not dangerous are spiralled up the system because of a lack of segregated facilities in medium secure units. The choice appears to be between a mixed ward with male sexual abusers in medium-secure units, or transfer to a special maximum-security hospital. That cannot be appropriate or right. My hon. Friend also referred to the gender-blind approach of the security directions on child visiting, following the Fallon inquiry into Ashworth. It was clearly aimed at men, yet women at Rampton and Broadmoor are now restricted in seeing their own children, without any consideration being given to the therapeutic implications. That cannot be right, and I hope that it is being dealt with.

The Committee also considered issues relating to caring for people in the community. There have been some reports, including a study at York university, on the success of assertive community treatment. They show that that form of treatment maintains contact with more patients, cuts hospital admissions, and reduces time spent in hospital with no evidence of clinical harm.

The Committee was impressed when it visited both north Birmingham and St. George's hospital in south-west London, where assertive outreach programmes are combined with the use of the newer atypical anti-psychotic drugs, which were referred to earlier, as well as psycho-social interventions and home treatment. That combination is achieving real results. I welcome the commitment in the Government's recent White Paper to an additional 170 assertive outreach teams with 24-hours-a-day, seven-days-a-week access to services. I recognise that performance varies across the country, and that more research must be carried out into which forms of assertive outreach work.

Questions have also been raised as to whether community care has failed, or whether it has gone too far. It was said earlier that, although care in the community has not failed, the absence of such care has often failed vulnerable people. The late development of the appropriate care in the community packages has led, unfortunately, to the question being raised as to whether the shift from hospital-based care to community-based care has gone too far, or whether tragic incidents such as the murder of Jonathan Zito in 1993 were the result of the closure of in-patient units before the development of adequate community provision.

Those widespread concerns in the 1990s contributed to the passing of the Mental Health (Patients in the Community) Act 1995. That Act contained an element of compulsion since it created a new power of after-care and supervision. However, it stopped short of requiring patients to accept treatment. In practice, the power of conditional discharge has not been widely used, perhaps because of the absence of community support facilities rather than because of the absence of a power of compulsory treatment.

The passing of the recent human rights legislation will be an interesting challenge for the mental health services. Last summer, before the implementation of the human rights legislation, the Court of Appeal ruled that local councils should pay for after-care services for some categories of long-term psychiatric patients. The human rights legislation could, in certain circumstances, require local councils and health authorities to meet the conditions of mental health tribunal discharge orders.

Last year, a case was brought against a health authority by a woman who had been held in detention in hospital for more than a year after a mental health tribunal had directed her release because the health authority had failed to find a forensic psychiatrist to supervise her after care. In a similar case in 1997, a patient with schizophrenia took the United Kingdom to the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg. He had been detained for several years after the release date ordered by the tribunal because the local authority could not find a suitable supervised hostel. The council was found to be in breach of the European convention on human rights for its failure to fulfil the tribunal's conditions within a reasonable period.

Until recently, the only real remedy available to people was the long and arduous process of taking the United Kingdom to court in Strasbourg. Their only other form of redress was by way of judicial review, but ultimately, in judicial review, the court could decide only whether the authority had acted reasonably and had little power other than that of being able to encourage the authorities to explore alternative solutions. Mental health tribunals do not have the power to compel authorities to comply with the conditions of discharge.

[Mr. Austin]

Now that the human rights legislation has been incorporated into British law, any individual can apply to the British courts. That will have an impact on mental health services and their delivery and will, in some cases, ensure that services are available to meet discharge criteria and free up much needed in-patient beds. However, I fear that without additional resources, those authorities may end up having to rob Peter to pay Paul. The Government must therefore be aware of the resource implications of providing an adequate care in the community system.

When my right hon. Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), the former Secretary of State, said in 1997 that community care had failed, his choice of words was not helpful. However, he was not asking for a return to the old system, with the reintroduction of the water-tower asylums—or the bins, as they are more appropriately known in the trade. He set up the independent reference group's review of community services and recognised, as do the Government, that locking up patients in long-stay institutions is often harsh and harmful. He said that he was looking for a third way. That was perhaps the only time that the right hon. Member for St. Pancras and I looked for a third way; a way that comprised the provision of acute beds, more secure facilities, more 24-hour crisis teams, hostels—as the hon. Member for West Chelmsford said—supported accommodation, home treatment teams and assertive outreach.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield referred to the evidence that we received on people with dual diagnosis. That is of real concern to the Committee and I hope to all hon. Members present. My hon. Friend referred to people with a dual diagnosis of mental disorder and substance misuse or mental disorder and learning disability. Despite their different circumstances, both groups face the common problem of what is known as "pass the parcel"—it is someone else's problem. Young Minds told the inquiry that "the division between drug and alcohol services and mental health services creates widespread problems throughout the mental health system".

As the National Schizophrenia Fellowship put it:

"they are deemed too 'mad' to go into an alcohol or drugs unit or too 'high' to go into a mental health service".

Turning Point gave us evidence that people with alcohol or drug and mental health problems also find it difficult to access primary care services so that their physical health needs are not addressed.

It is not an easy issue with simple solutions. One NHS trust put it bluntly when, referring to the problem of patients with dual diagnosis on a general ward, it said:

"you have people with other conditions who do not want young men out of their heads on wards."

Those who misuse drugs or alcohol also have a right to treatment. Since some may be the people for whom compulsory treatment is considered, a human rights issue arises if they were previously denied access to appropriate services. Substance misuse is often implicated in acts of violence, both homicide and suicide.

Sitting suspended for a Division in the House.

On resuming—

Mr. Austin: I was referring to the problems faced by people with a dual diagnosis. The Health Committee received two studies, one from Maudsley, the other from Lewisham. The first showed that 40 per cent. of alcohol-dependent patients had some form of mental illness, and the second that 58 per cent. of people accessing mental health services had a dual diagnosis of substance misuse. Although the national service framework acknowledges problems of co-morbidity, it provides little guidance, which led the Committee to recommend that the Department of Health should require joint working and co-ordination between mental health and substance misuse agencies. It also recommended that working with people with a dual diagnosis should be made a requirement within the remit of assertive outreach services and that the duty of partnership imposed on the NHS and local authorities under section 27 of the Health Act 1999 should include substance misuse and housing services.

I want to say more about drug treatment. In delivering a unanimous, cross-party report, the Committee called upon the National Institute for Clinical Excellence seriously to consider the outcome of treatment from a user's perspective, including the benefits of making compliance with drug treatment less onerous. Our report was published at the same time as the publication of a survey by the Zito Trust, showing severe gaps and weaknesses in the provision of services, with patients being denied access to the most effective treatment—21 per cent. of United Kingdom health authorities restricted the use of atypical anti-psychotic drugs that are known to have fewer side effects and result in better compliance.

Notwithstanding the outcome of the NICE investigation, I share Jayne Zito's concern that patients who are non-compliant, often because of the horrendous side effects of typical medicines, are denied access to atypical medicines, which, as Jayne Zito said, improve compliance, lead to reintegration into society and can result in significant savings.

The Government believe that independent advocacy services are important—it is a subject dear to the heart of my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield—as shown in the White Paper, which was published before the passing of the Health and Social Care Bill. The White Paper refers to the patient advisory liaison service as the gateway to specialist advocacy services.

The Minister knows the importance that hon. Members attach to the assurance that the advocacy services should be independent, and be seen to be so. In view of the amendment to the Health and Social Care Bill on the location and provision of advocacy services, which the Government accepted, the matter will have to be addressed before we consider a mental health Bill.

Mr. Hammond: The hon. Gentleman is talking about the Health and Social Care Bill as if it were a fait accompli. The Bill is still under consideration in the other place and, depending on the timing of the dissolution of Parliament, may not make it to the statute book.

Mr. Austin: Whether or not the Bill reaches the statute book in this or a future Parliament, I hope that the Minister will acknowledge the commitment to the important principles of independent and available advocacy services in the Health and Social Care Bill.

The hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess) drew an analogy between the Prison Service and mental health services in terms of community interest. That may be valid, but there is a clear distinction: most of us know something about prisons, but few hon. Members have a loved one, a friend or a relative, who has been in the nick. However, I suspect that every one of us has someone close to them with personal experience of the mental health services. It is not only our constituents who have such experience.

I have two prisons in one in my constituency, and there are prisons in the constituencies of my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield, the hon. Member for West Chelmsford and the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Dr Brand). Many people are in Belmarsh prison in my constituency because of the failure and inadequacy of the mental health services to address their needs.

I have been a critic for many years of the inadequacy of the psychiatric and forensic services in prisons, but the new regime at Belmarsh prison, which I visit, is a beacon of light in the development of services, and the Committee was very positive about it.

The media have concentrated on the small number of difficult-to-manage patients but that should not divert us from the need to raise the standards of mental health services generally. The Government's NHS frameworks may need even more resources than they have already generously made available, but if they are implemented, we may at last see the tag "Cinderella service" removed from mental health.

Dr. Peter Brand (Isle of Wight): It is always a great privilege to speak on behalf of the Liberal Democrats on Health Committee reports. It is rare that I do not fully endorse a report, but then I have also had the privilege to serve as a Committee member. I must congratulate the members, staff and advisers on the excellent way in which the Committee works. Our chairman, the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe), keeps us in order and gives his own opinion, but at the end of the day allows consensus to emerge, which is right. Our recommendations are based on evidence. That is why it is important that we look at the areas in which the evidence clearly points to a recommendation that is not always picked up by the Government in the way that we would like.

The timing of the report is excellent. The hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) and others have talked about the continuing stigmatisation of people with mental health problems. I suppose that it is a step forward from being totally excluded and marginalised, but it is still awful that we cannot accept that mental illness is not the fault of the person who has it—we should not have a blame culture—nor is it an infectious illness. It is a condition brought on either acutely, like any other acute illness, or chronically, due to the pressures created by society and social conditions.

Also, it is timely to talk about mental health because we can do so much more to support people and prevent illness, as well as to treat them. I strongly endorse the report's recommendation that our service to people with mental illness, and those recovering from or at risk from it, should be better integrated. I am slightly concerned that we should not move too much into a medical model for doing that important work. Of course, treatment often involves pharmaceuticals, but they should be an adjunct to everything else that we do.

Sometimes the war against mental illness seems to be seen as a form of chemical warfare—it seems that, provided that one drugs people into quietude and submission, there are no problems. A number of hon. Members have talked about the use of up-to-date drugs. It is wrong to describe the new anti-schizophrenic drugs as atypical drugs. They should be described as modern drugs that allow people to function as well as be in control. The points made by the hon. Member for Morley and Rothwell (Mr. Gunnell) on electro-convulsive therapy were extremely valuable in that context. ECT can be extremely helpful in certain limited conditions. It can be life saving; it can also be a means of blasting out people's anxieties and memories and making them extremely quiet, so that they are no longer a nuisance.

There must be a way to ensure that people have a say in their proposed treatment—not only in the context of compulsory treatment orders, but perhaps more importantly, in the context of having uncertain competence about giving permission. It is too easy for clinicians to persuade people who are not admitted under a section that a certain form of treatment is best for them without giving them an option to consider alternatives. The issue of competence is extremely important in that context. I am glad that the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge (Mr. Hammond) picked up the point when the hon. Member for Morley and Rothwell was talking about ECT because it applies just as much to drug treatment.

Just as drug treatment can be appropriate, it is also important that other quality-of-life issues are properly addressed. I am pleased that at least four of this afternoon's contributors made strong reference to the need to consider social support. There is a need for cross-government thinking on how the benefits system delivers its services. At my surgery on Friday, I saw someone who must go to a tribunal because his benefit is being cut from 60 per cent. to 40 per cent. or something similar. That man is agoraphobic. He worked himself up for a month to go to the mainland for a medical examination by the benefits system. When he arrived, he was told, "Well, we're overbooked this afternoon. Here's some money for your ferry fare. Come back in two weeks' time." That service is being run on behalf of the service provider, not the people who need it.

I hear far too often that the medical branch of the Benefits Agency is totally insensitive to the people whom it serves. As individuals, the people in that agency may be perfectly nice, but the systems that they employ are like the ones that we had in general practice 30 years ago, which are rightly not acceptable now. If the Government employ an agency, they should consider the way in which it delivers services.

It is important that rules and regulations are not too restrictive. For example, before housing benefit is paid, it must be verified by a housing officer. If someone in the community struggles hard to be able to meet anyone but has developed a degree of trust with his community psychiatric nurse and psychiatric social worker, either of them, who often make the placement in the first place, could do the verification job well. It is now done by yet another body. There is no doubt that red tape and a jobsworth attitude are sometimes involved. I cannot blame the people concerned, because they work to a strict set of rules, but that reduces the amount of social and supportive housing that is available.

Two weeks ago, I received a letter from Dr. Ram Seth, who is a wonderful psychiatrist on the island. He is despairing at the situation of two of his patients. They are in-patients, but should no longer be in hospital and he cannot find anywhere for them to go or anyone who will have them. I regularly meet social landlord providers who say that they would like to continue doing that business but they need a little more support. Somehow, the joined-up thinking by Government has not been worked out properly.

While I am talking about joined-up government, I also make a plea for the Minister to talk to his colleagues with responsibility for employment, especially the therapeutic earnings arrangements and the current limit. The hon. Member for Romford (Mrs. Gordon) mentioned the difficulties of moving in and out of employment. It is not in anyone's interest for someone to take a job unless he knows that he can continue to do it for a time. If a psychiatric patient or recovering patient is very vulnerable, the last thing that we want is an on-going set of disasters. Someone may try hard and take on a job. After two or three weeks, however, he may find that the judgment was not right and he should not have tried it. It is not merely a question of his going back to the day centre and getting his support. The person is also without funds until that is sorted out. It may be six weeks before he has anything to live on, which is an enormous disincentive for people to go forward.

I am also concerned that we do not see day centres entirely as places for the acute or severely chronically ill. I must declare an interest. My older brother runs a day centre. It is successful and it allows people to keep in touch with a supportive facility even when they have gone back to work. With our new arrangements, which try to target help towards those who are more severely ill, his case load is being studied to see who can be thrown out. Where do vulnerable people go when they are thrown out? I have a problem with this. The medical model for allocating resources does not cut across the social support, which is not always as easy to define as some of the medical support. The medical profession does not have a good record on defining things. Psychiatry is full of diagnoses and opinions about the meaning of diagnoses. I will touch on that issue with reference to personality disorders and treatability.

On co-conditions, the hon. Member for Erith and Thamesmead (Mr. Austin) described drug dependency and alcoholism well. An enormous opportunity is missed within the Prison Service to tackle people with those problems. Community psychiatric nurses travel all day to find out whether they can provide help to a person through assertive outreach, yet at the same time, people with just such needs rot in our prisons without the support that they should have. Enlightened—and some extremely good—prison regimes exist. There are good prisons on the island. However, it is not reasonable to expect the job in question—running therapy groups for people with drug or alcohol problems, or with sexual deviations—to be taken on largely by prison officers in addition to their custodial and occupational therapy work. That approach cannot be sustained.

I now find that prison officers are breaking down because they cannot cope with the strain. They provide a service that should be resourced through the national health service—and properly. I am glad that the report mentions the present arrangement, which is difficult for health authorities in areas where there is a substantial prison population. It is impossible to contribute the resources that are needed. Even for something relatively simple and accessible, such as counselling services for which people are available in the job market, the money simply is not there. I hope that the Minister will suggest what progress the review on the funding of prison medical services has made. That matter is of great concern, not only on the Isle of Wight but generally in areas with substantial prison contacts.

In prisons, there are many mentally ill people who are not treated. Prisons are also the waiting list for secure hospitals. The bizarre situation is that people who, if treated, could return to the community are in prison with people who should be not there but in secure units and who make the lives of other prisoners and prison officers extremely difficult. On our special hospital visits we saw that there is a waiting list to discharge people and a waiting list to admit people—although the waiting list to admit is not created until there is a vacancy.

Mr. Austin: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that one of the problems that he has identified has been tackled at Belmarsh to a large extent by forensic psychiatric services being provided for the prison on a commission basis by the local medium-secure unit?

Dr. Brand: That is an extremely valuable point. It is one of the models that we have to work through. It is vital that the prison medical services, the special units and the secure hospitals all work to the same regime and that they have clear financial accountability for the jobs that they take on. I am afraid that rigidly separated budgets will result in a lot of defensive fencing before decisions are made.

What progress is being made on the extra beds in secure units that the Minister spoke about in Committee—and, indeed, on specialist units for women? The points made by the hon. Member for Romford were so telling. We are putting women in an impossible situation by allowing Broadmoor to become a haven or asylum. I am not against asylums—in the true sense of the word as places of safety—but they need not be places in a secure hospital.

Two difficult human rights issues are tackled in the Health and Social Care Bill. One is the compulsory treatment order in the community, which is an extension of the present powers. At the moment, people can be compulsorily detained but not necessarily treated; they can refuse treatment until a tribunal has heard the case. At the moment, that does not extend to the community. Those who are in the community can be taken into hospital, but treatment cannot be forced upon them.

If treatment is to be forced on people in the community, it is important that the patients, if competent, should have a choice of what that treatment should be. They should have the opportunity, before an episode of illness, of saying what that treatment might be. Patients' carers should have an input, as should those support organisations to which patients belong. That is why the advocacy service is important. In this instance, I would not like the advocacy service simply to deal with complaints. It should help people expertly to make choices that they may find difficult to understand. If we are to deny people the liberty to say no, it is important that proper checks and balances are put in place. That is even more important if we are talking about denying people their freedom.

I am uneasy about locking people up because of their personality. As has been said, a severe personality disorder does not necessarily relate to the dangerousness that a person presents to society. I am glad to say that a body of medical opinion believes that treatments can help people come to terms with their personality disorders and allow them to interact better with society. More work needs to be done with what are normally described as talking therapies—I believe that they should be called listening therapies—including the psychotherapeutic approach that allows people's behaviour to be moulded over a long period of time to reduce risk. In that sense, using hospital psychiatric facilities is appropriate, but I would be unhappy if people were put in prison, or a quasi-facility—as if it were an oubliette—because we do not like their opinions or thinking patterns. That is dangerous.

I fully support the Fallon concept of reviewable sentences. It would be interesting to hear whether the Minister has talked to his Home Office colleagues and whether he can think of an individual who has not committed some offence, no matter how minor, and presents a major risk in line with the descriptions of people with dangerous personality disorders. Such individuals must be extremely rare. They may have committed offences as juveniles. Something will have happened to have brought them to the attention of the authorities.

Some people may be so unfortunate that they cannot cope and need to be imprisoned or put somewhere secure. From that location, they can be reviewed, and they should have the right to go back to court to say that they do not represent the risk that they used to and want to be let out. Reviewable sentences are a much better way forward than putting someone in jail.

Mr. Hammond: I am slightly confused, but perhaps I have the wrong end of the stick. I thought that reviewable sentences related to offenders who might subsequently have their incarceration period extended because of the threat that they presented. Is the hon. Gentleman suggesting a form of reviewable sentence for someone who has not committed an offence, or have I misunderstood him?

Dr. Brand: I am sorry if I did not make myself clear. I am saying that some people commit offences that may be relatively minor, but those people may present a clear threat and so would be given indeterminate sentences. An arson attack that does not do enormous damage, for instance, might suggest a disturbed personality. In such circumstances, a reviewable sentence may be appropriate if the cases are not deemed a priori for the mental health services. I hope that there are not many such cases. The Government estimate a figure of, I think, 2,300, and it might be interesting to know how many of those people have some court record.

I must pay tribute to successive Governments for making enormous progress on the way in which mental health is regarded. It is important that we do not simply say that mental health has to come into the mainstream, as we must also resource it. Much is now being done to work more closely with patients. I single out my friend Roger Fordham, who runs a patients' group on the Isle of Wight. He is a terrific worker for his patients and colleagues in the day centre. Such people are an enormous resource, but we should not over-use them. It is important that we do not narrow our horizons too much to one willing individual. We must ensure that we use everyone who has a contribution to make.

I have also been impressed with the work of the Zito Trust. The report comments on the mandatory homicide inquiries and their effect, and makes the sound recommendation that they be sent to a specialist branch of the Commission for Health Improvement. I cannot think of any lasting positive outcome of such an inquiry other than the Zito Trust—it is an unofficial body, but it has done excel'ent work. It is a forward-looking organisation that is not centred only on victims, as it considers the needs of the people who committed the dreadful offences and other people in the same category.

No such improvements can be achieved without adequate resources. As has been said, we are short not only of psychiatrists but of psychologists and psychiatric nurses. The idea that general practitioners could be trained to be more skilful and do more mental health work is no solution as GPs are already over-burdened with work.

More time is necessary to bring more people on, but I hope that in the interim, the Minister will recognise the enormous contribution that can be made by lay counsellors, social workers, carers and other people in supporting roles. It is wrong that units are still being shut down or restricted because we cannot afford the people to run them. Those are the units that support people and keep them out of hospital and out of our prisons.

5 pm

Mr. Philip Hammond (Runnymede and Weybridge): As perhaps the only Member speaking today, apart from the Minister, who was not a member of the Committee, I should like to congratulate it on tackling a difficult and complex subject and producing a report that, as I am sure its readers will agree, is an extremely useful reference document covering a wide area. I am also grateful for the tone adopted by the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe). All hon. Members have adopted a constructive tone, acknowledging that it is a matter of building on the efforts of successive Governments and that society has come a long way during the past 30 or 40 years in terms of how we deal with people who suffer from mental illness. We still have a long way to go, but we have come a long way, and the issue is not primarily party political.

Since the publication of the Committee report, a lot of water has passed under the bridge in terms of Government documents. The NHS plan came out shortly after the report, and the Government's response to the report, the Health and Social Care Bill and the consultation responses to the Green Paper "Reform of the Mental Health Act 1983" have all been published, as was the White Paper, in December. We must consider the Committee's recommendations in the light of what has taken place since the publication of its report.

We have, as yet, seen no sign of legislation. The Government have stated on many occasions and reiterated in all the documents that I have listed, that mental health is a high priority for them. Since there is potentially still a year of this Parliament left to run, I hope that that high level of commitment and the importance that the Government attach to mental health will be expressed in the form of a Bill. There is broad consensus that new legislation is needed. There is also a fairly broad consensus that such legislation is more important than some of the other legislation that has filled the legislative programme. I hope that the Minister will have something reassuring to say about that.

The title of the report is "Provision of NHS Mental Health Services", and although I do not want to be picky, it is probably appropriate to mention at the outset the independent sector. The Government have stated that they wish to work more closely with the sector in future to ensure effective provision of NHS services to NHS patients. The independent sector plays a significant role in the delivery of mental health services, particularly medium-secure services. In London, I understand that one independent organisation provides more NHS in-patient psychiatry than any NHS trust in the London region.

Without wishing to be churlish, I detected in recommendation (uu) of the report a tinge of hostility to the involvement of the private sector and what seemed like an aspiration to reduce private sector involvement. Will the Minister say something about the future of private and independent sector providers of mental health services? Do they have a future in mental health provision in the NHS? If they were to receive a negative signal, it could have unfortunate consequences, so I hope that the Minister can say something reassuring about that. What proportion of the additional beds and facilities that the Government have announced are expected to be provided directly by the NHS and what proportion will be NHS-funded facilities provided by the private sector?

Mr. Hinchliffe: The hon. Gentleman knows my general views on the private sector, which I shall therefore not need to discuss. When we produced the report, the Committee was concerned that some of the private establishments that we examined were offering a service, but their existence obstructed the development of a better service in the NHS. Earlier, I referred to a private hospital in York that offered secure facilities that were full of young black men from London. My personal view, which was shared by the cross-party Committee, is that we must place those men in appropriate facilities in their communities, which is a point made in the report.

Mr. Hammond: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. I know his views on the private sector generally, so I understand why he does not feel the need to discuss them today because you, Mr O'Hara, would certainly rule the language out of order. I have heard what he had to say and I look forward to the Minister's comments.

There is a capacity issue. We have all seen what is happening in the care homes sector, and I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would not want anything similar to happen in the medium secure mental health sector by virtue of careless talk. I hope that the Minister will want to reassure quality providers that there will be a role for them because I would not want to spoil the tone of consensus on the issues that we have discussed today.

When my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) responded to the presentation of the White Paper by the Secretary of State in the House, he welcomed the general thrust of Government policy. More care delivered in more appropriate settings must equal better outcomes. We also welcome the Government's determination to address the question of stigma, about which my hon. Friend the Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) and the hon. Member for Romford (Mrs. Gordon) have spoken eloquently today.

The Committee noted that the focus of attention on high-risk patients—the bulk of the White Paper deals with such patients, which inevitably focuses press attention—conveys a highly misleading impression of mental health services. Earlier, I intervened on the hon. Lady to ask about the Government's proposed new definition of mental disorder that covers any disability or disorder of mind or brain, whether permanent or temporary, which results in an impairment or disturbance of mental functioning. Perhaps the Minister will want to clarify the position because I took his earlier comments to mean that that definition would not include people with a learning disability. However, my understanding is that it will include people with a learning disability, although that alone will not make them vulnerable to compulsion.

The point that I raised with the hon. Lady related to stigma. I have raised the issue before, but I perceive that many people in the community do not distinguish between either learning disability and mental illness or the vast majority of mental illnesses and the tiny number of patients who may be a threat to themselves or to others. I raised this question with the hon. Lady, and I shall address it again to the Minister: does broadening the definition of mental disorders help to de-stigmatise this area? How can it be managed to ensure that the effect will be positive in terms of reducing stigma?

My hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring welcomed the proposed reform and simplification of sectioning procedures, although he raised some practical concerns. If and when we see a Bill, we shall examine carefully how the Government intend to overcome them. We also welcome the proposal for community treatment orders, subject, as always, to the establishment of the appropriate safeguards. Doubtless there will be much devil in the detail that will need scrutiny. It is clear that community treatment orders are building on the success of care in the community and must constitute the way forward. My hon. Friend the Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess) and the Select Committee itself concluded that it would be unhelpful for the Government to give the impression that care in the community has been a failure. I should point out that the Minister has gone out of his way to emphasise that he does not consider care in the community a failure, but in a press release dated 29 July 1998 the current Secretary of State's predecessor said:

"Care in the community has failed."

One cannot express oneself much clearer than that, and the Government and the mental health community might have to work hard for some time to repair the damage done by that brief statement.

We support much of the thrust of the Government's White Paper and their response to the Select Committee report, but in due course I shall raise some specific issues about which we are not quite so happy. Like hon. Members in this Chamber, who are all experts on this subject, I hope that others will keep in mind the proper balance between general mental health services and issues relating to high-risk patients. The hon. Member for Romford said that approximately one in four GP consultations involve a mental health element. Ninety per cent. of patients with mental health problems are cared for entirely within the primary care system, which points strongly to the need to focus resources on early intervention and identification of problems.

We also know that four in every 1,000 people have a severe mental health condition, such as schizophrenia, and some 11,500 people are detained in hospitals and homes under the Mental Health Act 1983. In the light of those figures, if the proposals in the White Paper are implemented and legislation is enacted, how many people are expected to be treated under compulsion in the new regime that the Minister envisages? Concern has been expressed that numbers might increase significantly. On the question of moving people to units with lower security levels where possible and in the light of recommendation (xx) and the Government's response to it, what reduction in the population of high-security mental health units does the Minister expect? In the Government's response to recommendation (r), reference is made to 1,000 new "workers" in mental health at primary care level. What does that mean? What type of people and level of qualification are we talking about?

The Select Committee has rightly recognised that funding and resourcing is a principal area of concern. Although it welcomed the ring-fenced funds that have been drawn from the modernisation fund, it recognised that the overall level of funding is of the greatest importance. It also noted variations in the percentages of health authority allocations that are spent on mental health, and herein lies one of the problems. The Government say loud and clear that they regard mental health as a top priority, but they have set targets for health authorities and NHS trusts that have a somewhat headline-grabbing potential. The inevitable result is that health authorities are tempted to divert their resources towards meeting those targets that, in their view, the Government believe should be addressed first. The worry is that mental health will remain the Cinderella service while it must compete with other, high priority, high-profile, life and death, blue-light issues that the Government, rightly, have raised. The Government say that mental health is a priority, but most of the electorate, if asked what are the principal objectives in the health service, would probably say cancer and coronary heart disease if they have been listening to the Government. I should be surprised if many of them would say mental health.

I want to refer to one or two specific matters and then to speak briefly about dangerous severe personality disorder. We all recognise that staffing is the main constraint in implementing the Government's mental health plans and the NHS national plan. The Committee identified precisely the concerns in relation to psychologists and occupational therapists. The Government's response to the Committee's recommendations (p) and (r) was inadequate and I am surprised that the hon. Member for Wakefield did not mention that. It referred to the total number of nurses and other health professionals whom the Government hope to have in place by 2004 under the NHS plan. It did not refer to the specific requirements for staffing our mental health services.

I have some questions for the Minister. First, can those NHS plans be met? We have seen the reports of the Audit Commission and National Audit Office, which refer to the difficulty of meeting those plans with the current high drop-out level among trainee nurses. Secondly, what proportion of those people will be directed towards mental health services? If the NHS plan is not achieved on staffing, what reassurance can the Minister give that mental health services will not suffer the brunt of under-availability of qualified staff? Pay is often said to be the main grouse that causes problems with recruitment, particularly to mental health services, but job satisfaction, morale, conditions and, above all, being allowed to get on with the job are also important.

I want to leave the Minister plenty of time to reply, so I shall omit several important matters and say a few words about the Government's proposals on compulsion. I referred to the Bournewood judgment during an intervention and I should be grateful if the Minister would elaborate on how the new regime will deal with patients who have not objected to treatment but who are deemed not to have the mental capacity to consent to treatment. The Select Committee suggested that it might be a good idea if we had a better definition of capacity. I am slightly concerned that in practical terms those people are treated compulsorily. If they are correctly assessed not to have the ability to consent, the regime that will control them when they are inside the system should be more akin to the regime of a voluntary patient than to that of a compulsory patient. The Minister knows that I have a particular interest in that matter because the Bournewood mental health trust is in my constituency.

Turning to patients with dangerous severe personality disorder, I must say at the outset that the Opposition recognise that it is a very difficult problem and that part of the challenge, if we are to de-stigmatise mental illness, is to identify those who are a danger to the public and to assure the public that they are being appropriately dealt with. We can then re-educate the public about the way in which they think about the 99.9 per cent. of mentally ill people who are not a danger to anyone, except perhaps themselves occasionally.

After much consideration and a lot of soul-searching, the Opposition have concluded that we simply cannot support a regime that locks people up, not for the purpose of treating them in a therapeutic environment, but as a form of preventive detention. There is presently inadequate evidence to suggest that the predictive power of diagnosis is sound enough to contemplate the enormity of incarcerating someone without treatment and without any realistic possibility of being released back into the community. The Opposition are extremely wary of the Government's proposals for dealing with dangerous severe personality disorder patients.

To conclude, I emphasise that what unites us is much greater than what divides us. There is a considerable sphere of consensus. I have explained some of our concerns. If a Bill is introduced before the end of the Parliament, we look forward to engaging constructively with the Government on the practical issues that it will raise. I hope that we can proceed as we have hitherto—in a consensual way to ensure that the progress made over the past 30 or 40 years continues in future.

5.21 pm

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. John Hutton): First, may I say that I am glad that a doctor is in the House this afternoon? I may need to ask the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Dr. Brand) to help me with the problems affecting my voice.

I hope to respond fully to all the issues that hon. Members have raised. We have had an excellent debate about the future of mental health services and I agree with virtually everything that has been said. Anyone listening to today's proceedings would conclude that a substantial consensus exists about what needs to be done to ensure that all our constituents have access to the first-class mental health services that we would want for ourselves if we ever suffered from a mental health problem.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe), who has a close interest in these matters, made an excellent speech. He and I agree on many aspects of the problem, particularly on the need to improve community mental health services. We have made that a priority for investment, reform and modernisation during the past three years and I can certainly give my hon. Friend the assurance that that will continue.

I also welcome the speech of the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns), who did my job in the previous Conservative Government. I agree with him about the need to tackle discrimination, stigma and ill-informed prejudice. I pay tribute to him for the stance that he has adopted on this issue, which is not always easy. The hon. Gentleman was on more dangerous ground in respect of jumping on political bandwagons, but I respect his courage in raising that matter as well.

I greatly enjoyed the brief contribution of my hon. Friend the Member for Morley and Rothwell (Mr. Gunnell). This may be the last opportunity to hear my hon. Friend speak in the House. I hope not, because he is an outstanding Member of Parliament and a distinguished member of the Health Committee who brings personal integrity and compassion to these subjects. I pay an enormous tribute to him as an individual. I hope that I will have the chance to hear more from him in the future.

I can assure the hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Amess) that we intend to improve mental health services. We responded positively to the Health Committee's report, which is a mark of our continuing contribution to this issue. We have no intention of producing a response to the report and then forgetting about mental health services. The hon. Gentleman asked a specific question about the National Institute of Clinical Excellence and the use of atypical anti-psychotics, if he will forgive me for using that expression. NICE is reviewing the whole treatment of schizophrenia and has not yet produced its final appraisal. The Government will examine it carefully when it is produced, which I hope will be as soon as possible.

My hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mrs. Gordon) is actively involved in mental health issues in her constituency and has a special concern to ensure that patients and users are effectively involved in planning their care and treatment. We share that commitment. It is strongly and fully reflected throughout the national service framework, which has been well received not just in the NHS but outside with user and patient groups and in local authorities. She was right to stress, as did the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge (Mr. Hammond), the need to improve our investment in care. Anyone who has read the NHS plan and looked at what Ministers have been saying will know of our strong commitment to improve front-line primary care services. As has been widely remarked, that is where the majority of patients can be safely and appropriately treated. It is where they want to be treated. It is the responsibility of us in the NHS and our partners in local authorities to ensure that those services are available.

I congratulate the Health Committee on an excellent report into mental health services and I welcome its close interest in the subject. Like all members of the Committee, the Government want to see those vital NHS services improve and expand so that we can begin to meet more effectively the mental health needs of millions of people in our country. As hon. Members have rightly pointed out, this is a big challenge and much needs to be done, but with the Committee's encouragement, we have made a good beginning to that long overdue programme of investment and modernisation.

In 1997, when the Government took office, we made improving mental health services one of the top three clinical priorities for the NHS. Given the condition of mental health services and their importance to the health and well-being of the nation, that was absolutely the right thing to do. Our programme of modernisation—[Interruption.] That crack in my voice reminds me of the time when my voice used to go up and down.

Mr. Hinchliffe: Many years ago.

Mr. Hutton: Yes, many years ago. I thank my hon. Friend for that generous observation.

Our programme of modernisation has involved three distinct elements. First, we needed to improve investment in mental health services and in doing so, to focus on the immediate priorities. Those included new and improved community-based services and secure beds. I will try to respond to questions about the numbers of secure beds in a moment. Secondly, we needed to set clear national standards in relation to service provision and access to services that have quite often depended on where a person happened to live. The first of the national service frameworks has, I believe, begun to tackle this unacceptable state of affairs and has been widely welcomed. Finally, we needed to bring the mental health legislation up to date, and we have now set out in the White Paper how we intend to do that.

This is clearly a major programme of reform that will take years to complete. I know that the Committee has strong views on those three issues as well as on other matters, with which I will deal in a few moments. As my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Thamesmead (Mr. Austin) wisely pointed out, it is important that we recognise, as I am sure that the Committee does, that good mental health is not just the responsibility or preserve of the NHS. The NHS has a crucial role to play, given the expertise and specialist care services that we provide, but wider issues have a key bearing too. The Government's successful economic policy of creating new jobs and securing economic stability will make a positive impact on promoting good mental health, as will the extra investment that we are making in other front-line public services such as housing and social services.

Mental health services have often been described as the Cinderella service of the NHS. We all know why. The proper range of services has not always been available to provide the care and support that people need when and where they need it. There has been inadequate care, poor management of resources and under funding.

The Department of Health's memorandum to the Health Committee on public expenditure demonstrated those problems clearly. From 1991-92 to 1995-96, expenditure on mental health services fell in real terms by £69 million. Given the pressure on mental health services throughout that period, it was clearly not helpful. More worryingly, the memorandum showed that NHS in-patient provision had fallen by almost 18,000 beds between 1987 and 1996. I accept that 15,000 of those were long stay NHS beds and we welcome the progress that has been made in those areas, but 3,000 of those beds were acute in-patient psychiatric beds and we could not afford to lose them. That is why we decided that the first national service framework should cover mental health services. The NSF published in 1999 will, we hope, help to drive up quality and remove the wide and unacceptable variations in provision that we inherited.

Mr. Hammond: The Select Committee report drew attention to health authorities' different spending levels on mental health from their general allocations. Does the Minister have a view on that? Does he intend to issue directions or give guidance on the appropriate percentage to health authorities or does he think that it is different in every case?

Mr. Hutton: I will certainly not give guidance or instructions to health authorities that identifies the percentage that they should spend on mental health. That would not be right. The hon. Gentleman would be the first to criticise me if I did so, because he is always complaining about Ministers' alleged micro-management of the NHS. Those issues must be resolved locally. Local priorities and local patients' needs must be reflected. We expect spending on mental health services to continue to improve and to reflect the national priorities that we have set.

Since 1997, expenditure on mental health services has increased by £466 million. For those who like to number crunch, that is a 16 per cent. increase. The NHS plan, to which I shall come later, will invest more than £300 million over the next few years in new community and primary care based mental health services. It sets out our plans to recruit a further 8,000 staff for mental health services over the next few years—more nurses, doctors, primary care workers and other support staff.

I think that the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge asked about the extra 1,000 primary care workers identified by the NHS plan. They will be largely graduate psychologists. We hope to be able to provide brief, psychologically based therapies in primary care settings, which will certainly take a lot of pressure off many hard-pressed local GPs. All those measures will help to ensure that mental health services are no longer the Cinderella service of the NHS.

Our response to the Select Committee report attempts to highlight the extensive amount of work that is under way. The Committee's decision to launch an inquiry into mental health services stemmed from the strong impression that patients often ended up in the wrong part of the mental health care system or sometimes could not get treatment where and when they needed it. That is also our view. Over the past three years, therefore, the Government have set in train developments substantially to increase the range of local provision, so that by next April an extra 500 local secure beds and 320 extra 24-hour staffed beds will be available.

In addition, regions—particularly London, whose mental health services are under severe pressure—are using their own capital resources to develop schemes to provide locally based NHS services for the large number of people in private-sector secure provision, which is often far away from their homes. The hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge asked me to comment on the provision of secure accommodation in the private sector. We will continue to use it; we want to develop strong and continuing relationships with the private sector. As my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield made clear, however, the problem with much private-sector provision is that it is in the wrong place and is therefore of little use to patients. The inner cities and conurbations, such as London, need more locally based services. We certainly intend to increase the provision of long-term secure beds and community staffing. There will be more investment in services for dangerous people with severe personality disorder. Those developments should help to ease the pressure on various parts of the system and enable people to be treated in the most appropriate setting.

Mr. Hammond: I am grateful for what the Minister has said, but will he elaborate on the increase in secure facilities? Will that be done by direct NHS investment or by contracting with private sector partners under the terms of the concordat?

Mr. Hutton: The numbers to which I have referred are for NHS beds, but we look forward to close relationships and partnerships with the private sector, which provides 30 per cent. of all secure beds. We must use that resource and will continue to get good value for money in doing so.

In response to particular comments made by the Committee, the Department has stressed to all chief executives of mental health services the importance of ensuring that all patients discharged from specialist services should receive clear information on how to re-access them in the event of a further onset of illness. We have set up a new national working group to develop guidance on good practice on dual diagnosis, which was a concern of the Committee. A further investment of £1.25 million will be available next year to provide a range of training in substance misuse for those who work in mental health services.

We have ensured that the needs of people with mental health problems and learning disabilities will be covered in the forthcoming learning disability White Paper. We have developed new model service specifications that reflect best evidenced-based practice for crisis resolution teams, assertive outreach teams and early intervention services. They will be launched at a conference for chief executive officers and directors of social services later in March.

We have started to address long-standing concern about the quality of in-patient care, which will be a major focus of our work in future. As the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge, my hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield and other members of the Select Committee will be aware, the Standing Nursing and Midwifery Advisory Committee recently made several wide-ranging recommendations relating to the experience of users of acute in-patient facilities. NHS trusts and health authorities are expected to respond to the recommendations as part of their health improvement plans and national service framework implementation arrangements.

The acute in-patient care collaborative recently launched by the NHS executive offices of the Trent region and the northern and Yorkshire region will be a seminal piece of work that will, I hope, bring about real service improvement in other parts of the NHS. The purpose of the work is to improve user experience of mental health acute in-patient care and achieve better outcomes through the process of assessment, admission, stay and discharge by sharing good practice. There is plenty of good practice in the NHS, so we have another opportunity to learn from and share that experience. I believe strongly that there is nothing wrong with the NHS that cannot be put right through the use of its best qualities. I want to see such progress made in all regions, not only the two that I have named.

As the Committee knows, the Government are committed to removing mixed-sex accommodation, and ward sisters and charge nurses have been given new resources for improving the general environment on their wards. That will certainly include acute in-patient psychiatric wards. We now need to consider carefully the general ward environment and the physical conditions of all such wards as part of our continuing work to modernise and improve the NHS.

We take mental health promotion seriously, which is why we have brought it centre stage by including two new standards in the national service framework that will require health and local authorities to develop and implement coherent mental health promotion strategies. We shall support them in that endeavour by developing a mental health promotion framework that will draw together the evidence base for effective practice and highlight examples of good practice elsewhere.

The Department continues to work in collaboration with users of mental health services, the voluntary sector and professional bodies with a view to reducing discrimination. That relates to a point made by the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge. I have recently approved the appointment of a communications consultancy to develop a new national campaign that will be launched later this month. It will be aimed at tackling stigma and discrimination faced by people with mental health problems and supporting their social inclusion. I hope that the campaign will have an innovative and exciting new style that will involve employers in a central role. I should be happy to share the details of the campaign with the Select Committee further, and would welcome its members to the launch. I shall ensure that they are invited to it.

As part of the NHS plan implementation arrangements, local services from next year will be required to include occupation, housing and benefits in care plans for the most severely disabled. My hon. Friend the Member for Romford was especially concerned about such issues. An employment group has been set up to consider ways to promote greater opportunities for people with mental health problems to access suitable employment. With the Department for Education and Employment and the Department of Social Security, we are planning new job retention and rehabilitation pilots this year to test the effectiveness of different health and employment strategies in reducing the number of people forced to give up work through prolonged illness or disability. The mental health pilots will take place in north and south Cheshire and the Wirral, and we will look for early lessons during the next two years in how we can take the initiative forward.

The mental health taskforce will shortly consider a wide-ranging report on ethnicity and mental health services provision. Many hon. Members have raised the subject of ethnicity today, and we take it seriously. NHS services must serve the whole community, not only sections of it, so people from black and ethnic minority communities must and will have better access to more effective services in future. A work force action team has been established to set a programme of work in several key areas with the aim of producing a national picture of the work force, education and training issues to support the implementation of the NHS plan. We have set up a new national working group on early intervention that involves clinicians from both adult and adolescent services. The new early intervention services will have no age barrier and will target children as young as 14.

On some issues, however, we have taken a different view from that of the Committee. There would be no point in pretending that we agreed with every recommendation in the report, as we did not. We have not accepted the recommendation to close the high-secure hospitals and replace them with smaller regionally based units. My hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield will be aware of the difference of opinion between us on that matter. Our policy for high-secure services is to secure the safety of the public, staff and patients and to ensure that the best possible services are offered to patients who need to receive care and treatment in a high-secure setting.

The three high-secure hospitals provide a unique service for people with the most severe types of mental illness, personality disorders and learning disabilities. We need to maintain those facilities and the valuable expertise of their staff in dealing with a challenging group of patients with complex mental health disorders and the opportunities for therapy and activity that are available on the existing large sites. I do not share the view of the Committee that the service provided by those hospitals cannot be improved. I believe that it can. Ending the professional isolation of the three high-secure hospitals from the wider NHS will be one way to bring those changes about.

Mr. Hinchliffe: I speak with some experience when I use the term bins. I spend much of my working life in the bins. My view of the three remaining special hospitals is that they are the three remaining bins of our psychiatric system. I should like the Minister, in the short time left to him, to demonstrate how, under the current institutional framework within which the special hospitals operate, we can move from those establishments remaining bins.

Mr. Hutton: I know that my hon. Friend has strong views on that subject, and I respect him for it. The existing organisational arrangements that he described are now being changed. He will be aware that later this year, Rampton and Broadmoor will form part of new NHS trusts. That is an important move. Other changes are under way that will support that reform.

Many hon. Members spoke today about the inappropriate use of those high-secure services and the consequential increase in waiting lists for those who need that type of specialist service. We have allocated £25 million of new resources to transfer people who need lower levels of security. I was asked how many people I thought were inappropriately housed in the high-secure hospitals. As many as 300 or 400 people are in high-secure hospitals who should not be there. The money that we are making available will ensure that more appropriate provision is made for them.

These are difficult issues. Everyone knows that the high-secure hospitals have had a difficult history, but I do not believe that the way to resolve the problem is to close them. That would be a serious mistake. We have the opportunity to develop the expertise necessary to end their professional isolation and to improve the pattern of services that are provided to people in those hospitals.

I am conscious of the fact that I have only two or three minutes left to respond to an extremely wide-ranging debate. I suspect that my officials will soon start to get concerned, because I shall no longer refer to my notes. I shall try instead to draw upon one or two themes and concerns that hon. Members have expressed during our well-informed debate.

Much concern was expressed about the mental health reforms that we propose in the White Paper. We heard the rather surprising confession that the Opposition now oppose our plans to improve public safety and patient services for people with severe forms of personality disorder. I am genuinely surprised that the Opposition have taken that view. I dare say that, in the weeks and months ahead, we shall be given further clarification. It is my humble opinion that few Conservative policies last more than a couple of weeks. Perhaps that is another policy that will be refined and changed as the mistakes become apparent.

We—not only Members of Parliament, but our community and society as a whole—must address the fundamental problem, which is that those services often let people down and there are no effective treatment or services available for them. We have to put that right. I believe that we can.

I take issue with the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge who suggested that we cannot treat those people and that we propose to warehouse them indefinitely or detain them in facilities where they would be denied effective treatment and services. That is not so. The hon. Gentleman should consider what has been happening in Holland for many years, where effective treatment opportunities are available for people with severe forms of personality disorder. We believe that people in this country should have access to such services.

An equally pressing public protection issue must be addressed. It will not go away. Difficult though those matters are, we are conscious of the civil liberties issues involved. However, it is absolutely right to provide new forms of public safety and public protection while at the same time—it is important that the hon. Gentleman understands this—offering better levels of service and direct intervention treatment, that will modify behaviour which will allow those people to—

Mr. Eddie O'Hara (in the Chair): Order. Time is up.

It being fifteen minutes to Six o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the sitting lapsed, without Question put.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Trunk Roads (Cambridgeshire)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much was spent by his Department on trunk roads in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1990–91, at current prices. [142872]

Mr. Hill: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency and I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Tim Matthews, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Mrs. Anne Campbell, dated 12 February 2001:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Keith Hill, has asked me to write in response to your recent Parliamentary Question relating to how much has been spent on trunk roads in Cambridgeshire in each year since 1990–91. I apologise for the delay in replying.

As we do not keep financial data on a county basis, a very lengthy investigation of our records would be required to answer your specific question. In the early 1990's we used Local Authorities to manage trunk roads on our behalf; however, major Improvement Schemes and other major works were managed as a separate programme and costs were not necessarily attributed to an individual county and some schemes crossed county boundaries.

Since the introduction of private sector Managing Agents in 1996, the management of the trunk road network is not constrained by county boundaries. This approach will continue when these contracts are renewed. However, Lord Whitty has asked me to investigate how the Highway Agency's future records could be kept on a regional or sub-regional basis.

If you wish to discuss this matter further please contact Jim Bond, Highways Agency's Divisional Director, telephone 01234 796191.

Departmental Entertainment Costs

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much was spent by his Department's Ministers on entertainment in 2000. [146372]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 22 January 2001]: Expenditure on entertainment by my Department's Ministers in 1999–2000, the latest financial year for which information is available, was £8,347. This compares with expenditure of £14,672 for the former Departments of Environment and Transport in 1996–97.

Waste Regulation

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many enforcement officers are employed in London by the Environment Agency (a) to check trade waste agreements of businesses, (b) to check unauthorised waste carriers, (c) to tackle other breaches of the Environment Protection Act and the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 and (d) to tackle environmental crime in general. [148721]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The information is as follows:

(a) Trade waste agreements under section 45 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 are a matter for local authorities as waste collection authorities; and no enforcement officers are employed by the Environment Agency on checking them.

(b) and (c) The Agency employs 16 officers in the London area whose role includes checking unauthorised waste carriers and other breaches of the 1990 Act and the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989.

(d) A further seven full-time equivalents are employed by the Agency to deal with environmental crime in general in the London area.

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions have been brought by the Environment Agency for fly tipping in the past six years in (a) Lewisham and (b) London. [148728]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The information is as follows:

(a) Neither the Environment Agency nor the Crime and Criminal Justice Unit of the Home Office holds data on prosecutions brought in Lewisham.

(b) The term "fly-tipping" is not legally defined but is generally used to refer to the illegal disposal of waste on a site without either a waste management licence or a registered licensing exemption—in contravention of sections 33 or 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. However, it is also an offence under section 33 to dispose of waste in contravention of a licence. The available data neither separately identify the two different types of offence under section 33 nor distinguish between prosecutions brought by the Environment Agency, local authorities or the police.

Subject to these considerations, the total number of defendants prosecuted at magistrates courts for offences under sections 33 or 34 of the 1990 Act in the Metropolitan police area in the past six years is:

Year	Number
1996	34
1997	39
1998	56
1999	70
2000	Data not yet available

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions the Environment Agency has brought against unlicensed waste carriers in London. [148733]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The available records do not separately identify waste carriers involved in prosecutions brought for contravention of waste management controls other than section 1 of the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 (offence of transporting controlled waste without registering). The number of prosecutions brought under section I of the 1989 Act in the Metropolitan police area for calendar years during which the Agency has been in operation is:

1996	0
1997	1

Countryside and Rights of Way Act

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the timetable for publishing and implementing the regulations under the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000. [148920]

Mr. Meacher: Substantial parts of the Act came into force on 30 January 2001 and further provisions, including the whole of Part IV (Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty), will come into force on 1 April 2001. The implementation of many of the remaining provisions depends on the making of a large number of regulations which my Department will be preparing over the next two or three years. Where appropriate, these provisions will be subject to public consultation.

We expect to lay regulations on vehicular access over common land in May. Immediate priority is also being given to regulations for the mapping of access land, the establishment of local access forums, statutory guidance for the preparation of rights of way improvement plans and making provision for disabled people. The implementation of the right of access to open countryside depends primarily on the completion of the mapping programme which the Countryside Agency have in hand.

King's Cross Station

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent reports he has received on the safety of King's Cross station in respect of the ventilation of smoke; and if he will make a statement. [149099]

Mr. Hill: I understand from London Underground that the magazine "Test" has published comparisons of fire safety at various European stations, which included King's Cross. It should be noted that, while the "Test" report contains some very valid points, it also appears to contain some errors in its description of escape routes from King's Cross and takes no account of the following points.

The basic controls against the risk of smoke at King's Cross are the same as those on the rest of London Underground.

1. Minimisation of potential sources of ignition, in particular strict enforcement of the ban on smoking;
2. Very careful selection of materials for the construction of stations and trains to minimise the degree to which they can support combustion and give off toxic fumes and smoke if affected by a fire. At King's Cross, all materials used since 1989 have been subject to these controls;
3. In areas of higher risk such as machine rooms and stores, the provision of automatic fire detection and, particularly in the case of escalators, automatic fire suppression systems; and
4. Well rehearsed evacuation routines, which are used if a fire is suspected. In the case of King's Cross, evacuation is achieved within six minutes.

It should also be noted that King's Cross station is being redeveloped. This redevelopment will take into account modern practice in ventilation systems, in particular lessons learned from the Jubilee Line Extension project on active control of air-flows in an emergency.

To summarise, fire safety controls at King's Cross are the best that London Underground can achieve within the current constraints of the site. However, they are compliant with relevant legislation and plans for further improvement are already in hand.

School Runs

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of cars on the road between 8 to 9 am are used by parents dropping children at school. [149064]

Mr. Hill: In Great Britain during the period 1997–99, 10 per cent. of car trips being made between 8 and 9 am during term time were parents dropping children at school. At the peak times of 8.50 in the morning 18 per cent. of car trips were for this purpose.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each fire authority in England and Wales the value of the coastline element contained in the Fire Service standard spending assessment. [148912]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The value of the coastline element contained within the Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) for Fire, for 2001–02, for each fire authority in England, is either zero or the amount listed in the table.

These figures are on an "all other things being equal" basis and provide the amount that is allocated by the coastline element. They specifically do not indicate how much each authority benefits from the inclusion of the coastline element, since other factors would change if the coastline element were to be removed from the SSA formula.

The National Assembly for Wales advises that SSAs in Wales do not contain a coastline element for fire services.

Flooding

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incidents of flooding have occurred in the last three years where raw sewage was involved in the contamination of people's homes and property; and if he will make a statement. [149080]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The last year for which information is available is 1999–2000 when 7,121 properties suffered internal flooding from sewers. In 1998–99 there were 5,202 properties and in 1997–98, there were 7,169.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the maximum amount which water companies can be fined for failing to ensure their customers are protected from flood damage and sewage flooding; how often, and on which companies, such a fine has been imposed in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [149516]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Flood prevention generally is the responsibility of the Environment Agency. As far as sewer flooding is concerned, there are no statutory provisions in existing water and sewerage legislation which provides for the undertakers to be fined for failing to ensure their customers are protected from such flood damage. Nor does legislation provide for fines in the event of sewer flooding.

Under the Water Supply and Sewerage Services (Customer Service Standards) Regulations 2000, where effluent from sewerage undertaker's sewer enters a customer's building the customer is entitled, subject to certain exceptions, to a refund of his sewerage charges for the year, up to a maximum of £1,000, for each occasion on which it happens.

On 6 November 2000 my Department published for consultation a draft Water Bill containing proposals for legislation. These proposals include empowering the Director General of Water Services, Secretary of State and National Assembly for Wales to fine a water company up to 10 per cent. of its turnover if it fails to meet appointment conditions, standards of performance or certain statutory or other obligations. Subject to the outcome of the consultation exercise the Government propose to introduce the Bill as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the impact of the November floods on (a) council tax levels and (b) Council Tax Benefit subsidy limitation; and if he will make a statement. [149444]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We received 24 representations during consultation on the Local Government Finance Settlement 2001–02 concerned with the impact of floods on the flood defence levies and local authority budgets. Four responses were concerned with the overall impact on the authority's level of council tax. Two responses were concerned with the impact on the council tax benefit subsidy limitation scheme (CTBSL).

Local authorities affected by floods are eligible for funding under the Bellwin scheme. We have increased the grant for this from 85 per cent. to 100 per cent. of eligible costs above a threshold equivalent to 0.2 per cent. of an authority's annual budget. In addition, the Government have recently announced a package of £11.6 million to pay for the Environment Agency's emergency and repair costs, reducing the costs of flooding being passed on to council taxpayers.

Spending on flood defence is generally a relatively small component of an authority's total budget requirement. It is up to local authorities to determine their spending priorities in consultation with their taxpayers, taking account of the funding available to them. Flood defence expenditure is no different from other items of expenditure and the Government have decided not to make any allowances within the CTBSL scheme for expenditure on flood defence which is above the increase in flood defence SSA.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will reduce the period taken for a claim to be settled under the Bellwin Scheme. [149441]

Ms Beverley Hughes: As part of the special measures introduced to deal with the recent adverse conditions, the Department will settle valid claims within 15 working days of receipt of an application. We have also taken steps to encourage interim unaudited claims. Again these will be paid within 15 workings days.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received calling for an extension to the funding available under the Bellwin Scheme to parish and town councils. [149443]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Parish and town councils can claim eligible expenditure through their local authority. The local authority can in turn claim from my Department. Two parish councils have been in touch with my Department and were given the information they required.

Local Transport Plans

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he plans to measure the effectiveness of local transport plans in reducing casualties. [149171]

Mr. Hill: Local authorities are required to produce road safety plans that support the national casualty reduction targets. The full five-year local transport plans have already been assessed and allocations for 2001–02 were based on those assessments. Indicative allocations have been provided for subsequent years. We will be monitoring road safety performance throughout the period. If any authorities prove to be failing in their road safety performance, we will want to consider how that could be remedied.

Housing Investment

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the resources available to local authorities in East Lancashire (a) to improve below standard private sector terraced houses and (b) to declare clearance areas, where appropriate, over the period 2001 to 2004. [148942]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The six East Lancashire authorities will receive a total of £9,720 million in the coming year through the Housing Investment Programme. This resource can be used by the authorities concerned as they see fit. Additionally, they will receive a total of £11,870 million via the Major Repairs Allowance in line with the Government's commitment to bring all council housing up to a decent standard by 2010.

Housing capital resources for local authorities nationally in 2003–04, the end of the current spending review period, will be around £2.6 billion.

In December 2000 measures were announced enabling authorities to support the renovation and improvement of private sector housing in a better targeted way. At the same time, we announced our intention to proceed with more fundamental reforms to the legislation to give authorities more effective powers to turn around areas of low demand and unpopular housing.

Public Transport

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assistance he is providing for pensioners using public transport. [148961]

Mr. Hill: In total local authorities in England spend over £440 million on concessionary travel on public transport each year. That includes travel by young and disabled people, as well as by pensioners. The Local Government Finance Settlement 2001–02 takes account of local authorities responsibilities in this area. It includes an extra £54 million a year which has been made available to cover the costs of the statutory half-fare scheme for pensioners and disabled people on buses under the Transport Act 2000.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate how many new rural bus services have been established since 2 May 1997. [148968]

Mr. Hill: The data collected on the number of local bus service registrations do not specifically identify rural areas.

However, our survey of local authorities on the use made of the new Rural Bus Subsidy Grant introduced in 1998 shows that 1,800 new or enhanced services were being supported in 1999–2000 by the grant.

Asbestos

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he has received over the past 10 years about rising asbestos liabilities; and what action he has taken to ensure that those suffering from asbestos-related diseases were covered by employers liability insurance. [148915]

Mr. Meacher: Under the Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969, employers carrying on a business in Great Britain have been required since 1972 to insure their liabilities to employees for bodily injury or disease arising from their employment. The Act is enforced by the Health and Safety Executive. Most public sector employers are exempt from this requirement because their liabilities can be met from public funds. My Department is not aware of any case in the last 10 years where a sufferer was not compensated because an insurer did not indemnify a policyholder in accordance with their policy after liability had been established.

Fish Farming

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many discharge consents for fish farms have been issued by (a) the Scottish Environment Protection Agency and (b) the Environment Agency under the Control of Pollution Act 1974; and on what date each (i) was issued and (ii) is due to expire. [149202]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth [holding answer 5 February 2001]: No discharge consents for fish farms have been issued by the Environment Agency under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. The Environment Act 1995 established the Environment Agency as the regulatory body responsible, among other tasks, for the issuing of water pollution discharge consents. The legislation in force at the time of the Environment Agency's establishment was the Water Resources Act 1991, and it is under this legislation that the Environment Agency has issued discharge consents for fish farms. Information about how many discharge consents for fish farms have been issued by the Environment Agency is not held centrally and I will write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as it is available. The information that the hon. Member asks for in relation to the Scottish Environment Protection Agency is now a devolved matter for the Scottish Executive.

Council Tax (Empty Properties)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what recent representations he has received on the policy of charging council tax on empty properties; [149283]

(2) if he proposes to give local authorities discretion on levying council tax on empty properties where there is a large percentage of empty houses. [149284]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In the last three months we have received four representations on the policy of charging council tax on empty properties.

There are already a range of exemptions from council tax where a dwelling is left empty. These include up to six months for dwellings which are unoccupied and substantially unfurnished and up to 12 months where they also need major repair work to render them habitable or are undergoing structural alteration. Once an empty dwelling ceases to be exempt, it will attract a 50 per cent. charge.

We believe that the current exemptions are fair. However, we are aware of concerns about council tax on empty homes in areas where demand for housing is very low and we will continue to keep the fairness of the council tax under review.

Business Rates

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much revenue was raised from the business rate in the Greater London area during the last 12 months. [149368]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information requested is not yet available. However, local authorities in the Greater London area contributed an estimated £2.720 billion from business rates to the non-domestic rating pool in 1999–2000. This figure is still subject to audit approval.

Social Housing

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 February 2001, Official Report, columns 376–77W, if he will give the figures for investment in (a) council housing and (b) housing owned by registered social landlords at constant prices. [149590]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The capital resources made available by central Government to support housing investment by local authorities and registered social landlords in the years since 1990–91 at constant 1999–2000 prices are as follows:

	Cash	(1999–2000) Constant
Housing capital allocations to local authorities[1]
1991–92	1,682	2,079

[1] Covers credit approvals, capital grants, PFI schemes for council housing and the resources to be made available under the arms length management initiative but excludes Estate Action allocations (which are now part of Regeneration Budgets). Local authorities housing capital programmes provide resources to improve poor condition private sector housing or develop new affordable housing as well as renovating or improving the council housing stock.
[2] Public funded investment in RSL housing through the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme (ADP) and, from 2001–02, the Safer Communities Supported Housing Fund.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the extent of the Ministry of Defence's immunity from (a) civil and (b) criminal action under Crown immunity in cases involving (i) death and (ii) personal injury. [149584]

Mr. Meacher: The Queen's Speech on 6 December 2000 announced the Government's intention to draft a Safety Bill. We intend to use this opportunity to fulfil the commitment in our strategy statement "Revitalising Health and Safety" to remove Crown immunity from statutory health and safety enforcement.

In cases of civil claims, Crown immunity was removed by the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, as amended by the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987.

Council Chief Executives

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review procedures for disciplinary proceedings in respect of chief executives in local government. [149470]

Ms Armstrong: We received a number of representations about these disciplinary procedures when consulting on drafts of our proposed guidance to underpin new council constitutions. In the light of these representations we have concluded that these procedures remain appropriate for Chief Executives and in the future should be extended to Chief Finance Officers and Monitoring Officers.

Harlow Council

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he intends to use his powers under the Local government Acts to intervene in Harlow Council; and if he will make a statement. [149469]

Ms Armstrong: A best value inspection of Harlow District Council has recently taken place, and I understand that the Audit Commission and the authority are currently in discussion about the content of the final report, and the recommendations for action by the Council arising from it. The Commission have powers under the Local Government Act 1999 to recommend that the Secretary of State intervenes. No such recommendations have been received.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce changes to controls on the granting of planning permissions for telecommunication masts; and if he will make a statement. [149748]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The consultation exercise seeking views on possible changes to the planning laws relating to mobile phone masts and associated guidance ended on 31 October 2000. The Department is currently analysing the responses. We shall announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Sellafield MOX Plant

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce a decision on the authorisation of the Sellafield MOX plant. [149630]

Mr. Meacher: A decision regarding the authorisation of the plant will be announced only when the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Secretary of State for Health have considered all the relevant information. Consultants are being appointed to assist the Departments in their consideration of the BNFL revised economic case received by my Department on 5 January.

River Wye

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the outcome of the public inquiry on the River Wye will be published; and if he will make a statement. [149523]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The application made by the Environment Agency for an Order under the Transport and Works Act 1992 to confer on it powers to regulate navigation on the River Wye has raised complicated issues which require very careful consideration. Following the public inquiry into the application we received detailed representations from parties to the inquiry, including the Agency. Last year, in the interests of proper administration, we made these representations available to others appearing at the inquiry so that they could comment on them. We are now considering their comments along with the Inspector's Report.

We will make a decision on the application as soon as possible. Before doing so, we will consult the National Assembly for Wales since the proposed Order would, if made, affect Wales as well as England.

Community Transport

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 2001, Official Report, column 318W, on community transport, if he will list those successful bids to the 1999 competition which included further funding for schemes successful in the 1998 competition; if he will estimate the amount granted within those bids for continuation funding; and what total amount was granted in the 1999 competition as a whole. [149594]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 8 February 2001]: Four successful bids totalling £710,124 from Somerset, Wiltshire, West Sussex county councils and West Yorkshire PTA were for further funding for schemes funded by the 1998 competition. All this total was for continuation funding apart from some provision in the Somerset bid for expansion of the service to operate on additional days of the week. The total awarded in the 1999 competition was £16.8 million.

Gloucestershire Fire and Rescue Service

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors were taken into consideration in deciding the level of central grant allocation for Gloucestershire Fire and Rescue Service for 2001–2; and if he will make a statement. [149627]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Gloucestershire Fire and Rescue Service do not receive revenue support grant. A grant is allocated to Gloucestershire county council which provides necessary funding for the Gloucestershire Fire and Rescue Service.

The Government allocate grant through Standard Spending Assessments (SSAs). The following indicators are used to determine the fire block of the SSA:

Resident population;

Fire calls;

Population density;

'A' Risk areas;

Coastline;

Fire safety enforcement;

Fire safety education; and Fire pensions.

With the exception of the fire safety and pensions indicators the weightings are based upon expenditure of fire authorities in 1990–91.

An area cost adjustment is applied, where appropriate, to reflect differences in the cost of providing fire services in London, the rest of the South East and the remainder of the country.

Emergency Vehicle Drivers

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will introduce mandatory training for all drivers of emergency vehicles; what the minimum training requirements will be; and if he will make a statement. [149691]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 February 2001]: Core competencies for driving emergency vehicles have recently been agreed by technical experts from the Driving Standards Agency, police, fire, ambulance and armed services. The services are now consulting their constituent members about adoption, which I hope will be by the autumn. Each service will tailor the supporting training to their drivers and vehicles, though experience and best practice will be shared. The public services concerned will be able to ensure that these new standards will apply to directly employed drivers, and those providing contracted services.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the outline proposals for the safety study of the A66 were presented to the regional planning authorities; when each planning body gave its approval; and when the study commenced. [149816]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 February 2001]: The three regional planning authorities were consulted in December 1998/January 1999 on the proposed programme of studies identified in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England". Further consultants have been undertaken throughout the development stages of the A66 Safety Study with regards the terms of reference and study brief.

The regional planning authorities in the North-east, North-west and Yorkshire and the Humber continue to be individually represented on the A66 Safety Study Steering Group.

The consultants were appointed to undertake the study in March 2000 and the final report is expected in spring 2001. The final report will be presented to regional planning authorities for their consideration.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will have complete road accident figures for all highways for the year 2000. [149813]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 February 2001]: Summary figures for the year 2000 are scheduled to be published in June as a Transport Statistics bulletin "Road Casualties in Great Britain: Main Results: 2000". A copy will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how long he expects the regional planning bodies to take in considering the safety study of the A66. [149815]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 February 2001]: This is a matter for the three individual regional planning bodies representing the North-east, North-west and Yorkshire and the Humber regions.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which regional planning conference needs to give its endorsement to the Temple Sowerby bypass before it can proceed. [149814]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 February 2001]: The North West Regional Assembly, in its capacity as regional planning body, must endorse the Temple Sowerby bypass before it can proceed.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he announced that there would be a safety study into the A66. [149817]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 9 February 2001]: The A66 Safety Study was included in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England" which was published in July 1998.

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 7 February 2000, Official Report, column 534W, concerning road traffic accidents, when the information will be available; and if he will supply the information when it becomes available. [150082]

Mr. Hill: Full details of all road accident casualty figures for the period 17 October to 31 December 2000 will be published for analysis in early June 2001.

Between 17 October and 13 December 1999 there were 857 fatalities and 8,461 serious injuries arising from road accidents.

Regeneration Initiatives

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to ensure that transport links support regeneration initiatives. [149381]

Mr. Hill: Transport has a key role to play in supporting regeneration. The increased investment of £180 billion set out in our 10 Year Plan for transport will, over the next 10 years, deliver significant improvements for our road, rail and local transport infrastructure. It will provide the funding to implement the transport priorities emerging from the new regional transport strategies, regional development strategies, local transport plans and community strategies. It will deliver significantly better public transport and reduced congestion on our roads, and provide better access to jobs and services. It will contribute to the vision set out in our Urban White Paper, published in November, which looks to make urban areas attractive places in which people want to live, with strong economies, better services and improved local environments.

Rail Services

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what mechanisms exist to (a) challenge and (b) review the Strategic Rail Authority's definition of the core proposition for rail franchises; [149496]

(2) what powers the Rail Regulator has in relation to the definition of the core proposition for rail franchises; [149502]

(3) what (a) instructions and (b) guidance he has given to the Strategic Rail Authority on the core proposition of the Transpennine Express Franchise; [149490]

(4) what powers he has to order a redefinition of the core proposition for a rail franchise; [149494]

(5) if his Department requires the Strategic Rail Authority to take account of (a) regional development plans, (b) SRB investment, (c) projected future passenger plans and (d) other factors in defining the core proposition for rail franchises. [149501]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State will in due course issue new Directions and Guidance to the Strategic Rail Authority under the Transport Act 2000 and in the meantime he has issued Interim Directions and Guidance effectively maintaining the instructions and guidance previously issued under the Railways Act 1993, a copy of which is in the Library. These include criteria for replacement franchises. The criteria do not include the specification of core propositions for the Trans Pennine Express or any franchise. These are matters for the authority.

The instructions and guidance require the authority to consult various bodies, including the Rail Regulator, regional planning bodies, regional development agencies and local authorities on the replacement of franchises. The authority also has a general objective to increase the number of passengers travelling by rail. The Secretary of State's consent is required to the award of a new franchise.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if it is his Department's intention that the core proposition for rail franchises should be the level of service once provided by British Rail; [149498]

(2) what mechanisms he uses to safeguard existing levels of rail passenger service during refranchising; [149382]

(3) if he will instruct the Strategic Rail Authority to take account of the possible effect on the tourist industry of reducing the level of rail services. [149493]

Mr. Hill: The Strategic Rail Authority has stated that all new franchises will be based on existing Passenger Service Requirements (PSRs), providing for a specified minimum service level. The existing PSRs are based on the level of services provided by British Rail at the time initial franchises were let.

The Authority expect bidders for the new franchise to surpass the minimum requirements, making proposals for development of services during the course of the new franchise. There are no plans to reduce the level of services. The core proposition for the new Trans Pennine Express (TPE) franchise is all limited stop, inter urban services currently operated by the existing North Western and Northern Spirit franchises. As a guide to the proposals expected, the Authority has produced specific development objectives for the TPE franchise which have been well publicised. The Authority has been consulting widely about the aspirations of key stakeholders.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) on how many occasions officials from Strategic Rail Authority have met representatives from (a) Blackpool council and (b) Barrow in Furness council to discuss the Trans Pennine Express franchise in the last 12 months; [149383]

(2) what discussions there have been between the Strategic Rail Authority and (a) the North West Development Agency, (b) the North West Regional Assembly and (c) his Department concerning the refranchising of the Trans Pennine Express Service; [149491]

(3) on how many occasions officials from the Strategic Rail Authority have met representatives from (a) Cumbria county council and (b) South Lakeland district council to discuss the Trans Pennine Express refranchising in the last 12 months. [149492]

Mr. Hill: The Strategic Rail Authority have been consulting key stakeholders about the Trans Pennine franchise for some time. Initial consultation meetings took place in Newcastle (6 June), Leeds (7 June) and Manchester (8 June). Invitees include all those authorities mentioned by my hon. Friend. A specially convened meeting took place on 19 January which included representatives of Blackpool borough and Cumbria county councils. In addition, the authority has met, separately, the North West Development Agency and the North West Regional Assembly. My Department is kept informed of progress on all replacement franchises.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his Department's definition of the terms (a) large towns and cities, (b) key transport hubs and (c) centres of economic activity is as used by the Strategic Rail Authority in its strategic development objectives. [149495]

Mr. Hill: The Strategic Rail Authority's definitions are not specific and are flexible but focus on key destinations on inter city rail routes, airports, motorway intersections and ports.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the local transport plan settlement for Blackpool was made on the assumption of maintenance of the current level of rail services to the town. [149497]

Mr. Hill: When assessing the local transport plan for Blackpool, we considered both the current level of rail services and their growth potential. We took account of the proposal to provide a new multi-modal interchange and the fact that negotiations were taking place with train operators and authorities to increase the frequency and quality of rail passenger services to Blackpool.

South West Regional Development Agency

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for funding have been made to the South West Regional Development Agency; how many have been approved; how many are awaiting the release of funds for approved projects; and what the average waiting time has been between approval and release of funds. [149580]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Since 1 April 1999 to date, the South West RDA has received 1,312 applications; 879 have been approved; there are none (0) awaiting the release of funds for approved projects; and there is no waiting time between approval and release of funds.

Brownfield Developments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made by (a) his Department and (b) the European Commission on finding an alternative to the Partnership Investment Programme for brownfield developments. [149581]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department and the European Commission have made good progress in finding an alternative to the Partnership Investment Programme. A direct development scheme has now been approved, and the Commission have indicated that a decision is likely to be made by the end of this month on two new gap-funding schemes, and a scheme designed to help local communities participate in regeneration projects. In addition, we are continuing to explore with the Commission the possibility of a new regeneration framework under which State aid would be permitted for the physical regeneration of derelict or disused sites throughout the community.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to address the concerns of tenants living in local authority sheltered housing that their landlords could be forced to raise charges for warden services in order to implement the Supporting People policy. [150380]

Mr. Raynsford: Many local authority and large scale voluntary transfer (LSVT) landlords cross subsidise the costs of support services for their tenants, such as warden services in sheltered housing, from their general rent income. This practice will stop when the Supporting People policy is implemented in April 2003. However, I am pleased to say that the Government will be making additional provision available through the new Supporting People grant in 2003–04 to cover these costs in full.

In the light of this, there will be no need for local authority or LSVT landlords to increase charges to tenants, either now or in 2003–04 when Supporting People is introduced. Draft guidance will shortly be circulated to local authority and LSVT landlords setting out how these cross subsidies should be identified and recommending that these particular landlords freeze the amounts that sheltered housing tenants pay for their support services at 2000–01 levels in real terms.

When Supporting People starts funding these services in April 2003, the local authority and LSVT landlords concerned will retain the savings they make by ending cross subsidies. As a condition of paying the additional Supporting People grant, we will expect these landlords to demonstrate how they will make effective use of these resources to deliver the Government's housing policy objectives more fully and more quickly, for example by improving the condition of their housing stock and the quality of their housing management services.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Policies (Staffordshire, Moorlands)

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out with statistical information relating as directly as possible to Staffordshire, Moorlands constituency, the effects on Staffordshire, Moorlands of his Department's policies and actions (a) since 2 May 1997 and (b) in the 12 months ending on 1 May 1997. [149191]

Mr. Byers: In the periods in question, the following amounts of grant were offered to businesses in the Staffordshire, Moorlands local authority district:

(a) since 2 May 1997: £44,639 under the Smaft (innovation grant) scheme;

(b) in the 12 months ending 1 May 1997: £28,080 under the Smart scheme.

These were to assist small businesses to develop new products and processes. It is not possible to state the impact they would have had on the economy of the area. From 1 March 2000 businesses in the area have also been eligible for Enterprise Grants.

In addition, I announced a number of measures in August 2000 to benefit the area, including £1.6 million funding for the Ceramics Industry Forum.

Latest Office for National Statistics estimates show that, since the introduction of the national minimum wage in April 1999, there has been a direct and beneficial impact on the pay of the lowest paid workers in the west Midlands. The minimum wage benefits some 130,000 workers and their families in the west Midlands. No estimates are available for parliamentary constituencies. The latest data also show that it has helped close the gap between the highest and lowest earners and helped reduce the differential between men's and women's pay. This has been achieved without any discernible adverse impact on the economy.

Since November 1998, 3.1 million workers across the UK have benefited from the entitlement to four weeks' paid annual leave. No estimates are available for parliamentary constituency or region.

We estimate that 38,000 female employees in the west Midlands give birth each year. All of these who have been employed for longer than six months with their current employer will now benefit from enhanced maternity leave, as introduced on 15 December 1999. There are no estimates available for Parliamentary constituencies.

Nissan

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurances have been sought from Nissan, in agreeing future industrial assistance, about the UK content of cars produced at Sunderland. [149602]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The offer of an RSA grant to Nissan did not require any assurances on future sourcing of components. This is a matter for the company and its suppliers.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the percentage UK content of cars produced by Nissan at Sunderland is; and what the UK content will be following the group of industrial assistance. [149601]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Nissan confirm that there is 70 per cent. UK content in the cars produced in Sunderland. It is not yet known what the UK content will be following the approval of the RSA grant.

Premium Rate Phone Lines

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to give ICSTIS further powers to regulate the establishment and prices charged for premium rate phone lines. [149886]

Ms Hewitt: The regulation of Premium Rate Services (PRS) lines is a matter for the Office of Telecommunications (Oftel) and The Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services (ICSTIS). ICSTIS effectively supervises and enforces Codes of Practice which concern the establishment and running of PRS including provisions relating to pricing information. The provisions of the Code in relation to live conversation services are underpinned by a condition in network operators' licences which is enforceable by Oftel. Following consultation in 1999–2000, Oftel drew up a statement proposing measures to strengthen the regulatory regime through statutory underpinning of a Code applying to most PRS, not just live services.

Mirror Group Newspapers

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the inquiry into Mirror Group Newspapers; when the report of the inquiry is due to be published; and what is the inquiry's total cost to date. [149699]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will (1) estimate the cost to public funds to date of the inquiry into Mirror Group Newspapers plc; [149927]

(2) make a statement on the progress of the inquiry set up in 1992 into the affairs and membership of Mirror Group Newspapers plc. [149928]

Mr. Byers: The inspectors have made substantial progress towards completing their inquiries and I am hopeful that they will be submitting their report to me shortly. A decision on whether to publish the report will only be made following its receipt. The cost of the inspection to date (excluding Value Added Tax) is £8,205,446.

Tobacco

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet representatives of British American Tobacco prior to 24 February. [149883]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is currently considering a number of requests for meetings about the draft EU Directive on the manufacture, presentation and sale of tobacco products including one from British American Tobacco.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies he has made on the economic impact of the European Directive on Tobacco Control. [149882]

Ms Hewitt: None. However, the European Commission has undertaken such a study.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received regarding the European Directive on Tobacco Control; and if he will make a statement. [149881]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has received a number of representations from MPs, MEPs, firms, trade union representatives and individuals about aspects of the draft EU Directive on the manufacture, presentation and sale of tobacco products.

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the impact on employment of the European Directive on Tobacco Control. [149884]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry understands the concerns that have been raised about the possible impact on employment of certain aspects of the draft EU Directive on the manufacture, presentation and sale of tobacco products. However, he does not accept that job losses and factory closures are inevitable if the directive is passed as currently worded.

Transtec

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the inquiry into the collapse of Transtec plc to be published. [149926]

Mr. Byers: I hope to be able to publish the report in the near future.

Corus

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the UK steel market is controlled by Corus. [149357]

Mr. Byers: The UK steel market is open and competitive and not subject to control by individual companies. Corus does not release figures showing its share of the UK market but in the year 2000 UK demand for steel mill products was 13.8 million tonnes of which 53 per cent. (7.3 million tonnes) was supplied from UK steel mills. We estimate that 90 per cent. of this was produced by Corus.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advance information Corus provided to his Department prior to its closure and redundancy announcement. [149360]

Mr. Byers: Since early December when Corus announced a fundamental review of operations my Department was in frequent contact with Corus. The company refused to discuss details of their overall plan. The detailed information broken down by numbers of jobs proposed to be lost and at which plant was provided at 8.00 am on 1 February.

Workplace Bullying

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his Department's estimate is of the (a) number of working days per year lost as a result of workplace bullying and (b) annual cost to industry of working days so lost. [149991]

Mr. Alan Johnson: This information is not available. There are no official estimates of either days lost per year as a result of workplace bullying, or, consequently, of annual costs to industry of days lost.

Universal Bank

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Universal Bank will be available to people who hold a bank account. [149658]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Universal Banking Services has two elements. Under the first element the banks will make their basic bank accounts accessible at post offices. The second element of the proposition is a service for people who are unable or unwilling to open even a basic bank account. This account, available only through post offices will allow benefits claimants to access their benefits in cash at a post office using a Post Office based card instead of an order book or giro. Both basic bank accounts and the Post Office card accounts will be available to people with an existing bank account. The Post Office card account will, however, be available only to persons in receipt of pensions, benefits or tax credits. Beyond that there are no plans for there to be any other eligibility restrictions.

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if people who (a) have and (b) do not have a bank account will be able to open the new Post Office-based Universal Bank service account. [149847]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Post Office card account will only be available to persons in receipt of pensions, benefits and tax credits. Beyond that there are no plans for there to be any other eligibility restrictions.

PRIME MINISTER

Policy Presentation (Corrections)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what instructions he issues to officials about volunteering corrections to mis-statements of, and righting misunderstandings concerning, his policy, opinions and reactions to public issues. [146439]

The Prime Minister: The Ministerial Code sets out the responsibilities of Ministers in relation to the correction of errors.

Patrice Lumumba

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government have published all records relating to the death of Patrice Lumumba, the Congolese leader; and if he will make a statement. [148278]

The Prime Minister: Official records over 30 years old are routinely transferred to the Public Record Office (PRO) in accordance with the Public Records Acts. Any records of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Cabinet Office, the Prime Minister's Office and the Ministry of Defence which refer to the death of Patrice Lumumba in 1961 are available at the PRO and can be found using the PRO's website www.pro.gov.uk. None have been identified as withheld from release.

Lord Paul

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister under what circumstances Lord Paul represents the Government; and if he will make a statement. [149113]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 February 2001]: Lord Paul was appointed Ambassador for British Business in November 1997, along with some 35 other leading figures in British commerce and industry. These positions are voluntary, and their role is not to represent the British Government, but to promote British commercial interests.

Ministerial Code

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions Ministers have submitted cases to him in line with paragraph 109 of the Ministerial Code. [149612]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 7 July 2000, Official Report, column 316W.

Anglo-French Summit

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Anglo-French Summit of 9 February. [150382]

The Prime Minister: The twenty-third UK/French Summit took place in Cahors on 9 February. I was accompanied by my right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary, the Home Secretary, the Defence Secretary and the Minister of State for Transport. We had productive exchanges on a range of bilateral issues, and agreed measures to deal with the problem of illegal immigration. We established a Cross-Channel commission to improve joint management of issues that affect Cross-Channel relations. In addition we agreed to take forward joint work in the fields of maritime safety, food safety, drugs trafficking and the environment.

We also discussed EU, foreign policy and defence issues, and issued declarations on our shared priorities for the Stockholm Special European Council in March, and on further bilateral work in Africa. Copies of these and other agreed declarations have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Asylum Appeals

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what average time is taken to process asylum (a) initial appeals to the Special Adjudicator and (b) further appeals to the Immigration Appeals Tribunal; and if she will make a statement. [150035]

Jane Kennedy: The average times taken during January 2001, for the Immigration Appellate Authority to process cases from receipt to determination, are:

(a) 17.4 weeks for appeals cleared at the Adjudicator tier; and

(b) 33.8 weeks for appeals heard by the Immigration Appeal Tribunal.

The figure for the Immigration Appeal Tribunal (IAT) naturally includes the Adjudicator process. Average times for the IAT only—from receipt of application for leave to appeal until appeal determination—are not available.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Malawi

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her letter of 20 January, regarding the Malawi Mission of Buckfastleigh, what progress she has made in her representations to the Malawi Customs concerning the release of the consignment of tools airfreighted for building an orphan village. [149582]

Clare Short: The Malawi Revenue Authority is happy to discuss with the Malawi Mission or its partners in Malawi how to achieve duty free status for the organisation or the consignment in question within the law. The British High Commission in Lilongwe will assist if necessary.

Commonwealth Scholarships

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 16 January 2001, Official Report, column 164W, on Commonwealth scholarships, if she will discuss with the Commonwealth Scholarship Commission Chairman whether scholarships will be offered to dissidents in addition to those nominated by Governments concerned. [148758]

Clare Short: I welcome the Commission's review of the Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan. I am considering, in consultation with the Commission's Chairman, their report's recommendations, which include proposals for ensuring greater openness and transparency in the selection process.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Paisley South (Mr. Alexander) of 8 January 2001, Official Report, column 355W, if she will give a breakdown of the money spent on HIV/AIDS related work last year, outlining major headings of expenditure. [149324]

Clare Short: Last year, the Department of International Development spent around £85 million on major bilateral sexual and reproductive health programmes in the range of countries including, Malawi, South Africa, Ghana, Uganda, Zimbabwe, China and India. The work of these programmes impacts directly on HIV/AIDS. My Department also made the following contributions and commitments in 1999–2000 to agencies involved in tackling HIV/AIDS.

Agency	£ million
United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA)	15
World Health Organisation, Human Reproduction Programme (WHO/HRP)	1
United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS)	3
International AIDS Vaccine Initiative (IAVI) over five years	14

UN Desertification Convention

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps have been taken to implement commitments under the UN Desertification Convention. [149857]

Clare Short: My Department is implementing the UK's commitments under the UN Convention to Combat Desertification through its bilateral and multilateral assistance programmes. Given that there are close links between poverty and the problems of desertification and land degradation, much of DFID's work to combat poverty in rural areas helps to meet the objective of the Convention. Over £200 million is currently committed to DFID activities which help poor people protect their livelihoods against problems such as desertification and drought.

India

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Indian Government owe to (a) the UK and (b) other European Union countries; and what action her Department is taking to press for the cancellation of this debt. [149462]

Clare Short: According to the Government of India's most recent published data, in 1999 their official debt to the UK was 167.9 million rupees (£2.5 million at the present exchange rate), while their official debt to the European Union was 212.53 billion rupees (£3.16 billion).

The UK supports and advocates debt relief for Heavily Indebted Poor Countries which are undertaking pro-poor economic reforms. But India's external debt position is moderate, with a debt-service ratio of 16 per cent. (as of March 2000), and large-scale international reserves (estimated at US$ 40 billion). We are not therefore pressing for cancellation of India's debt. However our development assistance in India includes substantial support to help the Indian Government reform and improve their fiscal management, particularly at the State level where fiscal deficits are high.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her policy is on humanitarian aid to the children of Iraq. [147787]

Clare Short: The opportunities for assisting Baghdad-controlled Iraq are greatly constrained by the regime's policies. We are spending some £5 million this financial year to help rehabilitate water and sanitation systems which should reduce risks to children's health. In northern Iraq, through Save the Children's Fund and other non-governmental organisations, we are funding programmes to improve children's well-being. This financial year we expect to spend some £1.25 million.

The UN's oil-for-food programme is contributing significantly to improved life opportunities and reduced infant and child mortality for children in the areas of Iraq not controlled from Baghdad. Tragically in Baghdad controlled Iraq, children are suffering badly as the Government of Iraq manipulate the suffering of their people for propaganda purposes.

Expenditure (GDP)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made towards meeting the Government's target for expenditure on overseas development as proportion of gross domestic product. [145774]

Clare Short: Preliminary estimates on the ratio of official development assistance to Gross National Product suggest that the UK will report a ratio of at least 0.29 per cent. of GNP for the year 2000. This is consistent with the Government's commitment to reach a level of 0.33 per cent. by 2003–04. Provisional data for the year 2000 will become available in April, with final figures confirmed in June.

CABINET OFFICE

Ombudsman Review

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when she plans to (a) publish the results of the consultation exercise and (b) announce the Government's policy on the review of the Ombudsman. [149551]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock Chase (Tony Wright) on 17 January 2001, Official Report, column 333.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has undertaken of the impact on the (a) working hours, (b) staffing and (c) financial cost to SMEs of operating the Working Families Tax Credit. [149369]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the impact on small and medium-size enterprises of operating the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) are given in paragraphs 43 to 62 of the Regulatory Impact Assessment for the Tax Credits Bill 1999. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many farmers in (a) Lancashire and (b) England are in receipt of the Working Families Tax Credit. [149742]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that about 11,000 families in England where the main earner was either a farmer or a worker in agricultural, forestry or fishing occupations were in receipt of the Working Families Tax Credit at the end of August 2000.

The 5 per cent. sample of awards on which these estimates are based does not yield a reliable estimate of the number of these families that were in Lancashire.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the cost of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question. [150381]

Mr. Timms: As at April 2000, the latest date for which data are available, the average cost of answering a written parliamentary question and an oral parliamentary question was £123 and £285 respectively.

Fuel Duty Rebate

Caroline Flint: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many representations he has received supporting the introduction of a fuel duty rebate for community transport operations; [149077]

(2) what estimate he has made of the annual cost of introducing a fuel duty rebate for community transport operations. [149078]

Mr. Hill: I have been asked to reply.

We have received a considerable number of representations about this matter.

Our 10-year transport plan, "Transport 2010", announced that we would be working up detailed proposals for extending fuel duty rebate to a wider range of community transport services. We will shortly be consulting relevant organisations as part of this process. Our aim is to have the new arrangements up and running in the next financial year.

The term "community transport" covers a wide range of different services and organisations and the cost of extending the scope of the rebate scheme would depend on the precise definition of eligibility adopted. Decisions will be made on this in the light of the consultation. Further announcements will be made as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE Inquiry

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to implement the recommendations of the BSE Inquiry report. [150420]

Mr. Nick Brown: The BSE Inquiry report was published on 26 October 2000. In welcoming it, I said that the Government's substantive response would be announced in the coming months. I announced on 21 December 2000 that we would be making an interim response as a basis for public discussion before finalising the Government's full response.

The Government's interim response was published on Friday, 9 February. There will be a parliamentary debate on 15 February. The response has been prepared with contributions from across Whitehall and the devolved Administrations and seeks to present the actions being taken in all the legislatures.

This response is intended to focus on the future. It sets out what has happened since March 1996—which was the point to which we asked the Inquiry to take its examination. It gives full attention to the 167 specific findings and conclusions in the Inquiry report, and to the major themes that emerge from it: management of scientific advisory committees and how scientific advice is used in developing policy; openness; risk and uncertainty; the structure of government and the legislative framework; and the need for rigour in the development and implementation of policy.

The response takes the opportunity to set out how the Government are taking the lessons and comments in the report as a spur to developing the action already under way as a result of the Modernising Government agenda, the Office of Science and Technology's work on the use of science in government and work on developing a Government Statement on Risk.

The Government intend that this interim response should be the subject of positive action to seek the views of interested parties. Public debate on how the lessons in the report can be most effectively applied and embedded across Departments will help to ensure a comprehensive final Government Response to the BSE Inquiry report.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the outcome was of the review of the civil servants who were criticised in the BSE Inquiry report. [150291]

Mr. Nick Brown: Sheila Forbes, as an independent Civil Service Commission, has now completed her review of the criticisms in the report of serving civil servants. She has recommended to the Permanent Secretaries of the Departments involved that there is no justification for disciplinary action to be taken against any serving civil servant. They have accepted this recommendation and the civil servants involved have been informed.

Farm Holdings

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the oral answer of 24 January 2001, Official Report, column 920, to the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. George), if he will publish Her Majesty's Government's estimate of (a) the percentage of farm holdings in the United Kingdom which they do not regard as efficient, (b) the number of farmers and farm workers obtaining their livings from them and (c) the proportion of the UK agricultural workforce they represent. [148403]

Ms Quin: The Government do not forecast or publish estimates of the percentage of farm holdings in the United Kingdom which we do not regard as efficient. We do not obtain the detailed business information on the 300,000 or so holdings in the United Kingdom which would be required to attempt to do this. Information on the productivity and performance of the agriculture industry was published by the Ministry on 30 March 2000 as part of the announcement of the Government's Action Plan for Farming in "Strategy for Agriculture: Current and prospective economic situation" paragraphs 26–35.

The Action Plan, now backed by £500 million, is providing short-term relief to the sectors hit hardest by the current economic crisis but also supports longer-term action to encourage industry restructuring. Good progress is being made in delivering the commitments in the plan.

The establishment of the Rural Development Regulation (RDR), or "second pillar" of the CAP, was a substantial step forward in redirecting the CAP away from production support and towards rural development and environmentally-friendly farming. By extending support to activities beyond food production, the RDR will open up new options for farms of differing types, sizes and economic characteristics.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Euro

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what programme of work has been undertaken by his Department and agencies for which his Department is responsible as part of the national changeover plan for preparation for the UK's entry to the euro at current exchange rates; and if he will make a statement. [148411]

Angela Eagle: The Department is conducting work in accordance with the guidance given in the Outline National Changeover Plans and reported in the Fourth Report on Euro Preparations published on 6 November 2000.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of reprinting documents issued by his Department and its executive agencies to replace sterling entries with entries in euros. [148409]

Angela Eagle: In the event of UK entry to the single currency any changes to documents would be dealt with through existing contractual arrangements as part of a normal reprint cycle.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the changes required in the Government's benefits system which would be necessary as a result of a changeover to the euro. [148413]

Angela Eagle: In the event of the UK entering the single currency, benefits systems would not require rule changes although IT system changes would be required to convert amounts in accordance with EU and UK legislation.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost at current exchange rates of changing his Department's, and agencies for which his Department is responsible, computer systems in preparation for the euro. [148408]

Angela Eagle: Should the UK decide to enter the single currency, costs will depend on the approach taken and this is not yet known. There are currently no plans to change existing computer systems prior to a Referendum.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultants his Department is using to advise on the implications and implementation of the changeover plan to the euro; and what budget has been set aside for this purpose. [148412]

Angela Eagle: A number of private sector companies contribute to the normal operational running of the Department. Where appropriate as part of the normal arrangements, consultants in these roles have contributed to preparatory analysis work. No specific budget has been set aside and any costs are contained within the figure published in the Fourth Report on Euro Preparations.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of training staff in his Department and executive agencies for which his Department is responsible in preparation for the euro, at current prices and exchange rates. [148410]

Angela Eagle: In the event of the UK entering the single currency, costs will depend on the approach taken and this is not yet known. No estimate for the cost of training has been made.

Public Relations (Expenditure)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure was in his Department for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000, and what the planned expenditure and breakdown of expenditure for 2000–01 is on (i) public opinion research, (ii) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (iii) direct mail. [149268]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 8 February 2001]: Full figures for 1996–97 are available only for the Department's Headquarters. These are Public Opinion Research £301,083.20, Advertising £3,691,169.64, Direct Mail £63,861.16.

A breakdown of expenditure for the years 1997–98 was given on 17 December 1998, Official Report, columns 718–19W.

A breakdown was given for the estimated spend for 1998–99. The breakdown of expenditure for the years 1998–99 and 1999–2000 is given as follows, as is the estimated spend for the year 2000–01.

For 1998–99 figures for the Benefits Agency were Public Opinion Research £83,703, Advertising, £29,738. Direct Mail £10,524.

The Contributions Agency transferred to the Inland Revenue in April 1999 and no figures are available.

Work done on behalf of the Child Support Agency is done by the Department's Headquarters and these figures are included in that breakdown.

For the War Pensions Agency figures are: Public Opinion Research £4,569, Advertising £1,400, Direct Mail £1,100.

For the Department Headquarters, which includes Communications Directorate and Analytical Services Directorate the figures are: Public Opinion Research £668,179, Advertising £4,617,945.81, Direct Mail £315,346.46.

For the year 1999–2000 for the Benefits Agency figures were: Public Opinion Research £207,440, Advertising £24,406, Direct Mail £98,332.

For the War Pensions Agency figures were: Public Opinion Research £2,388, Advertising £18,000, Direct Mail £1,200.

For the Department's Headquarters the figure was: Public Opinion Research £792,115.14, Advertising £2,756,705.70, Direct Mail £144,301.29.

The estimated spend for the year 2000–01 in the Benefits Agency is: Public Opinion Research £219,499, Advertising £11,502, Direct Mail Nil.

In the War Pensions Agency it is: Public Opinion Research £5,000, Advertising £23,500, Direct Mail £1,400.

In the Department's Headquarters the estimated spend is: Public Opinion Research £1,154,112, Advertising £11,336,000, Direct Mail £5,815,000.

Notes:

1. The term Advertising in my answer relates to TV, Radio and Newspaper advertising.

2. The estimated increase in spending on Advertising for the year 2000–01 takes into account the work being undertaken by the Department around the Minimum Income Guarantee uptake campaign, Pensions Education and anti-fraud activity.

Maternity Benefits

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about extending maternity benefits. [149589]

Angela Eagle: We are improving maternity benefits as part of our drive to help women achieve a better balance between paid work and family life. Last year we extended Maternity Allowance (MA) to low-paid employed and self-employed working women and increased the rate of benefit for self-employed women. These improvements mean that around 16,000 low-paid working women will get MA for the first time and around 11,000 self-employed women will receive a higher rate of benefit.

On 7 December last year the Department of Trade and Industry published a consultation document "Work and Parents: Competitiveness or Choice" which sets out a wide range of options and invites views on what the priority measures are that will help working parents at the same time as helping business. The document contains options to extend maternity benefits, which include increasing the flat rate of maternity pay and extending the maternity pay period as well as improvements to parental leave.

The consultation period ends on 7 March 2001 and we will take account of the responses we receive when considering which options should be taken forward.

Child Poverty

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children in Yorkshire and Humberside were living under the official poverty line in each of the years (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (e) 2000. [149439]

Mr. Bayley: There is no official poverty line defined by the Government. Poverty and social exclusion are complex multi-dimensional issues, affecting many aspects of people's lives—their income, health, housing, the quality of the environment, opportunities to work and to learn. There is no single measure which can capture the complex problems which need to be overcome.

The annual report, "Opportunity for all—one year on: making a difference" (Cm 4865) sets out and monitors the Government's strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Sports Council Funding

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the total Sports Council funding was for (a) tennis, (b) swimming, (c) basketball, (d) netball, (e) football, (f) rugby union and (g) rugby league in England for each year since 1990. [149048]

Kate Hoey: The English Sports Council is collating this information and I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible. I will place a copy of my letter in the Libraries of both Houses.

Art Works

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many, and what percentage of the total, works of art and artefacts in each of the national collections are in storage because of insufficient space to exhibit them. [149460]

Mr. Alan Howarth: DCMS does not hold all of this data centrally. We have therefore contacted the National Museums and Galleries to request the information for a reply to my hon. Friend. I will write to him as soon as this is available, placing copies of my letter in the Libraries of both Houses.

Library and Leisure Services

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the levels of spending on (a) library services and (b) leisure services per head of population in (i) Staffordshire and (ii) each other county of England (1) in the current year and (2) in each of the last three years. [150018]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 8 February 2001, Official Report, columns 684–88W.

HEALTH

Contraception

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been commissioned of the safety of post-coital contraception with respect to girls aged (a) 12 years to 14 years and (b) 14 years to 16 years; and if he will make a statement. [146771]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 23 January 2001]: Once a young woman becomes fertile, the Faculty of Family Planning and Reproductive Health Care advise that there are no physiological reasons why emergency contraception should not be used if she is at risk of pregnancy because she has had unprotected sex.

The safety profile of EHC is believed to be similar in those under 16 years of age to those over 16. Emergency contraception has been used worldwide, including by women aged under 16, since the 1980s, and no major safety concerns have arisen.

Clinical trials for new drugs are not routinely conducted on young people under 16 unless there is a specific indication such as childhood leukaemia.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 6 February 2001, Official Report, column 484W, what guidance he has given to schools regarding the potential liability of school staff who dispense emergency contraception to girls under the age of 16 years in the event of medical complications arising as a result of the emergency contraception. [150085]

Yvette Cooper: Emergency contraception in schools can be provided only by school nurses with a family planning background and specialised training to work under patient group directions. School nurses in maintained schools are employed by the National Health Service. Potential liability is covered by the arrangements of the NHS body concerned.

Vaccinations (Barnsley and Doncaster)

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children in (a) Barnsley and (b) Doncaster were vaccinated against (i) MMR and (ii) meningitis in (A) 1999 and (B) 2000. [147318]

Yvette Cooper: Information about the percentage of children immunised against measles, mumps and rubella by age 2 and by age 5 is contained in the Statistical Bulletin "NHS Immunisation Statistics, England: 1999–2000." A copy of the bulletin is in the Library and can also be found on the Department of Health website, www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0026.htm.

Information on uptake of meningitis C vaccine in all age groups immunised through the current programme is still being collected. This information will be published when it becomes available.

Nurses

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital and community health service nurses who are (a) qualified, (b) unqualified, (c) midwives, (d) learner staffs, and (e) Project 2000 students, as whole-time equivalents were employed (i) in each region and (ii) in total in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [148608]

Mr. Denham: Data from 1990 onwards are in the table. To provide data from 1979 would incur disproportionate costs.

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
2. Figures exclude agency staff.
3. Due to rounding totals may not equal the sum of component parts zero.
4. "Others" includes staff employed by SHAs, OSAs and other centrally based services.
5. A new classification of the non-medical workforce was introduced in 1995. Information based on this classification is not directly comparable with earlier years.
6. New regional office boundaries were introduced in 1994 and 1999.
7. Since 1989 traditional pre-registration nurse training was gradually replaced by Project 2000 training. Project 2000 students are funded by bursaries and are not employed by the HCHS; they are not therefore included in the workforce numbers.

Cardiac Diseases

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died of cardiac diseases in the Gateshead and South Tyneside health authority area in 2000. [148745]

Yvette Cooper: In 2000, 927 residents from the Gateshead and South Tyneside health authority area died from cardiac diseases. This includes those who died as a result of ischaemic heart disease and heart failure. A small percentage of deaths will be excluded as it is more difficult to attribute them to cardiac diseases.

Smoking

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is introducing to encourage and support smokers who wish to stop smoking. [148743]

Yvette Cooper: As set out in the White Paper, "Smoking Kills", the Government's tobacco control strategy involves a comprehensive health education programme backed up by local cessation services.

The education programme is supported by a national telephone helpline which, besides offering information, advice and support, can direct smokers to their local services.

A national network of National Health Service smoking cessation services provides expert help to smokers wanting to give up, and up to six weeks free nicotine replacement therapy (NRT) is available to smokers entitled to free prescriptions. The cessation aid Zyban (Buproprion) is already available on NHS prescription and we are considering the outcome of a recent consultation exercise on a proposal to provide all NRT products on this basis.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died of smoking-related diseases in the Gateshead and South Tyneside area in 2000. [148744]

Yvette Cooper: In 2000, at least 442 residents from the Gateshead and South Tyneside health authority area died from smoking related diseases. This figure is based on percentages of lung cancer, ischaemic heart disease and cerebro-vascular disease deaths. The true figure is likely to be higher as other diseases have been excluded and smoking rates in the area are higher than the United Kingdom average.

Good Health (Jarrow)

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is introducing to encourage healthy eating and exercise and to promote good health in the Jarrow constituency. [148746]

Yvette Cooper: Parts of the Jarrow constituency have been classed as an area for special action within the Tyne and Wear Health Action Zone (HAZ). The HAZ co-ordinates a positive health campaign within the constituency which tackles areas such as smoking cessation, healthy eating, health promotion, accident prevention and physical activity.

Examples of projects within the Positive Health Campaign include the Jarrow Festival smoking cessation project; positive health campaigns at St Aloysius and Greenfields Schools; an aromatherapy project at the PHAB Club; Fitness Up North; a rehabilitation service at the Charles Palmer Centre, Palmer Community Hospital; an older persons information and advice centre; a mobile chip pan fire demonstration unit; a weekend contraception service and the appointment of education for health and healthnet workers.

In addition to the above, the South Tyneside Health Care NHS Trust's Palmer Hospital is affiliated to the World Health Authority's health promoting hospital initiative and is involved in the provision of health related information for patients. The Community Learning Centre project uses the district hospital site as a computer and training access point for the South Tyneside College. The Food Education and Action in South Tyneside partnership with the local authority aims to revive the place of healthy eating among young people. Smoking cessation initiatives include specialist clinics and "smokefree schools awards". Finally, the trust gives seminars to local employers on health issues such as developing policies on stress, smoking and alcohol.

HIV

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines exist for the provision of post-exposure prophylaxis with anti-HIV drugs following potential sexual exposure to HIV. [148671]

Yvette Cooper: The United Kingdom's Chief Medical Officers' Expert Advisory Group on AIDS published updated guidance on HIV Post Exposure Prophylaxis in July 2000. This includes advice on non-occupational (including sexual) exposure. Copies of this guidance are available in the Library and on the Department of Health website at: www.doh.gov.uk/eaga.

Teenage Pregnancy

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken into the relationship between levels of support for parents of young children and levels of teenage pregnancy. [148666]

Yvette Cooper: Development of the cross-departmental teenage pregnancy strategy drew on a full analysis of United Kingdom and international research in the area. There is no direct evidence to suggest any relationship between levels of teenage conceptions and material or financial support for teenage parents. Research does, however, suggest that support offered by a young woman's parents may impact on her decision whether to continue with a pregnancy. Further information on this will become available as the impact of the strategy is evaluated.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has assessed on the nature of the connection between levels of financial or other service support for parents of young children and levels of teenage pregnancy (a) in the UK and (b) in other European countries. [148665]

Yvette Cooper: Development of the cross-departmental teenage pregnancy strategy drew on a full analysis of United Kingdom and international research in this area. Research conducted to inform the Social Exclusion Unit's report on teenage pregnancy found little relationship between a country's allocation of its funds to family related benefits and teenage birth rates. Research in the UK does, however, suggest that support offered by a young woman's parents may impact on her decision whether to continue with a pregnancy. Further information on this will become available as the impact of the strategy is evaluated.

Hospital Developments

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital developments were started in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000. [149131]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table. Since May 1997, 38 major hospital building projects worth over £3.9 billion have been approved to proceed. Of these, 24 schemes had signed final contracts and started construction by the end of 2000.

	Major hospital developments given approval to proceed	Started construction

North Cumbria Health Authority

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the impact of his Department's financial allocation has been on the budget of the North Cumbria health authority in real terms in each year since 1997; and what his estimate is of the impact in 2001–02 on the basis of his proposals in the pre-Budget report. [149297]

Mr. Denham: North Cumbria health authority will have received additional funding in excess of £57 million from 1997–98 to 2001–02. This equates to nearly £35 million extra in real terms. A yearly breakdown is shown in the table.

1997–98	5.609	4.02	2.767	1.99
1998–99	6.512	4.71	2.639	1.91
1999–2000	12.632	6.78	7.788	4.18

Polio

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the specialist units dealing with the late effects of polio and their location. [149101]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 6 February 2001]: The information requested is not held centrally, but the Lincolnshire Post-polio Network website states that 10 clinics deal with the late effects of polio. These are shown in the table.

Clinic
City Hospital Birmingham NHS Trust	Department of Neurology
South Buckinghamshire NHS Trust	Department of Neurology
Papworth Hospital, Cambridge	Respiratory Support and Sleep Centre
Havering Hospitals NHS Trust	Essex Centre for Neurological Sciences, Department of Neurology
The Glenfield Hospital NHS Trust, Leicester	Department of Respiratory and Thoracic Surgery
St. Thomas' Hospital, London	LANE-FOX UNIT
The Royal Victoria Infirmary and Newcastle Upon Tyne Hospitals NHS Trust	Department of Neurology
Queens Medical Centre University Hospital Nottingham	Neurosciences Directorate
Hope Hospital, Salford	Department of Neurophysiology
Royal Shrewsbury Hospitals NHS Trust	Department of Neurophysiology

Nurse/patient Ratios

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average qualified nurse to patient ratio was in each of the last 10 years, broken down by region; and if he will make a statement. [149351]

Mr. Denham: The data requested are not collected centrally.

Dental Charges

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many courses of dental treatment provided to people aged 60 and over required patients to pay (a) under £100, (b) £100 to £199, (c) £200 to £299 and (d) £300 or over in the last year for which figures are available. [149328]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 7 February 2001]: For people aged 60 years and over paying full patient charges up to the maximum limit for dental treatment in the General Dental Services, the number of courses of treatment with patient charges of (a) under £100 (b) £100 to £199 (c) £200 to £299 and (d) £300 or more is shown in the table for England in 1999–2000.

General Dental Service: Number of courses of treatment by patient charge for patients aged 60 and over

Thousand

Patient charge	Number of courses of treatment
Under £100	4,777.7

NHS Psychiatric Counsellors

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting times have been over the last year to see an NHS psychiatric counsellor in (a) London, (b) Surrey and (c) Devon. [149610]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Oxted Hospital

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the redevelopment of Oxted Hospital to commence; and if he will make a statement. [149698]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 9 February 2001]: Surrey and Sussex Healthcare National Health Service Trust, of which Oxted and Limpfield Hospital is part, is due to submit its full business case for the new community hospital at Oxted to the South East Regional Office of the NHS Executive in March. It is anticipated that work on the new site will start before the end of the year.

Fluoride

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 31 January 2001, Official Report, column 217W, on fluoride, if he will list the research upon which he bases his conclusion; what research he has evaluated which suggests that calcium fluoride is better for dental health than sodium fluoride; if he keeps this situation under constant review; how much money his Department has spent on research into the impact on dental health of (a) calcium fluoride and (b) sodium fluoride in each of the last 30 years; and if he will make a statement. [149762]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 9 February 2001]: Sodium salts are generally used in fluoridation schemes because they are more soluble than calcium salts. In the 1960s the Government undertook three research studies of fluoridation schemes using sodium salts. The cost of the studies is not now available. We have asked the Medical Research Council how, in the light of the recently conducted systematic review of water fluoridation conducted by the University of York, the knowledge base concerning water fluoridation and its effects on health could be strengthened.

Waiting Lists (Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were waiting for hospital treatment in the Mid Essex hospital trust area in (a) the latest month for which figures are available and (b) the previous month. [149695]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 9 February 2001]: The information requested is shown in the table.

November 2000	9,050
December 2000	9,466

Primary Health Care

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the difference in cost between primary health groups and primary health trusts; if their funding will come from local health authority budgets; and if he will make a statement. [149679]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 9 February 2001]: As sub-committees of health authorities, the management costs of a primary care group (PCG) fall to a health authority. Primary care trusts (PCTs) are, however, free standing National Health Service bodies and therefore their management costs are separate from a health authority. However, where PCTs are established, the local health authority will contribute management resources as part of their delegation of functions to a PCT. In addition, PCTs will also receive additional management resources from within that health system to reflect any provider responsibilities that they take on from local NHS trusts.

PCT management costs reflect their increased responsibilities compared to PCGs. The overall expenditure on the management and administration of the NHS is falling in real terms under this Government. The management cost savings achieved so far have included the additional costs of PCGs and the targeted continued reductions for current and future years will include the cost of PCTs.

Outside Contracts

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which services hospital managers are (a) permitted and (b) not permitted to contract out to private companies; and if he will make a statement. [149674]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 9 February 2001]: The list shows services which may be provided under contract by the private sector to National Health Service bodies:

Grounds and gardens maintenance
Property and building maintenance
Equipment maintenance
Domestic services
Catering Laundry
Waste disposal
Pest control
Portering Security
Non-emergency patient transport
Courier services
Information Management and Technology Systems
Financial services
Car parking
Telecommunications
Energy and utilities
Sterile supply services/SSDs
Stores Reception
Post services
Residential accommodation
Day nursery and creche services.

Any proposals which include categories of services or staff other than those on the list must be submitted to the NHS Executive for approval by Ministers.

Mental Health Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the reports into untoward incidents involving

(a) the disappearance and (b) the deaths of patients receiving care for mental health problems in each health authority for each of the past five years. [149500]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Details of all deaths of patients detained under the Mental Health Act are reported to the Mental Health Act Commission. A report of the findings between 1997 and 2000 is due to be published later this month. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library when published.

Suicides

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by health authority, the number of suicides of patients in community health care trusts in each of the past five years. [149499]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally. However, the National Confidential Inquiry into Suicide and Homicide by People with Mental Illness does collect data on suicides by people in contact with mental health services in the year before death. The National Confidential Inquiry began collecting this data in only April 1996. In May 1999 the Inquiry published its report "Safer Services" outlining its findings over the two year period from April 1996. Copies of this report are available in the Library.

Transplant Centres

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria will be used to decide whether Manchester, Birmingham or Sheffield will be the fourth transplant centre to remain in operation following the proposed rationalisation of services. [150073]

Mr. Denham: The study currently under way will determine which of the three units is best able to accommodate an enlarged transplant team based on least disruption to existing and future transplant patients and least disruption to meeting the priority targets for other essential cardiac operations as set out in the National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Higher Education

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many unfilled places there were within the higher education sector in (a) autumn 1997, (b) autumn 1998, (c) autumn 1999 and (d) autumn 2000. [147637]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 30 January 2001]: Planned student numbers are set out each year covering home and EU students funded by the Higher Education Funding Council (HEFCE) and the Teacher Training Agency (TTA). The table shows the total student numbers (full-time equivalents) planned for HEFCE and TTA prior to the academic year in question, and the comparable estimated outturn for each year. Equivalent figures for Autumn 2000 are not yet available. The growth in financial year FTEs between 1996–97 and 1999–2000 was 34,000. The total number of home, EU and overseas students in English institutions (headcounts on 1 December) rose by 76,000 between 1996–97 and 1999–2000.

Thousand[1]

Academic year	Planned FTEs	Estimated	Outturn FTEs
1996–97	1,001	1,009	—
1999–2000	1,043	1,037	—

[1] Figures relate to 1 December. The FTE factor used for part-time students is 0.35. For comparability, figures include some students studying professions allied to medicine for which funding responsibility was transferred to the Department of Health for 1998–99 and exclude 18,500 FTEs in 1999–2000 in further education colleges for which funding responsibility transferred to the Higher Education Funding Council in England in 1999–2000.

UCAS data show that accepted applicants for full-time undergraduate courses rose by 5,000 between 1999–2000 and 2000–01. Early data on applications for 2001–02 show an increase of 2,000 applicants over 2000–01.

New Deal (Job Placements)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the projected average cost of obtaining for a person currently on Incapacity Benefit a sustainable job with the New Deal for Disabled People involving the use of a job broker; and what the average cost is per job of placements under other New Deal programmes. [147735]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 30 January 2001]: We have yet to see what the costs per job will be in practice in the national extension of the New Deal for Disabled People (NDDP).

New Deal is about giving the individual help each person needs to become employable, find a job and keep a job in the future. Some people will need more help than others and so the cost for each person will also vary. Simply calculating or comparing the cost per job alone cannot measure its success.

The information for the other New Deals is set out in the table:

New Deal	Average cost per job (£)
Young people	Less than 4,000
25+	Less than 3,500
Lone parents	[1]1,388
Partners	[2,3]—
50+	[2,4]—

[1] Independent evaluation of the first phase of the New Deal for Lone parents found that the cost per participant moving into work was £1,388.

[2] Not available

[3] The New Deal for Partners of Unemployed People is a relatively new programme. Independent evaluation is being carried out and we will be looking at unit costs.

[4] Detailed information to calculate the actual cost per job for people returning to work through New Deal 50 plus is not yet available.

Investors in People

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment who is responsible for administering the Investors in People scheme locally in the Vale of York; and if he will make a statement. [148956]

Mr. Wicks: The North Yorkshire Training and Enterprise Council administers the Investors in People Standard in the Vale of York. From 1 April 2001, the Learning and Skills Council will assume this responsibility.

Child Care

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that good quality affordable child care is available in (a) Morecambe and Lunesdale and (b) the United Kingdom. [148963]

Ms Hodge: The National Child Care Strategy aims to ensure that affordable, accessible, quality child care is available in every neighbourhood. The Working Families Tax Credit offers help with child care costs to lower income families. £170 million is also being made available until the end of 2003 through the New Opportunities Fund to help start up out of school hours care. By 2003–04, the Department's investment in child care will have trebled from £66 million in this financial year to over £200 million. The Government also intend to make a further £155 million available over the next three years from the New Opportunities Fund. This extra investment will be largely targeted in disadvantaged areas and on childminders. Through the Neighbourhood Nurseries Initiative, we expect to create 45,000 child care places, in up to 900 new 50-place nurseries. Around 50,000 out of school hours clubs in disadvantaged areas are expected to achieve extra start-up support. The Morecambe and Lunesdale area is eligible for the new support being made available for disadvantaged areas. 145,000 childminder places and 450 childminder networks will have been started up by 2004.

New child care places for 546,000 children have been created between April 1997 and September 2000. Taking into account turnover, this has helped an extra 343,000 children. As part of the Strategy 150 Early Years and Child Care Development Partnerships (EYDCPs) have been set up across England[1] to develop new child care places and maintain existing ones across the whole of their local area. Since April 1999 Lancashire EYDCP has created child care places for 487 children in the Morecambe and Lunesdale area and, taking into account turnover, this has helped an extra 125 children.

Lancashire EYDCP is assisting the DfEE in a pilot programme to test innovative approaches to combining early education with care throughout the day. The project is based in the Morecambe and Lune Valley areas and focuses on establishing a partnership between early education providers and the voluntary and private sectors and childminders leading to a co-ordinated seamless child care and early education service for children and families. One of the aims of the project is to help meet the needs of families for whom lack of transport is a barrier to accessing child care, and will include the provision of a mobile nursery facility to operate in rural areas.

Age Discrimination

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to combat age discrimination in the work force. [148964]

Ms Hodge: We made a commitment, last October, to introduce age legislation within six years, by signing the European Employment directive on Equal Treatment. We have negotiated a long implementation period to give us the scope to consult closely with employers and expert groups to prepare workable and beneficial age legislation.

In the meantime we will continue to tackle age discrimination by promoting vigorously the non-statutory Code of Practice on Age Diversity in Employment, which was launched in June 1999. The Code has been promoted to employers through trade press, events and awards initiatives. It sets the standard for non-ageist practices and promotes the business benefits of age diversity in the work force. We must overcome ageist stereotypes and employers need to understand that younger and older workers can add value to their business. In the years leading up to legislation, we want to take employers with us, so that they work with the spirit, not just the letter of the law. In that way we will build up the real culture change we need to overcome discrimination.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many modern apprenticeships in agricultural and land-based industries were (a) initiated, (b) completed and (c) in progress in each of the past five academic years. [149473]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The number of Modern Apprenticeships in agricultural land-based industries for each of the last five academic years were:

(a) Initiated

Academic year	Modern apprenticeships
1995–96	430
1996–97	1,170
1997–98	2,030
1998–99	3,530
1999–2000	3,960

(b) Total leavers and the percentage of leavers gaining a qualification

	Advanced modern apprenticeships:		Foundation modern apprenticeships:
1995–96	50	35	N/A	N/A
1996–97	350	49	N/A	N/A
1997–98	780	41	40	5
1998–99	990	39	680	32
1999–2000	1,160	42	1,880	42

Because the award of a Modern Apprenticeship entails completion of the whole framework, achievement of a qualification at the levels shown is broadly synonymous with completion.

(c) In progress on 30 September each year

Year	Modern apprenticeship
1995	120
1996	570
1997	1,520
1998	2,820
1999	4,770

National Training Organisations

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what public funds were received by each national training organisation in the last three years, broken down by their sourcing from (a) his Department, (b) their sponsoring department, (c) other Government Departments and (d) European Union funds. [149476]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 8 February 2001]: National Training Organisations (NTOs) received £7,102,204 in 1998–99, £14,271,987 in 1999–2000 and are planned to receive £14,943,474 in 2000–01 to help meet their sector skills priorities.

Details from other budgets can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Secondary Modern Schools

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he intends to publish the benchmark information for secondary modern schools intended to assist the evaluation of their work and be available to Ofsted inspectors. [149652]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 9 February 2001]: Secondary modern school benchmark information will be available within four weeks from our Standards website (www.standards.dfee.gov.uk/performance) and Ofsted will use this information during their inspections.

School Performance Targets

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that head teachers of maintained schools agree performance targets with their governing bodies by the revised deadline of 6 April. [149802]

Ms Estelle Morris: The published regulations on performance management, "The Education (School Teacher Appraisal) (England) Regulations 2000" and "The Education (School Teacher Appraisal) (England) (Amendment) Regulations 2000", extended the deadline requiring the appointed governors responsible for the head's review to meet the head and a trained external adviser to agree objectives to 6 April 2001. As a result of the extension of the deadline 86 per cent. of appointed governors have now arranged or completed discussions with advisers. We are reminding schools that have not already made arrangements to do so.

Schools (South Derbyshire)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the capital expenditure in schools was in the South Derbyshire constituency supported by the Funding Agency for Schools in each financial year from 1993–94. [149780]

Jacqui Smith: The table shows the total number and value of allocations for capital projects at Grant Maintained (GM) schools in Derbyshire for each financial year from 1993–94. The Funding Agency for Schools was not established until 1 April 1994. The allocations shown in the table for 1993–94 were made by the Department for Education. Capital funding to GM schools from 1994–95 was made by both project specific allocations to individual schools and by formula allocation to all schools. The total allocations for both types of grant are shown in the table.

Details of actual capital expenditure in each financial year are not readily available as this information was not collected before individual project records were achieved.

Financial year	Number of allocations	Value of allocations (£)	Formula capital allocations (£)	Total each year (£)
1993–94	12	1,016,929	0	1,016,929
1994–95	16	2,903,894	254,610	3,158,504
1995–96	11	413,778	294,355	708,133
1996–97[1]	18	2,806,266	671,868	3,478,134
1997–98	12	864,899	392,758	1,257,657
1998–99	22	3,072,220	288,912	3,361,132
1999–2000	7	1,208,026	158,420	1,366,466

[1] The formula capital allocations include allocations for improvements to security and condition related work that were distributed via the formula capital mechanism.

Education Welfare Officers

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) Educational Welfare Officer posts and (b) vacancies for Educational Welfare Officers there are in each local education authority. [149809]

Jacqui Smith: The information is not collated centrally.

Education Welfare Officers have a long history of working directly with school and families to promote regular attendance. We are currently piloting whether Education Welfare Officers employed directly by schools would help to improve this liaison and assist in our overall aim of reducing the number of school truancies. There are 16 local education authorities involved in the pilots and we will be looking closely at them throughout the year.

Emergency Contraception

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what guidance has been given to schools on whether the dispensation of emergency contraception to girls under the age of 16 years should be allowed by the sex and relationship education policy of the school; [150071]

(2) what provisions have been made to allow parents to stipulate that their daughters under the age of 16 years should not be dispensed emergency contraception without parental consent in cases where the school's sex and relationship education policy allows emergency contraception to be dispensed. [150072]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 6 February 2001, Official Report, columns 484–85W.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Russia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 January 2001, Official Report, column 171W, on Russia, if he will place in the Library copies of the minutes of the meetings of the Plutonium Disposition Planning Groups, each month until it reports. [148862]

Mr. Wilson: The Plutonium Disposition Planning Group is an informal working group and, as such, there are no formal minutes of its meeting. However, we have secured agreement to place details of the main headings of that Agenda and the list of action points arising from the agenda in the Library and will do so after each meeting of the Group.

Qualified Majority Voting

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if those matters in the councils of the European Union that will be added to decision making by qualified majority vote after the coming into effect of the Treaty of Nice are within the categories of shared, or exclusive competence, of the Community and Union and its member states. [149183]

Mr. Vaz: Of those areas which will move to qualified majority voting after the entry into force of the Treaty of Nice, three are within the exclusive competence of the community. They are Articles 111(4) and 123(4) of the EC Treaty concerning monetary policy, and Article 133(5) of the EC Treaty which extends the Common Commercial Policy to trade in some services and the commercial aspects of intellectual property, subject to unanimity in certain situations. All of the remaining areas which will move to qualified majority voting fall either within the shared competence of the Community and the member states or come within the intergovernmental pillars of the Treaty on the European Union where the concept of shared and exclusive competence is not relevant.

Europe Houses

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Europe Houses there are in the United Kingdom; and what is their purpose and their cost. [142968]

Mr. Vaz [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 2000, c. 131W]: We have now been informed by the International Federation of Europe Houses that there are three Europe Houses in the UK.

I am depositing an up to date list of Europe Houses in the Library.

Barzan Al-Takriti

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts Ministers in his Department have had with Barzan Al-Takriti and his representatives. [149585]

Mr. Wilson: There have been no contacts between FCO Ministers and Barzan Al-Takriti or his representatives.

Southern Serbia

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the plan for Southern Serbia presented by Deputy Prime Minister Covic of Serbia. [149773]

Mr. Vaz: The United Kingdom welcomes Serbian Deputy Prime Minister Covic's plan for Southern Serbia, and its approval by the Government of Serbia and of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The UK welcomes in particular the plan's emphasis on the need for a political solution to the crisis in the Presevo Valley, and its focus on the need to establish a multi-ethnic community based on respect for common human and civil rights. The UK calls on armed groups in the Ground Safety Zone to abandon violence and to join the search for a peaceful resolution of the area's problems.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his (a) EU and (b) American counterparts regarding developments in Southern Serbia and Kosovo. [149779]

Mr. Vaz: The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is in frequent contact with his European and US counterparts on developments in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY), including Southern Serbia and Kosovo. Latest developments in the Balkans were discussed with US Secretary of State Colin Powell in Washington on 6 February.

North Korean Workers Party

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of his recent discussions in London with representatives of the North Korean Workers Party. [149740]

Mr. Battle: I met a senior delegation from the International Department of the Korean Workers Party on Tuesday 6 February. We exchanged views on the development of UK/DPRK relations following the establishment of diplomatic relations on 12 December 2000.

Common Security and Defence Policy

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from the US Administration on the further development of the European Union's common security and defence policy. [149793]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 9 February 2001]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed ESDP during his talks in Washington on 6–7 February. The talks confirmed consensus between the US and UK in support of a European defence policy which strengthens NATO and the EU.

DEFENCE

Ballistic Missiles

19. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his assessment is of the threat to the UK and the rest of Europe from ballistic missiles. [148236]

22. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the perceived threat of attack on the United Kingdom by states with rogue Governments. [148239]

Mr. Hoon: We assess that there is currently no significant ballistic missile threat, nor any other significant threat of attack, on the United Kingdom at present. We do, however, continue to monitor developments closely. It is not for the UK to make such assessments in respect of other countries.

30. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his Russian counterparts about ballistic missile defence. [148247]

Mr. Hoon: I last met my Russian counterpart on 7 December 2000 and discussed a range of issues, including missile defence.

Armed Forces (Retention)

21. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the steps being taken to improve retention in the armed forces. [148238]

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the steps taken to improve retention in the armed forces. [148223]

Mr. Spellar: Armed Forces retention is being tackled as a high priority. Our aim is to maintain good levels of retention through policies that genuinely reflect the priorities of our people and their families.

Internal attitude surveys tell us that separation is a factor in both the retention and overstretch of our personnel. We have sought to mitigate the impact of overstretch upon service personnel and to make improvements to the welfare of those who are deployed on operations. For example, we have provided a guaranteed period of post operational tour leave for those returning from operations and wider access to e-mail facilities for personnel to remain in contact with their families.

In addition to these measures a number of single service retention positive initiatives have been or are being introduced.

36. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to improve (a) morale and (b) retention in the armed forces. [148253]

Mr. Spellar: High morale is a vital factor in retaining personnel which in turn improves manning levels, reduces overstretch and helps to obtain the optimum return on investment in training. Our aim is to maintain excellent levels of retention and morale through implementing policies that reflect the priorities of our people and their families.

Internal attitude surveys tell us that separation is a negative factor in the morale and retention of our personnel. We have sought to mitigate the impact that separation has on our people by introducing a number of welfare initiatives, for example:

A guaranteed period of Post Operational tour leave to enable Service men and women to spend some quality time with their families following an operational deployment;

20 minutes free telephone call time per week for personnel who are deployed on operations; a greater spread of e-mail facilities to maintain family communications including electronic "blueys".

Recent enhancements to the families' Concessionary travel scheme give the families of personnel deployed on operations from an overseas base a wider range of choice when planning their return to the UK.

In addition to these measures, a number of single Service retention positive initiatives have or are being introduced; for example: the creation in each Service of easily accessible Career Managers for all ranks; Financial Retention Incentives have been introduced to stop the outflow of Leading Rate Operator Mechanics and Royal Signallers in the Navy and Army respectively; and the RAF has introduced the "Link-up" scheme to fund Civilian Pilots licences in return for longer service.

Sierra Leone

23. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to visit Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [148240]

Mr. Hoon: I returned on 31 January from a short visit to Sierra Leone, and as yet I do not have further plans to visit.

I was able to see for myself the impressive work of the UK armed forces in training the Sierra Leone Army. It was clear to me that we are making a real difference in enhancing the capability and confidence of the Sierra Leone Army battalions that have been trained.

Army (Front-line Equipment)

24. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to enhance front-line equipment for the Army. [148241]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my right hon. Friend the Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones).

Army Support (Bosnia and Kosovo)

25. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the role of the reserve forces in supporting the regular Army in Bosnia and Kosovo. [148242]

Dr. Moonie: We value the significant contribution which members of the reserve forces continue to make to operations in the Balkans. Reservists bring a wide range of specialist skills to the regular units they support in the combat, combat support and combat service support areas.

The reserves have consistently provided between 10 and 14 per cent. of the manpower for the UK's contribution to NATO operations in the former Yugoslavia since operations commenced in 1995. Currently, reservists represent about 10 per cent. of our forces in Bosnia and Kosovo.

Procurement

26. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what savings his Department expects to realise from the Smart Procurement programme. [148243]

Dr. Moonie: Over the three successive annual planning rounds since the inception of the Smart Procurement Initiative, we have identified cost reductions attributable to Smart Procurement which total £2 billion over the ten-year period 1998 to 2008.

We expect to improve on this in the current and future planning rounds.

32. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs have been created as a result of procurement decisions announced since May 1997. [148249]

33. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs he estimates have been (a) created and (b) sustained as a result of procurement decisions announced since May 1997. [148250]

Dr. Moonie: Over 60,000 new contracts are placed each year and the Ministry of Defence does not record the number of jobs created or sustained as a result of each individual procurement decision. However, it is estimated that the number of UK jobs dependent on defence expenditure and equipment exports was 355,000 in 1997–98 and 345,000 in 1998–99.

These figures are drawn from the Defence Analytical Service Agency report on UK Defence Statistics 2000, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

European Defence

28. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to meet the US Defence Secretary to discuss defence co-operation. [148245]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Chipping Barnet (Sir S. Chapman) and for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson).

38. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to meet the new United States Secretary for Defence to discuss the European rapid reaction force. [148255]

Mr. Hoon: There is no standing European Rapid Reaction Force. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Chipping Barnet (Sir S. Chapman) and for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson), Official Report, 12 February 2001, columns 1–3.

New DERA

29. Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is regarding the transfer of Royal Air Force equipment to new DERA following privatisation. [148246]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the announcement I made in the House on 24 July 2000, Official Report, columns 777–89, about our decision to proceed with the implementation of the Core Competence model for the DERA public-private partnership. Under Core Competence, around three-quarters of the current DERA organisation will be turned into a company, referred to as new DERA. For strategic reasons, the remainder will be retained within the Ministry of Defence to carry out functions that could not appropriately be transferred to the private sector.

At the present time no firm decision has been made as to exactly which assets currently held by DERA will be transferred to the new company. If, however, the equipment is RAF owned and on loan to DERA then it will retain that status and be issued to the new company under normal contractual arrangements.

Multinational Defence Co-operation

34. Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in multinational defence co-operation. [148251]

Mr. Hoon: Multinational Defence Co-operation is a long established feature of Britain's defence. It brings a variety of benefits, including enhanced inter-operability, more efficient provision of capability and a fairer sharing of the defence burden. We are currently pursuing a number of new co-operative initiatives with a range of Allies and partners.

Royal Air Force

35. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the manpower strength of the Royal Air Force. [148252]

Mr. Spellar: The total strength of the Royal Air Force on 1 January 2001 was 54,251. This figure includes 252 Full Time Reserve Service personnel.

Armed Forces (Women)

39. Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on women in the armed forces serving in front-line combat roles. [148256]

Mr. Hoon: Women already serve on the front line in ships and aircraft and in combat support roles in the Army. The remaining posts closed to women are mainly in the Royal Marines General Service Cadres, Household Cavalry and Royal Armoured Corps, Infantry and the RAF Regiment. In addition, for health reasons women do not serve in submarines or as clearance divers.

We are considering whether employment options for women in the armed forces can be expanded still further. This work will be completed later this year.

Strategic Defence Review

40. Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in implementation of the Strategic Defence Review. [148257]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Colman).

Warships

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the numbers of skilled craft people required for the Government's warship building programme; and if he will make a statement. [148234]

Dr. Moonie: It is not feasible for the Ministry of Defence to make such an assessment as the numbers required depend on how contractors construct the ships, and we are encouraging them to be innovative in this to improve value for money. None the less, we keep under review a broad assessment of whether there is sufficient capacity in UK shipyards to undertake our forward Royal Navy and Royal Fleet Auxiliary shipbuilding programme. From this we believe that there is sufficient capacity in UK shipyards to undertake our forward warship building programme.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the state of readiness of the Royal Navy's type 42 frigates. [148235]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently 11 type 42 destroyers in service. Of these, seven are available for operations, fulfilling operational tasking, exercises and training requirements. The remaining four are in periods of refit or upgrade and maintenance.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the type 45 destroyer. [148237]

Dr. Moonie: A contract was placed on 20 December with BAE Systems Electronics—the nominated prime contractor for the type 45 programme—for the Demonstration and First-of-Class Manufacture phase covering the completion of the design and build of the first three type 45 destroyers.

Our procurement strategy as announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence in the House on 11 July 2000 has not changed. Under this, subject to agreement between prime contractor and shipbuilders, the first and third ship would be assembled by BAE Systems Marine with a substantial contribution by Vosper Thornycroft (VT) and the second ship by VT. It is expected that the prime contractor will be in a position to place shipbuilding contracts later this year.

Vessel Repairs

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the repair of HMS Tireless and other vessels in that class. [148254]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 29 January 2001, Official Report, columns 64–65W. I would also refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith) on 19 December 2000, Official Report, column 94W.

Defence Jobs (Scotland)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence related jobs were based in each Scottish local authority area in each year since 1996. [149079]

Dr. Moonie: The number of directly employed Ministry of Defence jobs in each Scottish local authority area since 1996 is set out in the table.

In addition to this direct employment, the MOD supports a significant number of defence-related jobs throughout the UK. While DASA (the Defence Analytical Services Agency) does not produce estimates of these employment levels for local authority areas, their estimate[1] of the defence-related employment for Scotland as a whole is set out in the table.

[1] The method used to provide national and regional employment estimates requires the combination of two elements. First, a breakdown of MOD equipment expenditure with UK industry (using the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC)) and second, a measure of sales per employee for each of the industries receiving defence spending (derived from the ONS Business Enquiry and the Labour Market Survey). Dividing the first by the second gives an estimate of those employed directly on defence contracts. These estimates do not include indirect employment. The figures exclude MOD Civilian and Service Personnel. The full estimation methodology is outlined in Defence Statistics Bulletin No. 3). There is no internal method of isolating the amount of employment generated as a direct result of any one procurement decision. The sales per head data used in calculating the data do not distinguish between individual projects and is more an indiction of permanent or ongoing employment within a defence contractor. DASA rely for their information on a Defence Bills Agency (DBA) database—the Monthly Journal of Records (MJRECS), which is populated, in part by data from the DEFFORM 57. This form is completed by commercial staff each time a new MOD headquarters contract is placed (as opposed to Local Purchase Order). The DEFFORM gives quite a detailed picture of the type of contract placed e.g. on pricing, and information describing the region where a contract is placed. The form utilises a 'location of work code'. MOD expenditure on equipment in the UK is derived from the MOD Central Ledger (Return 5) and can be split by region using data from MJRECS—detailed. Each expenditure has a location code for the prime contractor in the transaction. The proportion of expenditure, which might be spent in the region, is determined by the location of the prime contractor and does not take account of those of sub-contractors. The proportions calculated from MJRECS are then applied to total expenditure on equipment in the UK to find the values in each region. Using sales per head data we are able to calculate estimates of employment dependent on equipment expenditure by applying them to regional breakdown derived from MJRECS.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much depleted uranium is left behind in tank gun barrels after the firing of depleted uranium rounds; [146579]

(2) how much depleted uranium is extracted from the barrel of tanks and evacuated into the atmosphere during the firing of depleted uranium rounds; [146580]

(3) what research his Department has undertaken into the potential risks to tank crews of firing depleted uranium rounds; and if he will publish the research. [146578]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 22 January 2001]: MOD officials are researching the reports addressing the issues raised. I will write to the right hon. Member once the review is complete, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 February 2001, Official Report, column 358W, if he will publish a list on the reports on depleted uranium commissioned by his Department from DERA; and if he will place copies of these reports in the Library. [149650]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Pensions

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of retrospectively increasing the pensions of those ex-servicemen retiring in a pensions trough; and if he will make a statement. [149542]

Mr. Spellar: The cost of any adjustment could not be considered in isolation from other public service schemes.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from ex-servicemen affected by the pensions troughs of 1977 and 1991. [149541]

Mr. Spellar: The number of inquiries which the Ministry of Defence has received is set out in the table:

Letters to Ministers and officials—including letters from MPs

KFOR

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of British troops in KFOR. [148229]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), Official Report, 12 February 2001, column 5.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the total value of the change which has not been given to asylum seekers using vouchers in shops. [149289]

Mrs. Roche: Retailers participating in the asylum voucher scheme are not required to keep records of the sums they retain as a result of the no change policy. We believe that asylum seekers are managing to combine their vouchers and cash to ensure they do not lose out. However, we are looking into this issue as part of our review of the operation of the voucher scheme.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the practice of detaining asylum seekers in other European countries; what European countries have a policy of the systematic detention of asylum seekers in secure reception centres; and if he will make a statement. [149547]

Mrs. Roche: The Government monitor the asylum practices of other European Union member states.

All member states detain asylum seekers in certain circumstances. The criteria for detention vary considerably between member states.

Some member states also operate a system of reception centres to accommodate asylum seekers. Most such centres are not secure, but in some cases the freedom of movement of asylum seekers is restricted by a requirement for continuous residence or regular reporting.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy to encourage asylum seekers to undertake voluntary activity while they are awaiting a decision on their case; and what guidance is offered on this matter by his Department. [149890]

Mrs. Roche: The Government are keen that asylum seekers should have the chance to contribute to their local community by taking part in voluntary activity.

Guidance which will be of help to organisations and to asylum seekers interested in this area has today been placed in the Library.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of people who have had their applications for refugee status refused, but remain illegally in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [150075]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on 8 January 2001, Official Report, column 700.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers eligible for support from NASS are receiving voucher-only support; and if he will make a statement. [150038]

Mrs. Roche: As at the end of December 2000, 8,870[1] asylum seekers (including dependants) were allocated voucher-only support by the National Asylum Support Service (NASS).

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unaccompanied minors who are classified as asylum seekers are under the protection of local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [150034]

Mrs. Roche: The latest available estimate is that, as at 31 March 2000, the number of unaccompanied minors who were classified as asylum seekers and are under the protection of local authorities was 5,190.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many adult asylum seekers are resident in the United Kingdom awaiting the outcome of their asylum applications, but are not in receipt of support from NASS; and if he will make a statement. [150037]

Mrs. Roche: The number of asylum applications awaiting an initial decision at the end of December 2000 was 66,195.

Information is available on the number of asylum seekers that were allocated National Asylum Support Service (NASS) support, however these figures may include some family cases who have received a final decision on their asylum claim and are awaiting removal. In total, as at end December 2000, 25,500[1] asylum seekers (including dependants) were allocated NASS support.

3. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with local authorities regarding the dispersal of asylum seekers. [147089]

Mrs. Roche [pursuant to her reply, 5 February 2001, c. 647]: The year for which the figure 3,190 refers is 1995 and not 1996.

Robbery

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average custodial sentence imposed by the courts for robbery was in (a) the last six months of 2000 (b) the first six months of 2000 and (c) each of the previous four years. [149208]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 February 2001]: Available information, taken from the Home Office's court proceedings database, regarding the average custodial sentence imposed by the courts for robbery offences under S8 of the Theft Act 1968 for the period 1996 to 1999 and for the first half of 2000 (provisional data) is given in the table. Data for the second half of 2000 are not yet available. The offence of robbery carries a maximum sentence of life imprisonment.

The average custodial sentence (in months) imposed by type of court, and the numbers sentenced to life imprisonment at the Crown court, for the offence of robbery, England and Wales, 1996 to 2000[1]

	Average sentence length (months)
Year	Sentenced at magistrates courts[2]	Sentenced at the Crown court[3]	Total number sentenced to life at the Crown court
1996	3.8	40.1	8
1997	3.7	40.9	4
1998	3.9	37.3	16
1999	3.7	37.3	37
2000[1]	3.7	36.8	9

[1] Data for 2000 are for the period 1 January to 30 June only and are provisional

[2] Offenders aged 10 to 17

[3] Excludes those offenders sentenced to life imprisonment

Child Abuse

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suspects have been identified and charged using the trawling method by the police in connection with child abuse allegations in the last three years. [149430]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The conduct of child abuse investigations is an operational matter for the police. Information on the investigative methods used by the police is not collected centrally.

The police have a duty to investigate all allegations of child abuse thoroughly, and to undertake a complete investigation, pursuing all lines of reasonable inquiry in accordance with the law. When considering whether a charge should be brought, the police must be satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to form the basis of a prosecution, which requires that the offence is capable of being proved beyond reasonable doubt. It is then a matter for the Crown Prosecution Service, an independent body responsible for determining whether a prosecution should proceed, to assess the weight of this evidence, and in particular whether there is any indication that false evidence might have been offered against the individual accused of the crime.

Hinduja Brothers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who acted as referees in the application for naturalisation submitted in 1998 by S. P. Hinduja. [149592]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 8 February 2001]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) and the hon. Members for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) and for Bury St. Edmonds (Mr. Ruffley) on 30 January 2001, Official Report, column 166W.

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which persons other than his Department's (a) officials and (b) Ministers are permitted access to the files relating to the applications for naturalisation of S. P. and G. P. Hinduja; and what requests he has received from such persons for access to those files. [150041]

Mr. Straw: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) and the hon. Members for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) and for Bury St. Edmonds (Mr. Ruffley) on 30 January 2001, Official Report, column 166W.

Offences (Hertsmere)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will break down the offences committed within the Hertsmere police division in each year since 1992. [150050]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested was not collected centrally prior to September 1999 and is currently collected only for offences of violence against the person, sexual offences, robbery, domestic burglary, theft of a vehicle and theft from a vehicle. Table 1 presents the number of offences recorded in Hertsmere in the year to September 2000; there are no previous comparable year data held centrally. This information, and that on all other Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships, was published in table 5 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin 1/01, "Recorded Crime England and Wales October 1999 to September 2000", available in the Library.

Emergency Services (Hoax Calls)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 February 2001, Official Report, column 435W, on emergency services (hoax calls), what proportions of (a) 999 calls received by the Metropolitan police and (b) hoax calls and calls to which a police response was not deemed necessary were made from mobile phones. [149657]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has informed me that this information is not collected.

British Citizenship Applications

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria govern the access of (a) the security service, (b) the secret intelligence service and (c) the police to information about individual applications for British citizenship. [148340]

Mr. Straw: No Department or agency routinely seeks access to information about individual applications for British citizenship. On the infrequent occasions when information is sought for legitimate crimefighting or national security purposes it will normally be provided.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on inviting other Government Departments and agencies to comment on individual applications for British citizenship. [148341]

Mr. Straw: In furtherance of the requirement laid down in the British Nationality Act 1981 for me to be satisfied, before granting naturalisation that an applicant is of good character, my Department carries out checks with the police and where appropriate comments may be sought from other Government Departments and agencies.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for naturalisation were received by his Department during (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000; what was the average time taken to determine an application in each of those years; and if he will make a statement. [147600]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 29 January 2001]: Persons wishing to become British citizens under the British Nationality Act 1981 apply under two broad categories. Some, including all minors, apply for registration, either as an entitlement or at the Home Secretary's discretion. Others apply for naturalisation, which is always discretionary, on the grounds of residence or marriage to a British citizen. The Integrated Casework Directorate has reliable intake figures only for both types of application combined. Separate intake figures for naturalisation are not available.

The table therefore gives total nationality intake for the years in question, and the average waiting times for all naturalisation cases.

Year	Total intake	Average waiting times (naturalisation) for the whole year (months)
1997	66,000	16.9
1999	67,000	20.5
2000	69,714	18.5

The average waiting time for naturalisations at the end of January 2001 was 14.4 months.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average annual per person cost of employing an additional Immigration and Nationality Directorate caseworker is, including training and capital costs. [149545]

Mrs. Roche: By April 2001, staffing levels in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) are expected to have doubled compared to 1998. Since November 1999, we have recruited about 500 extra asylum decision-makers and recruitment is still continuing. Staff who take asylum decisions are normally Executive Officer grade. The annual average unit cost of employing an Executive Officer in the Integrated Casework Directorate is £21,000. This figure includes salary, Earnings Related National Insurance Contributions (ERNIC) and superannuation costs. Other overhead costs such as training, Information Technology and accommodation overheads are not currently recorded in a way which can be attributed to casework staff alone.

Migrants

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last received representations from (a) Caritas Europa, (b) the Churches' Commission for Migrants in Europe, (c) the Commission of the Bishop's Conferences of the European Community and (d) the International Catholic Migration Commission; and if he will make a statement. [147517]

Mr. Straw: So far as I can ascertain I have received no representations from these organisations.

Public Relations (Expenditure)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure was in his Department for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000, and what the planned expenditure and breakdown of expenditure for 2000–01 is on (i) public opinion research, (ii) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (iii) direct mail. [149256]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 8 February 2001]: For expenditure on public opinion research I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 25 January 2001, Official Report, column 718W and the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 373W. Further work would incur disproportionate cost.

Total expenditure on television, radio and newspaper advertising is as follows:

Year	£ million (including VAT)
1996–97	5.23
1998–99	1.8
1999–2000	5.65

The budget for 2000–01 covers £8.67 million for a vehicle crime reduction campaign; £7.35 million for the police recruitment campaign; £3.34 million to publicise rolling electoral registration; £2.4 million on a fire safety campaign; and £800,000 on a campaign to make people aware of the introduction of the Human Rights Act.

Expenditure on direct mail on 1999–2000 was £716,537 spent on a United Kingdom-wide door drop as part of the campaign to explain changes to the voting system for the European elections campaign. In 2000–01 £683,807 was spent on a door drop in England and Wales as part of a fire safety campaign.

Police Recruitment

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many expressions of interest have been received as a result of the national police recruitment campaign in each month of the campaign to date; and how many have resulted in recruits joining the police (a) in England and Wales as a whole and (b) in each police force in England and Wales. [150044]

Mr. Charles Clarke: To 4 February, there had been over 100,000 inquiries through the website and call centre. These have resulted in over 22,000 formal Expressions of Interest (EOIs). The breakdown by month is as follows:

	Number
End of August/September	7,317
October	5,616
November	1,503
December	727
January	7,051
February (to 4 February 2001)	349
Total	22,563

The table shows the breakdown of EOIs and the forces to which they have been passed.

Responsibility for processing EOIs rests with forces. Forces are being asked to report on the outcome of the EOIs with a view to assessing the effectiveness of the campaign.

Best Value

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the additional cost to each police force in England and Wales has been of administration associated with Best Value; and if he will make a statement. [150042]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The administration cost associated with Best Value is not collected centrally by the Home Office.

The Government are confident that Best Value will, over the five year period, save police authorities and forces more than they spend as well as improving police performance across the board.

Entry Clearance (IT Professionals)

Sir Patrick Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign nationals have been granted permission to enter the UK on the basis of their qualifications in information technology in the last three years; and from which countries they have come. [148903]

Ms Hodge: I have been asked to reply.

The number of foreign nationals, broken down by country, granted permission through the work permit arrangements to undertake information technology related jobs during 2000 is given in the table. Directly comparable figures for 1998 and 1999 are not available as the way in which work permit management information is collected was changed in October 1999.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Hinduja Brothers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which Ministers and officials in his Department have (a) been contacted by and (b) contacted (i) Mr. G. P. Hinduja and (ii) Mr. S. P. Hinduja since 2 May 1997; if he will list the occasions on which there was such contact; and if he will make a statement. [148077]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 31 January 2001]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) on 1 February 2001, Official Report, columns 278–79W.

It is not the normal practice of the Government to release details of officials' meetings or discussions with private individuals or companies.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the current monthly running costs are of the Millennium Dome; for what proportion of these costs the Millennium Commission is liable; and if he will make a statement. [148522]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 2 February 2001]: The current monthly running costs of the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) are between £2.5 million and £3.5 million excluding physical decommissioning costs. Monthly running costs are intended to reduce as the company moves towards solvent liquidation. The NMEC is liable for the company's costs but is able to draw on National Lottery grant awarded by the Millennium Commission.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to ensure that the contents of the Dome are not sold until the future use of the site has been finalised. [149341]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 February 2001]: Nothing will be sold at the forthcoming auction which would prejudice uses of the Dome including as a visitor attraction. The Government remain in negotiations with the preferred bidder, Legacy plc, in the competition to buy the Dome. The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has a timetabled decommissioning programme. Leased assets, such as lighting and sound equipment, have been returned to avoid incurring additional charges. Third party assets, such as Ford's Journey Zone and BT's Talk Zone, are being removed.

Granada/Anglia Merger

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact of the Granada/Anglia merger on the location of jobs in television production and quality of programme production. [149512]

Janet Anderson: Reorganisation of television production with Granada is a matter for the company itself. The licence commitments of ITV regional companies, which include obligations to provide high-quality programming, remain unaffected by changes in ownership. The recent White Paper, "A New Framework for Communications", announces that the new regulator, Ofcom, will be required to undertake a review of the regional obligations in each ITV licence whenever its ownership changes, and will be empowered to amend licence conditions to meet any concerns arising.

School Sports

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how many School Sports Co-ordinators have been appointed; and how many are in post; [148708]

(2) what moneys have been (a) committed and (b) paid over by the New Opportunities Fund to Sport England to fund School Sports Co-ordinators. [148709]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 7 February 2001]: 140 School Sport Co-ordinators are now in place in 33 partnerships across the country. No money has been committed by the New Opportunities Fund to Sport England for this programme. Direct support for activities within the School Sports Co-ordinator Programme is available under the New Opportunities Fund Out of School Hours Learning initiative.

Terrestrial Television

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what powers he has to require broadcasters to ensure the transmission of television programmes on the five terrestrial channels. [149669]

Janet Anderson: The responsibility for ensuring the transmission of television programmes on the five terrestrial channels lies principally with the BBC Governors in respect of BBC1 and BBC2, the Independent Television Commission in respect of Channels 3, 4 and 5 and the Welsh Authority in respect of S4C.

Digital Radio

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish the criteria he intends to apply for digital switchover of radio. [150058]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 12 February 2001]: Digital radio is at a relatively early stage of development with take-up by consumers still very low. We have not therefore determined criteria to be met in order to achieve switchover. However, we shall keep our approach under review as the roll-out of digital radio services and receiving equipment increases.

Television Licensing Telephone Number

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many telephone calls were received in each of the last three months on the television licensing telephone number; and what the cost of responding was. [150342]

Janet Anderson: TV Licensing, which administers the television licensing system as agent for the BBC, operates several different telephone inquiry numbers. Information provided by the BBC shows that the total number of telephone inquiries received by TV Licensing in each of the last three months for which information is available was:

	Number of calls
October 2000	87,869
November 2000	727,400
December 2000	528,972

Of these, the number of calls to the over-75 helpline were as follows:

	Number of calls
October 2000	242,508
November 2000	150,733
December 2000	104,748

Information on the cost of responding to these calls is not available.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

India

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what advice her Department is giving to people who wish to undertake voluntary work in Gujarat State, India, following the recent earthquake. [149464]

Mr. Mullin: India has a great deal of expertise in relief and rehabilitation operations and substantial resources have been mobilised in response to the earthquake in Gujarat, including medical and paramedical personnel, engineers and logisticians.

The Department for International Development has advised those volunteers with specialist skills to contact organisations that maintain databases of suitably qualified individuals, such as RedR (Registered Engineers for Disaster Relief; 1 Great George street, London, SW1P 3AA, 010 7233 3116) and the International Health Exchange (1st Floor, 134 Lower Marsh, London SE1 7AE; 020 7620 3333). These databases are used by the United Nations agencies, the Red Cross and other non-governmental organisations when personnel are needed quickly for short-term missions as well as longer-term assignments.

The DFID encourages people without specialist skills who wish to contribute to do so in cash rather than in kind by contributing towards the operational agencies working in the area. The best way for individuals to help is to contribute to the Disasters Emergency Committee (DEC) at 52 Great Portland street, London W1N 6TB (0870 60 60 90). The DEC is the umbrella organisation that is responsible for co-ordinating the response to emergencies from charitable organisations as well as donations from the public. The DEC appeal has raised £5 million to date.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what items have been urgently requested of her by the Indian Government following the earthquake in Gujarat State; to what extent her Department is able (a) to supply and (b) to advise on these items; and if she will make a statement; [149463]

(2) what requests she has received from the Indian Government for assistance to survivors from the recent earthquake in Gujarat State. [149466]

Mr. Mullin: The Indian Government have not made any formal request for assistance, but have announced that appropriate support would be welcome.

I refer my hon. Friend to my previous response detailing the material and financial assistance my Department has given to date, given on 5 February 2001, Official Report, columns 408-09W.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what long-term programme of assistance and advice her Department is developing with the Indian Government to help in the area affected by the recent earthquake in Gujarat State. [149467]

Mr. Mullin: The Department for International Development's priority is to ensure that those who have survived the earthquake are cared for until normal services can be restored. The Indian Government are developing plans for rehabilitation and reconstruction; it is expected that these will be largely funded by the World bank and the Asian Development bank. We have offered advice to the Indian Government on strengthening disaster preparedness arrangements, which will include Gujarat.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is offering to the Indian Government to help young children orphaned by the recent earthquake in Gujarat State. [149468]

Mr. Mullin: The Department for International Development has made a total allocation of £10 million for humanitarian assistance to Gujarat.

This is being channelled through the United Nations, the Red Cross and a number of non-governmental organisations for the provision of essential relief items such as tents, blankets, medical supplies, food, water and sanitation. All these agencies aim to focus their assistance on the most vulnerable, which will inevitably include young children who have been orphaned as a result of the earthquake.

More specifically we have provided £1 million to UNICEF, part of which will support their child protection programme. This programme aims to identify and care for children who have been orphaned or separated from their families.

We have also contributed £450,000 to Save the Children for the provision of shelter and non-food relief items for children and their families. They will also make efforts to ensure that those children placed in orphanages make contact with any remaining family by offering specialist advice to all organisations working with separated children.

Pakistan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what requests for assistance she has received from the Pakistan Government following the recent earthquake; [149622]

(2) what reports she has received from the British High Commissioner in Islamabad about the effects of the recent earthquake which affected Pakistan; [149624]

(3) what discussions she has had with the Pakistan High Commissioner to the UK about the effects of the recent earthquake; and if she will make a statement about the loss of life and damage suffered by Pakistan. [149623]

Mr. Mullin: According to the UN Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) the worst affected state in Pakistan is Sindh Province, where 109,000 houses are said to be damaged (of which nearly 11,000 have been destroyed) with over 180,000 families affected. Fifteen people are reported to have died in Pakistan as a result of the earthquake. The UN continues to monitor the situation. To date no appeal for assistance has been made by the Pakistan Government.

International Family Planning Aid

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of President Bush's reinstatement of restrictions on US international family planning aid. [149613]

Mr. Mullin: The implications of the decision by the new US Administration to block funding to international non-governmental organisations that offer abortion and abortion counselling will become clearer over the coming weeks as guidance is issued from USAID.

The Administration's decision is a matter for the US Government; it will make no difference to the commitment of this Government to help poor people access good quality family planning and reproductive health services.

PRIME MINISTER

Hinduja Brothers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions, and for what purpose, Lord Levy has met one or more of the Hinduja brothers since May 1997 on behalf of the Prime Minister. [148363]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 February 2001]: None. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Soames) on 5 February 2001, Official Report, column 391W.

No. 10 Website

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister what the most recent audience figures are for the Prime Minister's broadcasts on the No. 10 website. [148654]

The Prime Minister: There have been 20 broadcasts, all of which are available on the website.

No total viewing figures are available. This is because the broadcasts can be accessed in a number of different ways—either as a streamed file, a downloadable MP3 version or as a transcript.

The streamed versions of the broadcasts have been requested nearly 50,000 times since the first one was posted on the site on 11 February 2000. Downloads of the MP3 version and hits on the transcript page will be additional to this figure. The site statistics do not show how often these have been accessed, but the site as a whole received over 99 million hits in the nine months since it was relaunched on 11 February 2000.

HEALTH

Blood Products

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his policy that user-patients should be informed if the Bio Products Laboratory withdraws blood products on the basis of past donation information relating to CJD protection requirements. [143857]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 21 December 2000]: The Department's current guidance, based on the advice from ethical experts, is that clinicians should not tell patients if they have received such products. This is because:

the risk that vCJD might be transmitted in this way is low;

there is no diagnostic test for vCJD;

even if a test was available, there is no treatment.

The guidance goes on to state that:

"In deciding whether or not to inform a particular patient, the benefit/harm balance for their individual situation must be carefully considered. In communicating with patients who have received implicated products, it is therefore for individual clinicians to decide whether to follow this general ethical advice."

The Department is continuously reviewing this advice to ensure that it is in line with current scientific information and ethical thinking.

Levonorgestrel

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Levonorgestrel is licensed for use by girls between the ages of 11 and 15. [147133]

Ms Stuart: Levonorgestrel is available as a prescription-only medicine, without an age limit. It may therefore be prescribed to women aged under 16 years. When given for the purposes of emergency contraception, prescribers are expected to satisfy themselves, in accordance with guidelines, that the young person understands the advice and it is in their best interests to receive the treatment. From 1 January 2001, pharmacists have been permitted to supply Levonorgestrel 0.75 mg to women aged 16 years and over for use as an emergency contraceptive.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what clinical trials involving girls between the ages of 11 and 15 years have been conducted with respect to Levonorgestrel. [147134]

Ms Stuart: No clinical trials specific to this age group have been undertaken in the United Kingdom. The marketing authorisation granted in 1999 for Levonorgestrel 0.75 mg tablets as a prescription-only medicine was supported by evidence from two large randomised controlled studies, one conducted by the World Health Organisation, and published data from uncontrolled studies. Most women in the clinical trials were aged between 16 and 48, but a few girls aged 14 and 15 were included. There were no data available for girls between aged 11 and 14 years. Age analysis of efficacy and safety in the randomised studies did not identify any population that responded differently to treatment.

Professions Allied to Medicine

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much extra money was allocated to the professions allied to medicine under the NHS National Plan. [147276]

Mr. Denham: Under the NHS Plan there will be an extra £140 million by 2003–04 to support a major programme of training and development for all staff, including the allied health professions (formerly known as the professions allied to medicine). This is in addition to the extra £6 million made available this year to support the strategy for the allied health professions which was published in November 2000.

Drugs Bill

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total drugs bill was, in cash terms, for the (a) Hospital and Community Health Service and (b) Family Health Service for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [149431]

Ms Stuart: The information requested is shown in the table.

Total National Health Service spending on drugs (England only)

£ million

Year	Family health services (FHS) cash outturn	Hospital and community health services (HCHS) cash outturn	Total
1990–91	2,080	460	2,540
1991–92	2,317	591	2,908
1992–93	2,641	643	3,284
1993–94	2,951	710	3,661
1994–95	3,230	764	3,994
1995–96	3,498	874	4,372
1996–97	3,774	961	4,735
1997–98	4,085	1,088	5,173
1998–99	4,339	1,211	5,550
1999–2000	4,833	1,369	6,202

Note:

The figures for FHS cash outturn are net of pharmaceutical price regulation scheme (PPRS) receipts.

NHS Waiting Lists (Jarrow)

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to shorten NHS waiting lists in the Jarrow constituency. [148748]

Mr. Denham: No patients in South Tyneside currently wait over 12 months for inpatient treatment and the South Tyneside Health Care National Health Service Trust has consistently met their over-13-week target for out-patient appointments during the last year.

The South Tyneside Healthcare NHS Trust is implementing several initiatives at the Charles Palmer Community Hospital, Jarrow which will help to reduce waiting times for the local community. These include a new digital X-ray service linked to the district general hospital which will allow specialist and one-stop clinics to be provided in a local setting and a new direct access audiology service which will help to shorten waiting lists and times for ear, nose and throat appointments.

Air Ambulance Services

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many air ambulance services are provided in England; and how each of them are funded; [149781]

(2) what representations he has received about provision of air ambulance services during the last 12 months; [149782]

(3) what plans he has for the provision of air ambulance services within the NHS; [149783]

Ms Stuart: We recognise that air ambulance services have a role in delivering emergency care especially in rural areas and where road access is a problem. The services can be an effective way of getting better and faster access to hospital, and valuable in supporting inter-hospital transfers.

Information on the number and funding of air ambulances is not collected centrally.

During the last 12 months the Department has received letters from the general public and hon. Members asking whether the National Health Service should provide and fund air ambulance services.

Evidence supporting the introduction of air ambulances in the NHS, however is not convincing. In 1995, the Department commissioned Sheffield university to report on air ambulances. The report failed to show benefits which would justify NHS investment.

This lack of evidence to support the clinical or cost-effectiveness of these services does not support the funding of these services by the NHS. However, we will constantly review the position.

North Staffordshire Health Authority

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the allocation per weighted head of population for the North Staffordshire health authority for each year from 1996–97 to date. [149638]

Mr. Denham: Revenue allocation per weighted head of population for North Staffordshire health authority is shown in the table.

	Allocation	Population	Allocation per weighted head of population
1996–97	202,568	484,138	418
1997–98	210,721	480,270	439
1998–99	221,771	491,270	451
1999–2000	304,458	496,215	614
2000–01	335,037	494,419	678
2001–02	362,936	496,124	732

Organ Retention

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the reasons why NHS hospital trusts have been prevented from telling members of the public how many adult and children's organs they have retained in their hospitals; [149824]

(2) when he will tell NHS hospitals trusts the form in which he will require them to set out for public information the numbers of adult and children's organs which are being retained in their hospitals; [149820]

(3) by what means NHS hospital trusts are required to obtain his permission to tell members of the public how many adult and children's organs are being retained in their hospitals; [149822]

(4) for what reason NHS hospital trusts have to obtain his permission before they can tell members of the public how many adult and children's organs are being retained in their hospitals; [149821]

(5) if he will appoint counsellors to support members of the public who may be distraught after not being given information, on his guidance, by NHS hospital trusts on how many adult and children's organs are being held by their hospitals; [149818]

(6) for what reason NHS hospital trusts have been told that they can inform the public about how many adult and children's organs are retained in their hospitals only in a form that he approves. [149823]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 9 February 2001]: Following the publication of the Royal Liverpool Children's inquiry report last week, a special Commission, under the chairmanship of Professor Margot Brazier, has been established to oversee the cataloguing and return of organs and tissue by National Health Service trusts in England.

The Commission has issued comprehensive guidance to trusts on the sensitive and sympathetic handling of inquiries from relatives. This includes establishing dedicated telephone helplines and teams, maintaining contact, and providing bereavement support and counselling where necessary.

The Commission has asked trusts not to provide specific information or begin the process of returning organs and tissue until comprehensive and accurate catalogues of organs and tissue have been completed, and approved by the Commission. This is aimed to avoid repeating the problems of misleading information and multiple burials criticised in the inquiry report.

Transplant Centres

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to announce a final decision on whether Manchester, Sheffield or Birmingham will be the fourth transplant centre to remain in operation following the proposed rationalisation of services. [150074]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 12 February 2001]: We will issue a document in due course setting out proposals for the future of the National Cardiothoracic Transplant Service. The document will invite views on the proposals from patients, the public and appropriate organisations. A decision will be made following careful consideration of those views.

Health and Social Services Expenditure

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the expected funding is of (a) the NHS and (b) personal social services in England per head of population in 2000–01. [150224]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table.

	Spend per head in 2000–01
Net NHS expenditure[1]	890
Personal Social Services[2]	190

[1] 2000–01 planned expenditure

[2] 2000–01 planned provision for PSS. Includes resources made available to local councils in England for social services through Standard Spending Assessments and special and specific grants.

General Medical Council

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring he undertakes of the handling by the General Medical Council of complaints raised against medical practitioners practising in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [149503]

Mr. Denham: Although no specific monitoring of complaints is undertaken, there are regular liaison meetings between departmental officials and the General Medical Council, where both policy and specific cases are discussed. In order to better address the concerns of patients, the GMC is currently carrying out a fundamental review of its structure.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the appeal structure for claimants dissatisfied by the decision of the General Medical Council. [149504]

Mr. Denham: Currently, the only legal course of action open to complainants is to seek leave for the decision to be judicially reviewed. However, my right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor has stated in another place on 20 July 2000, Official Report, House of Lords, column WA 103, that there are strong arguments for dealing with these cases at a lower judicial level. I understand a number of organisations, including the General Medical Council, are examining alternative models for new appeals arrangements. I shall expect them to consider whether these should include a legal appeals route for complainants.

Private Hospital Referrals

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS patients have been redirected to private hospitals under his recently announced scheme; and what the position of such patients is in cases where treatment received proves defective (a) at the time of treatment and (b) subsequently. [150424]

Ms Stuart: There are no centrally held figures for the numbers of patients treated under the terms of the concordat. Health authorities have allocated funds to local commissioning bodies to make local arrangements as the concordat does not set out detailed contractual arrangements; these are left to be secured locally according to local need.

Any patient treated making use of the private or voluntary sector under the terms of the concordat remains a National Health Service patient and their treatment remains NHS treatment. Such patients remain the responsibility of the NHS and continue to have full access to the NHS complaints procedure should they have any need to complain about treatment received.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Low-sulphur Petrol

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he estimates that all filling stations in the UK will have replaced standard unleaded petrol with low-sulphur petrol. [150227]

Mr. Hain: This is a matter currently under discussion between my Department and petrol retailers.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of filling stations had replaced standard unleaded petrol with low-sulphur petrol by December 2000; and how many he estimates will have done so by April 2001. [150226]

Mr. Hain: According to HM Customs and Excise's "Hydrocarbons Oils Bulletin", in mid-December 2000, ultra-low sulphur petrol constituted around 46 per cent. of petrol released for consumption in the UK. We are monitoring the continued roll out of ULSP across the country.

General Mediterranean Holdings (Export Credits)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which projects involving General Mediterranean Holdings (UK) or its subsidiary companies the ECGD extended credit cover to (a) between 1992 and 1997 and (b) since 1997. [150235]

Mr. Caborn: ECGD has no record of any dealings with this company or any other of its listed subsidiaries.

Steel Industry (Wales)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the cost of the climate change levy on each steel factory in England and Wales; if he will list the estimated cost for each of the factories; and if he will make a statement. [150256]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The climate change levy has been designed to safeguard the competitiveness of manufacturing industry as a whole. It recognises the special position of energy intensive industries exposed to international competition, including the steel sector. Sites in these sectors which meet eligibility criteria will, subject to EU state aid clearance, get an 80 per cent. levy discount provided they deliver energy saving targets in negotiated agreements with the Government.

The final impact of the levy on individual steel industry sites will depend on whether they participate in the steel sector's energy saving agreement to get the levy discount; and also on the extent to which they benefit from or take advantage of the various levy exemptions, and also the new scheme of enhanced capital allowances for investments in energy efficiency.

Family Friendly Employers

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of mothers from low-income households work for employers with a policy of allowing employees to reduce their hours on return from maternity leave. [150108]

Mr. Alan Johnson: A survey of working parents recently conducted by my Department asked mothers whether a number of support provisions were made available to them by their employer on return from maternity leave, including returning to the same job on a reduced hours or part-time basis.

83 per cent. of mothers in households with gross income of less than £20,800 said that their employer allowed them to return to the same job on a reduced hours or part-time basis, compared with 60 per cent. of those in households with gross income of £20,800 plus.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of fathers work for employers who allow them to reduce their hours in (a) the aftermath of the birth of a child and (b) for general childcare reasons. [150110]

Mr. Alan Johnson: A survey commissioned by the Department for Education and Employment in 2000 reports that 34 per cent. of fathers in workplaces employing five or more staff said that their employer would allow them to reduce their hours for an agreed period of time at reduced salary.

Enterprise, Skills and Innovation

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans the Government have to support enterprise, skills and innovation. [150126]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and I are today publishing "Opportunity for All in a World of Change: A White Paper on Enterprise, Skills and Innovation" (Cm 5052). Copies will be laid in the Libraries of the House and will be available in the Vote Office

The White Paper unveils the Government's active industrial policy to help people and businesses in all regions prosper in our fast-changing world, and sets out the Government's action plan for the future. It sets out the Government's next steps for raising GDP in the regions, closing the skills gap, supporting industry through restructuring and nurturing new industries as they develop.

University Innovation Centres and Technology Institutes

The measures include a major new drive to create hubs for growth in the regions based on imaginative new partnerships between universities, colleges and businesses. World-class university innovation centres will be established in England. The first five are announced today involving companies such as BAE and Proctor and Gamble in the north-east and Hewlett Packard in Bristol. New technology institutes will be developed in each region to boost the supply of ICT and other high-tech skills and transfer of know-how to SMEs. This new network will produce a step change in the capacity of regions and communities to grow new dynamic businesses and high-tech employment. The involvement of colleges will ensure skills and know how are cascaded into the wider community.

A new regional policy

The Government's goal is to increase the rate of growth in all regions, addressing underperformance and building on success. Raising the trend rate of growth by 0.5 per cent. for the worst-performing regions would increase GDP in 10 years by £20 billion. The measures include:

a new £75 million incubator fund to support start-ups and growth businesses; special support to manufacturing industry through a new manufacturing advisory service.

a boost for R&D in the regions—university innovation centres and technology institutes developing strategies for success support for clusters.

Closing the Skills Gap

The Government inherited a situation of poor standards in schools and neglect of skills. Much has been done to tackle these problems. The goal now is to ensure all our people have the skills they need to be enterprising and creative and to deliver the world beating technical skills business needs. The measures include:

an action plan to drive up ICT skills including training up to 10,000 people each year through the new technology institutes which will have £25 million new pump priming funding; reducing the number of adults with literacy and numeracy problems by 750,000 by 2004; building a world-class technical education system with a major rationalisation in qualifications and building up training in colleges and through apprenticeships a job transition service to help communities and individuals affected by redundancy to find the rights jobs more quickly.

Innovation

The Government's goal is to strengthen the ability of British business to innovate, ensuring that Britain has a world-class ICT infrastructure and promoting the exploitation of scientific advances by business.

Initiatives include:

an additional £90 million to promote the commercial exploitation of research in basic technologies, genomics and e-science;

a £30 million fund to begin the process of ensuring as many people and businesses as possible across the UK have access to affordable broadband services. This forms part of the "UK online: the broadband future" strategy which is being published today. Copies are available in the House of Commons Library; measures to promote take up of digital TV, giving people without PCs access to the internet.

Companies (EU Political Expenditure)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many United Kingdom companies he anticipates will be covered by article 3(1) of the Companies (EU Political Expenditure) Exemption Order 2001. [149925]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 12 February 2001]: The draft Companies (EU Political Expenditure) Order 2001 seeks to exclude activities such as the publication of newspapers from the definition of "political expenditure" under Part IX of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000, while at the same time ensuring that the principles of accountability and transparency are properly applied in relation to political donations and expenditure by companies. The draft order would exempt any company or subsidiary undertaking whose ordinary course of business includes the preparation, publication or dissemination to the public of material such as views, opinion and comment on the news, or on public or political affairs and events, from the requirement to seek prior shareholder authorisation in respect of such activities; it would not exempt such companies from the requirement to seek prior shareholder authorisation for donations to political parties and organisations or for other forms of political expenditure.

The order has been drafted so as to take account of possible future technological advances, and the Department does not have detailed information on the number of companies which will come within the exemption. The Newspaper Publishers Association, which represents national daily and Sunday newspapers, has eight members. The database of The Newspaper Society, which represents the regional newspaper industry, indicates that there are currently 106 regional press publishers.

Mortgage Code Compliance Board

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what response his Department has made to the most recent annual report of the Mortgage Code Compliance Board. [149838]

Dr. Howells: I have not made a response to this report.

Workplace Bullying

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department is taking to (a) tackle and (b) raise awareness of the incidence of workplace bullying. [149992]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Bullying has no place in today's work environment and is unacceptable wherever it occurs.

Legislation exists to protect workers from the most serious kinds of bullying, for instance under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. Laws also cover harassment and discrimination on the grounds of sex, race and disability.

Non-legislative methods currently available include the adoption of best practice and the dissemination of guidance to employers, employees and their representatives i.e. the ACAS 'Code of Practice on Disciplinary and Grievance Procedures'.

The Government's partnership strategy is based on co-operation and good communication between employers and employees, which should result in a more constructive relationship in the workplace.

The DTI's partnership at work fund provides £5 million over a four-year period to help projects develop better employment practices within the workplace. The third round will see bullying as one of its areas of particular interest.

Miners' Compensation

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many ex-miners from (a) Barnsley and (b) Doncaster claiming compensation for chronic bronchitis and emphysema have died before their claims were fully processed. [149631]

Mr. Hain: IRISC, the Department's claims handlers, have been informed of 10 claimants in the Barnsley area who, sadly, died before their claims were fully processed, and 14 claimants in the Doncaster region.

In all these cases, the claim will be continued by the claimants' widow or dependants. In addition, where a claimant's death certificate shows that one of the respiratory disease conditions for which British Coal was found liable either caused or materially contributed to the death, the Department will also make a bereavement award to the claimant's widow.

Export Licences

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his target is for processing Standard Individual Export Licence applications; and how actual performance compared to these targets in the last eight quarterly periods for which figures are available. [149634]

Dr. Howells: The Government's aim is to provide a substantive response to standard individual export licence applications (SIELs) within 20 working days. Our overall target is to achieve this in 70 per cent. of all cases, excluding applications concerning Iran or Iraq, or applications for licences to export goods which are subject to control solely because of UN sanctions.

In December 2000, 47.7 per cent. of SIELs were processed within this target. For figures from January to November 2000, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Clwyd (Mr. Ruane) on 9 January 2001, Official Report, columns 496–97W. Figures were not collected on a quarterly basis before 1 January 2000. The performance for the whole of 1999 can be found in the Government's annual report on strategic export controls.

Corus

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will examine the anti-competition implications of the decision of Corus not to sell its Llanwern plant to a competitor. [149358]

Mr. Byers: Responsibility for investigating any possible breach of competition law by Corus would be a matter for the competition authorities, the European Commission and the Director General of Fair Trading. I have drawn their attention to my hon. Friend's question.

Research Councils

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the quinquennial review of the six grant-awarding research councils will take place; and what the terms of reference for the review will be. [150466]

Mr. Byers: I am today launching the quinquennial review of the grant-awarding research councils.

Reviews of non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) are a key part of our programme to modernise government. The Government are committed to achieving better public services that are of higher quality and are more responsive to the needs of the people who use them. Regular NDPB reviews are an important element in ensuring that we have in place the right structures to deliver the Government's agenda effectively and to provide a strong focus on improving future performance.

The purpose of the six grant-awarding councils is to deliver Government policy for publicly funded research and postgraduate training. It would be impossible to conduct a fundamental review independently from that policy. For this reason, although quinquennial review of the six councils was due in 1999, it has been appropriate to postpone their quinquennial review until the outcome of the relevant policy reviews had been completed, so that the role of the councils could be considered in that context. Together, the White Papers on Science and Innovation ("Excellence and Opportunity"; Cmd 4814) and the Knowledge Economy ("Opportunity for All in a World of Change"; Cm 2250) now provide the context for the review.

The terms of reference for the review of the research councils are:

> The review will consider the six grant-awarding research councils individually and collectively.

The review of councils will be undertaken in two stages:

> The first stage will examine the role and organisation of the councils, by reference to their charters and missions, evidence of work already undertaken to review and improve performance, current best practice for NDPBs and the councils' contribution to the delivery of Government policy for publicly funded scientific research and training in the context of the new White Paper. It will set the detailed terms of reference for the second stage.
> The second stage will examine the efficiency and effectiveness of the councils' operations. It will look for further opportunities for improving performance by reference to such issues as boundaries between the councils, management structures, aims and objectives, role of funded institutes, performance targets and service standards, use of processes and new technology, delegated authority and accountability and changes to the operating environment since the councils were awarded their royal charters in 1994, including the modernising government agenda.

The review will consider, in particular, how the councils can best fulfil their strategic role in identifying the key areas for future investment in research that will offer the best opportunities for science, social development, industrial application and economic growth.

The review will be conducted in accordance with the current Cabinet Office guidance (published on 31 January 2000) and will include consultation, either in person or in writing, with members of council, staff of the executive and the councils' customers and key stakeholders. It is expected that a number of working groups will be established to address key issues in detail in the second stage.

The review team will be directed by a review board, which is chaired by the Director General of the Research Councils, Dr. John Taylor, and with a membership which will include key representatives of both industry and academia drawn from the stakeholder communities. The review board will ensure that Ministers, the Treasury, the Cabinet Office, and the staff and customers of the councils are kept informed of the progress of the review and will facilitate the gathering of information for the review team and their communication with staff and other stakeholders.

The review team will be supported by officials in the Office of Science and Technology, with specialist advice as appropriate. The aim will be to complete the review within approximately six months, as recommended in the Cabinet Office guidance.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Surveys

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95, (d) 1995–96, (e) 1996–97, (f) 1997–98, (g) 1998–99, (h) 1999–2000 and (i) 2000–01, (I) his Department's total spending on quantitative and qualitative surveys of policy issues by focus groups, opinion polling, task forces or other means and (II) the cost of each individual project. [146595]

Mr. Wilson: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not collect separate data on expenditure on the categories listed. It would involve disproportionate expense to retrieve this information from various sources and itemise the individual projects.

Iraq

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterparts in the Arab world about the continuation of sanctions on Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [149745]

Mr. Wilson: We maintain regular dialogue with the Governments of the Arab world on Iraq. I recently had the opportunity to discuss this matter with the Foreign Minister of Egypt.

Kosovo

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from the UN Interim Administrator for Kosovo regarding the security situation in Kosovo and Southern Serbia. [149775]

Mr. Vaz: The new special representative of the Secretary-General (SRSG) visited London shortly before taking up his post, and held discussions with me and with senior officials. Staff of the British Office in Pristina are in close touch with him, and we seek actively to support him in his important work. This mandate does not extend to Southern Serbia outside Kosovo, but we receive regular reports on the situation there from various sources.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the security situation in (a) Kosovo and (b) Presevo Valley. [149774]

Mr. Vaz: UNMIK and KFOR are working actively to improve public order and counter extremist activity in Kosovo. Although isolated violent incidents continue to occur, most of the province is calm. There have been a number of violent demonstrations recently in Mitrovica, to which KFOR and UNMIK have responded. British troops, as part of the KFOR reserve, were temporarily deployed there. We fully support UNMIK's efforts to promote greater inter-communal peace in the town.

We remain concerned about the risk of serious violence in the Presevo Valley area of Serbia, and commend the FRY authorities for the restraint they have so far shown. We welcome the recent announcement by Belgrade of proposals to resolve the conflict, and the fact that some representatives of the ethnic Albanian armed groups also seem prepared to negotiate. The United Kingdom, with our partners and allies, will want to do whatever we can to support a peaceful outcome.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the UN Interim Administrators for Kosovo regarding the current violence by military demonstrators against NATO peacekeepers in Kosovo. [149776]

Mr. Vaz: We have been in regular contact with the United Nations Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) about the demonstrations against KFOR peacekeepers in Mitrovica. We condemn all acts of violence against KFOR. We support UNMIK's attempts to build confidence and ethnic tolerance in the town.

WEU

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the European Union is required to abide by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 when it takes over as the new employer of the Western European Union staff. [149899]

Mr. Vaz: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of my letter in the Libraries of the House.

Sierra Leone (Conflict Diamonds)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact on dealing in illegal diamonds in Sierra Leone of his initiatives on conflict diamonds. [149989]

Mr. Wilson: As part of HMG's initiative to tackle the problem of conflict diamonds, the UK played the lead role in promoting UN Security Council resolution 1306, which was adopted on 5 July 2000 and imposed a ban on the direct or indirect import of all rough diamonds from Sierra Leone to the territory of UN member states. The resolution provided for an exemption from the ban for diamonds controlled by the Government of Sierra Leone through a certificate of origin regime. This exemption came into effect on 6 October 2000 when the UN

Sanctions Committee Chairman reported to the President of the Security Council that an effective regime was fully in operation.

It is too early to assess the impact of the new regime on the illicit diamond trade. However, we anticipate that it will enhance the capacity of the Government and people of Sierra Leone to benefit from the country's diamond wealth, while limiting the rebels' income from illegal trade. In addition to the combative systems already in place, the UK is promoting a UN Security Council resolution recommending a package of measures against Liberia, identified as the rebel Revolutionary United Front's primary supporter in a recent expert panel report. We also co-sponsored resolution 55/56 on conflict diamonds, adopted by the UN General Assembly last December, and are working with Governments, industry and civil society to develop an international certification scheme, as mandated by that resolution.

Pakistan

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he intends to make to the Pakistani authorities over the use of the blasphemy laws in Pakistan; [150210]

(2) what recent representations he has made to the Pakistani authorities concerning the use of blasphemy laws. [150211]

Mr. Wilson: We remain concerned at reports that Pakistan's blasphemy laws continue to be abused. We have repeatedly raised our concerns with the Pakistani authorities and have called for the abolition of the death penalty under the law, or for them to be repealed. Most recently, an ad hoc EU Troika mission visited Pakistan on 20–21 November and raised these concerns with the Pakistani authorities.

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Pakistani Government regarding the situation of Ahmadi Muslims. [150217]

Mr. Wilson: We remain concerned about the position of Ahmadis in Pakistan. We are particularly worried over the application of the blasphemy laws to them. We have ensured that the Pakistani authorities remain in no doubt about these concerns. We continue to raise our concerns with the Pakistanis and will monitor closely the plight of the Ahmadis.

United Nations Security Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other EU countries regarding seats on the United Nations Security Council. [150115]

Mr. Battle: The Secretary of State has regular exchanges with a number of EU partners on issues relating to membership of the United Nations Security Council.

We continue to press for early enlargement of the Council, including new non-permanent and new permanent seats. We support the creation of five new permanent seats: for Germany and Japan plus three developing states.

The question of an EU permanent seat is not on the agenda. Under the UN Charter, only states can be members of the United Nations or its Security Council.

SCOTLAND

Public Bodies

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will list the new public bodies established by her Department since May 1997. [145639]

Mrs. Liddell: Between May 1997 and 30 June 1999, the following non-departmental public bodies were established by the Scottish Office:

NDPB	Date established
Clinical Standards Board for Scotland	1 April 1999
Scottish Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards	9 November 1998
Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission	1 April 1999

The Scotland Office was set up in its present form on 1 July 1999. No new public bodies have been established by my Department since that date.

Long-term Care

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations she has received on proposals by the Scottish Executive to provide free care for the elderly; and if she will make a statement. [148947]

Mr. Foulkes: Health care and social care are devolved matters for the Scottish Executive.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pre-paid Envelopes

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many hon. Members have been requested to make payments for prepaid House of Commons envelopes which have not been used in accordance with the rules of the House; and how many hon. Members have been ordered to make such payments following complaints since May 1997. [150348]

Mrs. Roe: Supervision and enforcement of the regulations for the use of House stationery and post-paid envelopes are a matter for the Serjeant at Arms. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Education and Employment Committee

Dr. Harris: To ask the President of the Council what information she received on the contents of the Education and Employment Committee's report on access to higher education, and the proceedings of the Committee prior to the publication of the report. [150052]

Mrs. Beckett: None.

DEFENCE

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when it is intended to restart test firing of depleted uranium shells at Dundrennan in Kirkcudbrightshire; how many shells will be fired; and over what period. [148152]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 February 2001]: The current programme of proof firing Charm 3 depleted uranium rounds is due to recommence on 19 February 2001. A total of 60 rounds will be fired in five serials during the next seven months. Subject to weather conditions, the programme is expected to be completed by the end of September.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is considering the availability of cost-effective alternatives to depleted uranium munitions; and if he will make a statement. [150216]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence has for many years conducted research into weapon and armour materials and designs. Research and consultation with allies continues to include the search for potential alternatives to depleted uranium and to identify and characterise their cost effectiveness and environmental impact. Depleted uranium still has a significant margin of operational effectiveness over alternative materials when employed in anti-armour weapon systems. In recent years, a new tungsten round has been developed for the Royal Navy's Phalanx close-in weapons systems that offers superior performance (anti-armour qualities are not important for this weapon system). So, since 1996, all replacement ammunition for the Phalanx system has been of the tungsten variety.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with work to identify a voluntary screening programme for service personnel and civilians who have served in the Balkans and who are concerned about exposure to depleted uranium. [150464]

Mr. Spellar: The first phase of work to identify a screening programme, which we intend should be equally applicable to Gulf veterans as to those who have served in the Balkans, has been completed. We are publishing today a consultative document setting out the technical issues associated with such a programme, inviting advice and comment in particular from a wide range of expert bodies. A copy of the consultative document is being placed in the Library of the House, and it will also be available on the MOD internet website.

The next step in our work is to develop firm proposals for screening, taking into account the advice and comments we receive in response to the consultative document. Those proposals in turn will be the subject of wide consultation.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if enriched uranium, U-236, and other radioactive material from nuclear processing plants is used in the manufacture of depleted uranium munitions in Britain. [147412]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 7 February 2001, Official Report, column 521W.

HMS Gannet

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to extend the use of HMS Gannet for anti-submarine warfare beyond April 2002. [149852]

Mr. Spellar: Beyond April 2002, HMS Gannet will be used as a forward operating base for anti-submarine warfare activated as and when required, as well as a permanent base for search and rescue operations.

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made in securing an alternative MOD use for the site of HMS Gannet when it ceases to operate on anti-submarine warfare function in 2002. [149853]

Mr. Spellar: No alternative military use has so far been identified by my Department. Naval Air Command is currently reviewing the options for the provision of single living accommodation (SLA) as part of the conversion of HMS Gannet to a forward operating base. One option could be to retain the SLA on the Greensite, but no decisions have yet been taken.

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider the availability of adjacent sites to HMS Gannet in his assessment of its alternative future use by his Department. [149854]

Mr. Spellar: No alternative military use for the Greensite at HMS Gannet has so far been identified. The availability of adjacent land has been taken into account, as have the very strict commercial aviation safety regulations which would constrain any development.

Defence Estate

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the properties from the Defence Estate (i) disposed of since July 1988 and (ii) scheduled for disposal by June 2002 and (b) the disposal receipts (i) received and (ii) estimated to be received by June 2002. [148938]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Medical Services

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on employing short-term locums by the Defence Secondary Care Agency in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [149894]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what mess facilities are available to DMS officers at the Centre for Defence Medicine in Birmingham; when a dedicated officers' mess for personnel at the centre will be established; and if he will make a statement. [149895]

Dr. Moonie: Currently, there are no dedicated mess facilities for Defence Medical Services (DMS) officers at the Centre for Defence Medicine, which is to open in April in Birmingham. In the short-term, arrangements are being made to hold some mess functions at other officers' mess facilities in the local area. Several options to provide mess facilities in the longer term are now being explored. Precise time scales cannot be determined, but we envisage having such facilities in place within about four years.

Royal Navy Aircraft (Radar Altimeters)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which RAF and Royal Navy aircraft are fitted with RADALT; if he plans to introduce RADALT as standard across all aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [149898]

Mr. Spellar: Radio altimeters (RADALT) are fitted to the following Royal Air Force and Royal Navy in-service aircraft types:

RAF—Hercules; C130K; Nimrod; Jaguar; Canberra; Sentry; Islander; VC10; Sea King; Wessex; Chinook; Puma; Tornado; Harrier; BAE 125; BAE 146; TriStar; Dominie.

RN—Sea Harrier; Sea King; Lynx.

A feasibility study is under way to determine whether radar altimeter fitment to RAF Hawk aircraft would be practical.

Hawk Crash (Cumbria)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the conclusions and recommendations of the inquiry into the fatal crash of a Hawk aircraft over Cumbria in October 1999; what steps his Department is taking to address the conclusions of the inquiry; at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [149897]

Dr. Moonie: The RAF board of inquiry into this accident concluded that the aircraft deviated from a safe flight path and hit the ground.

The board recommended that consideration should be given to the fitting of either a ground proximity warning system (GPWS) or a radar altimeter (RADALT) to the Hawk fleet. Due to compatibility difficulties with the existing avionics and the anticipated remaining life of the Hawk fleet, the fitting of a GPWS is not being pursued. However, the feasibility of fitting RADALT to the fleet is being explored as a matter of urgency. The board also recommended that a voice channel should be incorporated in the Hawk accident data recorder (ADR) and this is currently being investigated.

The costs associated with the fitting of RADALT or a voice channel in the ADR have not yet been determined.

A further minor recommendation, with no safety implications, concerned a revision to post-crash management procedures. This is being done, with no additional costs.

Low-flying (Northumberland)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours of low-flying are logged per day by pilots over Northumberland; how many days of low-flying there are per year over Northumberland; which countries the pilots who practise low-flying over Northumberland are from; and if he will make a statement. [149896]

Dr. Moonie: From information available for the last three years, the number of hours low-flying booked by aircraft in low-flying area (LFA) 12, the airspace over Northumberland, Durham and north-east North Yorkshire, was as detailed:

	Total hours booked in LFA 12
1999	3,009

It is likely that LFA 12 would have experienced some low-flying on most weekdays.

In 1999 there were 1,917 fewer hours flown than in 1997, a reduction of 39 per cent.

An annual statement on the pattern of low-flying in the United Kingdom is produced by the MOD, and this is placed in the Library of the House. The next annual statement will be published in the summer and will cover the period from April 2000 to March 2001.

Detailed statistical information by LFA is not held of the country of origin of those pilots flying in the UK low-flying system. However, during 2000 foreign aircraft took part in less than 0.5 per cent. of the total sorties booked in the UK low-flying system.

International Criminal Court

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will take steps to ensure the protection of military personnel from prosecution for their activities in both operational and non-operational activities in the proposed International Criminal Court; and if he will make a statement; [150032]

(2) what measures he has taken and representations he has made to ensure the protection of military personnel and their activities in both operational and non-operational mode from prosecution in the proposed International Criminal Court. [150031]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 12 February 2001]: A principal purpose of the International Criminal Court (ICC) Bill now before Parliament is to ensure that UK service personnel are protected from malicious or ill-founded prosecution by the ICC. The Ministry of Defence has been closely involved with the legislative details to guarantee this.

The Bill has been constructed to achieve this protection by using the principle of complementarity embodied in the ICC statute. Complementarity means that individuals cannot be tried before the ICC if they have been subject to genuine and effective national legal investigation or proceedings. Any allegations of war crimes against UK service personnel would therefore be dealt with by the UK and not by the ICC.

All offences included in the ICC Bill are already reflected in international law, and the armed forces are already bound by them in their conduct of operations.

To preserve the principle of complementarity, it is essential that domestic law allows investigation and, where necessary, prosecution of all offences contained in the ICC statute. The ICC Bill accordingly defines offences exactly as in the ICC statute. To do otherwise, or to exclude service personnel from the provisions of the Bill, would leave them without full protection from malicious or ill-founded allegations and prosecutions.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Work Permits (Professional Sport)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many work permits have been issued to non-European Economic Area (a) professional basket ball players, (b) golf professionals, (c) rugby football union players, (d) rugby football league players, (e) horse racing jockeys, (f) cricket players, (g) ice hockey players and (h) association football players in (i) England and Wales and (ii) Scotland in (A) 1996–97, (B) 1997–98, (C) 1998–99 and (D) 1999–2000. [148882]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 7 February 2001]: Information held by the Department does not distinguish between England and Wales, and Scotland, and it does not separately identify rugby football union players from rugby football league players. As the seasons between the different sports overlap, for ease of reference the information requested has been presented by calendar year.

Professional basketball players	85	92	70	88	87
Rugby players	227	261	204	180	158
Horse racing jockeys	12	3	3	3	6
Cricket players	189	239	263	285	352
Ice hockey players	66	55	52	64	79
Association football players	53	53	67	78	76

Figures include all approvals for work permits, work permit extensions, and change of employers.

Departmental Policies (Morecambe and Lunesdale)

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out, including statistical information, the effect on the Morecambe and Lunesdale constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [149121]

Mr. Wills: Details of the effect on the Morecambe and Lunesdale constituency and Lancashire LEA of a range of the Department's policies have been placed in the Library.

Teacher Vacancies (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school teacher vacancies there are in schools in the London borough of Wandsworth. [149367]

Ms Estelle Morris: Full-time teacher vacancies in maintained schools in the London borough of Wandsworth at January 2000 are as follows.

	Number of vacancies	Vacancy rate (Percentage)
Nursery/primary
Wandsworth	13	1.7
England	1,420	0.8
Secondary
Wandsworth	10	1.7
England	1,250	0.7

The number of regular teachers in maintained schools in England increased by 6,900 between January 1998 and January 2000 (7,400 in England and Wales).

There was a growth of more than 2,000 in the number of people training to be teachers between 1999–2000 and 2000–01, the first such increase since 1992–93.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the impact of tuition fees and the abolition of maintenance grants on (1) student drop-out rates; [149456]

(2) the number of applicants for university. [149457]

Mr. Wicks: We have no evidence to suggest that the student support arrangements we introduced are affecting non-completion rates or the demand for higher education. The non-completion rate in the UK has remained broadly steady at 17–18 per cent. since 1991–92. Data from the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) on the number of people accepted for entry to full-time and sandwich courses in higher education in the UK in 2000–01 show an overall rise of 1.5 per cent. or over 5,000 students compared to the previous year. This follows an increase in enrolments in both 1998–99 and 1999–2000.

Student Expulsions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students have been expelled from universities in England and Wales as a result of non-payment of debts in each of the last five years. [149459]

Mr. Wicks: Data are not held centrally on expulsions from higher education institutions as a result of non-payment of debts.

Bett Report

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations he has received from higher education bodies and institutions on the recommendations of the Bett report. [149664]

Mr. Wicks: My Department has received several representations from higher education bodies, institutions and individuals. The Bett report was to the employers, not the Government. However, the Government recognise that funding is a factor in recruitment and retention of staff and is providing £50 million in 2001–02, rising to £110 million in 2002–03 and £170 million in 2003–04, to support increases in academic and non-academic pay. The Higher Education Funding Council for England is currently consulting institutions, representative bodies and unions on the human resource strategies which will underpin the allocation of funds.

Higher Education

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of the cost of living in the south of England on recruitment of non-academic staff in higher education. [149665]

Mr. Wicks: My Department has made no such assessment. The recruitment of staff is a matter for higher education institutions. However, the Government are providing £50 million in 2001–02, rising to £110 million in 2002–03 and £170 million in 2003–04, to support increases in academic and non-academic pay. This will give higher education employers more flexibility to address recruitment and retention difficulties and modernise their reward systems.

Music and Ballet Scheme

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children are assisted with their fees with the music and ballet scheme; how many are recruited annually; and what is the average cost per child to public funds. [149751]

Ms Estelle Morris: In the current academic year 2000–01, 749 children hold aided places under the music and ballet scheme at an average cost per pupil to public funds of £14,845. All parents using the scheme are required each year to make a declaration of the family's income in order for their contribution towards school fees to be assessed.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the recent review of the music and ballet scheme and the subsequent consultation with interested parties. [149753]

Ms Estelle Morris: We value the music and ballet scheme, and want to see it continue and develop. The final report on the review was received in summer 1999 and we consulted more than 60 organisations and other interested parties in the autumn of that year. We announced last April that we accepted, in principle, all 20 recommendations in the report: they covered scheme objectives and decision-making, scheme development, and financial arrangements (including the restructuring of the parental contribution scales). In response to one of the key recommendations, we established last summer an advisory group for the music and ballet scheme to advise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on the operation, monitoring and future development of the scheme.

Supported Employment

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies he has commissioned into the future demand for supported employment involving the first or rehabilitated employment of persons disabled and out of work and of the unit cost of widening access to employment for those in these categories. [149754]

Ms Hodge: My Department has not commissioned recent studies into the likely future demand for supported employment, though such studies have been commissioned in the past. I announced radical improvements to the Supported Employment Programme on 8 December 2000 which will result in the programme being opened up, for the first time, to people who were formerly claiming incapacity benefits or were long-term unemployed. The programme will be known as Workstep from April 2001.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies he has commissioned into incentives to move into open employment from supported employment and the likely impact on those providers of supported employment who fail to qualify for those incentives. [149756]

Ms Hodge: My Department has not commissioned studies into incentives to move into open employment from supported employment, although my Department and the Employment Service receive regular feedback from providers and clients on this issue. We will continue to provide the training and support people need to progress from supported to mainstream employment. This is an important part of the modernised Supported Employment Programme (Workstep) which I announced on 8 December 2000. We expect that rates of progression from the programme will vary between providers and we will monitor the effects of incentives during the early years to see if there is a need to make any changes.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies he has commissioned into the nature of open employment taken by those leaving supported employment and into the skill grades and remuneration involved compared with those available under their previous supported employment. [149757]

Ms Hodge: My Department has not commissioned studies into the nature of open employment undertaken by people leaving supported employment because the numbers making such a move have been very small. One of my aims in modernising the Supported Employment Programme is to introduce improvements which will increase the numbers of people who move from the programme and into mainstream employment. The modernised programme, which will be known as Workstep from April 2001, will be subject to evaluation to provide information about what happens to people who leave it.

Royal Liverpool Children's Inquiry

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what monitoring he has carried out of the responses of the Council of the University of Liverpool to the Royal Liverpool Children's Inquiry; and what assessment he has made of the ability of the Council of the University of Liverpool to investigate the matter and take disciplinary action where appropriate. [149874]

Mr. Wicks: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Education and Employment in the Lords has asked the Council of the University of Liverpool to keep her informed of progress in the Council's consideration of disciplinary action of those employees of the University named in the Redfern report on the Royal Liverpool Children's Hospital. I understand that the president of the University Council has already established a panel of lay members of Council to take this work forward. I am confident the Council will properly discharge its duties.

New Deal Consultancies

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what payments have been made to (a) Wildcat Corporation and (b) other bodies for consultancy services given in relation to New Deal and the reform of New Deal; and if he will list the subject of each project, the consultancy provider and the fee paid in each case. [149891]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 12 February 2001]: All payments to the Wildcat Corporation have been made from private funds. Information on consultancies is not kept centrally, and could not be gathered in the form requested without incurring disproportionate costs.

Departmental Initiatives (Pendle)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what initiatives embarked upon since May 1997 have benefited Pendle; and if he will make a statement. [149912]

Mr. Wills: The information has been placed in the Libraries.

School Funding (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what additional standard spending assessment for Leicestershire would be required were it funded at the average for English counties for (a) primary and (b) secondary pupils based on the SSA for 2001–02. [149985]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the 2001–02 education SSA per primary and secondary pupil for Leicestershire and England.

SSA	Leicestershire	England
Primary per pupil	2,292	2,588
Secondary per pupil	2,960	3,313

If Leicestershire's SSA per pupil for primary and secondary schools were the same as the national average it is estimated that its 2001–02 education SSA would be £14.8 million higher. Between 1997–98 and 2000–01, funding per pupil in Leicestershire has increased by £310 in real terms. In addition to an increase of £14.7 million in education SSA, schools in Leicestershire will benefit from an estimated £6.7 million in Direct Grant in 2001–02. The authority will also receive £100,000 as its share of the extra £52 million made available to provide support to help some LEAs manage funding changes in 2001–02.

Education Business Links

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of the (a) £6 million additional funding announced in press notice 2001/0073 and (b) £23 million funding for Education Business Links will be ring-fenced for that purpose; and what proportion is discretionary expenditure for learning and skills councils. [150114]

Ms Estelle Morris: All of the £23 million for Education Business Links, of which the additional £6 million is a part, will be ring-fenced for that purpose.

London Weighting

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in which local education authorities teaching staff are eligible for London weighting allowance. [150191]

Ms Estelle Morris: There are separate allowances for inner and outer London and the fringe. For these purposes:

1. "The Inner London Area" means the area comprising the areas of the inner London councils as defined in section 163(2) of the Education Reform Act 1988 and the areas of the London boroughs of Barking and Dagenham, Brent, Ealing, Haringey, Merton and Newham;

2. "The Outer London Area" means Greater London, excluding the Inner London Area; and

3. "The Fringe Area" means:

in Berkshire: the districts of Bracknell Forest, Slough and Windsor and Maidenhead; in Buckinghamshire: the districts of South Buckinghamshire and Chiltern; in Essex: the districts of Basildon, Brentwood, Epping Forest, Harlow and Thurrock; in Hertfordshire: the districts of Broxbourne, Dacorum, East Hertfordshire, Hertsmere, St. Albans, Three Rivers, Watford and Welwyn Hatfield; in Kent: the districts of Dartford and Sevenoaks;

in Surrey: the whole county; and in West Sussex: the district of Crawley.

Future of Education

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the future of education. [150204]

Mr. Wills: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 12 February 2001, Official Report, columns 22–24.

Stagecoach Theatre Schools

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when a response will be made to the founder of the Stagecoach Theatre Schools, about whether the Stagecoach Schools will be required to register with Ofsted's Early Years Directorate and be subject to the relevant training criteria and staffing ratios. [150347]

Ms Hodge: It is not our intention that Ofsted should normally register activity-based settings such as drama, dance, or music schools where child care is incidental to the main purpose of the provision. We are exploring how that can be achieved effectively. I shall write to the founder of Stagecoach Theatre Schools shortly with a proposed way forward.

North Southwark Education Action Zone

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to publish the North Southwark Education Action Zone account for 1999–2000. [150349]

Ms Estelle Morris: The 1999–2000 annual accounts for North Southwark Education Action Zone will be signed off and laid before Parliament by the Comptroller and Auditor General when the National Audit Office (NAO) has completed its work and is satisfied it can give a full opinion. The NAO will then publish the accounts.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Gloucestershire Fire and Rescue Service

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet representatives of the Gloucestershire Fire and Rescue Service to discuss its funding. [150339]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Arrangements have already been made for a meeting with Home Office officials on 13 February. The above request will be considered in the light of the outcome of that meeting.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Putney (Mr. Colman), of 2 February 2001, Official Report, column 338W, if he will make it his policy to list applications from Tibetan asylum seekers separately. [150057]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 12 February 2001]: For statistical purposes, asylum claims from Tibetans are classed as applications received from the People's Republic of China. There are no plans to change this procedure.

Correspondence

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Putney will receive a reply to his letter of 14 November on behalf of his constituent Mr. Juricic (Ref. J252287). [148438]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 9 February 2001]: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 12 February 2001.

I am sorry for the delay in responding.

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prison inmates in category (i) A, (ii) B , (iii) C and (iv) D, were being held in prisons in England and Wales on 1 January. [149620]

Mr. Boateng: Provisional information showing how many sentenced adult male prisoners are in category A, B, C and D prisons is given in the table.

Remand prisoners are not usually categorised except for some remand prisoners held as category A prisoners. 7,857 male prisoners were being held on remand at the end of January. Of these, 241 were being held as category A prisoners.

Women and young offenders may be placed in category A establishments but are otherwise categorised as suitable for open or closed conditions. Provisional information shows that at the end of January 2001 there were three sentenced adult female prisoners and one remand female prisoner in category A prisons. Sixteen male young offenders were also held in category A prisons.

Number of sentenced adult males held in each category of Prison in England and Wales for the end of January 2001

Category of prison	Number[1]
Category A	703
Category B	7,701
Category C	26,817
Category D	4,030

[1] Excludes sentenced adult males recently arrived and awaiting categorisation

Life Sentences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were serving a life prison sentence for murder in England and Wales on 1 January. [149619]

Mr. Boateng: Provisional information for 31 December 2000 shows that there were 3,325 males and 124 females serving life sentences for murder in prisons in England and Wales at that time. Information on prison population is available in successive volumes of "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (Chapter 1 of the 1999 edition, CM 4805).

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the date of application of the earliest application for naturalisation which is awaiting determination by his Department. [147634]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 29 January 2001]: The information in the form requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, as at 31 December 2000, the Immigration and Nationality Directorate was starting consideration of applications for naturalisation made on 4 June 2000. There is a small number of cases older than this, where initial consideration is being given. Some cases received after 4 June have also been started. Applications for registration as a British citizen are started as they arrive.

Deportation Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women are being held in prisons in England and Wales awaiting deportation from the UK. [149621]

Mr. Boateng: Provisional information for 31 December 2000 shows there were 101 males and no females being held in prisons in England and Wales awaiting deportation.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much additional funding in real terms has been allocated for employing Immigration and Nationality Directorate caseworkers in each of the last three years; what additional real terms funding is planned for the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [149546]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 12 February 2001]: Overall expenditure on the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) (excluding asylum support costs) over the last three years was:

£ million

	Cash	Real[1]
1998–99	209.0	218.2
1999–2000	260.0	265.2

Since November 1999 IND has recruited about 500 extra asylum decision makers and recruitment is continuing. The costs of those decision makers are met from the overall IND budget and not allocated separately.

For the next three years the IND budget (excluding asylum support costs) is:

£ million

	Cash	Real[1]
2001–02	549.5	536.4
2002–03	555.9	529.1
2003–04	553.9	514.4

Spending on caseworkers for future years will continue to be met within overall budget levels and will be decided annually taking account of expected work load.

Race Equality

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the race equality employment strategy of his Department. [149837]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 28 July 1999 I published my race equality employment targets for the recruitment, retention and career progression of minority ethnic staff within the Home Office and its service areas, that is, the police, the fire, the prison and the probation services.

The first annual report was published on 27 October 2000 and showed that the Home Office and its services are making good progress towards putting in place systems to deliver the sought outcomes by the end of the programme period.

Police Recruitment

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown, both nationally and for each individual police force area in England and Wales, by major category of expenditure, of the (a) cost to date and (b) planned cost of the national police recruitment campaign. [150043]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 12 February 2001]: The first phase of the police recruitment campaign ran from September to November 2000. The second phase of the campaign is running now and will finish in mid-March 2001.

The costs by media are listed as follows. All costs are excluding VAT:

	Phase 1 (Expenditure)	Phase 2 (Planned expenditure)	Total
Television	2,230,759	1,623,696	3,854,455
Cinema	374,254	424,025	798,279
National Press	647,565	481,015	1,128,590
Women's Press	85,629	0	85,629
Ambient Media	56,000	6,950	62,950
Radio	40,000	109,870	149,870
Online	0	60,000	60,000
Total	3,434,207	2,705,566	6,139,773

In addition, approximately £840,000 has been spent on advertising production, bringing the total expected campaign spend to £6.98 million excluding VAT.

The costs of future phases in 2001 have not been finalised.

The costs cannot be broken down by individual police force as media for the campaign have been bought nationally.

Emergency Planning

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he plans to take following the agreement made at the Leeds Castle meeting of the Central Local Partnership concerning the review of emergency planning. [150462]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister proposed that the arrangements for emergency planning in England and Wales be reviewed and I have set up a Steering Group to take forward this review. It will identify strengths and weaknesses in the current arrangements for emergency planning; suggest ways in which the community preparedness for emergencies can be enhanced; consult widely with stakeholders and provide advice to Ministers on the result of the consultation.

TREASURY

Census

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 January 2001, Official Report, column 565W, on Census 2001, what proportion of householders' questionnaire forms for the 1971 to 1991 census have been destroyed. [149785]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. John M. Taylor, dated February 2001:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking what proportion of householders questionnaire forms for the 1971 to 1991 censuses have been destroyed (149785).

The Census returns for the censuses from 1971 to 1991 are in my custody and none have been destroyed.

Sharman Review

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government have received Lord Sharman's Review of Audit and Accountability in the 21st century. [150461]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have received Lord Sharman's Review. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House.

I am most grateful to Lord Sharman for reviewing this important and complex area, and for conducting his Review so speedily.

The twin principles of accountability of the Executive to Parliament and independent scrutiny by the Comptroller and Auditor General are enormously important to good government. Present arrangements have evolved gradually over the past century and it is valuable to have the benefit of Lord Sharman's views on how these arrangements should now be developed to best fit the 21st century.

The Government will consider Lord Sharman's recommendations very carefully with a view to improving the present system of accountability, and will issue a formal response in due course.

VAT

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the levels of value added tax charged on new build and work to existing buildings. [148455]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have received a range of representations about VAT on new build and work to existing buildings.

Aggregates Levy (Northern Ireland)

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the percentage change in the price of aggregates in Northern Ireland following the imposition of the aggregates levy; and if he will make a statement. [149637]

Mr. Timms: Aggregates prices vary considerably according to mineral quality, local conditions, and the commercial decisions of individual firms. The flat rate aggregates levy will therefore have a variable percentage impact on aggregate prices.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates the volume of Northern Ireland aggregate production lost to quarries in the Republic of Ireland will be as a result of the aggregates levy; and if he will make a statement. [149636]

Mr. Timms: The international competitiveness of the Northern Irish aggregates industry will not be affected by the levy as imported aggregate will be subject to the levy when commercially exploited in the same way as UK produced aggregate, and UK aggregate which is exported will be relieved.

Ultra-low Sulphur Petrol

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the Government have made of the availability of ULS diesel fuel in rural parts of Scotland, Wales and each of the English regions. [150333]

Dawn Primarolo: Ultra-low sulphur diesel now forms 100 per cent. of the road diesel market in the UK.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to extend the lower rate of VAT to include repairs to listed buildings in addition to historic places of worship; and if he will make a statement. [149763]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 9 February 2001]: One of the Government's key objectives is a decent home for everyone. We are pursuing this through the plans we announced in the pre-Budget report for a reduced VAT rate on conversion services and a zero rate for the sale of renovated homes that have been empty for over 10 years.

Capital Gains

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the proportion of estates that benefited from exemption of capital gains unrealised at death in the last year for which figures are available; and what the (a) average and (b) median benefit was; [146262]

(2) what estimate he has made of the proportion of estates that benefited from exemption of capital gains unrealised at death; and what the (a) average and (b) median benefit was in each of the last three years. [146154]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 January 2001]: The latest available information for 1998–99 to 2000–01 is as follows:

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
Proportion of estates with net CGT liability in absence of exemption for capital gains accrued but unrealised at death (Percentage)	8	9	9
Estates with net CGT liability
Average net CGT liability (£)	20,600	21,900	21,500
Median net CGT liability (£)	6,700	7,070	7,010

Government Expenditure

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those items of the programmes run by the Ministry of Defence, Department for Education and Employment, Department of Health, Department of Trade and Industry, Department for Culture, Media and Sport, and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, which are classified as (a) Government spending and (b) Government investment. [150185]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Government spending plans for 2001–02 through to 2003–04 were set out in Spending Review 2000, New Public Spending Plans 2001–04 (Cm 4807), showing resource and capital budgets.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the administrative costs of implementing the Working Families Tax Credit to (a) businesses and (b) the Treasury; [149859]

(2) what estimate was made of the costs of administering the working families tax credit within the Inland Revenue. [149860]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the costs to employers of operating the Working Families Tax Credit and the Disabled Persons' Tax Credit are given in paragraphs 40–46 of the regulatory impact assessment for the Tax Credits Bill 1999.

The cost to Inland Revenue of managing and paying these tax credits for the six months to 31 March 2000 are shown in note 3 to the trust account, on page 83 of Inland Revenue's annual report for the year ending 31 March 2000.

Both documents are available in the Library of the House.

Ms Osborne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) widows and (b) widowers with care of their children are in receipt of the Working Families Tax Credit. [149856]

Dawn Primarolo: This information is not available. The application form for the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) does not ask whether the applicant is a widow or widower.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the Inland Revenue's guidance on software for administering the Working Families Tax Credit; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of these guidelines in dealing with circumstances where credits cease. [149370]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue produces specific guidance to payroll software developers which includes guidance on the Working Families Tax Credit. I am not aware of any representations on this matter.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies have reported (a) difficulties in operating the Working Families Tax Credit and (b) overpayment of tax and national insurance as a result of the Working Families Tax Credit. [149375]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue provides detailed guidance to employers and the majority of them are paying tax credits to their employees correctly.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to ensure that jobseekers in receipt of Working Families Tax Credits are not disadvantaged in jobseeking as a result of on-costs associated with their employment. [149372]

Dawn Primarolo: Payment of tax credits by employers reinforces the link between tax credits and the rewards of the work.

In the January 2001 "Employer's Bulletin", sent to all employers, employers were advised that they must not charge their employees for paying tax credits through the payroll.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the Working Families Tax Credit on recruiting intentions among small and medium-sized enterprises. [149373]

Dawn Primarolo: The Working Families Tax Credit is just one element in a comprehensive programme of tax and benefit reform to help make work pay and provide incentives to move up the earnings ladder. Other elements include reductions in income tax and reforms to national insurance contributions. These measures are underpinned by the national minimum wage which guarantees fair minimum standards of pay.

Combined with policies to move people closer to the labour market and make them more effective at competing for jobs, the Government's tax and benefit reforms will help increase the effective supply of labour.

Tax Rates

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional yield from levying a 50 per cent. income tax rate on (a) taxable incomes and (b) gross incomes above £100,000; and if he will estimate in each case the (i) income tax and (ii) capital gains tax. [148940]

Dawn Primarolo: The full-year effects in 2001–02 of making the changes are set out in the table.

Change in 2001–02[1]	Income tax yield (£ billion)[2]	Capital gains tax yield (£ million)[3]
(a) 50 per cent. rate for taxable incomes over £100,000	[4]—	130
(b) 50 per cent. rate for gross incomes over £100,000	3.4	130

[1] Estimates are consistent with the November 2000 pre-Budget report

[2] Income tax estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes

[3] Capital gains tax estimates take into account the likely effect on yield of changes in the volume of disposals in a full year caused by taxpayers' behaviour

[4] I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Alan Simpson) on 15 January 2001, Official Report, column 126W

National Insurance

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are owed outstanding national insurance contribution rebates for the 1999–2000 tax year, broken down into (a) those with personal pensions and (b) those in contracted-out money purchase pension schemes. [143508]

Dawn Primarolo: There are approximately 683,000 people awaiting a NIC rebate for the 1999–2000 tax year. This figure represents approximately 1.4 per cent. of the total end of year receipts received so far.

The outstanding total can be broken down as follows:

(a) 656,000 people with a personal pension;

(b) 27,000 people who are in a contracted-out money purchase scheme.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Housing Investment (North-West)

15. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on housing investment in the north-west. [148456]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The north-west is, like all regions, benefiting from the substantial increases in resources already made available and the further increases planned for the next three years. The resources allocated to local authorities in the north-west for housing investment in 2001–02 amounts to around £350 million which is well over twice the amount allocated for 1997–98 by the last Government.

Regional Assemblies

16. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to enable the creation of regional assemblies in those regions where there is known to be support for their creation. [148458]

Ms Armstrong: We remain committed to move to directly elected regional government, where there is support as demonstrated in referendums. As steps in this direction, we have supported the development of a stronger role for the regions, through the work of the chambers, regional development agencies and Government offices, and we are encouraging the regions to take forward the debate on governance.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met the Prime Minister to discuss the introduction of regional assemblies. [148459]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has regular meetings with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, during which a number of issues are discussed.

North-West Development Agency

17. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he next intends to meet officials of the North-West development agency to discuss its activities in Cumbria. [148460]

Mr. Prescott: I met with the north west development agency on the 26 January to discuss the agency's activities in Cumbria and my hon. Friend's objections. Considerable time was spent in discussion of the location of the regional and sub-regional offices. The north-west development agency assured me that as well as having a sub-regional office (in Penrith), they will maintain a presence in West Cumbria.

Weymouth-Dorchester Relief Road

18. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the earliest date by which the Weymouth-Dorchester relief road could be built; and on the basis of that timetable, on what date central Government finance for this project will start. [148461]

Mr. Hill: The Weymouth relief road was provisionally accepted for funding in its current form subject to successful completion of planning and statutory procedures. The Government will be discussing with the promoters the suitability of the scheme for procurement under the private finance initiative.

Dorset county council's local transport plan specified the proposed date for the start of construction as April 2005.

Disadvantaged Communities

19. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the policies his Department has pursued to address the problems faced by disadvantaged communities. [148462]

Ms Armstrong: The Government's policies for tackling the problems faced by these communities are set out in "A New Commitment to Neighbourhood Renewal" about which I made a Statement on 15 January, 2001 Official Report, columns 27 to 30 when it was published. This action plan, to be implemented by the whole of Whitehall, overseen by the new neighbourhood renewal unit, aims to narrow the gap between deprived areas and the rest of the country so that in 10–20 years no one should be seriously disadvantaged by where they live.

Renewable Energy

20. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to speed up planning decisions on proposed renewable energy installations. [148463]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have set in hand the preparation of regional renewable energy assessments and targets to provide the framework for more positive and strategic planning for renewable energy development at regional and local levels. This in turn will feed through to planning decisions on individual renewable energy projects.

London Underground

21. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the public-private partnership for the modernisation of the London Underground to take effect. [148464]

Mr. Hill: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced earlier this month that he had reached agreement with the Commissioner of Transport for London, Bob Kiley, that we will work together and with London Underground on modifications to the public-private partnership. If we can agree mutually acceptable changes, the PPP bidders will be asked to submit revised proposals.

The Government have not, and will not, set an artificial timetable for completion of the PPP as this would weaken our ability to ensure that it delivers the best deal for London.

South East England Development Agency

22. Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what support the South East England development agency has given to the local economy of the south-east. [148465]

Ms Beverley Hughes: SEEDA has:

invested £63 million in community and physical regeneration supported more than 160 rural development projects attracted 34 new companies to the south-east invested £4.2 million in projects to upskill people, supporting over 20,000 enterprises developed initiatives to promote enterprise, innovation and cluster development.

Neighbourhood Renewal Fund (North-West)

23. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many areas in the north-west of England are benefiting from the neighbourhood renewal fund. [148466]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government are providing £900 million over the next three years through the neighbourhood renewal fund to improve services in the most deprived areas. Twenty-one local authorities in the north-west of England will benefit from this fund.

Housing Policy

24. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the methods by which his Department develops housing policy. [148467]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government develop housing policy through consultation, research and analysis. In December we published "The Way Forward for Housing", which sets out our policies to meet our objective to give everyone the opportunity of a decent home. This followed up a successful consultation on the housing Green Paper, widely recognised as the most comprehensive review of housing policy in a generation.

33. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on housing policy in south-east England. [148477]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The Government's aim is to ensure that everyone has a decent home. Last December, we published our "Housing Policy Statement: The Way Forward for Housing". This set out our plans for achieving this, including the introduction of the "Starter Home Initiative", designed to help key workers in areas of high housing cost such as the south-east. The recently published revised regional planning guidance for the south-east recognises the importance of affordable housing. These issues are highlighted in the regional housing statement, together with the role housing investment can play in regeneration and sustaining rural communities.

Air Services (Regional Airports)

25. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to develop international air services to non-London airports. [148468]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Since June 1998, all bilateral partners with whom we did not already have liberal air services agreements have been offered unrestricted access to all UK regional airports, so long as UK airlines are also allowed to operate on the same routes. In addition, whenever possible we explain the opportunities available at regional airports during air services negotiations.

Rail Network (East Sussex)

26. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on planned investment in the rail network in East Sussex. [148469]

Mr. Hill: GoVia will invest up to £20 million over a period of up to 20 years as the preferred counterparty for the new replacement South Central franchise. East Sussex will benefit from electrification between Uckfield and Hurst Green and Ashford and Hastings, new rolling stock and station refurbishment including platform extensions.

Traffic Levels

27. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the effects of rising traffic levels on the Government's sustainable development strategy. [148470]

Mr. Meacher: In "Achieving a better quality of life" (January 2001), our first annual report on progress by the country as a whole towards sustainable development, we noted that road traffic levels continued on a rising trend. Road traffic has been rising steadily since the 1950s. In recent decades that growth has been closely associated with the underlying rate of economic growth.

A key objective of policy is to break that link, improving access for people and goods while reducing traffic growth and tackling the impacts of congestion and pollution. Our 10-year plan for transport includes a wide range of measures aimed at achieving these objectives.

The most recent provisional traffic figures, published last week, show that in 2000 road traffic grew by 0.7 per cent. (after adjustment for the effects of fuel shortages in the autumn). This was the lowest increase in traffic for many years, and occurred despite economic growth of 3.2 per cent. during the year.

Local Transport Plans

28. Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on implementation of the local transport plans. [148472]

Mr. Hill: The local transport capital settlement announced on 14 December 2000, Official Report, column 202W, provided an £8.4 billion boost for local transport improvements over the next five years. Local authorities are responsible for delivering the proposals in their local transport plans. Authorities are required to submit annual progress reports on the delivery of their plans. My Department will assess progress not only on the plans themselves but also progress towards the local transport outcomes envisaged in our 10-year plan for transport.

Industrial Development (Greenbelt Land)

29. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on industrial development on greenbelt land. [148473]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Construction of new buildings for industrial development is inappropriate development in designated green belts except where it involves infilling or redevelopment of a major developed site in an adopted development plan. There remains a presumption against inappropriate development in green belts, as set out in planning policy guidance note 2.

Integrated Transport

31. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met the British Chambers of Commerce to discuss progress towards achieving integrated transport in Britain. [148475]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State has not had the opportunity to meet the British Chambers of Commerce to discuss integrated transport in Britain, although meetings with individual chambers have taken place. Lord Macdonald will, however, be addressing the British Chambers of Commerce annual conference on 28 March, where I am sure the subject of transport policy will be raised.

Ports

32. John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on modernising British ports. [148476]

Mr. Hill: The Government announced the publication of a ports policy paper, "Modern Ports", on 27 November. Ports have an important role in integrated transport policy. The paper identifies a number of specific initiatives we hope to pursue. We intend to promote better regulation of the industry, and agreed national standards and good practice for port management and port operations alike. The paper sets out a balanced policy on port development which aims to make the best use of existing and former operational land, secures high environmental standards, but supports sustainable projects for which there is a clear need.

Neighbourhood Wardens

34. Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the neighbourhood wardens programme. [148478]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We announced the first round of 50 successful bids for the neighbourhood wardens grant on 18 September 2000. A further announcement on the success of an additional 36 schemes is being made today. The successful schemes are of a good regional spread, tackling issues on improving the environment, quality of life and community safety.

Housing Investment

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on plans for investment in (a) social housing and (b) council housing. [148474]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The spending plans for 2001–02 to 2003–04 announced following last year's spending review provide for significant increases in housing investment by both local authorities and registered social landlords. These increases, which build on the substantial additional resources already made available through the capital receipts initiative and the 1998 spending review, reflect our commitment to bring all social housing in England up to a decent standard by 2010 and to provide additional social housing in areas where there is a need for it. Allocations for housing capital expenditure by local authorities have been increased from £750 million in 1997–98 to £2.6 billion in 2003–04, while allocations for investment in new housing by registered social landlords will increase from £0.7 billion to £1.2 billion over the same period.

EU Structural Funds (Merseyside)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last discussed with the European Commission matters relating to the Merseyside objective 1 programme that have been referred to the DTI state aid unit; and when he expects the project to be approved. [147848]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Those project proposals that require notification will be put to the European Commission for approval. None of the proposals for funding from the Merseyside objective 1 programme has as yet been put to the EC and the Secretary of State has not entered into discussion about them. Advice is being sought on a number of project proposals for this programme and it is likely that additional information will be required on some before notification can take place. Approval is a matter for the EC and notifications are dealt with as quickly as possible.

Transport Plan

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many of the new light rail lines mentioned in paragraph 6.61 of the 10-year transport plan he forecasts will start to be built over the period 2001–02 to 2005–06; and what the forecast public expenditure will be, including public resource and public investment, in the period on those lines; [149110]

(2) how much of the money mentioned in paragraph 6.61 of the 10-year transport plan he forecasts will be spent over the period 2001–02 to 2005–06; and what will be the forecast public expenditure, including public resource and public investment, in that period on those schemes; [149106]

(3) how many of the strategic road network schemes mentioned in paragraph 6.73 of the 10-year transport plan he forecasts will start to be built over the period 2001–02 to 2005–06; and what the forecast public expenditure will be, including public resource and public investment in the period on those schemes; [149107]

(4) how much of the support to urban and rural bus services mentioned in paragraph 6.61 of the 10-year transport plan he forecasts will be spent over the period 2001–02 to 2005–06; and what will be the public expenditure, including public resource and public investment, in that period on those schemes; [149105]

(5) how many of the trunk road by-passes mentioned in paragraph 6.73 of the 10-year transport plan he forecasts will start to be built over the period 2001–02 to 2005–06; and what the forecast public expenditure will be, including public resource and public investment, in the period on those schemes; [149108]

(6) how many of the schemes in the Highway Agency's targeted programme of improvement mentioned in paragraph 6.73 of the 10-year transport plan he forecasts will start to be built over the period 2001–02 to 2005–06; and what the forecast public expenditure will be, including public resource and public investment, in the period on those schemes. [149109]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 February 2001]: "Transport 2010: The 10 Year Plan" assumes that public expenditure on local transport in England in the period 2001–02 to 2005–06 will total £30.7 billion. Of this, £12.4 billion is capital expenditure, of which £8.4 billion will be provided to local authorities outside London through local transport plans. Public resource expenditure is assumed to be £18.3 billion.

The plan assumes that £2.5 billion of public resource expenditure will be used to support urban and rural bus services in England between 2001–02 to 2005–06. This figure excludes expenditure that the plan assumes the Mayor will provide for bus services in London. In addition, local authorities outside London will be taking forward a number of major bus projects and will be using a significant proportion of the capital resources available to them for smaller-scale schemes on bus-related measures.

Of the £30 billion of public expenditure to eliminate the backlog in local road and bridge maintenance, complete the bridge strengthening programme and replace life-expired lighting on local roads over the 10-year plan period mentioned in paragraph 6.61 of the plan, the plan assumes that revenue spending on highways maintenance by local authorities will be £10.1 billion in the period 2001–02 to 2005–06. A further £3 billion of capital expenditure for local road maintenance will be provided in this period to local authorities outside London through local transport plans.

Paragraph 6.32 of the plan states that the specific schemes on the strategic road network to be progressed by the Highways Agency over the period of the plan will depend on the outcome of the multi-modal studies and decisions taken in the context of regional planning guidance. The only forecast that can be made about the number of schemes to be started in the period 2001–02 to 2005–06 is in respect of those committed trunk road schemes currently included in the targeted programme of improvements. Contracts for 13 of these schemes will be let in the current financial year (2000–01). The Agency expect contracts for a further 25 schemes, including nine by-passes, to be let in the period 2001–02 to 2005–06, subject to completion of statutory procedures for 13 of these schemes. The 10-year plan anticipates that public expenditure on the strategic road network will total £9.4 billion between 2001–02 and 2005–06. Of this, £5.7 billion will be capital expenditure and £3.7 billion will be resource expenditure.

The most advanced proposals for light rail schemes, which would deliver 13 new lines, are identified in paragraph 6.61 of the plan. The current position on each of these projects is set out in table 1. There are also a number of other proposals which are at a less advanced stage, including new systems in Merseyside and Hull and extensions to Midland Metro, Tyne and Wear Metro, Manchester Metrolink, South Yorkshire Supertram and Nottingham Express Transit. Work on these proposals is not yet at a sufficiently advanced stage to be able to forecast whether they could be under construction by 2005–06 or the level of public expenditure that might be involved. However, the plan assumes that public capital expenditure on light rail outside London between 2001–02 and 2005–06 will total £1 billion. The actual amounts will depend on progress with individual schemes and the funding packages agreed with promoters.

In London, it will be for the Mayor to decide priorities within the resources available to Transport for London.

Spinnaker Tower, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will reach a decision on the order under the Transport and Works Act 1992 that has been requested in respect of the Spinnaker Tower at the Millennium site in Portsmouth; for what reason there has been a delay in the processing of this application; and if he will make a statement. [149563]

Mr. Hill: We expect to reach a decision very soon. A principal cause of delay has been that on two occasions, in September 1999 and in May 2000, the applicants revised their proposals. We had to ensure that interested parties were given a proper opportunity to make representations on those revisions, and on some further material that was submitted last August about radar impact.

Transport and Works Act

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the procedures his Department follows in making orders under the Transport and Works Act 1992; what his Department's target time-scale is for the process of granting an order; and if he will make a statement. [149562]

Mr. Hill: Where an application is made for an order under the Transport and Works Act 1992, and objections are received, the Secretary of State may choose either to hold a public local inquiry or to conduct exchanges of written representations between the parties. The choice of procedure will depend upon the nature and extent of the objections made. Either way, the aim is to ensure that the views of interested parties are given a proper airing in the interests of natural justice and informed decision taking. Following receipt of the inspector's report in an inquiry case, or the conclusion of the written exchanges, the Secretary of State carefully considers all the views expressed before coming to a decision.

The Department's target time-scales for determining TWA applications depend upon the procedure followed. Where an inquiry is held, the target is to issue a decision within six months of receipt of the inspector's report. For cases subject to the written representations procedure, the target is to reach a decision within four months of the conclusion of that procedure.

Transport Act

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he proposes to publish under section 268 of the Transport Act 2000; and on what date. [149561]

Mr. Hill: Later this year we intend to publish, for consultation, proposals for guidance under section 268(7) of the Act, and proposals for regulations under section 268(2), relating to use orders and speed orders, and 268(6), relating to procedures.

Planning

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require councils to require detailed plans to be made available at outline stage in respect of areas which have been offered protection by being made conservation or guideline areas, and for approval to be tied to the specific proposals. [149646]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have no plans to do so. Where an application is made for outline planning permission, the local planning authority may grant permission subject to a condition specifying reserved matters for the authority's subsequent approval. However, the Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) Order 1995 enables authorities to require within a month of receiving an outline planning application further details from applicants where they are of the opinion that the application ought not to be considered separately from all or any of the reserved matters.

It is for planning authorities to decide whether to accept changes to planning applications after they have been submitted, provided that they do not materially change the character of the development, or to require a fresh planning application. Where changes are accepted, it is for authorities to decide whether further publicity is desirable.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will require identified objectors to be notified when post-application discussions between planning officers and applicants is to take place; [149648]

(2) if he will standardise the levels of confidentiality applied to pre and post-application discussions between applicants and planning officers in planning cases across local authorities; [149640]

(3) if he will require greater openness in post-application discussions between planning officers and applicants and their representatives; [149647]

(4) if he will codify the rules on pre and post-application discussions between planning officers and applicants or their representatives. [150025]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have no plans to do so. However, all discussions should be carried out within the guidelines set out in the Local Government Association's "Probity in Planning" and local authorities' own planning codes of practice.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will establish a planning ombudsman. [149642]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have no plans to do so. The local government ombudsman is the independent and impartial body charged by Parliament with investigating complaints about local authorities.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what effect pre-application discussions between planning officers and applicants are designed to have on planning decisions. [149643]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We attach great importance to early consultation between developers and local planning authorities on development proposals. Pre-application discussions provide an opportunity for proposals to be revised and refined (for example, to reflect local planning policies) before planning applications are submitted and thus facilitate a speedier and more efficient processing of them.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require councils to make statements of planning authorities available to objectors at an earlier stage than at present, and before deadlines for submission of their statements. [149644]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Streamlined statutory procedures for handling planning appeals were introduced, following public consultation, in August last year. These require other parties to submit their comments or statements of case to the Secretary of State on the same time scale as local planning authorities and appellants submit their statements. The operation of the new procedures is being monitored, but we have no current plans to change them.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning appeals were lodged with his Department in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how many appeals were dismissed by his Department in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [149810]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The following is information provided by the planning inspectorate about planning appeals to the Secretary of State under section 78 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

Year	Appeals received in year	Appeals refused in year
1990–91	26,692	17,522
1991–92	22,121	14,963
1992–93	17,959	11,853
1993–94	14,979	9,138
1994–95	14,651	8,098
1995–96	14,653	7,461
1996–97	13,767	7,819
1997–98	14,182	8,366
1998–99	14,381	8,354
1999–2000	14,772	8,046

School Transport

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to issue guidance to local education authorities on the age of vehicles used for the transportation of schoolchildren. [149807]

Mr. Hill: I have no plans to issue guidance to local education authorities about the age of vehicles used for the transportation of schoolchildren. All buses and coaches, irrespective of age, are required to meet the same maintenance and operational standards, which are enforced through the operators licensing scheme, annual testing and roadside spot checks.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the requirement for all coaches and minibuses that carry groups of children on organised trips to have seatbelts available applies to all types of school journeys. [149806]

Mr. Hill: Regulations require that every child must be provided with a seatbelt when a group of three or more children are travelling in a coach or minibus on an organised trip. School journeys where the key element is the transport of children would fall into the category of organised trip. However, seatbelts for children are not required in coaches and minibuses which are providing a transport service for the general public or which are being used to provide a registered local bus service.

Powershift Programme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people have received help from the Powershift programme to convert their vehicles to run on alternative fuels in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [149741]

Mr. Hill: In the period 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000, the Powershift programme offered grants towards the cost of converting 4,566 vehicles to run on alternative fuels. Of those recipients, 208 grants were to private individuals and 615 were private companies or public organisations.

Television Reception

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to take measures to ensure housing agencies and associations are legally responsible for providing television reception to their tenants and residents. [149663]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: None. Responsibility for providing for television reception is a matter of contract between social landlords and their tenants and residents. Many tenants and residents of social housing are, in common with owner-occupiers, responsible for providing for their television reception. In situations where television reception depends upon shared aerial systems, social landlords may be responsible (as part of tenancy terms and conditions) for the supply and upkeep of those aerials.

Rural Bus Subsidy

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will make an announcement on the allocation of the rural bus subsidy grant to local authorities for 2001–02. [150328]

Mr. Hill: We expect to make the announcement of the local authority rural bus subsidy grant allocations for 2001–02 shortly.

Sub-regions (South-West)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his reply of 8 February 2001, Official Report, column 648W, what different underlying economic realities are reflected in the proposed sub-regions. [150341]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The sub-regional approach draws on the report of the independent panel who conducted the public examination of the draft regional planning guidance (RPG) in March 2000. Their report was published on 3 August 2000 and copies were placed in the House of Commons Library. Chapter 4 of the report sets out their reasoning, including economic issues, which informed the proposals in the published proposed changes to the draft RPG.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 8 February 2001, Official Report, column 648W, which parliamentary constituencies fall within each of the proposed sub-regions. [150340]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The proposed sub-regions are broad areas which each have key economic features in common and therefore offer a basis for spatial planning. The areas overlap and it is not therefore possible to be as specific as the question suggests. The proposals remain subject to public consultation and comment.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what public expenditure is planned for (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04 for the single regeneration budget. [150220]

Ms Beverley Hughes: £872.8 million for 2001–02. There are no figures for 2002–03 and 2003–04 because the single regeneration budget (SRB) will be combined with the regional development agencies, other programmes to form a single budget that will fund a wide range of activities.

Road Congestion

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met the CBI to discuss the problem of road congestion. [148445]

Mr. Hill: Ministers have extensive meetings with organisations both in the public and private sectors as part of their duties. Such meetings usually cover a range of topics. It would be impractical to maintain a central record of meetings with representatives of external bodies or the details of such meetings.

Local Democracy

Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on initiatives to extend local democracy. [148442]

Ms Armstrong: We have put in place a wide range of initiatives to begin to reinvigorate local democracy. These include piloting new ways of voting, giving people real choice about how they are governed locally, and giving councils real powers to listen to and lead their local communities.

Rail Policy

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that there is common purpose in the planning, investment, strategies and operations of Railtrack and train operators. [148471]

Mr. Hill: The Transport Act 2000 created the Strategic Rail Authority, with the purposes of promoting the use of the railway network for the carriage of passengers and goods, securing the development of the railway network and contributing to the development of an integrated system of transport of passengers and goods. The authority will develop strategies for rail development in accordance with the 10-year plan. The authority, the Rail Regulator and the Health and Safety Commission are the three pillars of railway regulation.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much funding from the EU was (a) available to and (b) received by the UK fishing industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [146230]

Mr. Morley: The EU made funds available to the UK from the Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance under 1994–99 programmes of structural aid for the fisheries sector. The programmes covered Objective 1, Objective 5a and the PESCA Community Initiative. The indicative sums set out in the programmes at the beginning of the programme period were as follows:

Objective 1 and 5a

Year	m euros	£ million[1]
1994	20.61	12.81
1995	20.60	12.81
1996	20.62	12.82
1997	20.61	12.81
1998	20.63	12.83
1999	20.63	12.83

[1] At end 1999 conversion rate 1 euro = £0.6217

PESCA

Year	m euros	£ million[1]
1995	1.132	0.7
1996	1.712	1.064
1997	1.937	1.204
1998	1.672	1.039
1999	1.899	1.181

A further 0.66 million euros (£410,000) was subsequently awarded to the UK towards the end of the PESCA Programme.

The funding received by the UK fishing industry for these years is as follows:

£ million

Year	Objectives 1 and 5a	PESCA
1995	7.26	—
1996	15.87	—
1997	10.61	0.094
1998	8.41	0.437
1999	12.52	1.225

The following amounts were paid in formation grants to producer organisations:

Year	£ million
1995	0.047
1996	0.183
1997	0.101
1998	0.025
1999	0.014

In addition the following amounts were paid by the Intervention Board Executive Agency under the fish withdrawal schemes:

Year	£ million
1995	1.51
1996	2.83
1997	2.22
1998	1.10

BSE

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the European Union countries in which cattle have been discovered to have BSE, indicating the measures taken to prohibit the import into the United Kingdom of beef products in each case. [146576]

Ms Quin: Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Lichtenstein, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland and the United Kingdom have all reported indigenous cases of BSE.

In line with EU legislation the UK has prohibited the import of beef and beef products from Portugal but has not prohibited imports from any of the other countries listed above. UK consumers are protected regarding products that are imported from any of the other countries listed above by the EU-wide requirement to remove specified risk materials from the food chain.

Crop Protection Chemicals

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the joint industry submission, Minimising the Environmental Impacts of Crop Protection Chemicals, Revised proposals February 2001. [148864]

Ms Quin: The November 2000 pre-Budget report announced that, in the run-up to Budget 2001, the Government wished to see the Crop Protection Association (CPA) make further improvements to the package of voluntary measures that the industry has been developing over the past year. This latest submission from the CPA and from a number of other stakeholders involved in the supply and use of crop protection products, was received by the Government on 29 January. It is currently being evaluated.

Crop Loss (South Yorkshire)

Caroline Flint: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assistance his Department is providing for farmers who have lost crops through persistent wet weather in Don Valley; [149074]

(2) what estimate he has made of the value of crops lost due to adverse weather causing groundwater saturation in (a) Don Valley constituency and (b) South Yorkshire. [149075]

Ms Quin: The recent exceptionally wet weather in Don Valley and South Yorkshire has caused a number of difficulties for farmers, ranging from delay in normal seasonal cultivations to the actual loss of certain crops, in particular potatoes and sugar.

The Government have taken a number of steps to try to protect CAP payments to farmers and to provide £11.6 million in flood-related funding to the operating authorities to help defray exceptional emergency costs which would otherwise fall in part on farmers and the wider public.

In addition to the measures announced in reply to the right hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) on 24 January 2001, Official Report, columns 594–95W, my right hon. Friend the Minister informed the House on 1 February that the European Commission had confirmed a number of further changes to our national implementing arrangements for the Arable Area Payments Scheme this year. These include the ability to pay aid on certain partially failed crops and to allow farmers to set-aside land after 15 January where they have been unable to re-sow crops or where existing crops have been so flood damaged as to be incapable of yielding a harvest. We will shortly be writing to all farmers to explain in full what can now be allowed.

Sea Defence Projects

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance he will give to the relevant authorities and agencies in Devon to secure EU funding towards sea defence projects in the county. [149514]

Mr. Morley: There are limited opportunities for EU funding towards sea defence projects. Relevant authorities and agencies are aware of these opportunities and can apply for funds. Of course the Government provide substantial funding for sea defences.

Prion Diseases

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been undertaken to establish the means by which a normal prion becomes a rogue prion; and if he will make a statement. [149659]

Ms Quin: The generally accepted theory is that exposure to the rogue prion protein causes the normal protein to convert into the disease or rogue form. The mechanism by which this conversion occurs is not fully understood, but is the subject of research in a large number of laboratories throughout the world. Officials in MAFF keep updated on the progress of this research. They also monitor the progress on other, less widely accepted, theories for the conversion, such as exposure to organophosphates and manganese. Details of all the publicly funded work on prion diseases being undertaken in the UK can be found on the Medical Research Council's website at www.mrc.ac.uk.

French Beef Import Ban

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of the European Commission case against France in relation to the French ban on the import of British beef. [R] [149687]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 February 2001]: The progress of European Court of Justice cases is a matter for the Court. The French Rejoinder to the Commission Response and Observations on the UK Statement in Intervention were submitted by 22 December 2000. This concluded the written part of the procedure. There may be an oral hearing at the request of the French Government or the Commission. Judgment is not expected before the summer.

Set-aside (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of agricultural land in Leicestershire is subject to set-aside; and what the annual cost was to public funds of the set-aside in the most recent year for which figures are available. [149986]

Ms Quin: The area of set-aside in Leicestershire on claims made in 2000 under the Arable Area Payments Scheme (AAPS) was 12,694 hectares or 12 per cent. of the total area claimed for. But because not all agricultural land is either eligible or claimed for under AAPS, the proportion of set-aside in relation to agricultural land in the county as a whole is estimated at around 6.7 per cent.

At the 2000 payment rate, the payment for this area of set-aside would have been £2,712,000 from EU funds, to which the UK Exchequer contributes. In addition some £92,000 will be paid shortly as agrimonetary compensation of which half will be funded by the EU and half direct by the UK Exchequer.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the annual loss of income to commercial fishing resulting from the recreational angling industry's catch under the total allowable catch terms of the Common Fisheries Policy. [149543]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 12 February 2001]: The economic effect of the quota reductions for 2001 will vary according to the extent to which the UK is able to catch its quota allocations. In some cases the quotas for 2001 are higher than the catches made in 2000.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received calling for the removal of the recreational angling industry from the total allowable catch terms of the Common Fisheries Policy; and if he will make a statement; [149544]

(2) what representations he has received from the recreational angling industry on the Common Fisheries Policy; and if he will make a statement. [149550]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 12 February 2001]: On 16 January 2001, officials met with representatives of sea angling and vessel chartering interests. The discussion was constructive and covered a number of matters relating to the Common Fisheries Policy including the application of TACs and quotas to landings made by boat anglers. It was confirmed following consultation with the European Commission that account had to be taken of such activity in managing fisheries.

Animal Exports

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the Government's policies to prevent cruelty to animals exported live from the United Kingdom. [150281]

Mr. Morley: The Government operate a twin-track policy to protect the welfare of animals exported from the UK. We ensure that the rules are met while animals are within our jurisdiction and urge the European Commission and other member states to give enforcement the same high priority. We will continue to promote improvements when the Commission's report on member states' implementation and enforcement of the EU rules is discussed in Brussels.

IACS Payments (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make IACS payments to farmers in Gloucestershire. [150221]

Ms Quin: The Regional Service Centre at Worcester started to make payments on 16 November; the earliest date that payments could be made after the amendments agreed under the Agenda 2000 proposals. To date, the Regional Service Centre has 98.5 per cent. of Gloucestershire's applications processed for payment. This equates to over £18 million. The RSC expects to be able to pay those of the remaining claims that can be paid in the next few days.

Flood Defences (Tewkesbury)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will discuss with the Environment Agency the introduction of a floodgate at Gloucester and a guillotine gate at Tewkesbury; and if he will make a statement. [150327]

Mr. Morley: The responsibility for deciding which projects to promote and their timing rests with local operating authorities, such as the Environment Agency. I am advised that the agency has no plans to promote such works at Gloucester or Tewkesbury since they would provide limited reduction in flood risk. Consequently the question of discussions does not arise.

Free Television Licences

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement about the accuracy of his Department's database submitted to television licensing for the purposes of adjudicating upon applicants for free TV licences; [150343]

(2) how many applicants for free television licences have been required to present proof of their date of birth at a post office as a pre-condition for their entitlement. [150344]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of the free TV licence scheme has been a considerable success, and some 2.8 million free licences have been issued with the help of the database supplied by this Department.

This administration of the scheme is not a matter for my Department. It is the statutory responsibility of the BBC.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff are employed by TV Licensing; and how many of them are engaged in reconciling applications for free licences from those aged 75 years and over with the Department of Social Security database. [150345]

Mr. Rooker: This is not a matter for my Department. It is the statutory responsibility of the BBC.

Benefit Take-up

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of people who are (a) eligible to receive (i) Housing Benefit and (ii) Council Tax Benefit, in (A) Scotland and (B) each local authority area in Scotland and (b) actually claim the relevant benefit in each case. [148128]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Departmental Policies (Morecambe and Lunesdale)

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out, including statistical information, the effect of his Department's policies and actions on the Morecambe and Lunesdale constituency since 2 May 1997. [149122]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to our overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

Promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and,

Combating poverty and promoting security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

These goals are being pursued nationwide and our achievements are set out in our annual "Opportunity for all" reports. Our second report, "Opportunity for all—One year on: making a difference" (CM4865, September 2000) sets out what progress has been made in the past year, as well as highlighting what more needs to be done. Nationwide statistical information is necessarily more complete than constituency level data, but the following provides a comparative guide to the effect of the Department's policies and actions in Morecambe and Lunesdale since May 1997.

We are spending an additional £7 billion a year on support for families and children. This includes significant increases in child benefit, which will be worth £15.50 a week for the eldest child and £10.35 a week for other children from 9 April 2001: nationally about 7 million families receive child benefit, and in Morecambe and Lunesdale 10,850 families benefit.

We have launched the New Deals to help lone parents, the young unemployed, the long-term unemployed, the over 50s and partners of the unemployed to move from benefit into work. In the period since August 1998 the number of people claiming Jobseekers' Allowance nationally has reduced from 1,323,600 to 1,044,900; in Morecambe and Lunesdale the number has reduced from 2,300 to 1,900. The number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased over the same period from 955,000 to 909,200 nationally. In Morecambe and Lunesdale the number has increased from 1,400 to 1,500.

Next year we will be spending £4.5 billion a year extra in real terms on pensioners as a result of our policies. The Winter Fuel Payment has continued to tackle fuel poverty. Last winter, around 10 million pensioners, of whom 18,900 were in Morecambe and Lunesdale, benefited from the payment. We have now extended the scheme to include eligible people from age 60 so that even more older people will benefit. This winter, households that qualify will receive an increased payment of £200. The Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) targets the poorest 1.6 million pensioner families, 2,800 of whom live in Morecambe and Lunesdale. These pensioners will benefit from our alignment of all MIG rates from April 2001, giving single pensioners at least £92.15 each week—a real increase of £12.45 for the poorest pensioners.

Winter Fuel Payments

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims had been made by people living in Copeland for the winter fuel allowance by 31 January; and how many people in Copeland are eligible to receive winter fuel allowance. [149175]

Mr. Rooker: Information regarding how many claims were made by 31 January is not available in constituency format and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, latest information shows that over 14,000 Winter Fuel Payments have been issued in the Copeland constituency for winter 2000–01.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of this season's Winter Fuel Payments were not issued by (a) Christmas 2000 and (b) February 2001. [149667]

Mr. Rooker: All automatic payments where entitlement was established were made before Christmas. Payments made in respect of successful claims determined by 9 November were also made before Christmas.

Benefit Applications (Medical Visits)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many visits are made per day on average by visiting medical practitioners who assess benefit applications. [149744]

Mr. Bayley: On average, 767 visits have been made each day by visiting medical practitioners on behalf of Sema Medical Services between the period November 2000 to January 2001.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants receive lifetime awards of Disability Living Allowance; and how many of them receive on-going assistance from Motability. [149836]

Mr. Bayley: Information linking provision of Motability assistance with a life (or, since January 2000, an "indefinite") award of Disability Living Allowance (DLA), as opposed to a fixed period award of appropriate length, is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Minimum Income Guarantee (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people from Leicestershire have contacted the Minimum Income Guarantee helpline since the new advertising campaign began; and how many people are in receipt of the Minimum Income Guarantee for the first time as a result of returning a completed application form. [149995]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested regarding the number of people from Leicestershire who have contacted the MIG claimline is not available.

By the end of January, the take-up campaign had resulted in around 82,000 successful claims in total.

Correspondence

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Broxbourne will receive a reply to her letters of (a) 30 October 2000, (b) 22 November 2000, (c) 10 January and (d) 8 February relating to her constituent, Mrs. Sue Brown of Broxbourne. [150336]

Mr. Bayley: A reply to the hon. Member's letter of 30 October 2000 was sent on 6 December 2000. A reply to the hon. Member's letters of 22 November 2000, 10 January and 8 February 2001 was sent on Monday 12 February.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many CSA compensation claims have been made; how many and what percentage of these claims were instigated by (a) the CSA on behalf of their clients and (b) the clients directly; and what was the average amount of compensation paid in the cases brought by (i) the CSA on behalf of their client and (ii) the clients directly. [149792]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Mr. Doug Smith to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated February 2001:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency.

The Agency will consider making a compensatory payment where a client has suffered an actual financial loss due to clear errors or delays on the part of the Agency. In addition, redress can be considered for inconvenience, embarrassment or severe distress caused by the actions of the Agency. These latter (consolatory) payments can be paid over and above any other payments to recognise that some impacts are other than financial. In 1999/2000 these made up 19% of the total compensation paid out.

I am sorry I am not able to give you the information in the format that you requested. The Agency does not differentiate between those payments instigated by the client and those by the Agency. However, Table One in the attached annex shows compensation payments made from 1995/1996 to 1999/2000. Table Two shows a breakdown of the payments for 1999/2000.

Although the Agency's caseload has continued to increase, in 1999/2000 the number of complaints reduced along with the number of compensation payments made.

Where the Agency considers compensation because of Deferred debt, or loss of use of the money paid as compensation for delay and error, it is not necessary for a client to make a claim. The Agency considers such payments automatically.

I hope this is helpful.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will issue guidance to staff working in the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service about mobility and job security; and if she will make a statement. [149558]

Jane Kennedy: Guidance has already been issued. Under the provisions of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act, employees transferring to the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service will do so on terms equivalent to the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations. They will retain their current terms and conditions including those relating to mobility and to job security.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department where the workforce for the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service will be accommodated after 1 April; and if she will make a statement. [149556]

Jane Kennedy: Nearly all staff transferring to the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service will be accommodated in the same locations as they are working in before 1 April. Those few who have to move offices will be accommodated as close as possible to their current location. Self-employed staff and others who work at home will continue to be able to do so.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the anticipated (a) workforce at each grade and (b) caseload per officer is for the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service from 1 April; and if she will make a statement. [149554]

Jane Kennedy: Staff who presently deliver these services are expected to transfer to the Children and Family Court Advice and Support Service and caseloads on transfer are expected to be similar to present caseloads.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment has been made of potential discrepancies relating to pay for persons in the Probation Service and the new Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service; and if she will make a statement. [149559]

Jane Kennedy: My officials have reviewed the different pay scales of staff who will transfer from the Probation Service, and other employers, into the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS). It is clear that there are many variations between different groups of staff. Under the provisions of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act, employees transferring to CAFCASS on 1 April will do so under terms equivalent to the Transfer of Undertakings and (Protection of Employment) Regulations. It will be a priority for CAFCASS to negotiate a harmonisation of terms and conditions.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service will issue guarantees in relation to detriment and continuity of service for transferring employees; if it will be possible for members of staff to transfer back to the Probation Service at a future date; and if she will make a statement. [149557]

Jane Kennedy: Employees transferring to the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service (CAFCASS) will keep their continuity of service. Staff will, of course, be free to apply for posts in the Probation Service in the future. I expect CAFCASS to act as a good employer in relation to conditions of service in the future.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what costs have been incurred to date in establishing the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service; what is the planned budget for the next financial year; and if she will make a statement. [149553]

Jane Kennedy: The costs of establishing CAFCASS amount to a total of £11.6 million for start-up costs. These, together with the staffing costs, have been met from within the provision of the three sponsoring Departments: LCD, the Home Office and the Department of Health. The planned budget for next year is £72 million in running costs plus £9.1 million capital.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will make a statement on progress in establishing the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service; and on what date the service will be operational. [149552]

Jane Kennedy: The service will be established on Sunday 1 April 2001 and will be operational from Monday 2 April as planned. Staff and other main stakeholders are playing an invaluable role alongside my officials in shaping the unified service.

The chair, the board, and the chief executive of CAFCASS have been appointed. All the necessary transfer arrangements for children's cases, and for staff, accommodation, finance and IT, will be in place on 2 April.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations she has received on trade union recognition for staff at the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service; what response has been made to those representations; and if she will make a statement. [149555]

Jane Kennedy: Several representations have been received and the CAFCASS chairman-designate, Anthony Hewson OBE, announced on 12 February that the National Association of Probation Officers would be a recognised trade union within CAFCASS. Representations from other trade unions are being considered.

Public Records

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she proposes to take action to ensure that full details of this year's Schedules from Public Record Act Instruments of Extended Retention and Closure are accessible to (a) hon. Members and (b) the public. [149635]

Mr. Lock: Copies of the retention and extended closure instruments will be supplied to the Libraries of both Houses after their signature by the Lord Chancellor.

Extended closure instruments are made available to the public on open shelves in the Public Record Office's reading rooms at Kew. Retention instruments are not on open shelves at Kew, but are available for public inspection on request.

CABINET OFFICE

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if the special advisers working for her will relinquish their posts when the next general election is called. [149322]

Marjorie Mowlam: Schedule 1 (Part 2) of the "Model Contract for Special Advisers" sets out the rules for special advisers on their involvement in political activities, including their participation in election campaigns.

WALES

Corus

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the occasions on which he met representatives of the Corus Steel company between July 2000 and 1 February; and if he will make a statement. [150234]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I had a number of meetings and telephone conversations with senior executives of Corus, including both the Chairman, Sir Brian Moffatt, and the former Joint Chief Executive, John Bryant. In addition, on 8 December, I paid a visit to the company's Port Talbot plant.

During these exchanges, I took every opportunity to impress on the company the importance of steel making in Wales, and the need to take full account of the dramatic improvements that have been made in productivity, the continued strengthening of the euro, and other significant factors in reaching decisions about the future of their UK operations.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the occasions on which he met the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales to discuss the job losses at Corus in Wales, prior to the announcement on 1 February; and if he will make a statement. [150252]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet frequently with the First Secretary and, during the weeks of speculation about the future of Corus plants in Wales, that has been a regular topic for discussion between us.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost of clearing the site of the Corus Steelworks at Llanwern after production of steel ceases at the site; and if he will make a statement. [150230]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None. I am urging Corus to reconsider its plans. However, the cost of any site clearance is a matter for the company.

HEALTH

Variant CJD

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will make an announcement on compensation for victims of variant Creutzfeldt-Jacob disease. [150839]

Mr. Milburn: We are committed to constructing a compensation scheme that is effective and properly meets the needs of those affected. Discussions are under way with the legal representatives of the families affected. In the meantime we will be making interim payments of £25,000 when regulations have been put in place to ensure the payments are not taken into account in the calculation of income-related social security benefits and are exempted from the provisions of the Social Security (Recovery of Benefits) Act 1997. We intend to present this legislation to Parliament as soon as possible. Details of the full compensation package are still under consideration.

Communication Aids

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he plans to make to the recent Scope report, "Speak for Yourself", concerning communication aids. [150078]

Mr. Hutton: The report is a detailed and very valuable assessment of the importance of communication aids for disabled people and we are studying its recommendations carefully.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

North Korea

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on UK aid to North Korea. [150311]

Mr. Mullin: The UK has provided humanitarian assistance in North Korea by channelling modest and well-targeted contributions through UN agencies and international non-governmental organisations—over £2.5 million since 1998. The programmes we support have primarily focused on agricultural rehabilitation and food security. In addition, the UK share of humanitarian assistance to North Korea through the EC was approximately £0.5 million in 1999–2000.

Our engagement with North Korea through provision of humanitarian assistance has been instrumental in opening the country up to external influences. It has allowed us to maintain a dialogue with the North Korean authorities on issues of concern such as human rights abuse, the misappropriation of aid, and the problems of access faced by agencies working in the country. We will continue to work through the EU and with the international community as a whole to encourage a process of transformation in North Korea.

Brahimi Report

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the Brahimi report. [149875]

Mr. Mullin: The Brahimi report makes a number of fundamental recommendations on improving the way the UN and the international community tackle peacekeeping, conflict prevention and peacebuilding, and on clarifying the mandates of UN agencies involved in tackling crises and conflict situations. The UK is very supportive of the Brahimi report and is working with the UN and other member states to take rapid and decision action on its speedy and effective implementation.

DEFENCE

Shipwrecks

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to place the consultation document on the protection of sunken military vessels in the Library. [150689]

Dr. Moonie: I have today placed a copy of the consultation paper in the Libraries of both Houses.

A copy of the consultation paper has been sent to those hon. Members who have shown an interest in the subject of the protection of military maritime graves.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if members of the armed forces who received multiple vaccines in preparation for deployment during the Gulf War, but were not deployed, are eligible to participate in the Gulf veterans medical assessment programme. [150260]

Mr. Spellar: Yes. The Gulf veterans medical assessment programme is open to all present and former Service personnel or Ministry of Defence civilians who believe that their health has suffered as a direct result of the Gulf conflict.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Television Reception

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he takes to ensure that publicly funded projects do not cause disruption of television reception for neighbouring households during building works and after completion. [149668]

Janet Anderson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions is responsible for the Planning Policy Guidance note 8 on telecommunications development in England. This includes advice on the potential in any development to interfere with television reception. The Scottish Executive are responsible for such planning policy issues in Scotland.

BBC

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will ask the BBC to publish figures indicating the (a) funding of and (b) audience figures for (i) BBC Choice, (ii) BBC Knowledge and (iii) BBC 24 hours since their inception. [150213]

Janet Anderson: The BBC has published figures showing their spending on each of these channels in the Corporation's Annual Report and Accounts every year since they were launched. Audience figures are published independently by BARB, the Broadcasters' Audience Research Board Ltd.

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what permission was sought by the BBC from his Department in launching (a) BBC Choice, (b) BBC Knowledge and (c) BBC 24 hours. [150212]

Janet Anderson: BBC Choice and BBC News 24 were approved in principle in March 1997 and BBC Knowledge in January 1998. Specific approvals were given for the carriage of these new services on digital terrestrial television, digital satellite and digital cable in February 1998, May 1998 and October 1999 respectively.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pension-earnings Link

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will calculate the extra cost if state retirement pensions had been linked to earnings since 1997. [149082]

Mr. Rooker: If our policy had been only to link the basic pension to earnings we would have spent £5.2 billion less over a five-year period. Instead we will have spent an estimated £8.5 billion extra in the five years since 1997–98 as a result of our discretionary measures for pensioners. This is over £5 billion more than uprating the basic state pension by earnings since April 1998.

Further details are in the table.

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	Total
Discretionary spending on Government measures	200	200	1,270	2,730	4,390	8,800
Net cost of earnings uprating	—	140	500	1,380	1,570	3,580
Extra spending above earnings uprating	200	60	770	1,360	2,830	5,220

Notes:

1. Our measures included the above-inflation increase in the basic State Pension, the Minimum Income Guarantee, Winter Fuel Payments and concessionary TV licences for those aged 75 and over.
2. It is assumed that the date at which uprating of basic State Pension by earnings begins is April 1998.
3. Costs are net of income-related benefits. Gross costs have been estimated by the Government Actuary's Department. Income-related benefit offsets are estimated using the Policy Simulation Model.
4. The cost of linked benefits, particularly widows'/bereavement benefits, is excluded.
5. The definition of earnings used for uprating is the average earnings index, seasonally adjusted, in the three months to July in the preceding year.
6. The costs are shown in 1999–2000 prices and are rounded to the nearest £10 million.

Maternity Grant

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many mothers in Yorkshire and Humberside received maternity grant in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99, (d) 1999–2000 and (e) 2000 to date; and what the value of the grant was in each of these years. [149438]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

	SSMG	9,038	2,071,767.00
	Total	10,453	2,215,867.00

Notes:

1. These figures are for the BA Yorkshire area directorate which comprises the following districts—South East Yorkshire, Rother and Dearne, Sheffield, Bradford and Keighley, Calderdale and Kirklees, Wakefield, East Yorkshire, Leeds and North Yorkshire.
2. Sure Start Maternity Grant replaced the Social Fund Maternity Payment from 27 March 2000 for confinements/adoptions on or after 11 June 2000. The Social Fund Maternity Payment was £100 per child and the Sure Start Maternity Grant was initially £200 per child. This was increased to £300 for babies due, born or adopted from 3 December 2000. The amount of the SFMP or SSMG is reduced on a pound for pound basis by any savings over £500 held by an applicant or partner (£1,000 for applicants aged 60 or over).
3. Figures for year 2000–2001 are for April to December 2000 only.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Yorkshire and Humberside received the Disability Working Allowance during the last year of its existence. [149440]

Mr. Bayley: Disabled Persons Tax Credit replaced Disability Working Allowance on 5 October 1999.

In Yorkshire and Humberside there were 2,458 claimants in receipt of Disability Working Allowance at some time during the period 6 October 1998 to 4 October 1999. Of these, 2,130 were awards made during this period.

Note:

Figures show number of claimants rather than claims, as a person may have more than one award during the year.

Fraud

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made on his PSA target of reducing losses from fraud and error in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance. [150793]

Mr. Rooker: In 1998 we set a PSA target to reduce fraud and error in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance by 10 per cent. by March 2002. Provisional estimates show that the Department is likely to have met this target some 18 months earlier than anticipated. However, the Department has now set a more demanding target of reducing losses through fraud and error by 25 per cent. by March 2004 rising to 50 per cent. by March 2006.

State Pension

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer of increasing the basic state pension to £92 for a single person and £138 for a couple, taking into account (a) savings in regard to (i) the Minimum Income Guarantee and (ii) other benefits payable to pensioners and (b) the consequent increases in receipts of tax revenue. [147606]

Mr. Rooker [pursuant to his reply, 8 February 2001, c. 700W]: The information is in the table.

Cost of increasing the basic state pension to £92 for a single person and £138 for a couple

	2001–02
Gross total	8.4
Minimum Income Guarantee savings	1
Other income related benefit savings	0.8
Total income related benefit savings	1.8
Tax yield	0.8
Total net cost	5.8

Notes:

1. All costs are given in £ billion to the nearest £100 million.
2. Gross costs are estimated by the Government Actuary's Department.
3. Income related benefits savings are estimated using the Policy Simulation Model.
4. The tax effects are estimated by the Inland Revenue.
5. Costs are given excluding widows and bereavement benefits whose rates are linked by law to the rate of basic Retirement Pension. Including them adds £200 million to the net costs.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hinduja Brothers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much in the form of export credit guarantees has been made available for each year since 1992 to (a) the Hinduja Group and (b) subsidiaries of the Hinduja Group. [149696]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 9 February 2001]: No export guarantees have been issued to the Hinduja Group nor, as far as ECGD is aware, to any of its subsidiaries.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which members of the Hinduja family he has met since 3 May 1997; where such meetings have taken place; and for what purpose. [149839]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 2 February 2001, Official Report, column 336W, to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and the Weald (Miss Widdecombe).

Sub-post Offices

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many modified sub-post offices there are and how many are run by interim sub-postmasters and sub-postmistresses. [150259]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I understand from the Post Office that at the end of the third quarter of its current financial year, there were 655 modified sub-post offices. Of these, 33 were, at that date operated through temporary agents as a result of the resignation or termination of contract of the previous agent. In all such cases, the Post Office seeks to avoid any break in service and to ensure that standards of service are maintained until a new permanent agent can be appointed.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many sub-post office closures there were in the third quarter of 2000 and how many closures there were in total up to the end of that quarter in 2000. [148213]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 1 February 2001]: 135 sub-post offices closed in the third quarter of the financial year 2000–01. Between April and December 2000 closures totalled 434, of which four are permanent following consultations under the Code of Practice. The figures reflect a snapshot position on one single day and many of these closures will be of a temporary nature only. The Government recognise that this is a serious issue for the communities concerned and a range of measures will be implemented in the near future to address it. Recent research by the Post office into the reasons for sub-postmasters' resignations makes clear that personal circumstances, such as retirement and health, are the main reasons for resigning. Fewer than 10 per cent. cite financial reasons.

Science Funding (North-West)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will break down the funding allocated to the North West for science in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000, by each major project. [146684]

Dr. Howells: A detailed breakdown of funding allocated to the North West by the Research Councils cannot be provided without disproportionate cost as the information is not held centrally in the format requested.

Steel Imports

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much steel was imported into Britain in 2000; where it was imported from; where most of it was used; and if he will make a statement. [150249]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 13 February 2001]: Imports of finished steel products in 1999 and the first 11 months of 2000 were as follows.

UK Imports of steel industry products

Digital Television

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce rules to require the inclusion of a digital tuner in new television sets; and if he will make a statement. [148270]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have no plans to introduce rules requiring the inclusion of a digital tuner in new television sets. EU competition rules could preclude such requirements being made on a unilateral national basis.

Annexe VI of the Directive on universal services and users' rights relating to electronic communications networks stipulates that all television sets sold in Europe should have at least one open interface socket permitting the connection of a digital receiver.

The Government have recently announced a White Paper on enterprise, skills and innovation entitled "Opportunity For All in a World of Change" which outlines its plans for digital television.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of employers with a policy of allowing reduced working hours for fathers have (a) fewer than 20 employees, (b) 100 employees or less, (c) 200 employees or less and (d) more than 500 employees. [150109]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 13 February 2001]: A survey commissioned by the Department for Education and Employment in 2000 reports that 40 per cent. of fathers in workplaces employing between five and 24 staff said that their employer would allow them to reduce their hours for an agreed period of time at reduced salary. Corresponding figures were 30 per cent. for those employees in workplaces employing between 25 and 99 employees, 34 per cent. in workplaces between 100 and 499 employees and 35 per cent. in workplaces employing more than 500 employees.

Liquefied Petroleum Gas

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms in the UK manufacture LPG cylinders for the automotive industry; and how many cylinders were made in each year since 1995. [150197]

Mr. Alan Johnson: No UK manufacturers of LPG cylinders for the automotive industry have been identified, no record of UK manufacture of LPG cylinders could be located since 1995.

Departmental Initiatives (Pendle)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives embarked upon since May 1997 have benefited Pendle; and if he will make a statement. [149913]

Mr. Caborn: Pendle has benefited from the Department's employment rights policies, which include the national minimum wage, the working time directive, part-time working regulations and improved maternity leave.

In the North West region, the Department's policies have also contributed to a growth in employment by 107,000 and a fall in unemployment by 63,000, and to reductions in youth employment by 75 per cent. and long-term unemployment by 54 per cent.

Departmental Entertainment Costs

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was spent by his Department's Ministers on drinks and entertainment in 2000. [146371]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 22 January 2001]: The total spent by Ministers' offices on drinks and entertainment in the financial year 1999–2000, including the costs of some official DTI functions, was £19,834.

Miners (Compensation)

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the accessibility of existing test centres for health compensation claims for former miners in the Leicestershire and South Derbyshire coalfields. [149616]

Mr. Hain: Claimants in the Leicestershire region are most likely to attend centres in Coventry, Nottingham or Cannock. For claimants in the South Derbyshire region, the centres at Nottingham, Mansfield and Chesterfield are usually suggested. To date, these centres have assessed through the full Medical Assessment Process, MAP, over 1,300 claimants, with a further 511 appointments made.

Claimants are usually asked to attend a test centre within a 25-mile radius of their residence. However, claimants are given the option to attend a different centre if a more suitable time is available. For those claimants who are not able to travel to a centre, and have a letter from their doctor, Healthcall carries out home visits.

Export Controls Bill

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made by his Department on the publication of the draft Export Control Bill. [149904]

Dr. Howells: Work is continuing to prepare the draft Export Control Bill for publication and the Government will publish the Bill as soon as it is ready. It is not possible at this stage to give a precise date but we hope to be in a position to publish the Bill within the next few months.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Shows

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the agricultural shows this year (a) to which (i) he and (ii) other Ministers in his Department have received invitations and (b) which shows (i) he and (ii) each other Minister has attended. [144323]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The table details the agricultural shows for which invitations were received, and which were attended by MAFF Ministers during 2000.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met his counterparts in (a) France and (b) the Czech Republic; and if he will make a statement. [145921]

Mr. Nick Brown: I meet Jean Glavany regularly at EU Agriculture Council. I last met him for a formal bilateral discussion, in London, on 26 June 2000. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State met Jan Fencl on my behalf on 5 July 2000.

GM Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 10 January 2001, Official Report, column 562W, on GM crops, if the Government definition of GM agriculture is restricted to commercial agricultural activities. [147885]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 30 January 2001]: Any assessment of the impact of GM agriculture on farmland values, which was the subject of the hon. Member's previous question, would need to consider the impact of commercial cultivation. Only limited GM crop trials are currently taking place in the UK.

Agriculture (Employment and Production)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (a) assumptions and (b) projections of agricultural employment and production levels apply to the Government's long-term strategy for agriculture. [150245]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The Government's long-term agriculture strategy takes account of the changing economic circumstances facing the sector, including trends in employment and production levels. The underlying economic analysis is summarised in a MAFF publication "Strategy for Agriculture: Current and Prospective Economic Situation", which is available in the Libraries of the House, and associated MAFF working papers produced in March 2000. The key policies underpinning the strategy will be subject to economic evaluation.

Agrimonetary Compensation Scheme

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government have made representations at the EU level on the need for a replacement for the agrimonetary compensation system. [150247]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The Council's agrimonetary regulations cover currency movements to the end of 2001 and provide for compensation which could extend over the next three years. No member state has pressed for a replacement at the present time.

England Rural Development Programme

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the impact on funding of the ERDP if the modulation of agriculture subsidies at the stated percentages yields significantly less than the amounts expected. [150248]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The funds raised through modulation of agriculture subsidies will be monitored closely throughout the life of the England Rural Development Programme.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if ERDP funding is subject to annual ring-fencing arrangements similar to those that apply to the money announced in March 2000 for pig farmers. [150329]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 13 February 2001]: No.

Small Business Service

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what an initial consultation visit by the Small Business Service consists of. [150332]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 13 February 2001]: An initial consultation visit under the Farm Business Advice Service, which is being delivered for MAFF by the Small Business Service, is conducted by a Farm Business Adviser (FBA) and lasts approximately half a day. The FBA will look round the farm and discuss with the farmer the way the business is run and managed, financial matters and the aspirations for the business of the farmer and his/her family. Information required to undertake a business health check and to prepare a current farm balance sheet will be collected, which the farmer will normally have been forewarned to have ready, to help the FBA prepare an action plan following the initial visit. The FBA may also collect data to benchmark business performance. During the visit or on a subsequent visit the FBA might use the specially developed Connect CD to illustrate the options open to the farmer.

In every case FBAs will tailor the service provided to meet the needs of the individual farmer.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the cost of the Small Business Service's agricultural activities have been to date; and how these costs have been met. [150331]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 13 February 2001]: Expenditure to date on the Farm Business Advice Service which is being delivered for MAFF by the Small Business Service (SBS) through Business Link outlets is £1,053,092. Business Links will be submitting invoices to cover the costs they have incurred delivering the service, over the period since its launch, at the end of February. All costs will be met from moneys allocated to MAFF under the Action Plan for Farming. Any funds allocated to this service for this financial year and not spent will be carried over to next year.

Farmers do have access to the full range of other small business support services provided by the SBS, but the costs involved are not separately identified.

Krebs Report

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral statement of 1 February 2001, Official Report, column 519, if all 10 triplets are running as specified in the Krebs report. [150330]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 13 February 2001]: As I informed the House on 1 February 2001, Official Report, column 519, all 10 triplets are in place. Initial proactive culling has been carried out in seven of them. Surveying is in progress in the other three, which are due to be proactively culled later this year. This is in line with the timetable set by the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB, which is overseeing the trial.

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of payments made through the OTMS in each year of the scheme's existence. [150244]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The table shows actual OTMS expenditure for financial years 1996–97 to 1999–2000 and the forecast expenditure for 2000–01.

Pesticides

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the national rules concerning data requirements in respect of applications for the approval of pesticides that were in place in 1990 and (b) amendments to the rules made since then, including the dates of such amendments; and if he will place copies of the rules and amendments in the Library. [149356]

Ms Quin: In 1990, the UK national rules on data requirements concerning applications for the approval of pesticides were set out in the "Data Requirements for Approval under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986" issued in October 1986. Amendments to the rules made since then include: in June 1992 a major addition in the form of Part One of "The COPR Handbook"; in December 1996, this was incorporated into "The Registration Handbook"; and in April 1999 the issue of a Volume II (last updated in December 1999) to the Registration Handbook.

In June and December 2000, revised electronic versions of Part One, Part Two and Part Three of "The Registration Handbook" were placed on PSD's website www.pesticides.gov.uk as "The Application Handbook" and "The Data Requirements Handbook". Part Four of "The Registration Handbook" is under revision, but is currently available only as hard copy.

Copies of these documents (including printouts of those available electronically) have been placed in the House Libraries. "The Registration Handbook", "The Application Handbook" and "The Data Requirements Handbook" are in their most up to date form, incorporating all the amendments made to them. Copies of all of the original pages superseded by these amendments could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

I will write to the hon. Member with further details and place copies of my letter in the Libraries of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Flags

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if it is the (a) policy and (b) practice of Her Majesty's Government to fly the flag of the country of a visiting Head of State (i) over and (ii) on a flag pole within, the precincts of a building which is being visited by a Head of State (1) officially, (2) privately and (3) who is temporarily resident in Northern Ireland. [150307]

Dr. Reid: The Government's policy and practice is to comply with the Flags Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2000 which state that where a Government building is visited by a foreign Head of State during an official visit, the flag of that Head of State's country may be flown in addition to the Union flag, where a second flag pole makes this possible.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the special advisers working for him will relinquish their posts when the next general election is called. [149312]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99, (d) 1999–2000 and (e) 2000–01, (i) his Department's total spending on advertising campaigns, (ii) the cost of each individual advertising campaign and (iii) the criteria that were established to gauge the effectiveness of each campaign; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of each campaign based on these criteria. [142712]

Dr. Reid: The information requested is outlined as follows:

Year	£
1996–97	135,938.07
1997–98	477,726.16
1998–99	887,303.00
2000–01	44,804.71

Although these figures incorporate the total publicity/advertising budget, there was an on-going campaign during the period in question, the mood/referendum campaign, which culminated with the May 1998 Good Friday Agreement referendum.

The criterion used to evaluate the effectiveness of the campaign was the response in voter turnout when compared to other recent votes.

For example, the average turnout in Northern Ireland constituencies at the May 1997 general election was 67.42 per cent. while the turnout for the referendum was 81 per cent., a 20 per cent. increase. An on-going assessment of the campaign, which was carried out by the advertising company, showed the general public to be very aware of the choices they faced, proving the effectiveness of the campaign itself.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hinduja Brothers

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions on which (a) Ministers and (b) officials received (i) formal and (ii) informal representations concerning Iran from (A) the Hinduja brothers and (B) their representatives and representatives of their companies since 2 May 1997. [148385]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 5 February 2001]: It is not the normal practice of the Government to release details of meetings or discussions by officials with private individuals or companies. The Foreign Secretary, accompanied by an official, discussed India and Iran with GP Hinduja before and after the Foreign Secretary's visit to India in April 2000. The discussion focused on commercial opportunities for UK business in both countries. There was no mention of the question of nationality.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to amend the Foreign and Commonwealth Office departmental expenditure limit/running cost limit for 2000–01. [150691]

Mr. Wilson: The information is as follows:

Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class VII Vote I, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office departmental expenditure limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £42,289,000 from £1,210,333,000 to £1,252,622,000 and the running cost limit has been increased by £1,797,000 from £531,982,000 to £533,779,000. This is the net effect of:

(i) a transfer of £16,000 to the Ministry of Defence (Class VI, Vote 2), in respect of our final contribution to the grant-in-aid to the Atlantic Council of the UK;

(ii) an increase of £5,441,000 in respect of an adjustment for Overseas price movements;

(iii) a transfer of £1,920,000 to the Cabinet Office (Class XVII, Vote 2) for drugs assistance programmes;

(iv) a transfer of £880,000 to the Cabinet Office (Class XVII, Vote 2) for revisions to charging regime;

(v) an increase in both running costs and appropriations in aid of £1,248,000 in respect of increased receipts from OGD's;

(iv) a transfer of £32,000 from BBC monitoring service to the Cabinet Office (Class XVII, Vote 2);

(vii) an increase in both running costs and appropriations in aid of £5,300,000 to reflect an increase in our VAT recovery forecast;

(viii) a decrease of £5,500,000 in both capital expenditure and A-in-A for FCO Estates Rationalisation;

(ix) a PES transfer of £1,500,000 to the MOD representing the FCO's contribution to the enhanced package for the Sierra Leone Army;

(x) a PES transfer of £168,000 from the War Pensions Agency to cover the costs of medical examinations for overseas pensioners;

(xi) additional provision of £39,808,000 on Section B for UK contributions to United Nations Missions in the former Yugoslavia (includes UN Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo) and the former Soviet Union, United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (Iraq), United Nations Iraq-Kuwait Observer Mission, United Nations Mission for the Referendum on Western Sahara, United Nations Transitional Authority in East Timor, United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone, United Nations Observer Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo, United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea, the United Nations International Criminal Tribunals for Yugoslavia and Rwanda, the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe, the European Community Monitoring Mission and Western European Union Police Mission in Albania. This is partially offset by an increase of £344,000 in appropriations-in-aid in respect of non-baseline peacekeeping and by £10,761,000 from Section E, General VAT Refunds;

(xii) The supplementary estimate is also required to note an increase in Section C, to reflect PES transfers of £46,000 to the Cabinet Office (Class XVII, Vote 2) and £52,000 to the Cabinet Office (Class XVII, Vote 1); (xiii) The supplementary estimate is also required to note an increase of £1,998,000 of Section D, in respect of an adjustment for Overseas Price Movement for the British Council.

Child Abuse

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the average cost of suspension of (a) a case worker and (b) a teacher investigated for child abuse in the last three years. [149429]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

Decisions as to whether an employee is to be suspended, and consideration of the costs of suspension, are matters for employers to consider when faced with allegations of serious misconduct that may necessitate management inquiries. Employers are not required to provide the Government with analysis of the costs of any suspensions of employees. As such, there is no information held centrally about the average costs of suspensions involving social services caseworkers or teachers who are the subject of investigations following allegations of child abuse.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Fireworks

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the subject of pollution from the use of fireworks over the last Christmas and New Year period; and if he will make a statement. [148168]

Mr. Hill: I am not aware of any such representations. I have had a letter from a Member concerning noise from fireworks over the holiday period.

Levels of air pollution measured by the national monitoring network remained low throughout this time in most parts of England. There were two occasions when levels of particles (PM_{10}) at roadsides were recorded as moderate—on 23 December in central London and on 30 December in Bury in Greater Manchester. These incidents are most likely to have been caused by motor vehicle emissions during stable atmospheric dispersion conditions. Any contribution to the levels of those pollutants from the ignition of fireworks are likely to have been small. The Air Quality Strategy for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland sets objectives for the main air pollutants. The objective for particles allows for the 24-hour mean to be exceeded no more than 35 times a year. In part, this is to provide for annual events such as bonfire night and other festivals where fire and fireworks form part of the celebration. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment announced that we shall consult on proposals for a new objective for particles later this year.

Crematoria

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to investigate flue gas emissions from crematoria to ensure they meet the requirements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and if he will make a statement. [148304]

Mr. Hill: Emissions of various pollutants are already regulated and monitored by local authorities under Part I of the 1990 Act.

In addition, we have been working with the Federation of British Cremation Authorities since 1999 on the issue of mercury emissions from crematoria. We have commissioned monitoring of mercury in the vicinity of a crematorium in the West Midlands and we know that the federation has recently arranged for mercury monitoring to be undertaken at a number of crematoria. Once we have the necessary information on which to base a decision, we will decide whether to include a limit for mercury emissions from existing crematoria in statutory guidance on the Best Available Techniques Not Entailing Excessive Cost.

European Maritime Safety Agency

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his Department's policy is concerning the proposed establishment of a European Maritime Safety Agency, with specific reference to the issue of tanker traffic in the Minch; and if he will make a statement. [149428]

Mr. Hill: We support the stated aims of the EMSA to the extent that it could provide a source of technical expertise to review the operation of existing maritime safety directives and scrutinise the case for any additional regulation. We consider that, to the extent that it improves performance across the Community, it could contribute to enhancing safety and reducing pollution risks. However, we do have concerns about the risk of Commission centralism, and take the view that member states would have to have effective control of the Agency.

The EMSA would not replace members states' national maritime agencies, which would continue to exercise their existing responsibilities. For the UK, the relevant national agency is the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA).

There has been an internationally agreed recommendation on navigation in place for the Minch since November 1993, by which all laden tanks over 10,000 gross tonnage are requested not to pass east of the Outer Hebrides, through the Little Minch and North Minch, except because of stress of weather or any other case of "force majeure". Responsibility for implementing this recommendation rests with the MCA.

The current position in respect of traffic through the Minch is that although there has been apparent increase in the number of vessels, based upon the year-on-year increase in reports received by Stornoway Coastguard Station, Coastguard personnel believe that the actual number of vessels shows no significant change. The apparent increase continues to be attributed to vessels that have previously been unaware of the reporting scheme but are now actively participating.

However, the number of laden tankers over 10,000 gross tonnage using the Minch route remains low and only 18 were recorded during 2000. In the majority of these cases, the reason given by the vessel's master and accepted by the MCA was forecast adverse weather in the deep-water route to the west of the Outer Hebrides. Where there appears to be no justification for using the Minch, MCA contacts the vessel's operators for an explanation.

On occasions where large laden tankers do use the Minch, the Minch Emergency Towing Vessel (ETV) endeavours to escort such laden tankers to minimise any risk involved. At present, the ETV is on station in the Minch during the winter months only (October-March), but, with effect from October 2001, there will be ETV cover all year round.

With the phased introduction of automatic identification systems (AIS) under the revision of Chapter V of the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS) Convention, all tankers on international voyages must have such equipment fitted not later than the first annual safety equipment survey after 1 July 2003, unless they are scheduled to be scrapped within two years of the implementation date. This requirement should further enhance the level of reporting in this particular area.

Park Homes Working Party

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the Government's response to the recommendations of the Park Homes Working Party; and if he will make a statement. [149750]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: We have consulted on, and are considering, the recommendations of the Park Homes Working Party. We will give our response to the recommendations in due course.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the governmental inquiry into Mr. Douglas Andrew's role in the privatisation of New Zealand's steel industry in respect of the involvement of Mr. Andrew of the Civil Aviation Authority in advising the Government on the future of the National Air Traffic Services; [149597]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 5 February 2001, Official Report, columns 382–83W, if he will publish the minutes and notes of any working groups run by his Department on the economic regulatory and licensing regime for the NATS public-private partnership in which Mr. Douglas Andrew has participated; [149599]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 5 February 2001, Official Report, columns 382–83W, for what reasons Mr. Douglas Andrew has held meetings with the three potential partners during the bidding process; [149598]

(4) pursuant to his answer of 5 February 2001, Official Report, columns 382–83W, what steps were taken by the Government to satisfy itself that Mr. Douglas Andrew was the most appropriate person for reappointment in 2000 as the head of the Civil Aviation Authority's economic regulation group. [149596]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Before reappointing Mr. Andrew in April 2000, the Government satisfied themselves as to his track record as a member of the Civil Aviation Authority. They saw, and continue to see, no reason to make further inquiries about Mr. Andrew's career prior to joining the CAA.

Mr. Andrew's meetings with the bidders for the role of strategic partner in the public-private partnership for National Air Traffic Services were to enable the bidders to discuss questions about the future economic regulatory process.

The working groups run by my Department, to which I referred in my earlier answer, were integral to the provision of advice to Ministers on the public-private partnership, and it would not be appropriate to publish the minutes.

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consideration he is giving to selecting a strategic partner for the PPP for NATS on the basis of not-for-commercial-profit. [149848]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Bids for the NATS PPP were received by the Government on 31 January 2001 from the three consortiums who were invited to submit offers in November 2000. These are NIMBUS, NOVARES and The Airline Group. These three bids are currently being assessed against the evaluation criteria provided to them in November 2000 and against the Government objectives for this PPP. The evaluation criteria and the Government objectives do not preclude any bid from being on the basis of not-for-commercial-profit.

Animal Waste Incineration

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if a Regulatory Impact Assessment will be undertaken before new standards and controls are introduced in respect of emissions from (a) incinerators of animal waste and (b) pet crematoria. [150010]

Mr. Hill: A Regulatory Impact Assessment was undertaken of the then proposed Waste Incineration Directive, and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has since commissioned a study by ADAS Consulting to assess more accurately how many small animal carcase incinerators are in operation. A preliminary Regulatory Impact Assessment was issued by MAFF last November for the draft EU Animal By-Products Regulation. In addition, AEA Technology has been commissioned by MAFF to measure emissions at a representative sample of small animal waste incinerators to provide a firm basis for determining proportionate standards. MAFF will be making available the two studies when they are completed, subject to commercial confidentiality considerations.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the environmental benefits and disbenefits of using different fuels to incinerate animal waste. [150007]

Mr. Hill: None to my knowledge. The AEA Technology study referred to in the previous answer will examine incinerators using different fuels.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what communications his Department has had with National Industrial Fuel Efficiency Services Ltd. concerning the development of UK standards for emissions from small incinerators of animal waste, in the context of the European Union Waste Incineration Directive and proposed animal waste directive; and if he will make a statement. [150008]

Mr. Hill: None to my knowledge.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to ensure that the pet crematoria industry is not economically damaged by EU measures. [150009]

Mr. Hill: Partly at the UK's behest, the adopted Waste Incineration Directive (2000/76/EC) excludes animal carcases from its scope.

As regards the current draft EU Animal By-Products Regulation, it is our aim in the negotiation of this regulation to secure requirements akin to those in the Waste Incineration Directive for animal carcase incinerators on premises where there is an incineration capacity of over 50kg/hr, and proportionate, less stringent, requirements where the incineration capacity is smaller. The Association of Private Pet Cemeteries and Crematoria will be among the interested organisations consulted during the negotiation of the regulation.

Leylandii Hedges

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his plans to control leylandii hedges and the proposed timetable for their implementation. [150070]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: In August last year, my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment announced our commitment to introduce legislation that would give local authorities powers to deal with complaints about problem hedges, including leylandii. Although it was not possible to make provision for such a Bill in the Queen's Speech, the issue is being taken forward as a private Member's Bill by the hon. Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor). The High Hedges Bill was introduced on 17 January and is due to have its Second Reading on 9 March.

Strategic Planning Expenditure

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the levels of spending on strategic planning per head of population in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years. [150016]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Local authority expenditure on strategic planning is not separately identified in any of the returns made by local government to central Government, so we are unable to provide the information requested.

Powershift Programme

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 2001, Official Report, column 732W, on eligibility criteria for the Powershift programme, what meetings Ministers in his Department have had over the past 12 months with vehicle manufacturers to encourage them to manufacture production line gas vehicles; what other measures his Department has taken in pursuit of his objective; and what the response has been from the vehicle manufacturers. [150000]

Mr. Hill: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 7 February 2001, Official Report, columns 535–36W.

Planning

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will codify the way in which the requirements for developments in guideline areas are brought to the attention of planning committees. [149645]

Ms Beverley Hughes: This is an operational matter for local planning authorities' own discretion. The Local Government Association's "Probity in Planning" includes guidelines for officer reports to planning committees. This advises that relevant points will include a clear exposition of the development plan, site-related history, and any other material considerations.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how breaches of codes of conduct on relationships between planning officers and (a) applicants and (b) planning consultants are recorded. [149641]

Ms Beverley Hughes: There is no centrally-prescribed method for recording breaches of codes of conduct. However, the Local Government Ombudsman's guidance note "Devising a Complaints System" gives advice to local authorities on conducting an internal investigation of a complaint, including the recording of its outcome. Breaches of codes of conduct may also be the subject of investigation and formal report by the Local Government Ombudsman.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to (a) clarify and (b) amend the rules by which application dates are determined in planning cases; [150005]

(2) if he will make a statement on the rules by which an application date is determined following pre-application discussions in planning cases. [150006]

Ms Beverley Hughes: It is for applicants to decide when to make a formal planning application to the local planning authority. This may or may not follow pre-application discussions. All applications made to an authority are recorded in that authority's planning register. The Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) Order 1995 requires local planning authorities to give an applicant notice of their decision within eight weeks of receipt of a valid planning application. However, the applicant and the local planning authority may agree in writing an extended period for determining the application, unless the applicant has already given notice of appeal to the Secretary of State. We have no plans to amend the existing provisions.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the scope that planning officers have for interpreting the provisions relating to guideline areas without the permission of elected representatives. [150027]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Under section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, all planning applications must be determined in accordance with the development plan for the area unless material considerations indicate otherwise. Section 101 of the Local Government Act 1972, as amended, provides for planning applications to be determined by an officer on behalf of the council, in accordance with clearly stated and published rules. Elected members decide the policies in the development plan and determine the framework of other policies, standards and guidance within which applications are considered. Elected members also set the terms of any delegation agreement, including the circumstances in which an officer's delegated power to make a decision may not be exercised. The Local Government Association's "Development Control: Delegation Arrangements" advises that common exceptions to delegated powers will be applications which are contrary to the policies in the development plan for the area and contrary to approved council policies.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to give objectors in planning cases non-judicial alternative forms of appeal. [149903]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have no current plans to do so.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to reduce the number of signatures required for a petition in planning cases in low density areas. [150019]

Ms Beverley Hughes: There is no prescribed number of signatures that constitutes a petition for planning purposes. In determining planning applications, local planning authorities are required to take into account relevant representations made to them within the time limit specified. It is for authorities to decide what weight to give to such representations, having regard to the circumstances of the particular case.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will (a) allow objectors to apply for costs when participating in planning appeals and (b) increase and standardise the timescale for objections to be submitted in planning cases. [150029]

Ms Beverley Hughes: (a) Fundamental to the working of the planning system, including planning appeals, is the fact that each party meets its own expenses. Thus parties to planning appeals going to inquiry normally meet their own costs. However, the Secretary of State has the power to order one party to pay another's costs where one party has behaved unreasonably and has caused another to incur unnecessary expense as a result.

(b) Streamlined statutory procedures for handling planning appeals were introduced in August last year following public consultation. These require other parties to submit their comments or statements of case to the Secretary of State in the same timescale within which local planning authorities and appellants submit their statements. The operation of the new procedures is being monitored but we have no current plans to change them.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require local authorities to place a time limit on pre-application discussions between planning officers and applicants or their representatives. [150024]

Ms Beverley Hughes: This is an operational matter for local planning authorities' discretion.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to (a) prevent planning committees from being held in holiday periods and (b) permit objectors to make closing statements at planning appeals. [150020]

Ms Beverley Hughes: (a) We have no plans to do so. This is an operational matter for individual local authorities to determine.

(b) The statutory rules for handling planning appeals prescribe the arrangements for parties making statements at hearings or inquiries. The rules already make provision for closing statements by objectors in particular circumstances but inspectors have discretion to allow them in other circumstances. DETR Circular 5/2000 "Planning Appeals: Procedure (Including Inquiries into Called-in Planning Applications)" provides guidance on the procedure at hearings and inquiries.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out carbon dioxide emission projection figures for (a) 2001, (b) 2002, (c) 2003, (d) 2004, (e) 2005, (f) 2006, (g) 2007, (h) 2008 and (i) 2009 on the same basis as is used for the preparation of figures for Table 1 in Section 2, Chapter 1 of the final Climate Change Programme, Cm 4913. [149872]

Mr. Meacher: Data for 2005 are published in Table 1 in Section 2, Chapter 1 of the final Climate Change Programme. Data for intermediate years are not available because the UK energy model makes projections at five yearly intervals. Intermediate years may be constructed by interpolation, but this does not add additional information and can be misleading because emissions in individual years are affected by statistical factors, including the weather and the economic cycle.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason the figures relating to carbon dioxide emissions and carbon dioxide emission projections in Table 1 of Section 2, Chapter 1 of the final Climate Change Programme, Cm 4913, differ from those in Table 1 of Section 2, Chapter 1 of the draft Climate Change Programme. [149869]

Mr. Meacher: The carbon dioxide emission estimate for 1990 is from the UK emissions inventory and is given as 168 million tonnes of carbon in both the Climate Change Programme and the draft Climate Change Programme. The projections for years 2000, 2010 and 2020 compare as follows:

Million tonnes

Year	Climate change programme	Draft climate change programme
2000	154.3	152.2
2020	160.7	164.7

Most of the differences reflect revisions to UK energy projections made following the consultation process described in Energy Paper 68 (see section 1.2, page 8). The main factor influencing the projection for 2000 is a lower expectation of nuclear output together with a higher coal burn. In subsequent years higher power station emissions are outweighed by lower emissions from industry and refineries. Industrial emissions are projected to be lower than previously estimated partly due to lower estimated emissions from offshore activity. Projected emissions from land use change have also been revised downward slightly because of methodological improvements and minor updates resulting from emissions data in the latest greenhouse gas inventory. Provisional data on actual emissions in 2000 will be available in March.

Air Liberalisation

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in the negotiations with the United States on air liberalisation. [149855]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Negotiations with the previous US Administration did not lead to an agreement. We will be pressing the new Administration to liberalise the market on terms which deliver a fair balance of opportunity to the airlines of the two sides, bringing the benefits of increased competition both to the consumer and to the wider UK economy.

A6 Bus Lane

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the A6 bus lane in Loughborough since its introduction. [150021]

Mr. Hill: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Tim Matthews, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Mr. Andrew Reed, dated 14 February 2001:

The Transport Minister, Keith Hill, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the bus lane on the A6 in Loughborough.

This was introduced on an experimental basis in March 1999. Our assessment of the scheme is very positive: there have been improvements in bus journey time reliability and car journey times at the height of the morning peak and a reduction in maximum queue lengths. Although the proposal was generally well received there were some objections. We are trying to resolve these before deciding whether or not we should make permanent arrangements for its operation and enforcement. We hope that will be around April.

If you require any further information in the meantime please contact David Smith, the Project Sponsor for this scheme. His telephone number is 0121 678 8054.

Central Railway (Freight Line)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the Government's policy is on the proposals by Central Railway for a new direct freight line to Europe from the north-west; if he will publish the advice that he has received from the Strategic Rail Authority on this matter; and what discussions have taken place with Central Railway about the proposed line. [149840]

Mr. Hill: Central Railway has requested the Government's support for the approval of its scheme through a hybrid Bill but the company has not yet submitted details of its proposals.

The SRA is to undertake a review of Central Railway's proposals. This will examine the project in the context of our 10-Year Plan objectives and the SRA's own strategy for freight. I will follow the review with interest and make a further statement in due course, taking into account the SRA's findings.

A3, Hindhead

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the UVA consultants' report on the Hindhead A3 tunnel. [150305]

Mr. Hill: The consultant's report on the A3 Hindhead study is currently with the South East England Regional Assembly and was presented to its plenary meeting today. It will then be for the Assembly to make recommendations to Ministers, and decisions on the way forward will be taken in the light of these recommendations.

Biocidal and Cosmetic Products

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his policy is on the discussion paper produced by the Environment Directorate of the European Commission on the interface between the Biocidal Products and Cosmetic Products Directives; what timetable has been proposed for consultation on this paper; and if he will place a copy of the paper and the Government's response in the Library. [148713]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 12 February 2001]: The European Commission is currently drafting a document in order to clarify the borderline between the Biocidal Products Directive and the Cosmetics Directive. An expert working group that includes experts from member states (including the UK) and industry has discussed it. The working document is being modified and a final version has yet to be put formally to member states for comment. It is anticipated that member states will discuss a final draft next month.

With regard to the scope of the Biocidal Products Directive, the UK policy is to encourage the European Commission to bring forward proposals concerning the interface with other Directives so that products are regulated under the most appropriate regime, and those required to comply with European legislation are clear about which legislation applies to their products.

Once the working document has been lodged with us it will be placed in the House Library.

Flood Plains

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consideration his Department has given to the implications of construction on flood plains on the south coast; what his assessments are of the increased risk of flooding from such construction; what preconditions have been imposed to guarantee the satisfactory disposal of sewage, wastewater and groundwater resulting from the construction of new housing estates and service roads; and if he will make a statement. [150117]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Policy INF1 in the draft Regional Planning Guidance for the South East (RPG9) states that:

> "Development should be guided away from areas at risk or likely to be at risk in future from flooding, or where it would increase the risk of flood damage elsewhere".

The draft RPG advises that management proposals for the costal zone will also need to reflect strategies agreed between relevant bodies for flood defence. Shoreline management plans now exist for the whole of the south coast. These contribute towards the necessary understanding of coastal processes to inform the planning system in its assessment of flood risk and construction.

The revised draft of Planning Policy Guidance Note (PPG) 25 "Development and flood risk", published on 6 February, states:

> "those proposing particular developments are responsible for: providing an assessment of whether any proposed development is likely to be affected by flooding, whether it will increase flood risk elsewhere and of the measures proposed to deal with these effects and risks. It is then for the local planning authority, advised as necessary by the Environment Agency, to determine an application for planning permission taking account of all material considerations".

The draft guidance also advises that, in reviewing sites at risk of flooding when preparing local plans, local planning authorities should review both existing and possible future allocations of land for development against the risk-based criteria set out in the sequential test in the draft PPG.

The disposal of sewage, wastewater and groundwater resulting from the construction of new houses and service roads can be material considerations in the determination of applications for planning permission and should also be taken into account in preparing development plans. The draft PPG 25 advises on the need for close liaison between local authorities, the Environment Agency, sewerage undertakers and prospective developers to encourage the use of sustainable drainage systems and minimise the impacts of their discharges on receiving watercourses. In addition, the Government consulted in 2000 on amendments to Part H of the Building Regulations, proposing a number of amendments related to sustainable drainage. There are also proposals to reduce the risk of sewer flooding by the use of the anti-flood valves and pumps from basement connections and buildings in low-lying areas.

Tugs

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the level of UK emergency towing provision; and if he will make a statement. [150658]

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recommendations he has received from the Maritime and Coastguard Agency on the all year round siting of an emergency towing vessel in the Pentland Firth; and if he will make a statement. [150401]

Mr. Hill: A review of UK emergency towing provision has now been completed by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency and recommends that the current winter-only arrangements for UK provision in the South West Approaches, Dover Strait, Minch, and Fair Isle should be increased to all-year-round cover. I have accepted this recommendation.

The new arrangements will start from 1 October this year, with the exception of the Dover Strait, which will commence earlier on 1 April. The Dover Strait provision builds on the partnership arrangements introduced last year with our French maritime colleagues.

The report also considered emergency towing provision for the Irish Sea and St. George's Channel area. Although the report concludes that there is insufficient evidence to support an emergency towing vessel for the area on an all-year-round basis by the UK alone, it recommends that provision could be made in partnership with the Government of Ireland. I have accepted this recommendation, dependent upon the Irish Government providing an emergency towing vessel in which the UK Government can share. A dialogue will be maintained with the Irish Government.

These improvements to the UK emergency towing vessel provision are good news for the safety of the UK environment and the seagoing community, and demonstrate this Government's commitment to preventing maritime pollution.

Copies of the review report have been placed in the House Library.

Ports

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) number and (b) percentages of UK ports are owned by (i) Associated British Ports and (ii) Hutchinson Whampoa Europe Ltd.; and what percentage of the UK port trade each of those companies carried out in each year from 1995. [150264]

Mr. Hill: There are more than 650 ports in the UK, of which about one fifth are commercially active. Associated British Ports (ABP) currently owns 23 ports and Hutchinson Whampoa (Hutchinson Ports (UK) Ltd.) owns three ports.

It is estimated that ABP ports accounted for about 21 per cent. of all UK port tonnage in 1999 and Hutchinson Whampoa about 7 per cent. It is not possible to provide accurate figures for earlier years.

Coalfields Regeneration Trust

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the funding of the Coalfields Regeneration Trust. [150625]

Mr. Prescott: I am today announcing additional funding for the Coalfields Regeneration Trust in England of up to £45 million over the three years to March 2005. This reaffirms the Government's support for the coalfields communities and the excellent work of the Trust.

The Coalfields Regeneration Trust is a key element of the Government's long-term programme to bring about the physical, social, economic and environmental regeneration of our coalfields.

The Trust provides supports for local community projects. It also sponsors projects, targeted on workers displaced from mining-related industries, who have been unemployed for a long time and who face particular disadvantages in getting back to work. It has an important role to play in community capacity building, providing a forum for good regeneration practice to be exchanged across the coalfield communities. The Trust is actively building partnerships with local, regional and national agencies and reaching out to the private sector.

With this additional funding the Trust will be able to maintain and develop further its key role in combating poverty, debt and social exclusion in the former coalfield areas.

Chester Street Insurance Holdings

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the cost to the Policyholders Protection Board of the financial collapse of Chester Street Insurance Holdings; and if he will recompense those who believed they were covered under employers liability insurance by policies held by Chester Street Insurance. [148917]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for the Policyholders Protection Board. I understand that it is working with the provisional liquidators and Chester Street Insurance Holdings, which is currently assessing the information available about existing and potential claims.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal for Disabled People

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of eligible applicants for the New Deal for Disabled People will be excluded in order to provide a control group for comparative purposes; on what basis they will be selected; and how long the period of exclusion would be before they became eligible for the programme. [147736]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 30 January 2001]: In pursuing a very innovative New Deal for Disabled People it is important to evaluate how effective the programme is in bringing people on incapacity benefit into work. The most robust methodology available is one based on random assignment and this will be used to evaluate the NDDP national extension. Once the programme is established one in five clients who register with job brokers will be allocated to a control group and have their eligibility deferred. The deferral period will last for 12 months, after which time members of the control group will be invited to take part in the NDDP extension.

The control group will be selected entirely at random. During the deferral period, individuals in the control group will continue to have access to Employment Service programmes, including specialist disability employment programmes, where they meet the eligibility criteria.

Exam Markers

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the availability of exam markers for next summer's public examinations. [147861]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 30 January 2001]: All necessary steps are being taken to ensure a sufficient supply of examiners. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority is monitoring the awarding bodies closely to ensure that the system will deliver this summer's results on time. The awarding bodies' examiner recruitment exercise is well under way. The exact number of examiners needed will not be known until April, when entries have been made.

Student Loans and Debt

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment at what point of net income in tax year 2000–01 a graduate repays more in old-style mortgage loan than in new-style income-contingent loan. [149799]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 13 February 2001]: Assuming a student loan debt of £5,000 and repayment of a mortgage-style loan over a five-year period, a graduate liable to repay a mortgage-style loan would repay more of that loan each year until annual gross pay of £21,111 was reached. Repayment thresholds for both types of loan are based on gross pay, not net.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average amount of student debt was in each of the last five years. [149454]

Mr. Wicks: Data from the Department's Student Income and Expenditure Surveys show that the average debt of full-time students in higher education in the UK was £840 in 1995–96 and £2,530 in 1998–99, after their savings had been taken into account. The debt figures include student loans, commercial loans and overdrafts as well as informal loans from family and friends. Data for the intervening and more recent years are not available from the survey.

Since 1998–99 students entering higher education have been eligible for income-contingent student loans. These are interest-free in real terms and repayment is linked to income so that graduates repay only when they can afford to do so.

Students (Social Background)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will provide a breakdown of the social backgrounds of (a) university applicants and (b) university students for each of the last five years. [149455]

Mr. Wicks: The available information on full-time students, as given in the following table, covers only those who apply for full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS); data on the family background of students applying for part-time courses are not held centrally.

UK domiciled applicants and accepted applicants via UCAS to full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses in the UK

Student Employment

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of students had term-time, part-time jobs during each of the last five years. [149458]

Mr. Wicks: Data from the Department's Student Income and Expenditure Survey show that about half of full-time higher education students had term-time jobs in 1995–96 and in 1998–99. Data for the intervening and more recent years are not available from the survey.

A Further Education Funding Council survey of students in further education colleges undertaken in the summer of 1998 found that 73 per cent. of young full-time students (aged 16 to 18) and 41 per cent. of older full-time students worked during term-time.

Supply Teachers

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's decision to exclude positions occupied by supply teachers on a 12-month contract from the definition of teacher vacancies for the purposes of form 618G. [149819]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 9 February 2001]: The definition is exactly the same as that used by the previous Administration. It allows sensible comparisons to be made over time—and gives an accurate picture of where schools have vacancies that are either unfilled or covered by short-term supply staff.

Classroom Assistants

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of the additional 20,000 full-time equivalent classroom assistants which the Government have funded were recruited in 1999–2000; what his projection is for recruitment levels in 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [149880]

Ms Estelle Morris: An additional 24,000 education support staff have been recruited in schools since 1997, 11,000 in the last year. Against the target of 20,000 full-time equivalent teaching assistants between 1999 and 2000, between January 1999 and January 2000 over 9,000 full-time equivalent teaching assistants had been recruited. Schools have the funding to recruit more assistants and figures for January 2001 will be available later this year.

Aiding Communication in Education Centre

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to announce funding proposals for the Aiding Communication in Education Centre (North). [149522]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The Department for Education and Employment funds both the Aiding Communication in Education (ACE) Centre (North) and the Aiding Communication in Education (ACE) Centre Advisory Trust through the British Education Communications and Technology Agency.

We are currently working with the ACE Centre (North) to support its transition to charitable status. We will continue to support the valuable work of these centres in providing services for children and young people who use communication aids.

Paid Educational Leave

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what take-up there has been of the entitlement to paid educational leave for 16 to 17-year-olds since it was introduced; what the estimated cost has been to (a) state and (b) private employers; and if he will make a statement. [149611]

Mr. Wicks: This information is not collected centrally. The right to time off for study or training is employment legislation which protects and encourages 16 and 17-year-old employees who have not already achieved level 2 qualifications as defined by the regulations. At the end of 1999, there were an estimated 100,000 16 and 17-year-olds in England in employment but not qualified to level 2, and not working towards a level 2 qualification.

Evidence from our initial evaluation (DfEE Research Report RR221 "Time Off for Study or Training: Preliminary Evaluation of the Implementation of the Employment Right") suggests that the right has stimulated activity to promote training to young people, and has had a positive effect on recruitment into modern apprenticeships, but this remains difficult to quantify.

Higher Education Staff

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the increase in the productivity of higher education teaching staff since 1997. [149922]

Mr. Wicks: The Quality Assurance Agency assesses the quality of teaching in higher education institutions; and the research assessment exercises of the Higher Education Funding Council for England look at both the volume and quality of research. However, there is no direct measure of the productivity of higher education teaching staff.

Select Committee Report

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department received on the contents of the Education and Employment Select Committee's report on access to higher education, and the proceedings of the Committee prior to the publication of the report. [150055]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 12 February 2001]: In accordance with usual practice, Departments had access to the report from 11.00 am on 6 February 2001, under embargo until 00.01 on 8 February, when it was published. We received no prior information on the contents of the report.

Funding Allocations

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the proposed levels are of (a) core funding for education business consortiums in 2001–02, (b) funding for work experience and (c) funding for teacher placements; and what the level of funding of education business partnerships through TECs was in 2000–01. [150063]

Mr. Wicks: Core funding of £23 million has been allocated for education business link (EBL) activity in 2001–02. The funding will go via the Learning and Skills Council (LSC), which will contract with consortiums in each of the local LSC areas for delivery of education business links. Of this £23 million, £9.8 million is for work experience placements for Key Stage 4 pupils; and £1.8 million is for professional development placements for teachers. In addition, the LSC will be able to make allocations from its discretionary local initiatives fund (£90.3 million in total) to support EBL activity.

It is estimated that in 2000–01 training and enterprise councils (TECs) provided discretionary support of £17 million in total to EBL organisations. In addition, DfEE provided core funding through TECs for Key Stage 4 work experience (£9.8 million) and teachers' professional development placements (£1.8 million).

Further Education

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how he plans to encourage and develop a sectoral response to issues in further education raised by the Further Education National Training Organisation's recent Skills Foresight report. [150079]

Mr. Wicks: My Department will discuss the Skills Foresight report with representatives of the further education sector.

We have already announced extra funding of £50 million in 2001–02 and £100 million in 2002–03 for further education teachers' pay. Proposals for using the money are expected to include improved pay and career structures for high calibre teaching staff. We have also announced our plans to require all new entrants to the FE teaching profession to gain an appropriate qualification, to boost continuing professional development for all staff, and to support increased training for prospective and serving college principals. This will be supported by up to £80 million from the FE standards fund for 2001–02.

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students in further education colleges in (a) Halton, (b) Cheshire and (c) England and Wales failed to complete their courses in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000. [150293]

Mr. Wicks: Data for further education colleges are only readily available for 1997–98 and 1998–99 for FEFC-funded students in England and are contained in the following table.

FEFC-funded students in FE sector colleges in England 1997–98 and 1998–99

Unique Pupil Numbers

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 7 February 2001, Official Report, column 579W, what arrangements will be made to allocate unique pupil numbers to pupils in England who (a) commence their education in the non-maintained sector and (b) move between maintained and non-maintained sectors during their school career. [150086]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department is discussing with the Independent Schools Council the possibility of the unique pupil number (UPN) system being extended to pupils in independent schools, although no decisions have yet been taken. For as long as it remains the case that UPNs are allocated only to pupils in the maintained sector: (a) pupils who commence their education in the non-maintained sector will not during that period have a UPN, but will be allocated one by the first maintained school they enter;

(b) pupils who move between maintained and non-maintained sectors during their school career should be allocated a UPN at the beginning of their first spell in the maintained sector and retain that for each subsequent spell, even though the UPN will be inactive during intervening periods in the non-maintained sector. There is inevitably a risk in these cases of the thread being lost, and new UPNs being allocated to pupils who already have one. However, the central pupil database described in my earlier answer, 7 February 2001, Official Report, column 579W, (ref. 148383) will, once established, be able to provide LEAs and schools with a "tracing service" for lost UPNs.

Teaching Standards (Leeds)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of teaching was identified as being (a) satisfactory or better, (b) good or better, (c) very good or better and (d) excellent in Ofsted reports published on (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in Leeds LEA in each of the last four years. [150106]

Ms Estelle Morris: This is a matter for Ofsted and I have therefore asked HM Chief Inspector of Schools, Mike Tomlinson, to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

New Deal for Schools (Great Yarmouth)

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools in the Great Yarmouth constituency which have received funding under the New Deal for Schools since May 1997, indicating the sums involved in each case. [150188]

Jacqui Smith: The following table shows those schools in the Great Yarmouth constituency which have benefited from investment through the New Deal for Schools programme, which commenced in 1997–98. These allocations formed part of the £16.793 million investment made in schools in the Norfolk local education authority under the New Deal for Schools programme. In total, since 1997, Norfolk local education authority has received some £55.559 million of funding for capital investment in school buildings.

Staffing Costs

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total cost of, and proportion of, total education budget spent, on employing (a) teaching and (b) non-teaching staff in each local education authority in England in the last financial year. [150192]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is set out in the table for 1998–99, the latest year for which data are currently available.

Professional Footballers

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received regarding the evasion of work permit regulations by overseas footballers wishing to play professionally in the UK. [150257]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The Department has received no representations regarding the evasion of work permit regulations by overseas footballers wishing to play professionally in the UK.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions his Department has had with other Departments relating to the evasion of work permit regulations by overseas footballers wishing to play professionally in the UK. [150258]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The Department has had no discussions with other Departments relating to the evasion of work permit regulations by overseas footballers wishing to play professionally in the UK. The Home Office is responsible for deciding whether overseas nationals may enter the country to work based on the passport they hold or whether they require a work permit.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

House of Lords Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council how many people are employed by the House of Lords Appointments Commission; how many are on fixed-term contracts; and what the annual running costs of the Commission is. [146277]

Mrs. Beckett: I understand that the Appointments Commission employs no one directly. It is supported by a small team of civil servants, none of whom is on a fixed-term contract. Its budget for running costs for 2000–01 is about £300,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

House Stationery

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many hon. Members have been requested to make payments for prepaid House of Commons envelopes which have not been used in accordance with the rules of the House; and how many hon. Members have been ordered to make such payments following complaints since May 1997. [150348]

Mrs. Roe: Supervision and enforcement of the regulations for the use of House stationery and post-paid envelopes are a matter for the Serjeant at Arms. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

PRIME MINISTER

Lord Levy

Mrs. Gillian: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the business interests that Lord Levy would be required to register were he a Minister. [145326]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 2001]: Lord Levy is not a Minister.

Council Housing (London)

Q13. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans the Government have to increase the supply of council housing in London. [148807]

The Prime Minister: We are almost doubling the budget for development of new social housing in London over the next three years with total planned expenditure of £1 billion. We are also helping key workers to purchase homes in London and other high house price areas through our new Starter Homes Initiative.

Ministerial Code of Conduct

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government will amend the Ministerial Code of Conduct in line with the recommendations of the Committee on Standards in Public Life. [148660]

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government will amend the Ministerial Code of Conduct in line with the recommendations of the Committee on Standards in Public Life. [148780]

Mr. Green: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government will amend the Ministerial Code of Conduct in line with the recommendations of the Committee on Standards in Public Life. [148782]

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government will amend the Ministerial Code of Conduct in line with the recommendations of the Committee on Standards in Public Life. [148779]

Mr. Gray: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government will amend the Ministerial Code of Conduct in line with the recommendations of the Committee on Standards in Public Life. [148788]

The Prime Minister: The Government's response to the sixth report from the Committee on Standards in Public Life, published in July 2000 (Cm 4817), set out my position on amendment to the Ministerial Code.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister if the special advisers working (a) in his Private Office, (b) in the Policy Unit, (c) in the Strategic Communications Unit, (d) in the Research and Information Unit, (e) in the Social Office and (f) under a dispensation granted by an Order in Council in May 1997 will relinquish their posts when the next general election is called. [149276]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer provided to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Official Histories

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Prime Minister if any further official histories have been commissioned. [150690]

The Prime Minister: I have appointed Dr. Terence R. Gourvish, Director of the Business History Unit of the London School of Economics and Political Science, as an official historian to write the official history of the Channel Tunnel.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Education

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the Government's plans to improve prison education and training. [150463]

Mr. Boateng: I have today made a joint announcement with my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Education and Employment, establishing a new partnership between the Department for Education and Employment and the Prison Service. From 1 April this new partnership will be responsible for securing improvements in the education, training and resettlement of prisoners.

Our plans for the partnership are outlined in "Improving Prisoners' Learning and Skills", published today, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Overseas Students

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to ensure that employers are aware of the provisions enabling overseas students to work while studying in the United Kingdom, with particular reference to overcoming difficulties where such students apply for work before they have been issued with a national insurance number; and if he will make a statement. [150077]

Mrs. Roche: Information about the eligibility of overseas students to take employment is available on the Home Office and Department for Education and Employment websites, and in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate information leaflet on overseas students.

Essex Constabulary

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on (a) total number of new recruits who have joined Essex police and (b) total number of police officers who have retired from the Essex constabulary between 1 April 2000 and the latest date for which figures are available. [148700]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 February 2001]: Between 1 April 2000 and 30 September 2000, 103 officers joined Essex police; 97 of these were in the rank of constable. During the same period 53 officers retired from the force. The force's total wastage for this period amounted to 80 officers.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the special advisers working for him will relinquish their posts when the next general election is called. [149315]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Staffordshire Constabulary

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) uniformed police constables, (b) uniformed police sergeants, (c) uniformed police officers above the rank of sergeant, (d) police detective constables, (e) police detective sergeants and (f) police detectives above the rank of sergeant, there were in the Staffordshire constabulary (i) in May 1997 and (ii) at the latest date for which figures are available. [148154]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 7 February 2001]: Information on police service personnel numbers is collected twice a year in March and September. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary collects information annually on 31 March about the number of officers deployed to different functions.

The information on detective numbers has been provided by Her Majesty's Inspectorate. The inspectorate made changes to its classification system for different police functions in 1999–2000. It is not therefore possible to identify from the new classification the number of officers that would have been classified as Criminal Investigation Department (CID) under the old rules and who are now recorded under other classifications. The change in classification accounts for some of the reduction in CID strength. The information in the tables has therefore been provided on the basis of non-CID officer numbers and CID officer numbers for March 1997 and March 2000.

Staffordshire police (i) Non-CID officers (full-time equivalent)

	31 March 1997	31 March 2000
Constables	1,415.5	1,518.7
Sergeants	285.2	289.2
Other ranks	157	131

Staffordshire police (ii) CID officers (full-time equivalent)

	31 March 1997	31 March 2000
Constables	268.4	153.6
Sergeants	59	45.8
Other ranks	26	19

Mobile Police Stations

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific role mobile police stations will play in reducing crime; if they will replace (a) officers on the beat and (b) high-speed police cars; and if he will make a statement. [149452]

Mr. Charles Clarke: A number of forces are using mobile police stations for increased visibility and accessibility, to reduce fear of crime, to enhance policing in rural areas, and as mobile custody units.

I strongly support this, and other, imaginative initiatives taking their place alongside beat officers and police vehicles as part of an overall approach to meeting local policing needs.

North Yorkshire Police

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement reconciling the figures for numbers of North Yorkshire police in (a) the answer of the Minister of State, Home Office, the hon. Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Clarke), of 18 January 2001, Official Report, column 352W, and (b) the recent press statement made by North Yorkshire Police Authority. [148953]

Mr. Charles Clarke: At 30 September 2000 North Yorkshire police had 1,293 officers.

The Chief Constable of North Yorkshire police has advised me that for March 2002 the force projects that it will have increased its numbers to 1,420 police officers. This figure was announced by the force in its press statement of 9 January.

This increase includes 43 officers to be recruited through the Crime Fighting Fund, 60 officers to be recruited through the Rural Policing Fund, the remainder being part of normal planned force recruitment.

Police Expenditure

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the levels of spending on police services in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years. [148296]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is set out in the table.

Prison Governors

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those prison establishments in which there have been changes at governor level, including changes involving those acting as governor for one month or more, over the last five years, the date upon which each such change took place, the name of the governor leaving and the name of his or her replacement in each case. [147561]

Mr. Boateng: I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Police Officers (Hertsmere)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been available for duty in the Hertsmere police division in each year since 1992. [150048]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 12 February 2001]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that before the boundary changes with the Hertfordshire constabulary on 1 April 2000 Hertsmere was part of the Barnet division. It is not possible to identify separately the number of police officers who policed Hertsmere.

I am told by the Chief Constable of Hertfordshire that for the financial year 2000–01 the Hertsmere division has an establishment of 139 police officers. On 31 January 2001 the actual number of officers available to police Hertsmere was 131 officers.

Naturalisation Applications

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if it is his policy for a record note to be kept of representations made by Ministers about an individual application for naturalisation; [149579]

(2) if it is his policy that a note recording the interest of (a) a Minister and (b) an hon. Member in an individual application for naturalisation should be placed on the relevant case file. [149573]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 8 February 2001]: Correspondence from any source about individual applications for naturalisation would be recorded on the relevant case file or on an associated file.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what level within his Department an application for naturalisation is normally determined. [149578]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The level at which naturalisation applications are determined varies according to the nature and complexity of the case. The majority, however, are decided by administrative officer caseworkers.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria govern whether an application for naturalisation is referred for personal determination by (a) the Secretary of State and (b) a Minister. [149574]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 8 February 2001]: Applications are referred to Ministers if they are likely to be controversial or sensitive or if they raise complex issues or questions of security. Whether the Secretary of State will decide an application will depend on the circumstances of the individual case, although he will see referrals where the key issue is one concerning security.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the systematic detention of asylum seekers coming directly from their country of origin or an unsafe third country with the 1951 UN convention on refugees and the 1999 UNHCR guidelines on applicable criteria and standards relating to the detention of asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [149548]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 12 February 2001]: Detention of asylum seekers is used as a last resort and no one is detained simply because he or she has claimed asylum. However, detention may be appropriate in the following circumstances; in order to establish identity or basis of claim; where there are reasonable grounds for believing that the subject will fail to comply with the terms of temporary admission or release; or where removal is imminent.

Unaccompanied children are detained only in the most exceptional circumstances. We are therefore satisfied that our detention policy is consistent with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees criteria.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) by what criteria the applications of asylum seekers are judged by the Government; and if he will list them; [149919]

(2) on what basis an individual asylum seeker is judged to be (a) an economic migrant and (b) a refugee. [149917]

Mrs. Roche: All asylum applications, regardless of the applicant's nationality, are considered in accordance with the criteria set out in the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees. To qualify for asylum a person must be outside his/her country of nationality and have a well founded fear of persecution for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion. Those who meet these criteria are granted asylum; those who do not meet the requirements of the 1951 convention may nevertheless be granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom if there are exceptional compelling humanitarian reasons why they should not be required to leave.

Those who do not qualify for asylum or exceptional leave to remain and have no other basis on which to remain are required to leave the United Kingdom. The process for considering an asylum claim does not involve us taking a view on whether an applicant is an "economic migrant".

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means the United Kingdom Government ensures the welfare of asylum seekers who are not permanently admitted into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [149918]

Mrs. Roche: The Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 introduced new support arrangements for asylum seekers. Under these new arrangements all new eligible destitute asylum seekers may be supported by the National Asylum Support Service (NASS). This support is mainly in kind and includes accommodation where requested. Asylum seekers whose claims have been finally determined as unfounded are not eligible for NASS support. However, families with children under the age of 18 will be supported by NASS until they leave the country.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the process by which decisions are made on the applications of asylum-seekers in the United Kingdom, including the reference to the officials who are responsible for the decisions. [149920]

Mrs. Roche: All applications for asylum are considered by specially trained officers in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate of the Home Office.

The officers consider applications against the criteria set out in the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees; each claim is examined individually on its merits. The caseworking officers have access to detailed country assessments to support them when considering asylum claims.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to send the result of the decisions on asylum for (a) Mr. M. (HO Ref: RV181199167) and (b) Mr. A. (HO Ref: A522615). [149758]

Mrs. Roche: (a) Mr. M. will shortly be invited to attend an interview in Liverpool during the week commencing 5 March. A decision will be made as soon as is practicable thereafter.

(b) Mr. A. was granted indefinite leave to remain on 12 February and will shortly be notified of this decision.

I am sorry for the delay in informing my hon. Friend's constituents of the progress of their cases.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of asylum applicants who have been refused refugee status or exceptional leave to remain sought to appeal against that decision in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [150047]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 12 February 2001]: The information is not available in the form requested. In the year 2000, there were 78,180 initial decisions to refuse asylum and exceptional leave to remain. Also in the year 2000, there were 46,190 appeals lodged with the Home Office. However, these appeals will not all necessarily relate to decisions made in the same year. These figures are subject to revision.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average time taken for asylum applicants to receive an initial decision on their asylum application is; and if he will make a statement. [150046]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 12 February 2001]: Although 2000 statistics are not yet available, the average time taken to reach an initial decision in December 2000 is estimated to have been 13 months.

Graffiti

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to issue new guidelines to spray-paint manufacturers and retailers to encourage them to minimise sales to minors who intend to use the spray for graffiti. [149603]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have no plans to issue guidelines on this issue.

Leicestershire Police Authority

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in post in Leicestershire police authority in each year between 1996–97 and the last year for which figures are available. [150023]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is set out in the table. The latest figures available are those for 30 September 2000.

Crime Statistics (Cheshire)

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the level of (a) violent crime, (b) theft of vehicles, (c) thefts from vehicles, (d) house burglaries and (e) vandalism was in Cheshire in each year from 1997 to 2000. [149662]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The details covering this period are given in the table. Owing to the change in counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998, direct comparisons cannot be made between the data for before and after this date. However, for England and Wales as a whole, it has been estimated that the change in counting rules increased the number violent of crimes counted by 83 per cent., thefts of and from vehicles by 1 per cent., all burglaries by 0.1 per cent. and criminal damage by 5 per cent.

Recorded crime Cheshire

Police Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 490W, on police expenditure, what the change in central Government expenditure on policing was in total and in real terms in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [148583]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 9 February 2001]: The information is set out in the table.

In my previous reply of 22 January 2001, Official Report, column 490W, the percentage change in real terms for net expenditure by police authorities in 1995–96 compared with the previous year should read "–0.3 per cent", not 0.3 per cent.

Notes:

1. Home Office provision is grant/special grant, capital grant, credit approvals and central Home Office spending.
2. Real terms figures are shown at 1999–2000 prices using GDP deflator at December 2000.

Police Vehicles (Black Boxes)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces fit black boxes to their vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [148939]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on police forces fitting black box recorders to their vehicles is not held centrally.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judges' Lodgings

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will (a) make a statement on progress of her review of judges' lodgings and (b) publish the report when it is completed. [150001]

Jane Kennedy: Consultation between the Lord Chancellor and the Judiciary on the review continues.

The Lord Chancellor intends to publish his decisions along with the report when the review is completed.

TREASURY

Budget

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to deliver his Budget Statement. [150794]

Mr. Gordon Brown: On Wednesday 7 March.

Chester Street Insurance Holdings

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what steps his Department can take to safeguard payouts to sufferers from asbestos-related diseases following the collapse of Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited; [147296]

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's policy following the collapse of Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited in respect of protecting the interests of sufferers from asbestos-related diseases; [147310]

(3) what discussions he is having with (a) Ministers and (b) the financial services industry following the collapse of Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited; [147297]

(4) what action he is taking to ensure that those (a) who worked for publicly owned enterprises and have an asbestos-related disease and (b) with asbestos-related diseases relating to pre-1972 exposure, do not suffer adversely from the collapse of Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited. [148916]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answers 29 January 2001]: The Government understand the concern of those suffering from asbestos-related disease as a consequence of employment in firms whose employees' liability insurance is provided by Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited.

As a consequence of the insolvency of Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited, provisional liquidators were appointed on 10 January 2001. At a meeting on 5 February a scheme of arrangement was agreed by creditors.

The Government expect the Policyholders Protection Board to work closely with the provisional liquidators and others to ensure claims are processed promptly; and that the PPB will ensure the provisions of the Policyholders Protection Act 1975 are implemented fully.

HM Treasury is monitoring the position by keeping in close touch with other Departments, the Policyholders Protection Board, the FSA and relevant parts of the financial services industry.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what role his Department played in the restructuring of the Iron Trades Employers Association and the transfer of asbestos-related risks to Chester Street Insurance Holdings in 1989; [148914]

(2) if he will name the regulatory bodies that have been responsible for monitoring the affairs of the Iron Trades Employers Insurance Association Limited and Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited since 1989; and what (a) actions they have taken and (b) reports they have made to him in that time. [149363]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The prudential supervision of insurance companies was the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry until 4 January 1998. On 5 January 1998, these functions transferred to the Treasury. On 1 January 1999, the Financial Services Authority became the prudential supervisor under a contracting-out order.

HM Treasury had no responsibility for the re-organisation of the Iron Trades Insurance Group in 1989 and, as far as I am aware, did not play any part in this.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who will represent the Government at the creditors' meeting of Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited on 5 February to safeguard interests of sufferers from asbestos-related diseases. [148703]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 7 February 2001]: The Government are not creditors and hence were not present at the meeting on 5 February. A representative of the FSA, as prudential supervisor of Chester Street Insurance Holdings Limited, had observer status at the meeting.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenue yield of (a) reducing the value below which inheritance tax is not levied by (i) £10,000 and (ii) £20,000 and (b) restricting the value of the personal allowance to (1) the basic rate and (2) 10 per cent. [146250]

Dawn Primarolo: The revenue yield from reducing the value above which inheritance tax would otherwise be levied can be estimated, for increases or decreases of this order of magnitude, from Table 5 of the Tax Ready Reckoner. The Tax Ready Reckoner, November 2000, is in the House of Commons Library.

There is no personal allowance for inheritance tax but the cost of the threshold, below which no tax is paid, is given in Table 7 of the Tax Ready Reckoner.

All-employee Share Ownership Scheme

Helen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies have taken up the new all-employee share ownership scheme; and if he will make a statement. [150095]

Mr. Timms: The all-employee share ownership plan was introduced last year when Royal Assent was given to the Finance Bill 2000. Companies have been going live with their plans since September 2000.

In the first six months, 262 companies have sent in plans to the Inland Revenue.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 8 February 2000, Official Report, column 681W, if items described as Government spending can simultaneously be described as Government investment. [150186]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government's main measure of public expenditure is Total Managed Expenditure (TME). TME is described in chapters 1 and 4 of Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis 2000–01 (Cm 4601).

Opposition Policies (Costings)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 24 January 2001, Official Report, columns 647–48W, on opposition policies, (1) on what occasions the Treasury has initiated such costings; and if he will make a statement; [147952]

(2) on what occasions since January 2000 the Treasury has been consulted by other departments on the costings of opposition party policies. [147953]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 24 January. The Treasury and other Departments have from time to time costed Opposition policies, and this will have involved discussions between the Treasury and other Departments. The procedure followed is consistent with the principles and practice established by previous Administrations.

CABINET OFFICE

Correspondence

3. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress her office has made in encouraging Ministers to reply to letters from hon. Members more quickly. [148767]

Mr. Stringer: All Departments are working hard to improve their handling of hon. Members' correspondence. We are currently collating information on the performance of Departments during the 2000 calendar year and will report back to the House in due course.

Drugs (Young People)

10. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on her Department's response to recent developments in drugs misuse among young people. [148774]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government's Anti-Drugs Strategy has set a challenging target of halving the numbers of young people using illegal drugs by 2008, and we will back this by increasing spending in this area to £120 million by 2003–04.

In south Cheshire, research from John Moores University on young people's drug use in the area is under way, which will provide a local baseline and identify gaps in provision.

Public Sector Team

11. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the work of the public sector team. [148775]

Mr. Stringer: The public sector team was set up within the Cabinet Offices's Regulatory Impact Unit in November 1999. Its broad remit is to reduce bureaucracy and red tape in the public sector.

In little over a year the team has, in partnership with relevant Government Departments and other stakeholders, taken action to reduce the paperwork burden on the police and head teachers. The estimated savings are 187,000 hours of police time every year, which is equivalent to 100 police officers' standard working hours—employing that many additional officers would cost around £5.5 million; and 4.5 million hours per year across the whole schools system. This equates to over 200 hours every year for a typical school.

The team will shortly be publishing the interim outcomes of its project on reducing GP paperwork.

Drugs Trade

13. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she has met Government Ministers from south American countries to co-ordinate international anti-drug policies. [148778]

Marjorie Mowlam: The United Kingdom is active throughout Latin America in supporting the efforts that countries there are making to combat drugs and poverty.

Last year I visited Colombia and Brazil where I discussed with the Presidents of both countries how we can help in addressing the problems of illicit drug production and trafficking in these countries.

The UK also plays an active role in the EU/Latin America/Caribbean Action Plan on Drugs and Co-ordination and Co-operation Mechanism.

17. Helen Jones: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress is being made in international efforts to combat the drugs trade. [148785]

Marjorie Mowlam: The UK is active in international forums, including the UN, G8 and EU, to strengthen the global framework for tackling illicit drugs trafficking. In the year 2000 we were the third largest donor to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme. Ministers and the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator have also been active in supporting anti-drugs efforts in some of the countries which have the most serious problems with the production or transit of illegal drugs.

Progress is being seen in increased seizures of heroin and cocaine en-route to the UK/EU, and increased disruption of criminal groups involved in trafficking.

Drug Use

14. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what new steps are under consideration in the Government's campaign to combat drug misuse. [148781]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government's future proposals for tackling drug misuse are outlined in the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator's second national plan, published last year.

Measures include:

Internationally:

to support international partners by disrupting production and trafficking of illegal drugs to reduce the availability of controlled drugs entering the UK to establish the National Treatment Agency from 1 April 2001 to ensure delivery of high quality treatment services across the country from spring 2001 to pilot three sites for extending drug testing across the criminal justice system to complement the existing Arrest Referral Schemes and Drug Treatment and Testing Orders.

Nationally:

Locally:

we are reorganising the Drug Action Teams (DATs) in England to align with local authority boundaries.

The drugs strategy is underpinned by forward expenditure of up to £1 billion by 2003–04 as part of the Spending Review 2000.

16. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the progress of the Government's anti-drugs policy. [148784]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator published his annual report for 1999–2000 on 7 November 2000.

The report shows that we are making progress towards meeting the challenging targets we have set as part of our 10-year anti-drugs strategy. Most of our annual targets were met in full and we are on track to deliver published targets for 2002.

On the Wirral there have been considerable improvements in the treatment services available to drug users, including a significant reduction in waiting lists for treatment. In recent months a needs assessment of the need of young people has been completed and a plan of action is being developed to meet the gaps in provision identified in the report. People needing advice and other assistance because of their drug use are likely to approach the Response Service based in Birkenhead, Wirral Drug Services, which includes a specialist service for young people and/or the Wirral Solvent Misuse Project.

23. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the progress of the Government's anti-drugs policy. [148792]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator published his annual report for 1999–2000 on 7 November 2000.

The report shows that we are making progress towards meeting the challenging targets we have set as part our 10-year anti-drugs strategy. Most of our annual targets were met in full and we are on track to deliver published targets for 2002.

Within the Cleethorpes area, a number of initiatives are in place which address the needs of young people and drug misuse. These include training programmes for professionals working with young people; advice and information offered as part of a 'Nightclub' project; and a young people's conference to address drugs issues.

24. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the impact of the Government's national drugs strategy has been in (a) Slough and (b) other towns on the periphery of London. [148793]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We are making good progress nationwide in all areas of the Government's anti-drugs strategy as reported in the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator's annual report for 1999–2000, published on 7 November 2000. Effective delivery of the straegy at local level is essential if we are to succeed. In support of this, we are realigning Drug Action Teams along local authority boundaries. This means that Slough now has its own DAT. This should help address local priorities such as outreach services for young misuses; and develop better links with other outer-London Boroughs, which are far more similar in terms of drug and social exclusion issues, than the majority of Berkshire.

Commonwealth Games

15. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Mnister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the progress on the non-sport programme for the Commonwealth games in 2002. [148783]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There are two key non-sporting initiatives associated with the Manchester 2002 Games—the Volunteer Programme and the nationwide Spirit of Friendship Festival. Good progress is being made on both.

The Spirit of Friendship Festival has appointed a national director, Jo Hartley, to work with all relevant agencies to deliver a successful nationwide festival of education, sport and culture.

The Festival will embrace the modern Commonwealth's values of fairness and inclusivity and engage the nation from its start on Commonwealth Day, 11 March 2002, until 10 August 2002.

The volunteer programme is also well under way with plans for the recruitment of 15,000 volunteers in place and recruitment generally beginning in May.

Drug Rehabilitation Programmes

25. Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much has been allocated for anti-drug treatment services in each of the next three years. [148794]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government recognise that treatment services can have a vital role in reducing the damaging effects of drug abuse on a person's health as well as reducing crime and anti-social behaviour.

Through the spending review we have allocated an additional £167 million for drug treatment services over three years from 2001–02. The table gives the breakdown of spending in each of the next three years.

	Drug treatment (£ million)
2000–01	234
2001–02	328
2002–03	377
2003–04	401

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment she has made of the impact on South Ribble of her Department's policy to improve access to drug rehabilitation programmes. [148773]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Arrest Referral Programme for South Ribble has been implemented since August 2000. Between August 2000 and January 2001 a total of 230 individuals have been referred to local services under the Programme.

Chorley and South Ribble District Drug Service offer access to rehabilitation, and the South Ribble Drug Action Group is now in the process of implementing a treatment programme. The money made available from the last spending review will increase service capacity, GP shared care and child-specific services within the area.

People's Panel

18. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what policy initiatives of her Department have been tested on the people's panel; and with what result. [148786]

Mr. Stringer: The People's Panel is directed towards service delivery more than policy questions. But research has been used to inform various policy initiatives. Within the Cabinet Office it has contributed to the following:

Consumer Focus for Public Services

The fifth wave of research, published in September 2000, was carried out to support the consumer focus for public services initiative by establishing a baseline for public satisfaction and expectations of public services in different sectors.

Policy in Deprived Areas

The Social Exclusion Unit in the Cabinet Office commissioned a re-analysis of data from the first wave of research to examine responses from people living in deprived areas, to determine how they differed from those living in other areas. The results were also published in September 2000.

Public service provision and ethnic minority communities:

In June 2000, the results of a first wave of research with the recruitment of an ethnic minority booster to the Panel were published. These show what people from ethnic minority communities think of the services they receive and how their opinions differ across and between different ethnic minority groups. Future research will be used by Government to help improve services.

Extended Hours Provision of Public Services

Research carried out in 1999 asked which out-of-hours services people wanted access to; what sort of business they would use them for; when they would want to be able to make contact; and how. The results were published in April 2000. "Making it happen: public services at your convenience" was published in September 2000 showing how the five key services (non-emergency services in NHS hospitals, GP surgeries, social services, the Passport Agency, and local government services) identified in the research were making service hours more convenient for their customers.

Notifying Change of Address On-line

In January 1999, the Panel was used to assess reactions to a proposal for enabling electronic notification of change of address details to be passed to Government Departments in one transaction. Panel members joined workshops testing out the technology. The results were published in April 2000. In November 2000, a pilot change of address service was developed on the UK online citizen portal www.ukonline.gov.uk which allows people to send new address details to participating Government Departments, as well as those utility and other commercial organisations offered by the change of address providers.

Listening to Women

During January and February 1999, the People's Panel was used as part of the Listening to Women exercise which, among other things, has been used to inform and influence Government Departments on the needs of women as decisions have been taken to modernise public services.

Modernising Government

In February 1999, the People's Panel was used to find out about the experiences of citizens using public services to evaluate how well Departments and agencies work together to deliver a joined-up service, and identify suggestions for improvement. The work was commissioned as part of the research for the Modernising Government White Paper.

Access Pages

Research was carried out in August 1999 to help the Cabinet Office prepare a new directory that brings together information for the main Government helplines and websites. The directory was published in October 1999.

Internet

19. Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what her policy is regarding the provision of Government internet services in languages other than English. [148787]

Mr. Stringer: My policy is that Departments must fulfil their obligations under the Welsh Language Act 1993, and our "Guidelines for Government Websites" make that very clear.

I have always made it clear to Departments that I expect them to publish, where effective, in other languages spoken in the UK.

I am pleased to confirm that the newly revised "Guidelines to Government Websites" is clarifying this policy.

Special Advisers

20. Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what guidance she has issued to Government Departments relating to the duties of special advisers and press officers. [148789]

Marjorie Mowlam: The duties of special advisers are set out in the "Model Contract for Special Advisers". The duties of Government press officers are set out in "Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service" and "The GICS Handbook".

Copies of these documents are in the Library of the House.

22. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what criteria determine the number of special advisers Government Departments may appoint. [148791]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government's response to the Sixth Report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life, published in July 2000 (Cm 4807), sets out the Government's policy on the appointment of special advisers.

Policy Presentation

21. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent initiatives her Department has introduced to co-ordinate the presentation of Government policy. [148790]

Marjorie Mowlam: My Department has several initiatives in place to co-ordinate the presentation of Government policy.

The first is the appointment of communications advisers who work alongside policy officials on the development of cross-government initiatives. They ensure that the communication of Government policy is considered from the outset and that clear information and explanations are provided for the public.

My Department is also responsible for the News Co-ordination Centre. The NCC has two functions. The first is to co-ordinate the Government's media handling during major crises such as last year's floods.

It also has a role in ensuring that for major announcements proper attention is given to the regional media. This is done by means of regional announcements and ministerial visits.

DEFENCE

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure was in his Department for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000 and what the planned expenditure and breakdown of expenditure for 2000–01 is on (i) public opinion research, (ii) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (iii) direct mail. [149261]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 8 February 2001]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 20 June 2000, Official Report, column 135W, to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) on a similar subject. The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, excluding recruitment costs, the table gives details of expenditure against areas identified.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals there are to amend his Department's Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01. [151190]

Mr. Hoon: The Government have decided that, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class VI Vote 1 Defence for 2000–01, the following change should apply:

the Ministry of Defence Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £781.341 million from £22,820.341 million to £23,601.683 million.

This will cover additional expenditure incurred by UK forces on operations in Kosovo and Bosnia during the current financial year of £220 million and £100 million respectively and Sierra Leone at just under £8 million. The figure also includes full take-up of the Ministry of Defence's entitlement to end year flexibility of £241 million plus additional funding from the 2000 spending review (£200 million) and for capital and civil service modernisation (£10 million). There are also a number of transfers between MOD, DETR, DfEE, FCO and Cabinet Office.

The Supplementary Estimates will also provide for changes in the general pattern of expenditure, including adjustments between the Defence Procurement Agency's equipment programme and operating costs programmes.

As the increase in the defence expenditure limit will be met from the reserve, it will not add to the planned total of public expenditure in the current year.

Defence Medical Services

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving medical officers in each specialty are not fully fit for deployment; for what reasons; and if he will make a statement. [149892]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The medical downgrading categorisation system with the armed forces covers a wide range of different levels of medical downgrading. Personnel recorded as medically downgraded may still, therefore, be capable of undertaking their full duties, albeit with restrictions, for example to their geographical location. To give an indication of this, of the 42 Army personnel included in the totals, only seven are assessed to be undeployable. Against this background, the number of medical officers, including trainees, who are medically precluded from unlimited deployment is shown by speciality. The particular nature of medical downgrading could not be provided without disproportionate effort.

Number of medical officers medically precluded from unlimited deployment

Specialty	Number
Anaesthetics	7
General Medicine	5
Orthodontics	1
Paediatrics	1
Psychiatry	7
Occupational Medicine	10
General Duties Medical Officers	2
General Practice	29
Genito-Urinary Medicine	1
General Surgery	3
Rheumatology and Rehabilitation	1
Public Health Medicine	1
Pathology	1
House Officers	7

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military medical posts in each of the specialties in defence of secondary care are filled by civilian doctors; what percentage of the establishment figure for each specialty this represents; and if he will make a statement. [149893]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 13 February 2001]: I will write to the right hon. and learned Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Chinook Crash

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many helicopters, broken down by type, other than Chinooks, were stationed in Northern Ireland in May and June 1994; and where they were based; [150405]

(2) what other helicopters were available at the base in Northern Ireland from which Chinook DZ 576 departed on its last flight on 2 June 1994; how many of each type there were; and how many passengers each type could have transported from RAF Aldergrove to the destination of ZD 576. [150407]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: Figures for the number of helicopters stationed in Northern Ireland in May and June 1994 are no longer held. However, details of the notional number of helicopters available for tasking in December 1994 are shown. Notional numbers of helicopters available for tasking in May and June 1994 would have been very similar. Figures for the number of passengers which each aircraft can transport are also shown.

11 Gazelle (2 passengers)

7 Lynx (9 passengers)

2 Sea Kings (17 passengers)

7 Wessex (6 passengers)

7 Puma (12 passengers).

Gazelle and Wessex helicopters would need to refuel during a sortie from RAF Aldergrove to Fort George.

All of these aircraft were based at RAF Aldergrove except for the following:

Armagh—2 Lynx

Belfast—1 Gazelle

Bessbrook—2 Lynx, 1 Puma, 1 Sea King

Dungannon—1 Wessex

Omagh—1 Gazelle, 1 Puma, 1 Wessex

Portadown—1 Gazelle.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance was given to his Department by the Boeing company in investigating the crash of helicopter ZD 576. [150408]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: The air frame manufacturers, Boeing Helicopters, provided on site assistance to the Air Accidents Investigation Branch Inspector. Subsequently, between June and December 1994 Boeing also provided extensive assistance with the investigation of the wreckage while it was laid out at DRA Farnborough and further specific assistance was provided on items returned to Boeing Helicopters Philadelphia for examination and testing.

The RAF Board of Inquiry into the accident consulted Boeing and obtained computer simulations of possible flight paths and associated data concerning flight control parameters.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the sound levels in decibels are inside the passenger area of a Chinook helicopter. [150402]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: The noise in the passenger cabin of a Chinook Mk1 aircraft was measured over a series of 25 sorties during August 1993 and the mean levels were 103.5 decibels and 87.8 decibels. Such measurements are not available for the Chinook Mk2 aircraft, but would not be significantly different.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the passengers who were killed in the Chinook helicopter crash on the Mull of Kintyre travelled by aircraft to the base from which they departed in Chinook ZD 576; [150404]

(2) on how many occasions Flight Lieutenants (a) Cook and (b) Tapper had flown helicopters and of what types over or adjacent to the Mull of Kintyre between 1 June 1993 and 2 June 1994. [150406]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: The details requested in these two questions are not known.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Chinook helicopters were flown (a) into and (b) out of Northern Ireland on 2 June 1994; and what their flight times and routes were. [150410]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: No Chinook helicopters flew into Northern Ireland on 2 June 1994. One flew out, that being Chinook ZD 576 which left RAF Aldergrove at 17.42 hours, en route to Fort George.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) (a) when, (b) where and (c) by whom helicopter ZD 576 was fitted with FADEC; and when the aircraft (i) entered service with the armed forces and (ii) was built; [150414]

(2) if he will list the way points of the flight of Chinook helicopter ZD 576 on 2 June 1994, indicating the altitude which the aircraft was supposed to maintain between each way point. [150412]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long tasking records of helicopter flights are normally retained; in what form they are stored; how long they are retained in the case of an accident; and if the tasking records of the last flight of helicopter ZD 576 have been retained. [150409]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: Tasking forms recording helicopter flights in Northern Ireland are retained for six years. However in the case of an accident the relevant tasking record for the day it occurred will normally be held as part of the Board of Inquiry papers, for as long as it is necessary to retain the latter. The 2 June 1994 tasking record for Chinook ZD 576 is still retained with the RAF Board of Inquiry report.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and which Chinook helicopters were stationed in Northern Ireland in the months of May and June 1994; and from which bases they operated. [150403]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: At that time two Chinook helicopters were detached to Northern Ireland. In May 1994 these were Mk1s until 31 May when ZD 576, the first Chinook Mk2 to operate in Northern Ireland, was delivered to RAF Aldergrove, and one of the Mk1s was flown back to RAF Odiham. All the Chinook aircraft in Northern Ireland operate out of RAF Aldergrove and return there at the end of the day's tasking.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when it was decided, and by whom, that Chinook helicopter ZD 576 would be used on the flight on which it crashed on 2 June 1994. [150411]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: The flight was tasked by the Joint Air Tasking Operations Centre (JATOC) in Northern Ireland on 1 June 1994.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), of 5 February 2001, Official Report, column 358W, what steps have been taken to recover the depleted uranium munitions test-fired into the Adriatic Sea. [149649]

Mr. Spellar: The Royal Navy uses depleted uranium (DU) in its Phalanx close-in weapon systems fitted to some ships for anti-missile and aircraft defence. Each round contains only a small quantity of DU. We know from our monitoring of substantial quantities of DU fired into the Solway Firth over many years that this has no detectable impact on uranium levels in sediment or marine life. There are significant amounts of natural uranium in seawater, and the firing of a few Phalanx rounds containing small quantities of DU will have minimal impact on the marine environment of the Adriatic.

Malaria

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what medical advice was given to members of the armed forces deployed on Operation Palliser prior to deployment regarding the risks of malaria; what anti-malarial protection precautions were taken with regard to armed forces kit and equipment for Operation Palliser (a) before deployment and (b) in theatre; and if he will make a statement. [149178]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department maintains sufficient supplies of anti-malarial and other drugs to provide maximum protection for members of the armed forces who might be deployed at short notice. [149889]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 12 February 2001]: The Medical Supplies Agency (MSA) has arrangements in place for the provision of medical supplies in support of operations, across a wide range of contingencies. These arrangements include stock held by the MSA and stock held by private vendor contractors that can be made available at short notice (within 24 hours). There have been occasional problems with some vaccines that have a limited shelf life. Last year, for example, there was a national shortage of Yellow Fever vaccine. Despite this, MSA procurement staff were able to put in place arrangements to meet operational requirements.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy not to send UK forces into tropical areas if they are not adequately protected against malaria and other tropical diseases. [150214]

Dr. Moonie: Medical issues are taken into account during the process of planning for any deployment of UK forces. It is our policy to provide all reasonable protective measures to prevent malaria and other infectious diseases, which troops might be exposed to during an overseas deployment to the tropics.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many press releases were issued by his Department in the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000; how many have been issued in the current financial year; and what his estimate is of the total number for the current financial year. [149252]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The number of press releases issued by the Ministry of Defence between the financial years 1996 to 2000 are indicated in the table:

Ministry of Defence press releases

	Number issued
April 1996-March 1997	239
April 1998-March 1998	384
April 1998-March 1999	315
April 1999-March 2000	362

Between April 2000 to January 2001 the MOD issued a total of 266 press releases. The current rate of issue is expected to continue to the end of the current financial year.

Far East Prisoners of War

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for children of far east internees to receive compensation in cases where neither parent is alive. [150099]

Dr. Moonie: The ex gratia payment scheme, which I announced in the House on 7 November 2000, Official Report, columns 159–70, is for the surviving members of the British groups who were held prisoner by the Japanese during the Second World War. Where a person who would have been eligible for the scheme has died, his or her surviving spouse is entitled to receive it instead. The children of former prisoners are not eligible for the scheme unless they were themselves interned by the Japanese.

RAF Fylingdales

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many US military personnel have been stationed at RAF Fylingdales for each of the last three years. [150474]

Mr. Hoon: One.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the costs to the United Kingdom of installing National Missile Defence facilities at RAF Fylingdales. [150478]

Mr. Hoon: None. Any estimate would be made in light of a request from the United States to install facilities at RAF Fylingdales. No such request has been received.

Warcop Common

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions on access to Warcop will result from his Department's plan to buy out the commoners. [150267]

Dr. Moonie: The proposals will lead to some restrictions but greater certainty of access. Mondays would be lost, but there would be guaranteed access on 12 non-firing weekends programmed across the year, linked where possible to public holidays. Furthermore, access will be available each Sunday from 13.00 hours. It is also intended to create new routes in the locality. The proposals are still being developed in discussion with English Nature, the Countryside Agency and local representatives of user groups such as the Rambler's Association.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how many days a year his Department closes its land at Warcop for grouse shooting. [150268]

Dr. Moonie: None. Grouse shooting takes place only when the ranges are closed for maintenance.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how often grouse shooting at Warcop prevents MOD training. [150269]

Dr. Moonie: Grouse shooting at Warcop does not, and never has, prevented the Army from training there.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary Vessels (Rosyth)

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed refit and repair work for Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels, with particular reference to the share of this work, that will be allocated to Rosyth dockyard. [150120]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Warwick University

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions (a) he and (b) his officials have had with the University of Warwick regarding the university's requirement that students own or lease a computer as a condition of entrance; and what assessment he has made of the implications for the take up of courses of this policy. [150534]

Mr. Wicks: No discussions have taken place with the University of Warwick about this matter. The Department has, however, received a copy of the University's consultation document on their proposed e-strategy and has been invited to comment. The Government have made it clear, in regulations and guidance issued to higher education institutions in August 1999, what charges may be levied without breaching the proscription on top-up fees.

Cheshire and Halton LEAs

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the average expenditure per pupil in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in (a) Halton and (b) Cheshire local education authorities in (1) 1997–98, (2) 1998–99 and (3) 1999–2000; and what the amount is for 2000–01. [148847]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 14 February 2001]: The following table sets out the overall resources per pupil made available to Halton and Cheshire local education authorities for compulsory primary and secondary education, in both cash and real terms.

Standard spending assessment and special/specific grants[1]

[2] Notional figures assuming an apportionment, in accordance with post April 1998 local government re-organisation

Under this Government, funding per pupil has already increased by over £300 nationally in real terms, and it will increase by a further £150 per pupil for 2001–02. Under the last Government, funding per pupil fell by £60 in real terms between 1994–95 and 1997–98. There will be further increases in funding following the year 2000 spending review, a further £370 per pupil over the three-year period, taking the total increase to nearly £700 between 1997–98 and 2003–04. The following table shows the average net institutional expenditure per pupil in pre-primary/primary and secondary schools in Halton and Cheshire, for the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99, the latest year for which this information is currently available. These figures are not comparable with the funding figures above. They cover school based outturn expenditure, but not the cost of meals, or of centrally run activities such as home to school transport and certain special educational needs services.

Halton local education authority became a local education authority from April 1998. The figures shown here for 1997–98 are for Cheshire prior to the reorganisation.

North Southwark Education Action Zone

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what reasons underlay the delay in presenting the North Southwark Education Action Zone account for 1998–99 to Parliament. [150350]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 13 February 2001]: Zone accounts are laid before Parliament by the National Audit Office (NAO) once they are satisfied that they can give a full opinion. The NAO found that North Southwark EAZ had difficulty in providing evidence to support some zone transactions and needed to strengthen financial controls. Once these issues had been successfully resolved the accounts were laid before Parliament.

Student Debt

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average value is of the debt owed by a student leaving university. [150422]

Mr. Wicks: The average debt of a borrower with a mortgage-style student loan entering repayment at the start of the financial year 1999–2000, the latest date for which data are available, was £3,210.

Information on private sector debt such as overdrafts and other commercial loans is not available centrally.

New Deal (Over-50s)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people aged over 50 years in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside and (b) the city of York are eligible to apply for the New Deal for the over 50s. [149448]

Ms Jowell: At December 2000, 7,565 JSA recipients in the Employment Service region of Yorkshire and the Humber, and 105 people in the unitary authority area of York, were eligible for New Deal 50 plus. It is not possible to provide figures for eligible people in receipt of non-JSA benefits.

School Funding (Copeland)

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list the additional resources he has made available to schools in Copeland; under which (a) schemes and (b) funds they are provided; and if he will make a statement; [149173]

(2) if he will estimate the cash resources to be paid directly to Copeland schools in 2001–02 on the basis of his proposals in the pre-Budget report; and if he will list the schools to benefit, giving the sum in each case. [149296]

Ms Estelle Morris: Most funding for schools is distributed via local education authorities. Many funding allocations can be given only at local education authority level, not constituency level. Listed are the Department's funding allocations for education in Cumbria for each year since 1996–97. The figures for 2000–01 are the total grants currently estimated to be paid.

Schools in the Copeland constituency received £462,000 School Standards Grant (SSG) in 2000–01, with an estimated SSG of £860,000 for Copeland schools in 2001–02. Final allocations for 2001–02 will depend on pupil numbers as reported in the Annual Schools Census.

The table shows the schools in the Copeland constituency which have benefited from investment through the New Deal for Schools programme which commenced in 1997–98. This is the only constituency level information for capital expenditure which is readily available. These allocations formed part of the £10.877 million investment made so far in schools in Cumbria under the New Deal for Schools programme, and are included in the total schools capital funding allocations for Cumbria already listed.

[1] Denotes total allocation made to all projects

Under this Government, funding per pupil has already increased by over £3,000 in real terms, and it will increase by a further £150 per pupil for 2001–02. Under the last Government, funding per pupil fell by £60 in real terms between 1994–95 and 1997–98. There will be further increases in funding following the year 2000 spending review: a further £370 per pupil over the three year period, taking the total increase to nearly £700 between 1997–98 and 2003–04.

Learning and Skills Councils

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students he has appointed to Learning and Skills Councils. [148982]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 7 February 2001]: The information requested is not available as applicants for positions with the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) and the local LSCs were not asked to declare whether they are currently or have been students.

However, we recognise that to be successful, the LSC must be fully responsive to the needs of learners and potential learners. Learning Partnerships are already charged with ensuring that consultative mechanisms are in place to capture and articulate the views and opinions of young and adult learners, and feed these back to the LSC.

The LSC itself is also considering what further mechanisms it needs to put in place at national and local levels to ensure that young people are effectively engaged in the new arrangements, and to advise on young people's learning needs and expectations.

Newly Qualified Teachers

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many newly qualified teachers employed in (a) the primary and (b) the secondary sector, have left their posts within (i) one year, (ii) two years and (ii) three years in each of the past five years, broken down in the case of secondary school teachers by the subject of their qualification. [147636]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 29 January 2001]: The number of leavers in each year as a proportion of the appropriate cohort of new entrants has remained reasonably constant throughout the five year period and the proportion of leavers from the overall number of teachers in service fell in 1998–99.

New full-time and part-time qualified teachers from the nursery, primary and secondary schools sector in England who left the maintained schools sector in their first three years, and all leavers, are as follows.

Leavers 1994–95

	Less than 1 year[1,2]	One but less than 2 years[2]	Two but less than 3 years[2]	All leavers[3]

[2] Excludes those who left but returned to service within the same financial year.
[3] All full-time and part-time qualified teachers from the nursery, primary and secondary schools sector in England who have left teaching or left the maintained schools sector. The figure in brackets is all leavers as a percentage of full and part-time teachers in service at the start of the financial year. Subject of qualification is not available for leavers who qualified before 1985.

The full-time equivalent number of regular teachers in the maintained sector has increased by 6,900 between January 1998 and January 2000.There was a growth of 2,000 in the number of people training to be teachers between 1999–2000 and 2000–01, the first such increase since 1992–93.

From April 2001 new graduate recruits can expect to earn £17,000 a year (up from 6 per cent. from the previous year) and starting salaries in inner London will rise to £20,000 (up 9 per cent. from the previous year).

Employment Service Overheads (New Deal)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which overheads incurred by the Employment Service are attributable to the implementation of the New Deal. [141694]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 11 December 2000]: The Employment Service funding for all New Deals is determined on a marginal cost basis on the assumption that these programmes will be delivered through the existing ES infrastructure of offices and IT. The Employment Service overheads which are attributable to the implementation of the New Deals are therefore those specific costs related to project design; implementation; marketing and publicity and limited refurbishment in some offices for the individual New Deals.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what changes will be made to the Departmental Expenditure Limit and Running Costs Limit for her Department in 2000–01. [151103]

Clare Short: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, for Class VIII, Vote 1: Department for International Development, the Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) for 2000–01 will be increased by £68,000,000 from £2,121,732,000 to £2,189,732,000 for voted expenditure giving a total of voted and non-voted expenditure of £2,827,768,000. The increase is the net effect of:

an increase of £59,000,000 End Year Flexibility from an underspend against the 1998 EC Attributed Aid; an increase of £9,000,000 from the Reserve in respect of humanitarian assistance in response to the earthquake in India.

The increase will be met by a claim on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Housing Investment Programme (Wandsworth)

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much the Government Office for London allocated to Wandsworth Council's housing investment programme for (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02; and if he will make a statement; [148139]

(2) how much the Government Office for London has allocated to Wandsworth council for major repairs (a) through the major repairs allowance for 2001–02 and (b) through the housing investment programme for 2000—01; and if he will make a statement. [148124]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The allocations made to Wandsworth to support the authority's housing capital programmes in 2000–01 and 2001–02 are as follows:

£ million

	2000–01	2001–02
Housing annual capital guidelines	20.592	11.386
Private sector renewal	[1]—	1.500
Disabled facilities grants	0.240	0.237
Total housing investment programmes allocations	20.832	13.123
Major repairs allowance (MRA)	[1]—	14.773
Total	20.832	27.896

[1] Not applicable

The MRA, which was introduced for 2001–02, is ring-fenced for works on council housing. The resources allocated through housing annual capital guidelines provide unhypothecated support for authorities' housing capital programmes which cover expenditure on private sector renewal and support for new provision by housing associations as well as work on council housing.

Allocations made to Wandsworth doubled between 1997–98 and 2001–02.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the special advisers working for him will relinquish their posts on the dissolution of Parliament. [149318]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning appeals were lodged with his Department against decisions of (a) Brentwood council and (b) planning authorities in Essex in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how many such appeals were dismissed by his Department in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [149811]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The provision of information on planning appeals is the responsibility of the planning inspectorate. I have asked the Inspectorate's chief executive, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Eric Pickles, dated 12 February 2001:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about planning appeals in Brentwood and other local authorities in Essex.

Statistics at this level are only available from 1994. The table attached gives the number of appeals received in each year from then and, of those, the number dismissed for Brentwood Council and other planning authorities in Essex.

Planning

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to provide a bias in favour of conservation in future planning legislation. [150026]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Our planning policy guidance note 1 "General Policy and Principles" reflects the Government's commitment to the principles of sustainable development. It advises that a sustainable planning framework should include provision for the nation's economic and social needs while conserving the cultural and natural heritage. Other planning policy guidance notes advise planning authorities on the extent to which they should take conservation issues into account in preparing development plans and in reaching decisions on planning applications. The weight that should be given to conservation issues relative to other material considerations in deciding a planning application is for the planning authority to determine in the first instance and will depend on the circumstances of the particular case.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 23 January 2001, Official Report, column 528W, if he will review the operation of planning legislation with particular reference to the rights of objectors. [150129]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have no immediate plans to change planning laws that would affect the current rights of objectors.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance to local authorities on making public pre-application discussions between planning officers and applicants or their representatives. [150128]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to his previous questions on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 115W.

Arlesey Flood Plain

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning his Department's decision to permit building on the flood plain at Arlesey, Bedfordshire. [149879]

Mr. Raynsford: The original decision to grant outline planning permission was made by a planning inspector. I have therefore asked the planning inspectorate's chief executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Highways Agency (Hindhead)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many properties are owned by the Highways Agency in the Hindhead area. [150303]

Mr. Hill: The Highways Agency currently owns 16 residential properties and one commercial property in the Hindhead area.

Aircraft Noise

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to reduce disturbance from aircraft noise in the Waverley area; what representations he has received from the Quieter Skies Campaign with regard to the situation at Gatwick; and if he will make a statement. [150310]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The Secretary of State regulates noise from operations at Gatwick under section 78 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982. These regulations include night restrictions, noise preferential routes, departures noise limits and operational procedures. They are reviewed as necessary, and we consult widely on any proposals for major change.

My officials have responded to a number of letters and calls from members and supporters of the Quieter Skies Campaign. My predecessor, the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin), responded to points the right hon. lady raised on behalf of QSC in the Adjournment debate on 11 January last year, and in correspondence. More recently, on 1 February, officials attended a noise and track seminar organised by Gatwick Airport, at which Mr. John Burgess of QSC gave a presentation on the campaign's concerns, and I understand that a constructive discussion ensued.

Traffic

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many lorries used major roads in (a) north-west England and (b) Merseyside on the most recent date for which figures are suitable. [150181]

Mr. Hill: The average daily flow of heavy goods vehicles on major roads in the north-west region in 1999 was about 1,700. The equivalent figure for the Merseyside region was 1,430.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the change in traffic speed on the trunk road network in the north-west of England over the last 12 months. [150092]

Mr. Hill: No systematic survey of trunk road speeds has been carried out over the past 12 months and it is not therefore possible to provide the information requested.

A national survey of trunk road speeds was last carried out in 1998. The DETR publication, "Traffic Speeds on English Trunk Road: 1998", reported an overall reduction in speeds on the network, including the north-west, since a previous survey in 1995.

The next survey is due to be undertaken this summer 2001 and results will become available in winter 2001. This will allow comparison of average speed in 2001 with those previously observed in 1998. It should be noted that the survey allows comparison of average speeds across the region. Due to the way the speeds are collected, however, the survey does not allow statistically reliable comparison at the detailed level of individual junctions on the network.

Car Ownership

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the percentage of householders on Merseyside who own and use (a) a car and (b) more than one car. [150132]

Mr. Hill: Averaged over the period 1997–98 to 1999–2000, (a) 71 per cent. of households in the north-west have access to one or more cars, and (b) 27 per cent. have access to more than one car.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the average expenditure on cars by households in Merseyside was in (a) 1999 and (b) 2000. [150094]

Mr. Hill: The average expenditure on motoring per car per week for people living in the north-west region was £51.10, averaged over the period 1979–98 to 1999–2000. Data are not available for Merseyside, or for single years, because of small sample sizes.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the value of the area cost adjustment, in calculating the education Standard Spending Assessment, for each local education authority in England; [150189]

(2) pursuant to the answers of 8 February 2001, Official Report, columns 646–47W, how many and what proportion of (a) children of lone parents and (b) children of Income Support and income based Job Seeker's Allowance claimants are used in the education SSA calculation for local authorities in England; [150299]

(3) pursuant to the answers of 8 February 2001, Official Report, columns 646–47W, what ethnicity indicator was used in the education SSA calculation, for local authorities in England. [150298]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information has been placed in the library.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answers of 8 February 2001, Official

Report, columns 646–47W, which service provision costs are higher in London and the south-east than in Worcestershire. [150300]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The higher cost of service provision in London and the south-east are reflected in the area cost adjustment, which takes into account the higher employment costs and rate costs there compared to the rest of the country, including Worcestershire.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the SSA per head of population for Cambridgeshire, expressed in real terms, for each year since 1990–91. [150802]

Ms Beverley Hughes: SSA per head figures for the old county council, the new county council and the unitary authority of Peterborough, in real terms, are as follows:

SSA per head (in real terms)

	Cambridgeshire
Year	(Old)	(New)	Peterborough
1990–91	639.66	—	—
1991–92	705.04	—	—
1992–93	724.13	—	—
1993–94	662.30	—	—
1994–95	677.27	—	—
1995–96	623.54	—	—
1996–97	634.57	—	—
1997–98	619.26	—	—
1998–99	—	586.50	874.07
1999–2000	—	594.58	893.25
2001–02	—	608.21	939.64

There are a number of discontinuities in the figures. The most important changes are the transfer of funding of colleges of further education and sixth-form colleges from local authorities to the Further Education Funding Council on 1 April 1993, the transfer of policing responsibilities from county councils to the new police authorities on 1 April 1995 and the establishment of the Peterborough unitary authority on 1 April 1998. The figures for Peterborough cover both lower and upper tier services; in the remainder of Cambridgeshire lower tier services are provided by the district councils.

Higher Education (Access)

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information he received on the contents of the Education and Employment Committee's report on access to higher education, and the proceedings of the Committee prior to the publication of the report. [150053]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 12 February 2001]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment, my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, North (Mr. Wicks), on 14 February 2001, Official Report, column 162W.

Road Safety and Cycling

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's policies to promote (a) cycling and (b) road safety. [150317]

Mr. Hill: The Government are committed to tripling the number of cycling trips from a 2,000 base by 2010 and quadrupling them from a 1996 base by 2012. £8.4 billion of Government funding has been provided to local authorities in the recent local transport settlement. This will help to promote sustainable transport measures, including cycling. The cycling strategies included in the authorities' local transport plans (LTPs) should identify gaps in the local cycle network and improvements to the cycling infrastructure. Initial monitoring suggests that the strategies will result in considerable additional provision for cycling.

We have taken the initiative in marketing the main messages of the national cycling strategy. Early outcomes are the launch of an NCS website, development of a promotional video and, during spring 2001, a number of cycling seminars throughout England aimed at local authorities, major employers and health and education practitioners.

We set out our policies for pursuing the Government's road safety strategy in "Tomorrow's Roads—Safer for Everyone", which was launched on 1 March last year. It sets a new target to reduce the number of people killed and seriously injured on the roads by 40 per cent. by the year 2010, a separate target of 50 per cent. for children, and a 10 per cent. reduction in the slight casualty rate.

Special measures for cyclists are detailed in chapters two and nine of the strategy, but measures described elsewhere, particularly on driver training, will be to their benefit.

Copies of "Tomorrow's Roads—Safer for Everyone" are in the Library and the Vote Office.

Greenbelt Land

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning applications for developments involving the loss of green belt land were (a) notified to him and (b) called in for his own decision in each year since 1992. [150198]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mobile Phone Base Stations

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the revised guidelines governing the planning process for mobile phone base stations will be published. [150180]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The consultation exercise seeking views on possible changes to the planning laws relating to mobile phone masts and associated guidance ended on 31 October 2000. The Department is currently analysing the responses. We shall announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations have been received in response to his Department's consultation on the scope of possible changes to the planning process for mobile phone base stations. [150179]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In response to the recent consultation exercise seeking views on possible changes to the planning laws relating to telecommunications masts and associated guidance my Department received 365 responses from hon. Members, members of the public, local authorities, mobile phone companies and associated businesses, and other interested organisations.

Policy and Strategy Units

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his policy strategy integration division was established; which of its reports are placed in the public domain; how many departmental or non-departmental special advisers participate in its work; how many regular (a) non-departmental and (b) departmental staff participate in its work; and how many of these work for the unit on a full-time basis. [150363]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The policy strategy integration division was established in September 1998. It presently has a full-time staff of seven, including one secondee from a local authority and one agency secretary. No special advisers participate in its work. The aim of the division is to facilitate a cross-cutting approach to issues which span policy areas, both within DETR and between DETR and others, rather than to produce reports. It has, however, led a review of the organisation of transport safety, and an account of the consultation and of the review group's analysis was placed in the House Libraries and made available on request. Also in the Libraries is a report which the division prepared on transport links between the UK and Ireland for the British-Irish inter-parliamentary body. A memorandum on DETR's role in relation to public health was co-ordinated by the division and sent to the Health Committee in January this year.

Farm Accidents (Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many accidents occurred on farms in Lancashire involving the (a) death and (b) injury of a (i) farm worker and (ii) member of the public in each year since 1995. [150200]

Mr. Meacher: Injuries on farms in Lancashire as reported to HSE and local authorities:

Petrol

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has commissioned into the factors considered by consumers when choosing whether to buy standard unleaded petrol or low sulphur petrol. [150111]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 13 February 2001]: My Department has not commissioned any specific research into consumer purchasing decisions concerning cleaner specifications of petrol. However, market research by oil companies and consumer organisations—confirmed by the experience of introducing ultra-low sulphur diesel—indicates that most road users will not choose a cleaner specification of fuel if it has a higher retail price then the conventional specification.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what incentives the Government have provided to consumers to buy low sulphur petrol in preference to standard unleaded petrol. [150112]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 13 February 2001]: A 1 p/l fuel duty differential for ultra-low sulphur diesel (ULSP) relative to conventional unleaded petrol was introduced in October 2000. The Chancellor announced in the November 2000 pre-Budget report that this duty differential would be increased to 3 p/l in the 2001 Budget, subject to oil companies ensuring nationwide availability.

Air Transport Policy

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had in the EU about proposals for new taxes on (a) aviation fuel, (b) airport departures and landings and (c) air traffic movements. [150399]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Possible measures to encourage the reduction of emissions from aircraft, including the possibility of a fuel tax, have been discussed in the EU within the last two years. No proposals have been tabled on this, nor have new taxes been proposed on the other aviation activities cited.

Urban Regeneration

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria he will use in determining the selection of urban regeneration companies; and what timetable has been adopted. [150395]

Ms Beverley Hughes: New criteria are being drafted to set out the principles guiding the effective structure and operation of urban regeneration companies (URCs). These criteria have been issued in draft to the regional development agencies (RDAs) and others and will be finalised shortly taking into account comments received. The criteria are based on the lessons identified from the monitoring and evaluation of the three pilot URCs in Liverpool, Manchester and Sheffield. RDAs and their partners will use the criteria and accompanying guidance to consider whether a URC might be appropriate for key regeneration areas within their regions. Proposals for new URCs will be considered by the Department against these criteria. The urban White Paper announced a rolling programme of around 12 new URCs over the next two to three years.

Road Crash Victims

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the organisations to which he gave grants for the support of those killed as a result of road crashes, and the amount per organisation, for each of the last three years for which figures are available; [150560]

(2) if he will list the organisations he gave grants for the support of those injured in road crashes, and the amount per organisation, for each of the last three years for which figures are available. [150561]

Mr. Hill: Section 40 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 gives the Secretary of State for Transport powers to grant-aid bodies, other than local authorities, to promote road safety. The legislation does not provide powers for the Secretary of State to give grants to support those affected by deaths or injuries as a result of road traffic accidents.

Home Energy Efficiency

Paddy Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the extent is of delays for the installation of new central heating systems under the home energy efficiency scheme; what the reasons are for such delays; and if he will make a statement. [150416]

Mr. Meacher: The new home energy efficiency scheme (HEES) for England was launched on 1 June 2000. It is managed by two regional scheme managers who are responsible for marketing the scheme and surveying homes to identify the improvements required. Once these are agreed with the householder, a works order is placed with local contractors. The time taken between the date of survey and the actual installation of gas central heating systems varies across the country, although in most parts it is less than three months.

The reason for the delay is the national shortage of qualified heating engineers which has severely affected the rate at which central heating systems are being installed under HEES. To address the problem, scheme managers both continue to seek additional qualified heating installers and to encourage existing installers to increase the number of installation teams dedicated to HEES.

While these efforts have cut waiting times, the referral-based nature of the scheme means that this period can change rapidly. For example a large number of applications from a locality can substantially increase waiting times in the area. Both scheme managers continue to advise local groups of the period of delay in each area, and to display this information on their websites.

The longer-term solution to the problem is to increase the number of trained gas engineers. In conjunction with Transco plc and the gas industry national training organisation, we have introduced training programmes to provide an additional 400 gas engineers each six months to work under HEES. As these engineers become available, so the present delays should be reduced substantially and the scheme be better able to cope with short-term fluctuations in demand.

Capital Debt (London Boroughs)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, for each London borough, the level of capital debt held for housing purposes. [150548]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Local authorities generally pool their debt across services but are required to calculate a notional credit ceiling for housing for the purposes of maintaining a separate housing revenue account (HRA). The table shows the provisional HRA figures for 2000–01.

Road Accidents

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) fatalities and (b) injuries have been caused by road accidents in the United Kingdom as a result of drivers being under the influence of illegal substances, broken down by each illegal substance used. [150454]

Mr. Hill: There are no reliable statistics available that show the number of fatalities and injuries caused by road accidents as a result of drivers being under the influence of illegal substances. However, we will shortly publish the findings of a 3-year survey into the incidence of drugs in road accident fatalities, which will provide data on this subject.

Wafic Said Business School

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations were received by (a) him and (b) his officials from (i) other Government Ministers and (ii) their officials over (A) his decision and (B) the time scale of his decision, on whether to call in the proposal to build the Wafic Said business school in Oxford. [150360]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Our records include no representations from other Government Ministers or officials about the Wafic Said business school in Oxford.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he has received from the Economic Regulation Group of the Civil Aviation Authority on the economic regulatory regime for the services which will be provided in the Oceanic sector by the National Air Traffic Services Ltd. public-private partnership; and if he will make a statement. [151110]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Air traffic services in Oceanic airspace are provided on a monopoly basis. When the National Air Traffic Services Ltd. public-private partnership is established, charges for these services will be subject to price regulation by the RPI-X method, which is the standard model for monopoly regulation in the United Kingdom. The charge cap, or "X" factor, will be set for a period of five years and will, for the first five year-period only, be set by the Government.

We received advice from the CAA in August, which set out how they proposed to approach the economic regulation of NATS and recommended that the "X" factor for NATS' Oceanic services be set at 10 per cent. for the first year and 2 per cent. for each of the next four years. We have considered the CAA's advice carefully, alongside representations from air users who will pay these charges and from NATS, who have also provided revised estimates of traffic levels and system costs which have a significant effect on the first year of the quinquennium. We have consequently decided to set a cap of 2 per cent. for each of the five years, and that there should be no delay penalty term for the present.

The Government regard investment in the Oceanic sector as important and believe that the approach to charge control should reflect this. We have therefore agreed with the CAA that they should be receptive to any proposals, made with the support of air users, to revisit the price cap when investment is made with a view to significant improvements in the service.

Bus Subsidies

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest round of the rural bus challenge competition and on allocations to local authorities of rural bus subsidy grant for the coming year. [151108]

Mr. Hill: My right hon. Friend will be making an announcement on these matters next week. Copies of the announcement will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Local Authority Publicity

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to lay before Parliament proposed alterations to the code of recommended practice on local authority publicity. [151192]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Following consultation with the Local Government Association, we have today laid before the House a draft of the proposed alterations to the code of recommended practice on local authority publicity. These proposed alterations reflect the new council constitutions and the introduction of referendums and petitions under the Local Government Act 2000.

We also intend in the future to review further the code, having regard to councils' experiences of operating their new constitutions over a reasonable period of time. This further review will also cover the code's application to those authorities—such as police authorities—which are not adopting new constitutions.

Ordnance Survey

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when a quinquennial review of Ordnance Survey will be conducted. [151233]

Ms Beverley Hughes: All executive agencies and non-departmental government bodies are subject to a review of their organisation every five years to examine and recommend the most appropriate organisation for delivering the functions and services currently carried out by the Department.

The last such review of Ordnance Survey reported in 1994 and recommended that Ordnance Survey should continue to deliver its functions and services as an executive agency and Government Department in its own right.

A Quinquennial Review of Ordnance Survey was due to take place in 1999. However, the Secretary of State at that time agreed that the review should be postponed until now to allow for Ordnance Survey's new trading fund status to bed in.

The review of Ordnance Survey commences today and is expected to last for three months. The review team, CMG Admiral, has been appointed following a competitive tendering process. A steering group, chaired by the principal finance officer of my Department, will oversee the review and recommendations will be made to me in due course. I will report back to the House on its findings before the summer recess.

The review process will provide extensive opportunities for consultation with internal and external stakeholders and will follow the procedures recommended in the guidance for the review of executive agencies and non-departmental public bodies published by the Cabinet Office.

Millennium Dome

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has reached a decision on the continuation of the preferred bidder status of Legacy plc. [151234]

Ms Armstrong: Legacy's preferred bidder status gave them exclusive negotiating rights up to 14 February. While their bid has made progress towards meeting the preferred bidder terms, they have not met them. Legacy's exclusivity has therefore expired and the Government have decided to terminate the existing competition.

During the period of Legacy's preferred bidder status, the Government have not sought any alternative proposals for the dome. The Government would now like openly to test the market and will therefore ask English Partnerships to invite any interested parties to lodge with them expressions of interest for the dome and the regeneration of the peninsula. The Government, like the Mayor of London and the London borough of Greenwich, believe the dome should be retained as part of the regenerated peninsula, and offers will be invited on this basis. There have been considerable expressions of interest from other parties, which have been logged by English Partnerships.

Within this framework, Legacy will of course be able to put forward their proposals, which will be fully considered on merit alongside others.

Expressions of interest will be assessed by an advisory team, which will report to English Partnerships. They will shortly publish details of the arrangements and rules for this process.

Railway Bridges

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funding has been made available to Railtrack to repair unsafe railway bridge structures in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [150107]

Mr. Hill: In the past five years, the only grant paid direct to Railtrack was £34 million towards the cost of maintaining level crossings, paid in 1995–96 when the company was still in the public sector. Since its privatisation in 1996, the company has recovered that cost, and other costs including the cost of repairing unsafe railway bridge structures, through access charges paid by passenger train operating companies and freight operating companies. So, although no grant has been paid direct to the company since 1996, its profitability is contingent on public money. Some 90 per cent. of its income is paid to it in access charges, a substantial proportion of which are supported by public money.

Hinduja Brothers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contacts (a) he and (b) his officials had with the Hinduja family and their business associates during his visits to India in March and December 1999. [148509]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 2 February 2001]: My right hon. Friend's visits to India in March and December 1999 promoted Indo-British bilateral relations, business and trade co-operation, and the sharing of experience on environment and urban issues. On both visits my right hon. Friend met the Indian Prime Minister, other Indian Ministers and a number of British and Indian business men and women. This included a courtesy meeting between my right hon. Friend, accompanied by officials, and Messers. G. P. and S. P. Hinduja in Mumbai in March 1999.

Public Relations (Expenditure)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure was in his Department for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000, and what the planned expenditure and breakdown of expenditure for 2000–01 is on (i) public opinion research, (ii) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (iii) direct mail. [149271]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The Department's financial year starts 1 April and runs to 31 March. For each financial year from 1996 the advertising and public opinion research spend are set out. There was no expenditure on direct mail.

[1] planned

The increased expenditure on advertising and research in 1999–2000 results from:

(i) An increase of £3.6 million on the "Are you doing your bit" campaign to help people to take action to protect the environment; and

(ii) £2.9 million spent on a campaign to encourage voting in the Greater London Authority elections.

The increase in planned expenditure in 2000–01 results from:

(i) An additional increase of £2 million on the "Are you doing your bit" campaign; and

(ii) A £4 million increase on the campaign aimed at further reducing deaths and serious injuries on our roads.

Government Initiatives (Pendle)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initiatives embarked upon since May 1997 have benefited Pendle; and if he will make a statement. [149909]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The constituency of Pendle has benefited from a range of Government Initiatives since May 1997, including:

Capital allocations for housing

Year	£ million
1997–98	2.0
1998–99	2.3
1999–2000	2.4

Under the Government's first comprehensive spending review, Pendle received significantly more resources for housing. For the years 1998–99 and 1999–2000 the authority received more than £1.5 million over and above its normal HIP allocation through the capital receipts initiative (when resources distributed under the CRI were identified separately) and in the current year the authority's total allocation rose again by a further 27 per cent. Following the spending review 2000, the amount allocated to the authority for housing next year totals over £3.7 million. This compares to a figure of £2.015 million which had been allocated in 1997–98.

Also in 2000, measures were announced enabling authorities to support the renovation and improvement of private sector housing in a more targeted way. We also announced our intention to proceed with more fundamental reforms to the legislation to give authorities more effective powers to turn around areas of low demand and unpopular housing.

Single Regeneration Budget:

SRB Round 2—The Way Ahead—Pendle

A six-year strategy to arrest decline caused by contraction of the manufacturing industry. The two main themes are for developing business opportunities and developing people. With diversification the aim is to create a stronger, less vulnerable economy. A private sector-led partnership with involvement of the community.

SRB total—£9.3 million (scheme period 1996–97 to 2001–02)

SRB Round 4—Pendle Youth Focus—Kick Start for jobs

A seven-year scheme to tackle low educational attainment and high unemployment among 16–24-year-olds in Pendle by working with local employers to identify skill needs. It will provide dedicated training and assistance in accessing jobs.

SRB total £2.6 million (scheme period 1998–99 to 2004–05)

SRB Round 5—Pendle—Opening Doors, Unlocking Opportunities

This seven-year scheme targets the five most deprived wards in Pendle. It aims to support community capacity building and enterprise, improve skill levels, health and access to jobs.

SRB total—£16 million (scheme period 1999–2000 to 2005–06)

SRB Round 6—The Time is Now for Nelson, Pendle

A seven-year scheme targeting Central Nelson and Brierfield. It aims to support planning housing improvements in Nelson with a package of measures to improve health, reduce crime, improve the local environment and encourage new small business.

SRB total—£12 million (scheme period 2000–01 to 2006–07)

It is not possible to determine exactly how much of these amounts has been spent on the Pendle constituency. The constituency has benefited from Lancashire County Council's integrated transport policies.

European Funding

The East Lancashire Partnership (ELP) comprises representatives interest from the six local authority districts of East Lancashire, including Pendle.

Under the GMLC programme, ELP was allocated some £10.65 million grant (European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) and European Social Fund (ESF)) for a range of business support and vocational training activities. Pendle was a significant beneficiary of this overall resource.

In addition, Pendle was allocated a £5 million ERDF grant for Nelson town centre initiatives.

Community economic development support totalling £1.2 million grant has been allocated for Nelson and the Waterside and Brierfields Wards.

The resources detailed must be drawn down by the end of December 2001.

WALES

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce proposals to amend the Wales departmental expenditure limit for 2000–01. [151101]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Wales Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £18,450,000 from £7,808,235,000 to £7,826,685,000. The increase is a result of:

(i) the take up of end year flexibility entitlement of £5,408,000

(ii) net transfers from other Government Departments of £1,645,000

(iii) additional support for flood defence of £118,000 resulting from the Environment, Transport and Regions Minister's autumn 2000 statement, an additional £10,195,000 for education resulting from the Chancellor's pre-Budget statement, and take up of an allocation of £1,084,000 from the Modernising Government Fund

The increase includes the following transfers:

(i) £112,000 from Home Office for the Partnership Development Fund;

(ii) £131,000 from Home Office for the Drug Prevention Advisory Service;

(iii) £57,000 to Scottish Executive for Out of Area Treatments;

(iv) £512,000 from Department of Health for Out of Area Treatments;

(v) £92,000 to Department of Health for Medical Training Costs;

(vi) £1,000 from the Northern Ireland Executive for Out of Area Treatments:

(vii) £19,000 from Home Office for Youth Justice Board work;

(viii) £146,000 from Intervention Board for Slaughter Premium inspection costs;

(ix) £10,000 from Home Office for Youth Justice Board inspection costs;

(x) £43,000 to Home Office for the Crime Reduction Team; and

(xi) £906,000 from DTI for the Phoenix Fund

The increase in DEL will be offset by transfers from other Departmental Expenditure Limits or from the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Steel Industry

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary of the National Assembly concerning the future of steel production at Llanwern; and if he will make a statement. [149923]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I regularly meet the First Secretary to discuss a range of issues including the future of the Llanwern plant.

It is well known that I believe the proposal to end steelmaking at Llanwern is a short-sighted one. I have urged the company to reconsider its position and I know that the Trade Unions are presenting their own proposals for the company's consideration. However, if the threatened closures go ahead, the Government and the National Assembly have made it clear that we shall both take appropriate steps to assist those affected.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide details of the assistance package offered to the Corus Steel company, prior to the announcement of job losses on 1 February; and if he will make a statement. [150251]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 13 February 2001): The UK Government and the Assembly indicated a willingness to talk to Corus about whether any action on their part would assist the company. As Corus did not wish to engage in such discussions, the Government were unable to make any offer of assistance.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Solicitor-General what plans he has to amend the Law Officers' Department's Departmental Expenditure Limit and Running Costs Limit for 2000–01. [151100]

The Solicitor-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class V, Vote 4 (The Crown Prosecution Service), Class V, Vote 5 (Serious Fraud Office) and Class V, Vote 6 (HM Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor) the Attorney-General's Departments Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £8,823,000 from £369,547,000 to £378,370,000.

The Crown Prosecution Service's Departmental Expenditure Limit will increase by £4,438,000 from £343,790,000 to £348,228,000. The running costs limit will be increased by £2,504,000 from £245,165,000 to £247,669,000. This increase is required to fund delivery of the pledge on persistent youth offenders, deployment of Higher Court Advocates in the Crown court, diversity and equality issues and achieve improvements against CPS and CJS targets. An increase in capital expenditure of £5(,000 will be used to fund the introduction of joint CPS/police criminal justice and trial units.

The Serious Fraud Office's Departmental Expenditure Limit will increase by £17,486,000 from £1,833,000 to £19,319,000. The Running Costs Limit will increase by £611,000 from £11,324,000 to £11,935,000. The increase is required to fund the impact in 2000–01 of the decision to increase the office's targeted case load to 100 cases in 2003–04; to meet the cost of trials held over from 1999–2000; and to offset reductions in police resources available to combat serious and complex fraud. Capital expenditure will increase by £34,000.

HM Procurator General and Treasury Solicitor's Departmental Expenditure Limit will increase by £552,000 from £8,271,000 to £8,823,000. The Running Costs Limit will increase by £1,550,000 from £6,432,000 to £7,982,000. The increase in net running costs is due to an increase in capital charge following a revaluation of TDS's premises (Queen Anne's Chambers). The increase is offset by a matching non-running cost receipt. Capital expenditure will increase by £294,000.

A transfer of £250,000 will be made to the Attorney-General's Departments Departmental Unallocated Provision from the Modernising Government Fund and a transfer of £1,750,000 will be made to the Attorney-General's Departments Departmental Unallocated Provision from the Capital Modernisation Fund.

The increases will be partly offset by transfers totalling £1,206,000 from the Home Office, surrender of £4,565,000 of the Attorney-General's Departments end year flexibility, an allocation of £500,000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund and an allocation of £250,000 from the Modernising Government Fund.

The remainder of the expenditure will be charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

SCOTLAND

Benefit Statistics

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will publish for each constituency in Scotland her latest estimate of the number of (a) male and (b) female (i) lone parents, (ii) pensioners, (iii) people in receipt of DSS benefits, and (iv) female unemployed persons, (A) under the age of 18 years, (B) aged 18 to 24 years and (C) aged over 24 years, (I) pensioners qualifying for the free TV licence and (II) households qualifying for the £200 winter fuel allowance. [146986]

Mr. Foulkes: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the House Library.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals there are to amend the Scotland Office Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01. [151111]

Mrs. Liddell: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XIII, Vote 1, Scotland and Transfers to the Scottish Consolidated Fund, the Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) for 2000–01 will be increased by £77,265,000 from £15,305,728,000 to £15,382,993,000.

The changes in the DEL include the following:

a draw forward of £32,000,000 from 2001–02 for European structural funds; an increase of £23,031,000 for the cost of the Lockerbie trial; an increase of £2,300,000 for additional funding for forestry;

£206,000 for the cost of flood damage and coastal work;

£1,738,000 from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund;

£40,000 for the Employment coalition;

£800,000 for the costs of Kosovo refugees; and £17,893,000 previously announced in the Pre-Budget Report for education.

Also included in the revised Departmental Expenditure Limit are transfers to and from other Government Departments amounting to a net decrease of £743,000. These include:

(i) £5,100,000 from the Home Office for the costs of asylum seekers;

(ii) £1,576,000 from DTI for the Phoenix fund;

(iii) £5,014,000 to DfEE for Open University payments;

(iv) £1,870,000 to MAFF for the cattle traceability scheme;

(v) £1,250,000 to the Department. of Health for Reserved Health bodies;

(vi) £252,000 from the Northern Ireland Executive for Out of Area treatments;

(vii) £289,000 from the Cabinet Office for telecommunications costs;

(viii) £160,000 to DSS for intercalating students;

(ix) £57,000 from National Assembly for Wales for Out of Area treatments;

(x) £78,000 to the Home Office for the Animal Rights index;

(xi) £342,000 to MAFF for the BSE inquiry;

(xii) £46,000 to MAFF for the Marine Coastguard agency;

(xiii) £750,000 from DETR for track access grants; and

(xiv) £7,000 to Home Office for GRECO (European Commission for the Prevention of Corruption).

The increase in DEL will be offset by transfers from other Departmental Expenditure Limits or from the DEL reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL

International Criminal Court

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Advocate-General for Scotland what advice she has given on the development of the proposed International Criminal Court. [149841]

The Advocate-General: This Government have strongly supported the establishment of an International Criminal Court. I cannot, however, give the information requested. By long-standing convention, followed by successive Governments, neither the existence nor content of Law Officers' advice is normally disclosed outside Government. There seems no reason to depart from the convention on this occasion.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Policy and Strategy Units

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when his planning department was established; which of its reports are placed in the public domain; how many departmental or non-departmental special advisers participate in its work; how many regular (a) non-departmental and (b) departmental staff participate in its work; and how many of these work for the department on a full-time basis. [150371]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor's Department has carried out a planning function in some form for many years. Since 1998 the planning branch has been a discrete unit within the Department's Finance Division. Prior to that it was part of a separate Planning and Communications Division. The planning branch writes the Department's annual departmental report, which is published by the Stationery Office and placed on the Department's website. In spring 2001 it will produce the departmental business plan.

No departmental or non-departmental advisers participate in this work. There are no non-departmental staff involved in this work. The planning branch consists of five full-time departmental staff and one part-timer.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Special Adviser working for the Lord Chancellor will relinquish his post when the next general election is called. [149313]

Mr. Lock: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Correspondence

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when her Department expects (a) to reply to letters of 27 October 2000, 13 November 2000 and 12 December 2000 from Beeney and Co., Reigate, on behalf of Mrs. Nicola Morrison, a constituent, and (b) to achieve enforcement of the maintenance order given under case no. 1988-D-257 in Australia under the terms of the Maintenance Orders (Reciprocal Enforcement) Act 1972. [150201]

Jane Kennedy: The Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders section of the Department forwarded the letters of 27 October 2000, 13 November 2000 and 12 December 2000 from Messrs. Beeney and Co. to the Australian authorities asking for news of the case, in the usual manner. Unfortunately, notification of this was not given to Beeney and Co. The Department has now acknowledged receipt of the correspondence.

It is for the Australian authorities to decide how to enforce this maintenance order in Australia.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Bermuda

Mr. Reed: To ask the President of the Council what representations she has received from the Government of Bermuda about proposed constitutional changes; and if she will make a statement. [149996]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

In December 2000, HMG received a list of proposed constitutional changes from the Government of Bermuda, through the Governor's Office. These, and suggestions for amendments to the constitution from other sources, are under consideration. HMG takes their responsibility to the people of Bermuda seriously and will not agree to changes to the constitution without due deliberation.

People's Peerages

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the ethnic backgrounds of applicants for a people's peerage. [150918]

Mrs. Beckett: I understand that the information requested is as follows:

Indian origin—4 per cent.
Pakistan origin—2 per cent.
Bangladeshi—less than 1 per cent.
East African—less than 1 per cent.
Chinese—less than 1 per cent.
Other Asian—1 per cent.
Caribbean—1 per cent.
African—1 per cent.
Other Black origin—less than 1 per cent.
White—85 per cent.
Other ethnic origin—2 per cent.
Not Specified—1 per cent.

The 15 per cent. non-white applications compares with 2.6 per cent. ethnic minority representation in the present House of Lords, and 5.5 per cent. in the population as whole.

Crown Appointments

Mr. Beith: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to the answer of 2 February 2001, Official Report, column 332W, to the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) if, in the discussion with the Shrievalty Association, she will seek arrangements to ensure (a) that in the cases of nominations for High Sheriff of persons who have been politically active, those nominations do not arise predominantly from any one political party and (b) that those nominated are not required to have sufficient means to meet the expenses of the office from their own resources. [149564]

Mrs. Beckett: The Shrievalty is a non-political office, and any person nominated who has been politically active is required to refrain from local or national political activity during his or her year as Sheriff. Provision is made for funding statutory functions performed through Under-Sheriffs and for certain other functions. There are no plans to fund further the non-statutory activities of Sheriffs from public resources. The extent to which Sheriffs wish to incur personal expenditure on additional activities is a matter for individual decision.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the Special Advisers working for him will relinquish their posts when the next general election is called. [149321]

Mr. Chris Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if Millennium Commission funds may be used to pay compensation for costs incurred in bidding for the dome site in the event of the failure of negotiations. [149342]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 February 2001]: The Millennium Commission, as providers of grant from the national lottery to the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC), has not underwritten bidders costs in relation to the competition for the sale of the dome. The rules of that competition makes no provision for meeting the costs of unsuccessful bidders.

Departmental Grants (Vale of Clwyd)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what grants his Department has made to organisations in the Vale of Clwyd since the general election. [149786]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 9 February 2001]: This Department has made no grants to organisations in the Vale of Clwyd since the general election. However, according to the information supplied to us by the distributing bodies for the national lottery awards database, there have been 101 national lottery awards to the Vale Clwyd, totalling £6,607,271, since 1 May 1997. I have placed copies of a table showing the details of these awards in the Libraries of both Houses.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what incentives the Government make available to farmers to encourage tourism in the English countryside. [150131]

Janet Anderson: The England rural development programme's rural enterprise scheme will help farmers and others to develop tourism and craft initiatives in order to assist in the development of more sustainable, diversified and enterprising rural economies and communities. Rural England will receive, in total, around £152 million of rural enterprise scheme funding from April 2001 to the end of 2006. The programme's agri-environment measures also help to promote tourism by encouraging farmers to conserve and enhance the intrinsic attractiveness of English landscapes. Similar funding arrangements exist for areas classified as objective 1 for European structural funds support.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what incentives are provided to local residents in rural tourist resorts to encourage them to promote tourism in their town; and to whom these incentives are targeted. [150093]

Janet Anderson: A range of funding bodies and sources is available to assist rural communities and the rural economy, including in relation to tourism. The regional development agencies support a broad range of projects generated by local partnerships and voluntary groups to address regeneration through the single regeneration budget, the capital investment fund and their rural development programme. Support is also available from the Countryside Agency and the European structural funds. The EU LEADER+ programme will complement these mainstream programmes by piloting integrated bottom-up rural development strategies developed and implemented by local community action groups. The programme aims to help rural communities to help themselves in developing a sustainable rural economy, which may include sustainable tourism based on local distinctiveness. Rural England will receive around £32 million of LEADER+ funding from 2001 to the end of 2006.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much money was spent by tourists visiting rural areas of north-west England in (a) 1998, (b) 1999 and (c) 2000. [150133]

Janet Anderson: Spending by domestic and overseas tourists visiting the two regional tourist board areas in north-west England was as follows:

£ million

	1998	1999
North West Tourist Board	1,393	1,595
Cumbria Tourist Board	429	600

Separate figures for rural areas are not kept, but the North West Tourist Board estimates that approximately 56 per cent. of spend was in rural areas, while the Cumbria Tourist Board estimates that approximately 79 per cent. of spend was in rural areas.

Figures for 2000 are not yet available.

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the prospects for opening the new stadium at Wembley. [150337]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 13 February 2001]: I understand the Football Association and Wembley National Stadium Ltd. are currently holding discussions with their financial advisers on when to restart the process of loan syndication. The timing of this is entirely a matter for them.

Regional Film Theatres

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure that publicly funded regional film theatres do not compete unfairly with the purely commercial sector; and if he will make a statement. [150544]

Mr. Chris Smith: Regional film theatres tend to show a wider range of films than commercial cinemas. Public funds also support screenings for minority audiences or for educational purposes and in rural areas. There are also initiatives between public and commercial sectors aimed at making available a broader programme at mainstream cinemas. I am not aware of any difficulties arising from these longstanding policies. The Film Council is developing a strategy for cinema exhibition which it aims to complete by September, building on the work of the British Film Institute.

Digital TV (Audio-described Programmes)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he plans to make available to blind and partially sighted people equipment for the reception of audio described programmes for digital TV. [150270]

Janet Anderson: No. The Government's role is to set the legislative framework within which audio description and other services for people with sensory impairments can be provided. Requiring broadcasters to meet statutory targets is the most effectve and practicable way to ensure the provision and expansion of these services. We have recently announced plans to increase the target for subtitling on digital terrestrial television (DTT) to 80 per cent. of programming and to extend the current targets for subtitling, signing and audio description on DTT to digital cable and digital satellite when legislation permits. We also introduced half-price television licences for the blind last April.

Creative Partnerships

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to make an announcement on creative partnerships. [151191]

Mr. Chris Smith: On Wednesday 21 February, I will announce the locations in which my Department plans to develop creative partnership pilots: an initiative which will provide sustained opportunities for schools to work in partnership with creative arts organisations and individuals. I will also give details of the local consultation that will begin in these areas to determine the partners involved. Copies of this announcement will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Flood Defences (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the total expenditure on improving flood defences in the Soar Valley since the Easter 1998 floods. [149998]

Mr. Morley: In addition to their own expenditure of £156,000, the Environment Agency estimates that local authorities have spent approximately £1 million on improving flood defences in the Soar Valley since Easter 1998.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent by the Environment Agency on improving the flood defences in (a) Leicestershire and (b) the Soar Valley since Easter 1998. [149997]

Mr. Morley: I understand that since Easter 1998 the Environment Agency has spent some £840,000 on improving flood defences and warnings in Leicestershire, of which £156,000 was spent in the Soar Valley. In addition some £350,000 a year is spent on maintenance.

Fishing

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the annual revenue generated by commercial fishing in the west country in each of the last three years. [149549]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 12 February 2001]: Following are the landings by the UK fleet into Devon, Cornwall and the Scilly Isles for the calendar years 1998–2000.

Year	£ million
1998	67.34
1999	53.79
2000	58.49

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals there are to amend the Forestry Commission Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01. [151102]

Mr. Morley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class X, Vote 3 (Forestry Commission), the Forestry Commission Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £4,100,000, form £76,065,000 to £80,165,000. The increase is required to meet the net cost of a fall in receipts from sales of timber offset by savings in other net expenditure. The increase will be a charge on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed to the gross running cost control and Departmental Expenditure Limits for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Intervention Board for 2000–01. [151232]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Gross Running Cost Control Limit for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will be decreased by £9,605,000 from £316,371,000 to £306,766,000 and the Gross Running Cost Control Limit for the Intervention Board will be increased by £954,000 from £70,092,000 to £71,046,000.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Intervention Board's joint Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) will be increased by £101,326,000 from £1,362,859,000 to £1,464,185,000.

The increase is the net effect of an Intervention Board (IB) increase of £83,884,000 comprising administration transfers of £980,000 from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and £120,000 from HM Customs and Excise and a transfer of £146,000 to the National Assembly for Wales Agriculture Department; and increases in programme provision of £71,489,000 for the Over Thirty Months Scheme (BSE), £398,000 for the Selective Cull Scheme (BSE) and £11,043,000 for Dairy Agrimonetary Compensation; and a net MAFF increase of £17,442,000 comprising an increase of £1,646,000 for the BSE Inquiry—funded by transfers from the Department of Health, the Scottish Executive, the Northern Ireland Executive and the National Assembly for Wales; £2 million for flood defence works—being part of the £51 million Flood Defence package announced on 23 November 2000; £1.87 million from the Scottish Executive as a contribution to the development costs of web-based access to Cattle Traceability Scheme data; and £14.5 million in respect of the Agrimonetary Compensation scheme for Arable Area Payments announced on 2 November 2000. These increases are offset by net transfers to the DETR of £41,000 in respect of work carried out by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA); £654,000 to the Department of Health in respect of surveillance work on Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies (TSEs); £470,000 to the Cabinet Office for Government Pathway costs; and a decrease of £429,000 in net provision for the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS) resulting from projects under the Wider Markets Initiative.

Within the DEL there will be a transfer of £980,000 from MAFF to IB to cover the cost of administrative work on Pig Welfare Disposal, Modernising Government and the Over Thirty Months Scheme (OTMS).

The Supplementary Estimate also provides a transfer of £5.691 million Supplementary Credit Approvals capital and £1.35 million programme provision from the MAFF non-voted DEL to voted DEL.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for changes to the Departmental Expenditure Limits and Running Costs Limits for 2000–01. [151099]

Mr. Straw: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the Departmental Expenditure Limit, which covers Class IV Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) and Vote 2 (Prisons, England and Wales), will be increased by £66,499,000 from £8,867,256,000 to £8,933,755,000. The Running Costs Limit will be decreased by £6,000 from £2,353,684,000 to £2,353,678,000.

The changes are the net effect of the following transfers: £200,000 from the Lord Chancellor's Department (Class V Vote 1) and £70,000 from the Crown Prosecution Service (Class V Vote 4) in respect of contributions for the Integrated Business Information Systems Unit; £130,000 to the Department of Health (Class II Vote 2), £29,000 to the National Assembly for Wales (Class XIV Vote 1), £23,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department (Class V Vote 1) and £76,000 to the Crown Prosecution Service (Class V Vote 4) in connection with Youth Justice Board inspections; £3,000,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department (Class V Vote 1) in respect of the reorganisation of responsibility for the Children and Family Court Advisory Services; £23,000 from the Lord Chancellor's Department (Class V Vote 1), £7,000 from the Scottish Executive and £3,000 from the Northern Ireland Office (Class XV Vote 1) towards membership costs of the Group of States Against Corruption (GRECO); £3,500,000 from the Department of Social Security (Class XII Vote 2) in connection with housing benefit for residents in approved hostels; £32,000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund and £32,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department (Class V Vote 1) for criminal justice system interface development; £112,000 to the National Assembly for Wales (Class XIV Vote 1) for the partnership development fund; £150,000 to the Department of Health (Class II Vote 2) in support of the project "communicating with professional audiences"; £43,000 from the National Assembly for Wales (Class XIV Vote 1) for crime reduction costs; £39,000 to the Department of Health (Class II Vote 2) for the funding of the drug service commissioners handbook and the Methadone Alliance and £120,000 in respect of the training of drug workers; £131,000 to the National Assembly for Wales (Class XIV Vote 1) in respect of drug projects to be supported by the Confiscated Assets Fund; £404,000 to the Single Intelligence Vote (Class XVII Vote 2) in respect of drug projects to be supported by the Confiscated Assets Fund; £21,700,000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund in respect of the Airwave project; £50,000 to the Department for Education and Employment (Class I Vote 1) for the Connexions Direct project; £99,000 from HM Customs and Excise (Class XVI Vote 4) £99,000 from the Department for Education and Employment (Class I Vote 1) and £221,000 from the Department of Health (Class II Vote 2) towards the costs of drug action teams; £315,000 from the Department of Health (Class II Vote 2) for the recruitment of drug action teams; £1,130,000 to the Single Intelligence Vote (Class XVII Vote 2) as a contribution towards three overseas drugs prevention projects; £78,000 from the Scottish Executive as a contribution to the animal rights national index; £95,000 from the Electoral Commission (Class XVIIIC Vote 1) in respect of set up costs; £5,100,000 to the Scottish Executive in respect of local authority asylum support costs; £38,000,000 from the Department of Social Security (Class XII Vote 2) in respect of closure of the housing benefit loophole; £1,200,000 to the Crown Prosecution Service (Class V Vote 4) and £467,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department (Class V Vote 1) in respect of the youth justice pledge; £559,000 to the Cabinet Office (Class XVII Vote 1) to resource the news co-ordination centre; £860,000 from the Lord Chancellor's Department (Class V Vote 1) following postponement of the transfer of warrant enforcement from the police; £306,000 from the DEL Reserve in respect of free travel for Metropolitan police officers; £14,200,000 in respect of expenditure from the Capital Modernisation Fund for an increase in prison capacity; £1,400,000 in respect of expenditure from the Capital Modernisation Fund on the video links project; and £2,000,000 from the Departmental Unallocation Provision to cover additional non-Voted expenditure on the 1999 European Parliamentary Elections.

The increase in the Department's running costs limit is the net effect of the following transfers: £200,000 from the Lord Chancellor's Department and £70,000 from the Crown Prosecution Service in respect of contributions for the Integrated Business Information Systems Unit; £130,000 to the Department of Health, £29,000 to the National Assembly for Wales, £23,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department and £76,000 to the Crown Prosecution Service in connection with Youth Justice Board inspections; £112,000 to the National Assembly for Wales for the partnership development fund; £50,000 to the Department of Health in support of the project "communicating with professional audiences"; £43,000 to the National Assembly for Wales for crime reduction costs; £95,000 from the Electoral Commission in respect of set up costs; £2,263,000 from capital expenditure provision in connection with the costs of the Sirius programme; £1,200,000 to the Crown Prosecution Service and £467,000 to the Lord Chancellor's Department in respect of the youth justice pledge; £465,000 to the Cabinet Office to resource the news co-ordination centre; and £125,000 from the Departmental Unallocated Provision to cover additional non-Voted expenditure on the 1999 European Parliamentary Elections.

These changes will be offset by transfers or a charge on the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Race Equality

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his proposals for implementation of the duty to promote race equality under the Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000, and the second annual report on progress implementing the Stephen Lawrence Action Plan. [151106]

Mr. Straw: The second annual report on progress in implementing the Stephen Lawrence Action Plan and the consultation document on implementation of the Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000 will be published on Thursday 22 February 2001, to mark the second anniversary of the publication of the Report of the Lawrence Inquiry. Copies of these documents will be placed in the Library and the consultation document will be circulated widely among the public bodies that are likely to be affected and to other interested parties for comments.

The consultation document will provide information about timing of the implementation of the 2000 Act. It will, in particular, seek views on the introduction of a number of specific duties to help public bodies better fulfil their obligations under the general duty to promote race equality. It will also seek views on extending the list of public bodies that are subject to the general duty to promote race equality.

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the second edition of the basket of race equality performance indicators which he has developed. [151107]

Mr. Straw: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the document "Race Equality in Public Services". The document sets out performance data in a number of key areas which are of interest to minority ethnic communities, and provides a quantifiable way of demonstrating the Government's progress in promoting race equality.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce the registration fees to be charged by the Criminal Records Bureau. [151198]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Applications to the Criminal Records Bureau for Standard and Enhanced Disclosures need to be counter-signed by a person registered in advance with the Bureau for this purpose. Often this will be the employer or voluntary organisation. We have concluded that the fee for registration should be a one-off payment of £300, with a one-off charge of £5 for each additional counter-signatory nominated by the registered person. These fees reflect the cost to the Bureau of the processes in question. Regulations will be laid accordingly.

Terrorism Act

Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will bring the Terrorism Act 2000 into force. [151105]

Mr. Straw: In answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) on 31 October 2000, Official Report, column 419W, I indicated that we were working towards an implementation date for the Terrorism Act 2000 of 19 February 2001. I can now confirm that, by virtue of a Commencement Order which I have made under the Act, the date of implementation will be Monday 19 February 2001. On that day, the Terrorism Act 2000 will replace the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 and the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996. As a consequence of the new judicial extension of detention arrangements which will come into force on 19 February, the United Kingdom will be in a position to lift the derogations entered under Article 15 of the European Convention on Human Rights and Article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and I can confirm it is our intention to deposit notifications with the Council of Europe and the United Nations to this effect early next week. To take account of any detentions under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 made up to midnight on 18 February, these notifications will lift the derogations as of 26 February 2001.

Hinduja Brothers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which Ministers and officials in his Department have (a) been contacted by and (b) contacted (i) Mr. G. P. Hinduja and (ii) Mr. S. P. Hinduja since 2 May 1997; if he will list the occasions on which there was such contact; and if he will make a statement. [148074]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 31 January 2001]: My Department has had contact with Mr. G. P. Hinduja and Mr. S. P. Hinduja in respect of their applications for naturalisation and in respect of immigration matters. Information about contacts concerning their applications for naturalisation will be made available to Sir Anthony Hammond as part of his review of the possibility of an application for naturalisation by Mr. S. P. Hinduja in 1998. Sir Anthony's report will be published and copies placed in the Vote Office and the Library. It would be inappropriate for me to pre-empt the outcome of this review. Information about contact in respect of immigration matters can be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Neither I, nor any of my Ministers, have had any official meetings with either Mr. G. P. Hinduja or Mr. S. P. Hinduja.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) received a letter at his constituency office from Mr. S. P. Hinduja in September 2000 in his capacity as a local MP about parking facilities for people visiting the Swaminarayan Hindu Mandir in his Brent, South constituency. This was dealt with by my right hon. Friend in the usual way and referred to his local authority. Otherwise, neither I, nor my Ministers, recall having been contacted by or having contacted either Mr. G. P. Hinduja or Mr. S. P. Hinduja in the period from 2 May 1997, although we may have been present at functions at the same time as Mr. G. P. and Mr. S. P. Hinduja. For example, the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), believes that when he spoke, by invitation, as a Minister at the Sikh Forum Dinner on 18 October 1999, Mr. S. P. Hinduja was a guest on the platform table and that at a reception organised by my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Southall (Mr. Khabra) on 3 July, which he attended, Mr. S. P. Hinduja was also present. I understand that Mr. G. P. Hinduja was present at the Asia Light evening held in Brighton last year and that Mr. S. P. Hinduja and Mr. G. P. Hinduja were present at the Labour Party's Annual Gala Dinner on 15 April 1999. I was present at both these events. My hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire and I received invitations to the Hinduja Foundation Diwali Gala evening on 3 November 1999. We did not attend; officials from the Home Office Race Equality Unit attended the event.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the allegations against G. P. Hinduja and S. P. Hinduja respectively of which his Department was aware when the decisions to award citizenship to each of them were made. [150377]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) and the hon. Members for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) and for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Ruffley) on 30 January 2001, Official Report, column 166W.

Domestic Violence

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's policies to tackle domestic violence. [150588]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Domestic violence is a serious and abhorrent crime which the Government are determined to tackle effectively. We have emphasised that the domestic context in which it occurs is an aggravating not a mitigating factor and that it is an issue which we expect local crime reduction partnerships to cover in their audits of local problems and strategies for addressing them.

Since coming to office, we have undertaken a broad range of measures to reduce the level of domestic violence and strengthen support for victims. That is why we have provided £7 million for a violence against women initiative within the Crime Reduction Programme. That initiative is currently funding for development and evaluation 34 projects that will help us identify what interventions in what circumstances are the most effective and cost-effective.

Among other significant measures within the last year are: the issue of multi-agency guidance to agencies dealing with domestic violence and of specific guidance to Health Service professionals; the issue of a new Home Office circular to the police; the inclusion of domestic violence within police Best Value performance indicators; the provision of £120 million additional capital funding for a new Safer Communities Supported Housing Fund for specified vulnerable groups, including the survivors of domestic violence; and increased funding for Victim Support.

Other current initiatives include work with the Association of Chief Police Officers on a circular on effective use of provisions in the Protection from Harassment Act 1997; the evaluation of probation service domestic violence perpetrator programmes; the development of a domestic violence toolkit on the Home Office's crime reduction website; research on possible future publicity work; and, the inclusion in the British Crime Survey 2001 of a special module on domestic violence.

Essex Constabulary

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) funded and (b) actual police officers were in post in the Essex constabulary on (i) 31 March 1997 and (ii) the latest date for which figures are available. [148699]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 February 2001]: The information requested has been provided by the chief constable of the Essex police.

Essex police

Year	Funded officer numbers	Actual police numbers
31 March 1997	2,944	2,952
7 February 2001	2,955	2,907

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civilian staff were employed by Essex constabulary (a) on 31 March 1997 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available. [148701]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 6 February 2001]: On 31 March 1997 the Essex police had 1,199 civilian support staff. This had increased by 273 to 1,472 civilian staff on 30 September 2000. Many of the extra civilian support staff have, I understand, been used to free police officers from paperwork and from jobs that can be as effectively undertaken by civilians.

Endangered Species

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police units there are in the United Kingdom to enforce international obligations on the protection of endangered species; and what budget has been set aside for this purpose in each of the last five years. [147715]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 29 January 2001]: There is, in England and Wales, a network of Police Wildlife Liaison Officers, the vast majority of whom carry out this role in addition to their other police duties and responsibilities.

Six police forces in England and Wales have a full-time Wildlife Liaison Officer. Only a small part of the work of Wildlife Liaison Officers would deal with enforcing international obligations in respect of endangered species.

There are no figures available in respect of the budgetary provision for this work as that is a matter for individual chief officers.

Police Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers (a) were recruited to and (b) retired, resigned or were dismissed from each police force and in total between (i) April and September 1999 and (ii) October and March 2000. [148013]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 30 January 2001]: The information in the table sets out the number of officers who were recruited, retired or resigned for the six monthly periods, 1 April 1999 to 30 September 2000 and 1 October 1999 to 31 March 2000. The category for "other wastage" includes death, dismissals and departures for other reasons. Because of the way in which the statistics are collected we are unable to provide a breakdown of each of the sub-categories in the "other wastage" column.

Police Numbers (North Yorkshire)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means the increase in the number of police officers in North Yorkshire will be funded. [149453]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 15 February 2001, Official Report, column 174W.

Arrests

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests were made on average per police officer for each force area in England in each year since 1990. [150104]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information given in the table is for arrests for notifiable offences and for the year 1999–2000 only. Information for earlier years is not available on a consistent basis.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, on a borough-by-borough basis, the percentage of immediate calls which were met within the target time for the Metropolitan police since September 2000. [150284]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has informed me that the Metropolitan Police Service's charter standard is to attend 80 per cent. of immediate calls within 12 minutes. The percentage of immediate calls which were met within the target time for the Metropolitan police since September 2000 were:

Violent Offences (Waverley)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reported offences involving violence there were in Waverley in the past three years; and how many of those involved (a) village shops and (b) post offices. [150309]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Totals of violent crimes in Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership areas were not collected centrally prior to September 1999, and are not collected by location of offence. The table gives the number of violent offences recorded in Waverley in the year to September 2000 in the three categories of violent crime. There are no previous comparable year data held centrally. This information, with that on all other Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships, was published in table 5 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin 1/01, "Recorded Crime England and Wales October 1999 to September 2000", which is available in the Library.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department since the introduction of the new allowances for housing for police officers in London, (a) how many officers joined the Metropolitan police from other police forces and (b) how many left the Metropolitan police to join other police forces; and if he will make a statement. [148650]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No new allowances for housing have been introduced for police officers in London. The London Allowance paid to those police officers recruited into the Metropolitan police since 1 September 1994 who are not in receipt of housing allowance was increased with effect from I July 2000.

I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that between 1 July 2000 and 31 January 2001, 68 police officers joined the Metropolitan police from other forces and 245 left the Metropolitan police for other forces.

Departmental Policies (Tooting)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Tooting parliamentary constituency the effect of his Department's policies and actions since 1 May 1997. [149862]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office Annual Reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 1999–2000, is available in the Library.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested although following are examples relating to the Tooting constituency or the immediate locality:

Crime Reduction Programme (CRP):

Targeted Policing Initiative:

Round 2: Understanding and Responding to Hate Crime—A Metropolitan Police Project seeking to tackle domestic violence and racially motivated crime in all London boroughs within their policing area. Scheme seeks to develop a data system that will inform the investigation of hate crime; create a system for training and support for those dealing with 'hate crime' and improve the understanding of different forms of hate crime and how to respond to it. Also aims to find more effective ways of identifying both new and repeat victims. Allocated funding of £287,000 for a 22 month project.

Closed Circuit Television (CCTV):

Three schemes approved under the CCTV initiative 1999—total £327,500

Lennox Estate—15 CCTV cameras and related equipment which will provide coverage around the Lennox Housing Estate with the aim of targeting criminal damage, vandalism, anti-social behaviour and attempted burglaries.

St. George's Hospital—providing 11 cameras and associated equipment the scheme seeks to facilitate coverage around St George's Hospital, focusing primarily on the car park area, which has experienced relatively high levels of vehicle crime. The scheme will also target burglary, bicycle theft and anti-social behaviour.

Battersea Park Extension—four CCTV cameras and associated equipment have been funded to provide further coverage of the Battersea Park area and the vicinity of Prince of Wales Drive. This will enable the Metropolitan police and the Wandsworth Parks Constabulary to respond to incidents quickly and control public events more effectively. The scheme also seeks to reduce motor vehicle crime, which has been a problem affecting off-street parking around Prince of Wales Drive.

Wandsworth has recently submitted six bids under round two of the CCTV Initiative. The funding requested from the CRP is £530,299. These bids have been submitted to the Home Office Crime Reduction Programme Unit (CRPU) and a decision is awaited.

Reducing Burglary Initiative:

There are three initiatives at present within the borough:

Round 2: Over 60's—The Metropolitan police in partnership with Wandsworth Borough Council have been allocated funding for a project covering the over 60's. The main interventions proposed are target hardening for repeat victims, particularly among elderly households. Allocated Crime Reduction Programme funding of £7,100.

Round 2: Balham Ward—The project encompasses the Balham area. Main interventions proposed are raising awareness, roadshow and watch link, target hardening and a property accreditation scheme for an area with large numbers of flats and houses in multiple occupation. Allocated Crime Reduction Programme funding of £19,400.

Round 2: West Putney Ward—Main interventions proposed are target hardening, awareness raising and direct offender targeting in areas with large detached properties and council estates. Allocated Crime Reduction Programme funding of £25,100.

Wandsworth has submitted a bid under round 3 of the Reducing Burglary Initiative. The bid covers a significant proportion of the borough and asks for funding of £526,100. The bid has been submitted to the Home Office Crime Reduction Programme Unit (CRPU) and a decision is awaited.

Drug Arrest Referral Initiative:

A drug arrest referral scheme has been established in Wandsworth. The scheme aims to reduce drugs misuse and drug related crime by providing treatment options for problem drug users, who are arrested. A specialist drugs worker is employed to identify, assess and refer people to treatment who have been arrested and want help in relation to problem drug use. The cost of employing Arrest Referral Workers is being matched jointly by the Metropolitan Police until April 2002. Under the Crime Reduction Programme, the Joint Finance Initiative additionally provides a contribution towards local treatment of problem drug-users. The CRP allocation of funding for arrest referral is £25,974 and for treatment is £21,468.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of Tooting to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

Racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

The asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 66,195 by the end of December 2000; and

Good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Asylum Seekers

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum claims have been refused because the applicants did not submit their SEF within the two-week deadline. [150098]

Mrs. Roche: Information relating to asylum applicants who did not submit their Statement of Evidence Form (SEF) within the 10 working day deadline is not currently routinely collected so could only be obtained through examination of individual case records and is therefore available only at disproportionate cost.

The available information relates to total refusals of asylum on non-compliance grounds; comprising failure to provide further evidence as required and failure to respond to invitations for interview to establish identity as well as failure to complete a SEF correctly and within the time allowed.

The information that is available is given in the table.

Refusals of asylum on non-compliance grounds in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, April—December 2000[1,2]

Month	Total refused	Of which on no compliance grounds: Cases under normal procedures	Cases under backlog criteria[3]

Information on the number of refusals, and the number of refusals on non-compliance grounds is published regularly on the Department's website at www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/index.htm.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum cases have been dispersed under the terms of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999; how many of these were (a) single adults and (b) couples without children; and if he will make a statement. [150039]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 12 February 2001]: As at the end of December 2000, 16,590[1] bedspaces in National Asylum Support Service (NASS) accommodation were allocated to asylum seekers and their dependants. The number of bedspaces allocated to single adults and to couples without children is not available.

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest ten.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the past three years (a) how many failed asylum seekers were removed from the United Kingdom and (b) how many asylum applications were refused; and if he will make a statement. [150076]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 12 February 2001]: The information is given in the table.

Year	Total refusals[1,2]	Asylum seekers removed[3]
1998	22,315	6,990
1999[1]	12,300	7,660
2000[4]	78,180	8,970

[2] Figures rounded to the nearest 5
[3] Figures rounded to the nearest 10
[4] Provisional figures

The Government are determined to increase substantially the number of failed asylum seekers who are removed.

We are taking additional measures, including expanding the number of detention places, to increase and speed up the removal of failed asylum seekers. The programme of works to deliver around 2,000 new detention places by the end of 2001 is well on track. In addition to the current facilities at Tinsley House, Gatwick, Campsfield House, Oxford and Harmondsworth, near Heathrow, we have successfully let contracts to deliver 900 places at Yarl's Wood in Bedfordshire by May 2001 and 550 places at Harmondsworth, to replace the current facility by the end of June 2001. We are also tendering a contract to deliver up to 150 places on the old Dungavel House prison site in Lanarkshire, Scotland by the autumn of 2001 and progressing plans to deliver 300 places at Aldington in Kent. An agreement is also in place with the Prison Service to allow us to use 112 places at Her Majesty's Prison Lindholme and up to a further 500 prison places throughout England for Immigration Act detainees, while the new facilities are under construction.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what average payments were made to each London borough per asylum seeker for housing allowance for the latest year for which information is available. [150547]

Mrs. Roche: It is not possible to give separate figures for housing allowance. The table gives the information that is available and shows the actual average amounts paid by the Home Office to each London borough for families and single adults for the year 1999–2000. The amount covers accommodation, support and administration costs.

Naturalisation Applications

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for naturalisation (a) he has determined personally and (b) have been determined personally by other Ministers in his Department (i) in total since 2 May 1997 and (ii) in (1) 1997, (2) 1998, (3) 1999 and (4) 2000. [149572]

Mrs. Roche: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The overwhelming majority of decisions are taken by officials.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which hon. Members made representations to his Department between 2 May 1997 and 28 July 1998 in support of relaxing the residence requirement for applicants for naturalisation. [150040]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 12 February 2001]: None so far as we can determine. It would entail disproportionate cost for us to check for any representations made in the context of individual cases.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the residence requirements are with which an applicant for naturalisation is expected to comply; what is the legal basis for these requirements; and if he will make a statement. [149575]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to Schedule 1 to the British Nationality Act 1981 where the residency requirements are set out. Schedule 1 is the legal basis for the requirements.

Prison Statistics

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners (a) were in category B prisons, (b) escaped from category B prisons and (c) absconded from category B prisons in each year between 1990 and 2000. [149916]

Mr. Boateng: Available statistics show the category B prison population at the end of June for each year was:

Year	Number
1995	5,274
1996	8,162
1997	9,016
1998	7,181
1999	7,396
2000	7,763

I am unable to provide figures for 1990–1994 in the time available.

Determining the number of prisoners who have either escaped or absconded from category B prisons over the 10 year period can be supplied only at disproportionate cost. However, I can advise the House that there has not been an escape from a category B establishment since September 1999.

Police (Avon and Somerset)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate (a) the total number of police officers and (b) the number of frontline officers in the Avon and Somerset area in each year since 1978–79. [148739]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on police numbers in Avon and Somerset constabulary from December 1978 is provided in the table. However, it is only possible to provide information from December 1990 on the number of operational (frontline) officers. The information on operational officers has been provided by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary.

Data on operational numbers were collected on a calendar year basis between 1990 and 1993. Police numbers prior to 1994–95 have therefore been provided on the same basis so that the data are comparable. From 1994–95 all data are on a financial year basis (ie as at 31 March of each year).

Avon and Somerset Constabulary police numbers since 1978 and operational numbers since 1990

[2] Figures from 1994–95 are on a financial year basis.

[3] Total police numbers for 2000–01 are those for 30 September 2000. Information on the force's operational numbers for 31 March 2001 will not be available until the middle of the year.

Victim Support

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sums of money his Department will in future make available each year for independent charities providing support for victims by victims; and what procedures there will be for applying for such funding. [150457]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government are considering the allocation of grant to victims programmes and hope to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sums of money his Department has given each year, from 1995 to date to (a) Victim Support, (b) other independent victim charities, and the amounts per charity, and (c) other victim support organisations with non-charitable status, and the amounts per organisation; and what proportion of the above amounts had gone to provide support for bereaved and injured road traffic victims (i) via Victim Support, (ii) via the independent victim charities and (iii) via the other victim support organisations with non-charitable status. [150458]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The available information about Home Office grant given to victim support organisations since 1995 is summarised in the table.

	Victim Support (£ million)	Support after murder and manslaughter (£)	Other victim support organisations (£)
1995–96	10.817	0	0
1996–97	11.682	0	0
1997–98	12.682	0	0
1998–99	12.682	43,000	0
1999–2000	17.500	100,000	0
2000–01	18.600	100,000	0

Information about the proportion of such grant which might have gone to provide support for victims of road traffic incidents is not available.

Since 1999 the Home Office has also provided £23,000 a year to the road safety organisation, BRAKE, for the supply of the booklets 'Coping with grief' and 'Procedures following a death on the road in England and Wales'. The booklets are distributed free of charge by the police to the families of those killed in road crashes.

New Prison, Peterborough

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects work to start on demolishing existing buildings to make way for the new prison in Peterborough; [150536]

(2) for what reason the demolition of existing buildings prior to the building of the new prison in Peterborough has been delayed. [150538]

Mr. Boateng: There has been no delay. The Prison Service carried out its own investment appraisal as to whether to demolish the existing buildings before appointing a preferred supplier to construct and operate the new prison at Peterborough. Discussions took place with the city council, demolition contractors and the consortiums bidding for the new prison. At the conclusion of these discussions it was decided that the best option was to incorporate the demolition work into the PFI construction contract.

Work on demolishing the existing buildings on the site of the new prison to be built at Peterborough is expected to commence in late 2001.

Work on demolishing the existing building on the site of the new prison to be built at Peterborough is expected to commence in late 2001.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects the new prison to be operational in Peterborough; [150535]

(2) when he will announce funding details for the new prison in Peterborough. [150537]

Mr. Boateng: Details of contract costs and funding will be announced to coincide with contract signature which is expected in late 2001. The new prison at Peterborough is expected to take its first prisoners in early 2004.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from the hon. Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton) on behalf of her constituents (a) for and (b) against the new prison in Peterborough. [150546]

Mr. Boateng: My hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton) has made representations on behalf of three constituents, one of whom was against the prison proposal with the other two being respectively against the proposed location within Peterborough and the access route into the prison.

Offences against Children

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the Government's policy on offenders who commit offences against children. [150569]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government believe those who offend against children should be dealt with severely by the courts and appropriate action taken to prevent their re-offending. Recent measures include the provisions in Part II of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 to prevent people who commit serious offences against children from subsequently working with them; to raise the penalties for the offence of possession of child pornography to five years' imprisonment or an unlimited fine or both, and for the making and distributing of child pornography to 10 years' imprisonment or an unlimited fine or both; and to raise the age limit for the offence of indecent conduct towards a child to protect children up to 16. All these measures came into force on 11 January 2001. They form part of a programme of work we have undertaken to increase protection for children from those who may harm them.

Assaults on Police Officers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on assaults on police officers. [150570]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Assault is a serious offence and assaults on the police are deplorable. The Government are committed to reducing the number of assaults on police officers as part of their overall strategy to reduce violent crime, as set out in "fighting violent crime together: an action plan" published in January. We are determined to support the right of every law-abiding individual to go about his or her daily life without the fear of falling victim to crime. We recognise our responsibility in supporting the police to protect the community. That is why we are increasing police funding significantly and in real terms.

The Government are determined to ensure that all police officers are protected in carrying out their duties. We support the use of the best available means to protect our police officers. In addition to the development of protective clothing to guard against knife or gun attack, police now have access to the up-to-date extendable side handled batons and the CS incapacitant spray, which help to protect them from assault. The Home Office's Police Scientific Development Branch continues to monitor developments in this area, in order to provide the police service with advice on the most effective equipment available.

We recognise the importance of high quality training in protecting police officers in carrying out their duties. In May 2000 the Government published "Police Training: The Way Forward" which set out a range of proposals to ensure common national standards in police training and life-long learning for staff.

In order to allow the identification of the level of recorded assaults on the police, in 1998 we introduced assault on a constable as one of the new elements in the recording of crime figures. Assault carries a range of sentences depending on the seriousness of the incident. We expect the courts to use their full powers when considering sentences in cases where the police are assaulted.

Departmental Business (Overseas Travel)

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visits abroad have been made by Home Office officials on departmental business (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the last 12 months. [149042]

Mr. Straw: The information which has been requested is not held centrally and would incur disproportionate cost to obtain.

Orders

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many sex offender orders have been made to date in each police force area in England and Wales; how many have been (a) discharged and (b) breached; and if he will make a statement; [149162]

(2) how many child safety orders have been made to date in each police force area in England and Wales; how many have been (a) discharged and (b) breached; and if he will make a statement; [149164]

(3) how many parenting orders have been made to date in each police force area in England and Wales; how many have been (a) discharged and (b) breached; and if he will make a statement. [149163]

Mr. Charles Clarke [pursuant to his replies, 8 February 2001, c. 674W]: The information given in the table covering the number of Parenting Orders and Child Safety Orders made up to 31 May 2000 was incorrect. An updated table with amendments is given.

Departmental Policies (Pendle)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives embarked upon since May 1997 have benefited Pendle; and if he will make a statement. [149910]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under round one of the Crime Reduction Programme Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) Initiative, £201,000 was awarded to the Pendle Community Safety partnership in January 2000, for a CCTV scheme in Nelson town centre. The scheme proposes to reduce violent crime, vehicle crime, burglary and fear of crime.

The Youth Justice Board has also invested £228,018 on two development projects in Lancashire, including Pendle. The projects cover a victim/offender mediation service and a community bail support scheme.

£14,000 has also been invested in Pendle under the Youth Inclusion "Summer Splash" Scheme, aimed at 13 to 17-year-olds at risk of offending during the Easter and Summer school holidays.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce his response to the consultation exercise on the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme. [151098]

Mr. Straw: I will shortly be announcing details of a wide-ranging package of improvements to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme, based on the outcome of the public consultation exercise that we launched in 1999. This package has been drawn up in the light of careful analysis of all the responses to the exercise, and in consultation with Scottish Ministers. Details will be placed in the Library.

Airwave Radio System

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what concerns were raised by Lancashire constabulary regarding health and safety matters in relation to its pilot of the Airwave radio system; and if he will make a statement; [150571]

(2) if he will make a statement on interference caused by the Airwave radio system with other electronic equipment, with particular reference to equipment at

(a) hospitals and (b) airports; and what guidance has been issued to officers regarding the use of Airwave equipment where it might cause such interference; [150568]

(3) what assessment he has made of the health and safety risks associated with the Airwave radio system and TETRA radio signals. [150567]

Mr. Straw: Health and safety considerations have been of paramount importance in the development of Airwave, a system which should in itself contribute to a safe and effective working environment for the police. The system has been designed to enable the use of terminals which comply with guidelines issued by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) and the International Commission on Non-Ionising Radiation Protection (ICNIRP) on exposure to electro-magnetic fields.

The Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones, which reported in May 2000, included in its report reference to the possible effects of radio frequency emissions at or near a modulation of 16Hz on the release of calcium from brain tissue. This may be of significance in relation to Airwave given that it uses the Terrestrial Trunk Radio System (TETRA) which modulates at 17.6Hz. No obvious health risks were suggested although the report concluded that as a precautionary measure, amplitude modulation around 16Hz should be avoided, if possible, in future developments in signal coding. The first, core parts of the TETRA standard were adopted as European Telecommunications Standards on 12 January 1996.

The best advice I have received is that no obvious health risks have been identified; in these circumstances and in the light of the benefits that Airwave will bring to the police service, I have concluded that its roll-out should continue according to the planned timetable. However, I have also agreed that the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and the NRPB should conduct a review of the relevant science.

In addition I understand that the Lancashire Police Federation has raised with senior officials in Lancashire concerns about the possible harmful effects of pulsed radio waves at 17.6Hz. These concerns arose following media reports. I have also received a letter from the Police Federation at the national level about the safety implications if Airwave radios are required to be switched off in circumstances where interference might be at issue.

Police radio terminals (hand-held radios and radios installed in vehicles), when transmitting, are capable of interfering with sensitive equipment in hospitals. This is not a new problem and is not an issue confined to police radios. Guidance was issued in 1997 restricting the use of public radios in hospitals (Home Office Communications Advisory Panel Guidance Note HGN(P)33).

Police radio terminals are used at airports with the normal operational precautions. This means that, when close to any sensitive equipment (eg the Instrument Landing System at the end of a runway) or near hazardous areas (eg for re-fuelling), police officers currently refrain from making calls. When using Airwave (TETRA) radios, which can transmit autonomously to keep in contact with the network, officers would have to switch them off in such circumstances. Guidance is being prepared in Lancashire on the use of TETRA radio terminals in airports. Work is also being carried out to develop a transmit-inhibit mode of operation for TETRA terminals so that they will transmit only when calls are being made, as is the case with current police radios.

Police radio terminals can also interfere with traffic law enforcement devices (TLEDs). Guidance was issued in 1989 (Home Office circular 39/1989) advising that radios should not be used close to breath testing equipment. Further operational guidance will be prepared in the light of research currently being carried out into the susceptibility of TLEDs to frequency interference from a TETRA or GSM (Global System for Mobile Communications) terminal.

The Home Office is writing to Chief Constables (copied to the Police Federation) advising them of the action being taken in relation to interference and health issues. Copies of that letter will be placed in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hon. Member for Leicester, East

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions upon which the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz), met in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office individuals and organisations over issues not related to his ministerial duties, and the names of those persons and bodies and the purposes for which the meetings were held. [149803]

Mr. Vaz: Very occasionally, and because of parliamentary or ministerial commitments, meetings scheduled to be held outside the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have had to be transferred to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office at short notice. No other official resources are involved, nor are central records kept of such meetings.

Iraq

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will make representations to the UN Sanctions Committee for the early release of (a) food-testing equipment and (b) equipment to combat cancer, which is being held from entry into Iraq. [147375]

Mr. Wilson: The UK works consistently in the UN Sanctions Committee to facilitate the export to Iraq of humanitarian goods such as those described by the hon. Member. We will continue to do so.

If the hon. Member, or any other hon. Member, is aware of any specific examples of such goods on hold by any member of the Sanctions Committee, we are prepared to look into the matter and, where appropriate, make representations bilaterally and in the Sanctions Committee.

The UK only places holds on goods where there is insufficient information about the goods or their intended end-use or because the goods have military as well as civilian applications. The hold is lifted as soon as we receive the information required to reassure us that the goods will not be used for purposes prohibited by Security Council resolutions.

I am anxious further to refine this process in any way which is consistent with UN Security Council resolutions and also the humanitarian interests of the Iraqi people.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide details of the current contracts on hold in respect of permitted supplies to Iraq; and for what reason 26 per cent. of goods under agreed oil spares contracts to Iraq have so far been received. [150195]

Mr. Wilson: The UN Sanctions Committee has approved 82 per cent. of the contracts submitted for the export of goods to Iraq under the UN oil for food programme. The UK puts on hold only about 2 per cent. of all contracts submitted to it for approval and then usually only on a temporary basis until concerns about the nature or end-use of the goods have been met. Details of all oil for food contracts are available on the UN website at www.un.org/Depts/oip.

The UN continues to streamline its procedures to accelerate the export of goods to Iraq. The Sanctions Committee has therefore agreed lists of items, including oil spare parts, which no longer need to be referred to the UN for approval. At the same time Iraq continues to hamper the UN's efforts. Delays in the issue of letters of credit by the Central Bank of Iraq, for example, have prevented the delivery at one time of up to $1.1 billion worth of goods already approved by the UN.

MOX Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests have been received from the United States nuclear authorities in respect of the construction of lead test assemblies of mixed oxide nuclear fuel in British fabrication plants. [149761]

Mr. Wilson: As part of its agreement with Russia to dispose of TN 34 of plutonium declared surplus to its military requirements, the US has undertaken to immobilise TN 25.5 through irradiation in a reactor.

We have not received any request from the US to construct "lead test assemblies" for this programme in UK fabrication plants.

Korea

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the prospects for the reunification of Korea; [149906]

(2) if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Joint Declaration between North and South Korea. [149907]

Mr. Battle: The UK welcomed the signing by President Kim Dae-Jung and Chairman Kim Jong Il of a joint declaration on reunification, family reunions, economic co-operation and future dialogue when they met in Pyongyang in June last year.

North-south dialogue on implementing the joint declaration has continued to develop since the summit. So far there have been four rounds of ministerial level talks and five rounds of military contacts. Land mine clearance operations are under way and a road and rail link across the demilitarised zone is being rebuilt. Three rounds of talks between the Red Cross societies on both sides have resulted in two rounds of separated family visits with a further round scheduled for the end of February. Commercial links have continued to develop in a number of sectors, including the signature of investment protection and double taxation agreements. Both the ROK and DPRK have continued to express their commitment to further reconciliation and to eventual reunification.

It was in support of these positive developments that the UK established diplomatic relations with the DPRK in December. However, long-term improvement of north-south relations also depends on the eventual resolution of issues such as human rights, weapons of mass destruction, nuclear proliferation, and the development and exports of missiles. Establishing diplomatic relations with the DPRK should provide a more effective channel for pressing UK concerns on these issues.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospects for a reduction of North Korean exports of arms. [150282]

Mr. Wilson: We are concerned by North Korea's past record of exporting arms, especially ballistic missile systems and their related technology. We were encouraged by talks held last year between the DPRK and the US. In the context of those talks, the DPRK said they would be willing to stop exporting missiles if they could be compensated for the loss of foreign earnings.

We have raised our concerns on this issue during our discussions on the establishment of diplomatic relations between the UK and the DPRK. We will continue to use our diplomatic relations with the DPRK to reinforce the need for them to stop destabilising arms exports. We have also drawn the DPRK's attention to the draft international code of conduct against ballistic missile proliferation.

Indonesia

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indonesian Government concerning the continuing forced conversion of Christians to Islam in the Moluccas. [150203]

Mr. Battle: We are deeply concerned by recent reports of attempts to force Christians to convert to Islam in Maluku and our ambassador has raised this with senior officials at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Jakarta.

Both the Secretary of State for International Development and I visited Indonesia in October 2000 and discussed the situation in Maluku with President Wahid and senior Ministers. We urged tolerance and restraint and made clear to them the Indonesian Government's responsibility to maintain law and order and take immediate steps to bring the perpetrators of the violence to justice. I also discussed events with Alwi Shihab, the Indonesian Foreign Minister, in the margins of the EU-ASEAN meeting in Vientiane on 12 December.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Indonesian Government about attacks on Christians. [150103]

Mr. Battle: We continue to urge the Indonesian Government to exercise tolerance and restraint and remind them of their responsibility to maintain law and order and to take immediate steps to bring the perpetrators of the violence to justice.

Both the Secretary of State for International Development and I visited Indonesia in October 2000 and discussed the situation in Maluku with President Wahid and senior Ministers. We urged tolerance and restraint and made clear to them the Indonesian Government's responsibility to maintain law and order and take immediate steps to bring the perpetrators of the violence to justice. I also discussed events with Alwi Shihab, the Indonesian Foreign Minister, in the margins of the EU-ASEAN meeting in Vientiane on 12 December.

Qualified Majority Voting

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason the Government supported the provisions in the treaty of Nice relating to the extension of qualified majority voting. [150194]

Mr. Vaz: The decision to agree to qualified majority voting was made on a case-by-case basis. The Government agreed to majority voting where this will be of benefit to Britain and where it promotes efficient decision making in the institutions of the EU. But the Government made it clear before the Nice European Council that they would insist on unanimity in areas of overriding national interest, such as taxation, social security, defence, treaty change and own resources.

Embassies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the benefits of sharing premises used as embassies with other EU member states. [150196]

Mr. Battle: Since 1992, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has actively pursued opportunities to share embassy premises with out EU partners. We are already co-located with EU partners in Almaty, Lima, Minsk, Quito and Reykjavik and are in the construction phase of a major co-location project in Dar es Salaam. A further four possible sites for co-location are also currently under consideration.

Panikos Tsiakourmas

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made on the case of Mr. Panikos Tsiakourmas, a Greek Cypriot; and if he will make a statement. [150394]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has sent messages to both Mr. Denktash and Turkish Foreign Minister Cem about the circumstances of Mr. Tsiakourmas' arrest, emphasising the importance we attach to a resolution of this very serious matter. Our high commissioner in Nicosia also continues to make strong and regular representations to Mr. Denktash. We will continue to pursue this matter until it is resolved satisfactorily.

Nice Treaty

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what powers under the treaty of Nice exist to enable a member state of the European Union to have its voting rights forfeited. [150116]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 13 February 2001]: There are no new powers in the treaty of Nice that provide for the suspension of voting rights.

Article 7 of the Treaty of Amsterdam, amending the treaty on European Union, introduced the possibility for the Council to suspend certain rights under that treaty, including voting rights, where a member state is found to have seriously and persistently breached the founding principles of the Union set out in article 6 (1). The treaty of Nice amends article 7 TEU to introduce an early warning mechanism where there is a clear risk of those principles being breached. This mechanism allows for the Council to make recommendations to be made to the member state concerned, having listened to its views.

UN Education Rapporteur

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 2001, Official Report, column 357W, on the UN special rapporteur on right to education, if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meeting on 7 February. [150384]

Mr. Battle: The UN special rapporteur on the right to education was due to meet with my right hon. Friend the Minister for School Standards and the Minister of State, Home Office on 7 February to discuss the report of her previous visit in 1999.

Unfortunately, the special rapporteur was unable to travel from Sweden to the UK due to adverse weather conditions. We are in contact with her office with a view to her visiting the UK at a later date.

Congo

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the nature and extent of the continuing violence in the region of Bunia in the Democratic Republic of Congo; and what representations he has made to the Government of Uganda about its responsibility for restoring peace to that region. [150471]

Mr. Wilson: We have received distressing reports about continuing inter-ethnic violence in and around Bunia. The conflict is complex, but seen by many as a violent extension of the local administration's inability to manage long-standing tensions between communities in the province. There are also accusations that the Ugandan forces, who effectively control eastern DRC, have been guilty of failing to prevent the violence. In some cases, Ugandan officers have been accused of participating in the killings.

Tension remains high, and humanitarian agencies have moved their staff to Bunia town for safety. Humanitarian access in the rest of the region is extremely difficult.

From the first reports of killings last year, our high commissioner in Kampala maintained a close dialogue with the Ugandan Government and army command. He urged them to restore calm in the region and to defuse the situation, ensure humanitarian access, and check any action by the Ugandan army that may be contributing to the conflict. We continue to monitor the situation closely and remain in close contact with humanitarian NGOs working in the region. In addition to bilateral contacts, we maintain close contact with the UN on these issues.

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Rwandan Government about the involvement of their armed forces in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [150469]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development met President Kagame on 28 January. She encouraged him to seize the opportunity to move the Lusaka peace process forward. The UK permanent representative to the United Nations in New York also encouraged President Kagame to ensure Rwandan participation in the forthcoming meetings of signatories to the Lusaka agreement (12 and 15 March) during bilateral discussions in New York on 7 February, and urged him to engage in further dialogue with the other parties.

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 January 2001, Official Report, column 557W, and his answer to the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) of 24 January 2001, Official Report, column 593W, what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage dialogue between the parties to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [150467]

Mr. Wilson: The Secretary of State's special representative for the Great Lakes and the UK permanent representative to the United Nations met President Kabila in New York on 2 February. They assured him of Britain's readiness to help, including through contacts with other parties to the conflict, and urged him to show the political will to make real progress on implementing the Lusaka agreement. Our ambassador in Kinshasa has spoken similarly to the Congolese Foreign Minister. We have taken similar action with all the other parties to the conflict in recent weeks. We have also been working with our UN, EU and African partners on moving the peace process forward.

Burma

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Burmese regime concerning the treatment of the Chin, Kachin and Naga ethnic minority groups in Burma. [150585]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) today, Official Report, column 266W.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions took place about atrocities against the Karen, Karenni and Shan people during the recent European Union fact-finding mission to Burma; and if this mission visited Karen, Karenni and Shan states. [150573]

Mr. Battle: EU Troika representative visited Rangoon on 29–31 January and had meetings with the regime, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and ethnic minority representatives. They discussed a wide range of issues, including human rights.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made during the last 12 months to the Government of Burma regarding atrocities against the Karen, Karenni and Shan people. [150575]

Mr. Battle: We remain deeply concerned about human rights violations of all Burma's peoples, including ethnic minorities, and take every opportunity to highlight our concern. I raised our concerns at the EU-ASEAN ministerial meeting in Vientiane, Laos, in December 2000. The Burmese Foreign Minister was present. I have also raised them with the Burmese ambassador in London. We also raise our concerns through our embassy in Rangoon and visiting officials from London, most recently with the Deputy Foreign Minister on 19 January 2001; with EU partners through the recent EU Troika mission and the EU Common Position on Burma, which was strengthened in April 2000 and subsequently renewed in October; and with co-sponsorship of UN resolutions condemning the abuses at the UN Commission on Human Rights in April 2000, and most recently at the UN General Assembly in November 2000.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government have taken to build a consensus at the United Nations Security Council in support of the establishment of an International Criminal Tribunal on Burma; and if he will make a statement. [150574]

Mr. Battle: We have raised our concerns over Burma with our Security Council partners, but there is no consensus at the moment for Security Council engagement on Burma issues, including that of establishing an international criminal tribunal.

Ministerial/EU Commission Meetings

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many working meetings have been held between Ministers and members of the European Commission since 1 July 1999; and if he will list the (a) dates of, (b) subjects discussed and (c) Ministers and Commissioners involved in these meetings. [150265]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 14 February 2001]: UK Ministers routinely meet members of the Commission at all meetings of the Council of Ministers and other occasions and discuss a wide range of issues.

National Missile Defence

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans (a) he and (b) his NATO counterparts have to propose amendments to the outer space treaty to take account of national missile defence; and if he will make a statement. [150803]

Mr. Vaz: The Government have no plans to propose amendments to the outer space treaty, nor are we aware of any such plans by NATO counterparts.

US-UK Relations

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the US-UK relations following the decision to sell RR Spey turbofan engines to China; and if he will make a statement. [150572]

Mr. Battle: The matter has not been raised by the US Administration. US-UK relations are excellent.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Maria Eagle: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to change the Cabinet Office: Security and Intelligence Services Vote Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01. [151189]

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the Departmental Expenditure Limit for Class XVII, Vote 2 will be increased by £6,417,000 from £789,586,000 to £796,003,000 and the gross running cost limit will be increased by £2,121,000 from £422,648,000 to £424,769,000.

The change is to effect transfers of £2,878,000 from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Class VII, Vote 1), £1,534,000 from the Home Office (Class IV, Vote 1) and £289,000 to the Scottish Executive, the take up of running costs end year flexibility of £2,065,000 and of current end year flexibility of £229,000 being partial take up of the entitlements announced in Table 7 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper (CM 4812) published on 18 July 2000.

The increase will be offset by transfers and a charge to the DEL reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total public expenditure.

Chester Street Holdings Limited

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Prime Minister if he will instruct the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to collate a joint response to the collapse of Chester Street Holdings and its impact on sufferers from asbestos-related diseases; and if he will make a statement. [148918]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 5 February 2001]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer the Economic Secretary gave to him on 14 February 2001, Official Report, columns 181–82W.

CABINET OFFICE

Honours System

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what criteria are applied to the selection of those who will be recognised by award of an honour. [149273]

The Prime Minister: I am replying to this question as it relates to matters for which I am responsible.

Candidates for honour are selected on merit based upon their achievements and quality of service in a wide range of areas of our national life.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to modify the system of nominations for honours. [149166]

The Prime Minister: I am replying to this question as it relates to matters for which I am responsible.

There are currently no plans to modify the system. The honours nomination process is kept under review.

Government IT Projects

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much was paid to Compaq during its unsuccessful bid for the Government Gateway project; how much has so far been paid to Microsoft for services related to the project; and what the expected cost of the project is. [148656]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Compaq undertook work for the Cabinet Office and a final settlement figure of £5.6 million, including VAT, has been agreed. This includes £2.2 million worth of hardware that is to be redeployed throughout Government Departments.

Details of specific payments to Microsoft and other suppliers remain commercially confident at this stage. We expect the first phase of the project to cost an additional £18.3 million, including VAT. This is within the project budget.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) how many official visits were carried out in the United Kingdom by Cabinet Ministers in (a) January 2000 and (b) January 2001; if she will list the location of each visit; and if she will make a statement; [150425]

(2) how many ministerial visits have been made within London since January; on what dates and to which locations; which Ministers attended; and if she will make a statement; [150427]

(3) if she will make a statement on the procedure used to decide the location of official ministerial visits; [150426]

(4) what ministerial visits are planned in the next month; which Ministers will take part; and if she will make a statement. [150428]

Marjorie Mowlam: Detailed information in the form requested for Ministers visits within the United Kingdom is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I and ministerial colleagues in the Cabinet Office aim to visit all regions of the country in support of Government policies that are national.

Regulatory Impact Assessments

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans her Department has to place all regulatory impact assessments on a single website. [150476]

Mr. Stringer: At present a list of regulatory impact assessments published since 1998 is available on the regulatory impact unit's website. We are currently developing plans to enable visitors to the regulatory impact unit's website to access RIAs via links to departmental websites.

Central Office of Information

Ms Perham: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has for a review of the Central Office of Information. [151195]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The last comprehensive review of the Central Office of Information (COI) was carried out in 1996–97. I have decided the next review of this agency should be completed early in 2001–02 and should be started as soon as possible. It will be conducted by Cabinet Office in close consultation with the chief executive and staff of the COI, under the general direction of a steering group.

The COI is responsible for procuring communications for Government Departments and advising on media relations in the regions. This quinquennial review will follow Cabinet Office guidelines, which require the examination of prior options for the delivery of COI's services taking into account the performance of the agency and the views of its customers, suppliers and staff. It will assess the added value of COI, its role in relation to other Departments and arrangements for funding.

The standard options are: continued agency status, privatisation, abolition, merger, contracting out and market testing. Each option will be considered on its merits and the preferred option will be the one that offers best value for money.

Civil Service (Sickness Absence)

Mrs. Fitzsimons: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the overall level of sickness absence in the civil service was in 1999. [151194]

Mr. Stringer: The report "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service 1999", prepared for my Department by Biomathematics and Statistics Scotland (BioSS), shows that by applying the same methodology as in previous years the average level of sickness absence was 10.1 days per staff year. Calculated on the basis of absence per person, the figure for the civil service was 8.5 days. The report contains a comprehensive analysis of the 1999 figures.

The figure of 10.1 days sickness absence per staff year represents an increase over the equivalent figure of 9.8 days set out in the report for 1998. However, as I explained in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Barbara Follett) on 11 May 2000, Official Report, column 433W, a more accurate comparator for 1998 is the figure of 10.3 days which emerged after Departments own audits of their sickness absence systems had revealed an element of under-recording. On that basis, the figures show that there has been a small decrease in sickness absence per staff year in 1999 as compared with 1998.

Departments have now published service delivery agreements which contain their individual targets for reducing sickness absence. Overall, the civil service has been targeted to reduce sickness absence by 20 per cent. for 2001 and by 30 per cent. for 2003 against the 1998 baseline. My Department is continuing to work with other Departments and agencies as they take forward their plans to reduce sickness absence.

I have placed copies of the BioSS report in the Libraries of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Consumer Protection

11. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department has taken to increase consumer protection. [149012]

Dr. Howells: Taking forward our consumer White Paper proposals we have already increased consumer protection, particularly in areas such as distance selling and e-commerce. We are taking forward further measures now, including "stop now" orders and legislation for the full pint of beer.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the levels of spending on consumer protection per head of population in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years. [150013]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 9 February 2001, Official Report, columns 701–02W.

Earthquake (Gujarat)

12. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the UK construction industry about making a trade visit to Gujarat to investigate how British companies may participate in the rebuilding programme there. [149013]

Mr. Caborn: There is still an emergency in Gujarat. The immediate priority is to ensure that the needs of the survivors for food, shelter and medical assistance are met. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development has established an emergency assistance allocation of £10 million. Future planning for reconstruction of the affected area is essential and can begin once the requirements have been fully assessed. At this stage, it would be premature for the Government to promote commercial visits by UK construction companies, but we are keeping the situation under review, including through our small commercial team based in Ahmedabad, and are in close touch with the Indian authorities about their future requirements.

Confidential Business Information

13. Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the disclosure of confidential business information to other countries. [149014]

Dr. Howells: I have received representations from the Confederation of British Industry on this subject.

Universal Bank

14. Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has held with the Post Office concerning the universal bank. [149015]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I regularly meet with the Post Office to discuss a range of issues.

Manufacturing

15. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the competitiveness of British manufacturing. [149016]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Manufacturing industry makes a vital contribution to the economy. We are helping manufacturing industries to be more competitive by creating a stable macroeconomic climate and by pursuing policies which help firms to innovate, to develop the skills of their work force and to grow.

Company Directors' Liabilities

16. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to make company directors personally liable if they continue to trade while they are aware that their company is unable to honour contracts. [149017]

Dr. Howells: No. There are already provisions in the Insolvency Act 1986 under which directors of companies in insolvent liquidation may be ordered to contribute personally to the company's assets. This may arise, for example, where the company's business has been carried on with intent to defraud creditors or where the directors have carried on business when they knew or ought to have known that there was no prospect of the company avoiding liquidation.

BAE Systems

18. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions have taken place between his Department and BAE Systems concerning the restructuring of the company. [149019]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My Department maintains a regular dialogue with BAE Systems on a wide range of issues. Following BAE Systems financial announcement to the stock exchange, I met with the chief executive of the company on 23 January.

Miners' Compensation

19. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress being made in settling miners' claims for respiratory disease compensation. [149020]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Easington (Mr. Cummings), Official Report, column 446W. In Wales alone, we paid out £1 million in mining compensation last week. In Bridgend alone, we have already paid out over £5.5 million.

Earlier this week, I attended a meeting of the Welsh sub-group of the national monitoring group. The sub-group is looking at ways of speeding up the process and the payment of compensation specifically in Wales.

25. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people have benefited from the compensation scheme for former mineworkers. [149029]

Mr. Hain: To date, some 43,100 claimants have received full and interim settlements in relation to claims for vibration-related diseases. In addition, a further 30,700 claimants have received full and interim settlements in relation to claims for respiratory disease.

In total to date, the Department has paid out £332.5 million in coalmining compensation, and continues to pay out around £1 million a day.

Exports (China)

20. Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to encourage UK exports to China. [149021]

Mr. Caborn: The Government, through Trade Partners UK, recently announced for 2001–02 the largest programme of supported activity ever for British companies in the China market. This will consist of 17 trade missions, 30 trade fair groups and eight sector-specific seminar initiatives during the year. This increased activity is in addition to the regular exchanges of ministerial visits to and from China of which my own visit earlier this month and that of the Deputy Prime Minister last October formed part. The Minister for Small Business and E-Commerce visited China last month.

Our activity in China is complemented by awareness-raising activity in the UK. Trade Partners UK, in close co-operation with the China-Britain Business Council (our official trade advisory group on China), is engaged in a two-year programme of events around the country to draw the attention of UK companies to business opportunities in China. These events are held in close co-operation with local partners such as trade associations and chambers of commerce.

UK exports to China rose by 40 per cent. in 1999 over 1998 and by a further 22 per cent. in the first 11 months of 2000. I hope that the continued efforts I have described will improve on this performance still further.

Manufacturing (South-West)

21. Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the state of manufacturing in the south-west. [149023]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The performance of manufacturing industry in the south-west region has most recently been assessed by the CBI in its business strategies regional trends survey, dated November 2000.

The Government office for the south-west is in regular contact with local and regional partners about business matters in the region.

Centres of Expertise

22. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to encourage business collaboration and to develop centres of expertise. [149024]

Ms Hewitt: In the White Paper "Opportunity for All in a World of Change", published earlier this week, the Department demonstrated its continuing commitment to supporting collaborative activity and centres of expertise.

We announced support valued at £30 million over the next three years for five new regionally based university innovation centres, including one at the university of Warwick focusing on business-to-business e-commerce.

We also announced the establishment of a new manufacturing advisory service in partnership with the regional development agencies, consisting of regional centres of manufacturing excellence and a supporting national network, to provide practical advice on manufacturing issues.

Hinduja Brothers

23. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the contacts he has had with members of the Hinduja family. [149026]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) on 2 February 2001, Official Report, column 336W.

Energy Market Liberalisation

24. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is taking to liberalise the energy market at (a) UK and (b) EU level. [149027]

Mr. Hain: UK electricity and gas markets are already liberalised. In addition, my Department is working closely with the regulator to reform the wholesale electricity market in England and Wales by replacing the electricity pool with more competitive trading arrangements. The target implementation date for the new electricity arrangements is 27 March.

In Europe, the Commission will soon be proposing a new directive to accelerate the liberalisation of European electricity and gas markets. The UK Government will be urging a rapid move to a properly open and competitive electricity and gas market in Europe.

National Minimum Wage

26. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what abatement is available in the national minimum wage to those employers who provide board and lodging. [149030]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Following the recommendations of the Low Pay Commission, there is no offset allowed for the provision of board when calculating whether the national minimum wage has been paid. There is a limited offset of up to £19.95 a week allowed against the national minimum wage to recognise the benefit of the provision of accommodation. I have asked the commission, as part of the terms of reference for its third report, to consider whether there is a case for making any change to the maximum accommodation offset. It is due to report its findings by July.

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many enforcement notices have been issued to employers to help enforce the national minimum wage. [150447]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Since the national minimum wage was introduced on 1 April 1999, the Inland Revenue, who enforce the minimum wage on behalf of the DTI, have issued 328 enforcement notices against employers.

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many enforcement officers, region by region, are employed to police employers who pay less than the national minimum wage. [150446]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The allocation of resources to enforce the national minimum wage is agreed between the DTI and the Inland Revenue, and is covered by a service level agreement between the two Departments. There are presently 77 enforcement officers based in 14 teams across the United Kingdom. In addition there are a further 10 staff at the national minimum wage helpline and seven at the central information unit, both based in Longbenton, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

The number of enforcement officers can be broken down into the following Inland Revenue regions:

Inland Revenue Regions	Number
East Region	6
London Region	13
Northern Ireland	5
North Region	7
North West Region	7
Scotland	8
South East Region	10
South West Region	5
South Yorkshire Region	6
Wales and Midlands	10

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many workers have benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage in the Tooting parliamentary constituency; [144576]

(2) how many workers in the Greater London area have benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage. [144577]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 15 February 2001:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent questions about the number of workers in Tooting and Greater London who have benefited from the national minimum wage (NMW) (144576,144577).

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) has published estimates of the number of jobs paid at less than NMW rates for 1998, 1999 and 2000. These are based on an improved methodology using data from both the New Earnings Survey and Labour Force Survey. Estimates for the United Kingdom and Government Office Regions, including Greater London, are available on the National Statistics website at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/nsbase/themes/labour—market/nmw—l owpay—tables.asp

No estimates are available for Parliamentary Constituencies.

Nuclear Power

27. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what decline his Department forecasts in nuclear power output over the next 20 years as a result of planned nuclear power station closures. [149032]

Mr. Hain: The DTI has recently published UK energy projections for the period up until 2020[1]. The baseline projections embody a rundown in nuclear output and capacity between 2000 and 2020 as existing stations reach the end of their lives. On an assumption of no new nuclear build, the projections are that by 2020 nuclear capacity will have fallen to 4GW and the annual electricity generated by the nuclear sector will have fallen to 27TWh. These translate into falls from current levels of 69 per cent. and 66 per cent. respectively.

There is, of course, great uncertainty about the lifetimes of existing plant and hence future output levels. Plant lives will depend on the economics of continued production, which in turn will depend on the actions required of their owners to ensure safe operation.

Steel Industry

28. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will made a statement on the latest position in talks between the Government and owners of steel production companies. [149033]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government have had discussions with Corus on a wide range of issues and have assured the company of the Government's continuing support for the steel industry. In the period before Corus' recent announcement of 6,050 job cuts in the UK, the question of a package of support measures from the Government was raised with Corus, but the company made it clear that this would not change its decisions. The Government will continue to work with Corus and all parts of the steel industry to ensure the future competitiveness of the sector.

29. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to maintain and enhance steel production in Britain. [149034]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The steel industry is a vital part of UK manufacturing and the Government will continue to work closely with all parts of the industry to ensure its future competitiveness. The Government stand ready to work alongside Corus, the trade unions and the National Assembly for Wales to identify a way forward that builds on the strengths of the industry and secures a long-term future for it in the UK.

31. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with Corus plc about Government support for the steel industry. [149036]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government continue to talk to steel companies about a wide range of issues. Specifically in relation to Corus, the largest UK steel production company, the Government are continuing to press the company to engage in constructive dialogue with the trade unions and others affected by the 1 February announcement of 6,050 job cuts in the UK.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his oral statement of 1 February 2001, Official Report, column 458, on the steel industry, what powers he will use to require Corus to pay the costs of the clean-up of the sites affected by its decision to close plants. [149760]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

Where any land, including sites where an industry has closed, poses unacceptable risks to humans or the environment in the light of the current use of the site, local authorities and the Environment Agency (or, in Scotland, the Scottish Environment Protection Agency) have duties under Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to enforce remediation. Those who have caused or knowingly permitted the pollution are liable to carry out that remediation. Ministers have only appellate powers. In Wales, the National Assembly exercises these ministerial powers.

When this new regime came into force, I wrote to top UK-registered companies asking about their plans to deal with contamination for which they are responsible, and was told by the chairman of Corus that they are committed to the economic redevelopment of brownfield sites.

We therefore look forward to learning of Corus' proposals for ensuring that the sites affected by any closures are appropriately remediated and brought rapidly back into beneficial economic use and do not become derelict.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet the Dutch Minister for Foreign Affairs to discuss the restructuring of Corus. [150207]

Mr. Byers: I would be happy to meet the Dutch Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from Corus about the long-term future of steel production at the plants in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [150232]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 13 February 2001]: I have had discussions with senior representatives of Corus on a number of occasions when we have discussed, among other issues, the long-term future of steel production at plants in Wales, Scotland and England.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a breakdown by region of the job losses in the steel industry announced by Corus on 1 February; and if he will make a statement. [150229]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 13 February 2001]: Following Corus's announcements about its planned restructuring of the company, I made a full statement to the House on 1 February 2001.

A breakdown of job losses by business unit, indicating the location affected, based on information supplied by Corus is as follows.

Plant/location	Number of job losses
Corus Strip, Llanwern, Wales	1,540
Corus Colours, Shotton,	319
Bryngwn, Wales	127
Corus Strip, Lackenby, Teesside	234

Utility Charges

30. Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on gas and electricity charges for pre-payment meter customers. [149035]

Mr. Hain: Charges for pre-payment meter customers are generally higher than those for direct debit and standard credit customers. This reflects the additional costs of supplying and maintaining the meters and the infrastructure that supports them.

The Government recognise that pre-payment meter use is concentrated among the poorest members of society (although pensioners, who make up half of the fuel poor, are low pre-payment meter users). They attach considerable importance to reducing these costs and have put in place a number of measures to drive down prices. The Utilities Act 2000 gave Ofgem and the new Gas and Electricity Consumer Council a specific responsibility to have regard to the interests of vulnerable individuals, including those on low incomes. The Act also provides a reserve power to take action if some groups of customers are not benefiting to the same extent as others from the competitive market.

The regulator, the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (Ofgem), has taken a number of measures to assist pre-payment meter customers following the publication of its social action plan last year. In April 2000, Ofgem introduced a licence condition that limited to £15 the surcharge that public electricity suppliers can charge to cover the cost of supplying electricity through pre-payment meters. Ofgem's proposals for removing suppliers' rights to block transfers on the ground of debt are designed to improve access to the competitive market for pre-payment meter customers.

Energy companies are developing programmes aimed at low income and disadvantaged customers. Some of these, including reduced charges, new energy efficiency programmes and improved access to other payment methods, will directly benefit pre-payment meter customers.

Environmentally Friendly Policies

32. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he is making in encouraging UK industry to adopt environmentally friendly policies. [149037]

Ms Hewitt: As demonstrated by the increased investment and other measures announced in the White Paper "Creating Opportunities", the Government are committed to providing the conditions and, where appropriate, the support that will enable the UK to become a leading player in the new markets for green energy and products, waste minimisation, recycling and re-use.

Late Payment

33. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from business organisations concerning late payments of bills. [149038]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are committed to improving the payment culture in the UK and aim to build on the package of measures that have already been established.

Departmental officials continue to work with business organisations and representatives from the banking, factoring, accountancy, trade credit insurance and credit management sectors on this issue through the better payment practice group.

The Small Business Service has recently published a consultation document on changes to legislation required following the adoption of the directive on combating late payment in commercial transactions. Responses from business to that consultation will inform how the directive is best implemented.

Regeneration (Clay Cross)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken since the closure of the former Biwater works at Clay Cross to help create alternative employment in the area and to regenerate the local economy; and if he will make a statement. [149018]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government Office for the East Midlands is co-ordinating the work of regional and local partners to ensure that effective support is being given to those made redundant. So far, over 150 have found jobs and a further 133 are being retrained to improve their employment prospects. A new business centre at Coney Green providing space for up to 50 businesses has been opened and phase 2 of this development has started. Plans to redevelop Clay Cross town centre are well advanced and this will provide further job opportunities.

Miners' Pensions

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what surpluses have been received by the Government in each of the past five years from the British Coal staff superannuation scheme. [148130] of any scheme surpluses. Annual Government receipts following surpluses at BCSSS valuations in 1995 and 1997 are as follows:

Mr. Hain: Under the terms of the guarantee/surplus sharing arrangements agreed with the trustees of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme (BCSSS) in 1994, the Government are entitled to receive 50 per cent.

1994–95	0
1995–96	0
1996–97	39.5
1997–98	39.5
1998–99	107.1
1999–2000	107.1
2000–01	53.9

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was paid to the Government from the mineworkers' pension scheme surplus in each year since 1994. [148129]

Mr. Hain: Under the terms of the guarantee/surplus sharing arrangements agreed with the trustees of the mineworkers' pension scheme (MPS), the Government are entitled to receive 50 per cent. of any scheme surpluses. Annual Government receipts following surpluses at MPS valuation in 1996 and 1999 are as follows:

Year	£ million
199596	0
1996–97	0
1997–98	113
1998–99	113

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the surpluses to be paid to the Government from (a) the mineworkers' pension scheme and (b) the British Coal staff superannuation scheme, this year and in each of the next five years. [148131]

Mr. Hain: Prior to the privatisation of British Coal in 1994, the trustees of the two British Coal pension schemes (the mineworkers' pension scheme and the British Coal staff superannuation scheme) reached agreement with HMG whereby the schemes were given HMG solvency guarantees that ensured that pension entitlements at privatisation would rise at least in line with inflation. As part of these arrangements the trustees receive, for distribution to scheme members, a 50 per cent. share of surpluses from periodic valuations usually carried out every three years. The remaining 50 per cent. is paid to HMG over a 10 year period.

Current provisional estimates of surplus payments to Government from the coal pension schemes are as follows:

	£ million
Mineworkers' Pension Scheme
2000–01	257
2001–02	180
2002–03	180
2003–04	180
2004–05	180
2005–06	180
British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme
2000–01	53.9
2001–02	c.200
2002–03	c.200
2003–04	c.200
2004–05	c.200
2005–06	c.200

Research and Development

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was spent on research and development in each of the last 10 years. [149305]

Mr. Hain: I understand that this request refers to research and development in the gas industry. Unfortunately, the UK business enterprise research and development survey (carried out by the Office for National Statistics) does not collect information at this level. The survey collects aggregated information for business R&D performed in the electricity, gas and water supply industry (£137 million in 1999). Information on the topic is regularly published in "MA14: Research and Development in UK Business", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Disused Mineshafts

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has received the report commissioned from Heriot-Watt University into the relationship between house values and mineshafts in Stoke. [149446]

Mr. Hain: My Department has received a near-final draft of the report by Heriot-Watt University, but there remain a few points which require clarification.

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the recommendations made by the Trade and Industry Committee in its Seventh report of Session 1995–96 (a) have been implemented and (b) are being implemented. [149445]

Mr. Hain: Recommendations 1, 2, 9, 11 and 12 of the Committee's report have been implemented. I am awaiting the outcome of the research by Heriot-Watt University on the relationship between former coal mineshafts and property values in Stoke-on-Trent before deciding whether to reconsider the remaining recommendations rejected by the previous Government, along with recommendation 8, which is dependent on the way in which the other recommendations are acted upon.

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to compensate home owners whose properties are unsaleable or have suffered undue financial loss in value due to their proximity to disused mineshafts. [149510]

Mr. Hain: Where damage has been caused to property by disused coal mineshafts, home owners are entitled to have the damage made good, at no cost to themselves or their insurers, under the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991. I intend to consider whether there are any steps which the Government might be able to take to deal with other forms of loss connected with disused mineshafts in the light of the final report from Heriot-Watt University on the relationship between coal mineshafts and property values in Stoke-on-Trent.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish and respond to the report of the inquiry commissioned by his Department from Edinburgh University into housing blight due to abandoned mineshafts. [149639]

Mr. Hain: My Department has received a near-final draft of the report from Heriot-Watt University on the relationship between former coal mineshafts and property values in Stoke-on-Trent, but there remain a few points which require clarification. I intend to publish and respond to the final report when I have had an opportunity to consider its findings.

BNFL

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who the employer was of the quality control official at Sellafield who first detected the falsification of quality control data at the MDF plant at Sellafield. [149632]

Mr. Hain: As noted in the Health and Safety Executive's report published on 18 February 2000 on the events and issues surrounding the falsification of quality control data at BNFL's MOX Demonstration Facility (MDF), it was a member of BNFL's quality control team at MDF who first identified, and brought to the attention of quality control managers, similarities between successive sets of records for secondary MOX pellet diameters. I understand from BNFL that the individual concerned was, at that time, employed as a contractor to BNFL through the Employment Agency NRL. The individual has subsequently joined BNFL as a permanent member of staff.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the reasons were for the dismissal from BNFL last year of (a) Mr. John Taylor, (b) Mr. Ross Chiese, (c) Mr. David Coulston, (d) Mr. Roger Leek and (e) the non-executive directors; and what compensation terms they received. [149633]

Mr. Hain: I understand that Messrs Taylor, Chiese, Coulston and Leek left the company by mutual agreement following a review of management conducted by the chairman of BNFL designed to ensure greater management focus, transparency and accountability. As part of that review, the chairman announced that he was looking to refresh and strengthen his team of non-executive directors in the light of the different future needs of the company. All six of his then non-executive directors have now left the company.

As members of the BNFL board, payments to John Taylor and Ross Chiese are published in the company's annual report and accounts and are therefore a matter of public record. They received £300,000 and £270,000 compensation respectively for termination of their employment. David Coulston and Roger Leek were employees of the company, but not members of the board. As such, any compensation was entirely a matter between the company and those individuals. The departing non-executive directors were not entitled to compensation for loss of office.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many BNFL (a) non-management employees, (b) managers, (c) senior managers and (d) directors who were granted voluntary severance terms were subsequently re-employed by BNFL as (i) consultants, (ii) contractors and (iii) employees; [149871]

(2) how much money has been paid by BNFL under its voluntary severance terms in each year that the terms have been available; [149870]

(3) how many BNFL (a) non-management employees, (b) managers, (c) senior managers and (d) directors applied for voluntary severance terms in (i) 1998, (ii) 1999 and (iii) 2000; and how many of these applications have been granted. [149873]

Mr. Hain: These are matters for the company's management. I have asked the chief executive of BNFL to write to the hon. Member and a copy of the letter will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will publish a draft order under section 59(1) of the Utilities Act 2000 relating to the provision in section 27A(8) and (9) of the Electricity Act 1989. [149661]

Mr. Hain: My Department plans to publish a draft order for consultation shortly.

Legal and Accountancy Professions

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received the report of the Office of Fair Trading into the legal and accountancy professions; when he will publish the report; and if he will make a statement. [150002]

Dr. Howells: I have received the report. It is for the Director General of Fair Trading to decide when it is to be published.

Fireworks

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received about the sale of fireworks; what plans he has further to restrict the sale and use of fireworks; what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of current legislation on the control and use of fireworks; and if he will make a statement. [150022]

Dr. Howells: I have received a total of 361 representations on firework safety matters during the period 1 September 2000 to 31 January 2001, comprising 155 letters from parliamentary colleagues, six parliamentary questions and 200 letters from the public.

The Consumer Protection Act 1987 provides powers to deal with the intrinsic safety of goods, including fireworks, but not to regulate when they are sold or used. The Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997 introduced comprehensive controls on the types and sizes of fireworks which can be sold to the public. I have made no formal assessment of the effectiveness of the 1997 regulations, but my Department continues to monitor movements in the annual firework injury statistics.

Post Office Services

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Girobank contract with Post Office Counters Ltd. prevents POCL giving better prices to clients wishing to use bill payment services for their customers at post office counters. [149846]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Post Office is in partnership with Girobank for the provision of over-the-counter bill payment services. The terms of this contractual relationship are commercially confidential under exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Coal Mine Methane

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the potential for energy generation from coal mine methane. [150101]

Mr. Hain: The Coal Authority monitors for methane emissions at over 100 sites and this information is made available to coal mine methane operators and other interested parties on request.

Operators have shown considerable interest in several of the sites and are currently evaluating the potential for commercial gas extraction. To date, schemes are operational at five Coal Authority sites:

Shirebrook
Markham
Steetley
Hinkleton
Sliverdale.

Enterprise Skills and Innovation

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement concerning the publication of the White Paper on enterprise skills and innovation "Opportunity for all in a world of change" (Cm 5052). [150692]

Mr. Byers: The White Paper on enterprise, skills and innovation "Opportunity for all in a world of change", was published jointly by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and me on 13 February 2001.

At the request of Mr. Speaker, I have investigated a number of matters.

It appears that elements of a draft version of the text of the White Paper—but not the final version—were obtained by the Financial Times prior to publication. I share Mr. Speaker's concern about this matter. However, I have investigated this and can confirm that no advance copies of the White Paper were made available to the media by my Department or by the Department for Education and Employment prior to the day of publication.

The House was informed of the publication of the White Paper in a written parliamentary question at 8.30 am on 13 February. Publication of the White Paper was announced to the media at a press conference which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and I held at 12.30 pm on 13 February.

The White Paper was laid before Parliament at 11.00 am. Copies of the White Paper were due to be delivered to the Vote Office of the House for release at 11.00 am. Unfortunately, these were delivered late by The Stationery Office with the result that copies were not available in the House until noon. The delay in delivering copies of the White Paper to the House was very regrettable and my Department has asked for procedures to be put in place by The Stationery Office to ensure that such a delay is not repeated in future.

Solar Energy

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance the Government give to (a) householders and (b) businesses towards the installation of solar energy devices. [150266]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 14 February 2001]: The White Paper on enterprise, skills and innovation, published on 13 February, includes a major initiative for a solar photovoltaic (PV) demonstration programme to bring us in line with those of our main competitors. The aim is to support the installation of PV arrays on the roofs and walls of domestic homes and medium and large-scale non-domestic buildings. This should enable the establishment of a high-tech industry of the future in the UK with the potential to challenge our main competitors in this field, Japan, Germany, and the US.

The new proposal complements current Government support for field trials for domestic and large-scale building-integrated PV systems. In addition, since April 2000, a reduction of VAT from 17.5 per cent. to 5 per cent. has been available for professionally installed solar panels.

Writers Copyright

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps he is taking to ensure an equitable return to writers for the re-use of their work; [150543]

(2) what representations he has made to the European Commission regarding provisions in the draft copyright directive affecting the interest of writers in the re-use of their material by broadcasters. [150542]

Dr. Howells: The Council of Ministers reached a common position on this draft directive last September on the basis of a text which we fully support and which was also endorsed by the Commission. This does not contain any provision addressing re-use of material by broadcasters, but the directive is currently undergoing its Second Reading in the European Parliament, where an amendment has been proposed which would permit member states to provide an exception to rights allowing broadcasters to use archive material in new services without right owners' consent, provided they receive remuneration. We do not consider this amendment appropriate or desirable, and we believe that writers and other right owners should continue to be able to exercise their rights to control re-use of their material in order that they can obtain a fair return for this. The Council has also to agree on the content of the directive before it can be finally adopted.

Objective 1

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the four European objective 1 regional programme delivery bodies. [149005]

Mr. Caborn: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I has received any recent request to meet representatives of the objective 1 delivery bodies. However, our Department is in touch with the English objective 1 regions through the Government offices and regional development agencies, and also liaises with the devolved Administrations.

Public Relations (Expenditure)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure was in his Department for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000, and what the planned expenditure and breakdown of expenditure for 2000–01 is on (i) public opinion research, (ii) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (iii) direct mail. [149266]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The information is as follows:

Direct mail expenditure excluding postage through COI

£ (ex VAT)

Financial year	Amount
1997–98	19,081.00
1998–99	34,628.00
1999–2000	[1]150,018.66
2000–01	6,375.00

[1] Includes costs of £119,831.66 for direct mail campaigns to promote export awareness of information technology among small businesses
[2] As up to 31 January 2001

Direct mail costs were not separately identified before 1997–98.

It is not possible to identify a separate figure for public opinion research.

Television, radio and newspaper advertising through COI

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes will be made to the Departmental Expenditure Limit and Running Costs Limit for his Department, British Trade International and the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets. [151104]

Mr. Byers: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Department of Trade and Industry will be increased by £92,052,000 from £3,591,516,000 to £3,683,568,000. In addition, the gross Running Costs Limit will be increased by £771,000 from £412,915,000 to £413,686,000.

The net provision of Class IX, Vote 1, which falls within the Departmental Expenditure Limit, will be increased by £62,751,000, which results from:

(i) the take up of end year flexibility of £70,498,000 comprising £8,000,000 for capital expenditure and £62,498,000 for current expenditure, of which £45,340,000 will be added to the provisions for Coal Operating Subsidy, £9,000,000 for Employment Relations, £8,000,000 for Regional Selective Assistance, £5,000,000 for the Regional Development Agencies, £1,750,000 for Invest UK and Aid in Yugoslavia, and £1,408,000 for consultancy advice on implementing the Postal Services Act;

(ii) the transfer of £1,583,000 in running costs and £190,000 in capital expenditure provision from the Department of Trade and Industry's Science Vote (Class IX, Vote 2);

(iii) the transfer of £700,000 in gross provision from British Trade International (Class IX, Vote 4) in respect of the expenditure of Simpler Trade Procedures Board (SITPRO);

(iv) the transfer of £105,000 in running costs from MAFF (Class X, Vote 2) for the administration of the Farm Business Advice Service;

(v) the transfer of £8,000,000 to Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Class III, Vote 1) to enable Advantage West Midlands to take forward work in connection with the Rover Task Force;

(vi) the transfer of £1,750,000 to British Trade International (Class IX, Vote 4) for claims for additional expenditure for Invest UK and for assistance to Yugoslavia;

(vii) the transfer of £500,000 to Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Class III, Vote 3) in respect of the Fuel Poverty Scheme;

(viii) the transfer of £75,000 to the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (Class IX, Vote 10) to cover the costs for implementing the Climate Change Levy exemption for electricity from renewable sources during this financial year;

(ix) an increase of £1,257,000 in running costs and capital expenditure provision in respect of expenditure incurred on behalf of the Postal Services Commission before 6 November 2000, offset by an equivalent amount in appropriations in aid;

(x) an increase of £2,097,000 in the gross expenditure provision, which is offset by an equivalent increase in appropriations in aid which relates to increased lease fees paid by the Department on capital assets and an increase in the sales of scientific equipment to Royal Bank Ltd.;

(xi) other minor movements within and between Sections of the Vote.

The net provision of Class IX, Vote 2, which falls within the Departmental Expenditure Limit, will be increased by £1,000, which results from:

(i) the take up of end year flexibility of £1,774,000 in current expenditure, which is offset by the transfer of £1,583,000 of running cost and £190,000 of capital expenditure from Sections I and J to the Department of Trade and Industry's Programmes and Administration Vote (Class IX, Vote 1);

(ii) increases in provision of £11,071,000 for Section K (Biotechnology and Biological Science Research Council); £3,900,000 for Section O (Natural Environment Research Council); £3,900,000 for Section S (Science Enterprise Challenge Scheme). These increases are offset by reductions in provision for Section F (University Challenge Fund); Section G (Synchrotron Radiation Source); and Section H (Cambridge/Massachusetts Institute of Technology);

(iii) further minor movements of programme provision between Vote Sections.

In addition, the Departmental Expenditure Limit of the Department of Trade and Industry will be increased by a further £29,300,000 through take up of part of the EYF entitlement of £147,680,000 announced for European Structural Funds expenditure for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions in Table 7 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper Cm 4812 published on 18 July 2000. This will meet DTI's share of the additional expenditure now forecast for 2000–01 on projects funded from the European Regional Development Fund.

Also, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the Departmental Expenditure Limit for British Trade International, Class IX, Vote 4, will be increased by £1,050,000 from £85,643,000 to £86,693,000. This gives effect to the following changes of provision relating to

(i) the transfer of £700,000 in gross provision to the Department of Trade and Industry (Class IX, Vote 1) in respect of the expenditure of the Simpler Trade Procedures Board (SITPRO);

(ii) the transfer of £1,750,000 from the Department of Trade and Industry (Class IX, Vote 1) for claims for additional expenditure for Invest UK (formerly the Invest in Britain Bureau) and to provide assistance to Yugoslavia via the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia Task Force.

In addition, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (Ofgem), Class IV, Vote 1) to fund work on the Climate Change Levy. Ofgem is also reflecting in its spring Supplementary Estimate, the transfer of functions, assets and liabilities from the Director General of Gas Supply and the Director General of Electricity Supply to the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority, under the provisions of the Utilities Act 2000. Provision is also made for payments to the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) in respect of the creation of the authority, and the transfer of responsibility for the Electricity Consumer Committees to Energywatch, which is funded from DTI's Programmes and Administration Vote (Class IX Vote 1).

All of the increases will either be offset by transfer or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Industrial Clusters

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy of support for industrial clusters. [149028]

Ms Hewitt: The Government recognise the importance of clusters and networks and are working closely with the RDAs to identify and remove barriers to their growth and development. In the White Paper "Opportunity for all in a world of change", published on 13 February, the Government set out their proposals to promote the growth of successful clusters by asking the RDAs to develop strategies for success for their regions, building on their existing strengths. They will do so with the assistance of a clusters map and consultants' report, "UK Business Clusters: A First Assessment", which was also published on 13 February.

Government funding for cluster development will continue to be provided to RDAs via the regional innovation fund. Continued work on clusters will be undertaken by Lord Sainsbury's clusters policy steering group.

Better Regulation Task Force

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 23 January 2001, Official Report, column 499W, when the index of regulation on small business will be published. [150475]

Mr. Byers: When a number of outstanding issues have been resolved.

Post Office Closures

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices closed in (a) the third quarter of 2000–01 and (b) cumulatively in 2000–01. [149888]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 12 February 2001]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for South-West Hertfordshire (Mr. Page) on 14 February 2001, Official Report, column 136W.

Textile Industry

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to deal with the difficulties faced by the textile industry in the United Kingdom. [149022]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced a package of support for the textiles and clothing industry in the form of a 12-point plan on 6 June 2000. This was an initial response to the report of the textile and clothing strategy group and included:

The establishment of a major new supply chain initiative for the industry;

Temporary relaxation of the rules for trade fair support to enable more textiles and clothing companies to receive assistance;

The establishment of more projects to help the technical textiles sector;

A major programme of re-skilling for the textiles and clothing industry;

Support for up and coming new designers.

In addition, the Government provide a wide range of support for industry, including regional selective assistance and SMART awards. This support is available to textiles and clothing companies.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the programme of visits to central and eastern Europe planned for Ministers in his Department. [149011]

Ms Hewitt: My noble Friend the Minister for Science will visit Poland on 19–20 February. The overseas visit programme for DTI Ministers for the second half of this year is currently under consideration.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson), will be visiting Lithuania in March on trade and investment issues.

Goodyear (Wolverhampton)

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from Goodyear Wolverhampton in respect of Government assistance; and if he will make a statement. [149001]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has received no representations from Goodyear in Wolverhampton in respect of Government assistance. Currently, the management and unions at Goodyear are involved in discussions that offer the prospect of improving the cost base of the plant.

EU Trade Balance

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on trends in the trade balance with the European Union. [149025]

Mr. Caborn: The EU is the most important market for UK exports of goods and services. The EU accounts for over 50 per cent. of total UK exports. During 2000, the UK's bilateral trade (in goods) with the rest of the EU was broadly in balance. This contrasts with a modest deficit which prevailed for much of the 1990s.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what resources are available to enforce the working time directive. [149031]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The working time regulations, which implement the European working time directive, provide for the entitlements to daily, weekly and in-work rest and paid annual leave to be enforced through the Employment Tribunals. The working time limits are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and local authorities. There is a network of local authority enforcement officers who enforce the working time regulations and other health and safety legislation. The HSE have regulatory teams based throughout the country, which include specialist working time officers who work solely on working time enforcement. Any significant risks to health and safety revealed by their investigations are referred to HSE inspectors.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking in relation to access to offshore oil and gas infrastructure to promote exploration and development in the United Kingdom continental shelf. [151187]

Mr. Hain: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of a consultation document from my Department dealing with access to oil and gas infrastructure, which:

consults on the effectiveness of the industry's code of practice on third party access to offshore infrastructure; seeks evidence of any anti-competitive behaviour in relation to third party access to oil and gas infrastructure; provides informal guidance which the industry has sought to meet a requirement of the 1998 gas directive to publish main commercial conditions for access to onshore gas terminals; makes proposals for publication of guiding principles on the use of legal powers to settle disputes over access by third parties to oil and gas upstream infrastructure, which will reduce industry uncertainty about the regulatory regime.

My Department's proposals in the consultation document are intended to encourage a pro-competitive environment in relation to third party access to oil and gas transportation and processing.

We believe it is important to establish whether there are any barriers to development of new and marginal fields and, if so, to address them. The consultation on the effectiveness of the industry's voluntary code of practice gives an opportunity to see if the negotiation and level of third party tariffs is causing problems. If, as a result of this greater clarity, future tariffs are better aligned with costs, there will be better use of the UK's oil and gas infrastructure, which will increase the exploitation of our reserves, enhancing security of supply for consumers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions (Overseas Residents)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones), of 15 January 2001, Official Report, column 79W, if he will break down by each country of residence the number of pensioners living abroad who receive (a) a frozen pension, and (b) an annually up-rated pension. [148504]

Mr. Rooker: Retirement pension can normally be paid anywhere. However, annual upratings have never been generally paid abroad. The exception is those countries with which we have reciprocal arrangements, that is EEA countries and countries covered by the appropriate legislation.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will alter the formula for calculating interest on capital in determining an individual's eligibility for Council Tax Benefit so that it more accurately reflects the interest that might reasonably be expected to be earned from that capital; and if he will make a statement. [147578]

Angela Eagle: We have already made arrangements to increase the lower capital limit from £3,000 to £6,000 from April 2001 for those on the Minimum Income Guarantee, and for those aged 60 or over on Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. This is part of our commitment to continue the drive to end pensioner poverty. With the introduction of the proposed Pension Credit from 2003, we propose to abolish both the current capital limits and the assumed £1 a week rate of return for every £250 of capital, and to replace this with a system that ensures that those who have saved are rewarded for their efforts in their retirement.

At the same time, we will also be looking at the treatment of income and capital in assessing entitlement to support for working-age families, including those on Council Tax Benefit, as part of our programme of modernising the social security and tax credit system.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Special Advisers working for him will relinquish their posts when the next general election is called. [149309]

Mr. Darling: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer from my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in Halton have received the £200 Winter Fuel Payment. [150292]

Mr. Rooker: Winter Fuel Payments are made on a household basis. For the latest information available on the number of payments made in Halton, I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 31 January 2001, Official Report, column 238W.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many winter fuel applications were received from those aged 60 years or over on 19 September 1999; how many were received from 24 September 2000 to 31 January 2001; and how many had been processed by 31 January 2001; [150590]

(2) what the processing time is of applications made for a Winter Fuel Payment in respect of this and previous years; [150592]

(3) how many winter fuel applications were received between April 2000 and 22 September 2000; how many were received (a) from those reaching the age of 60 years between 27 September 1999 and 24 September 2000 and (b) from those aged 60 years or over on 19 September 1999; and what was the total processed in both categories. [150589]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of Winter Fuel Payments is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Robert Maclennan, dated 15 February 2001:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking how many Winter Fuel applications were received from those aged 60 or over on 19 September 1999; how many were received from 24 September 2000 to 31 January 2001; and how many had been processed by 31 January 2001. How Many Winter Fuel applications were received between April 2000 and 22 September 2000; how many were received (a) from those reaching the age of 60 years between 27 September 1999 and 24 September 2000 and (b) from those aged 60 years or over on 19 September 1999; and what was the total processed in both categories. Also what is the processing time of applications made for a winter fuel payment in respect of this and previous years.

The information is not available in the format requested. Information that is available is as follows.

Between April 2000 and 22 September 2000 1,185,131 claims forms were received and between 24 September 2000 and 31 January 2001 156,104 claims forms were received.

As of 31 January 2001, approximately 1.1 million claims in respect of previous years and approximately 1.2 million winter 2000 claims had been processed. The total number of claims processed is higher than the number of forms received as a single claim form can potentially be a claim for both a Winter 2000 payment and payment for previous years.

A straightforward Winter Fuel claim takes up to 10 days to process from the date of receipt by the Department.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. James Little will receive his Winter Fuel Payment. [150346]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of Winter Fuel Payments is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 14 February 2001:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary question regarding Mr. James Little and when he will receive his Winter Fuel Payment (WFP).

My enquiries into this matter have revealed that Mr. Little had not been sent his WFP at the correct time. This was due to a clerical oversight and I have written to Mr. Little to apologise for any inconvenience caused by the delay.

I have, after the matter was brought to my attention, taken steps to ensure that Mr. Little's payment has been dealt with promptly and I can now confirm that it was posted (by first class mail) on 9 February.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will undertake additional national advertising to alert men who on 24 September 2000 were over 60 years of age of their possible entitlement to Winter Fuel Payments for this and past years; and if he will make a statement. [150591]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the right hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Morgan) on 15 January 2001, Official Report, column 79W.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of retirement pensioners who are expected to be entitled to the pension credit; and of those, how many are also expected to be (a) entitled to (i) Housing Benefit, (ii) Council Tax Benefit and (iii) both and (b) liable to pay income tax. [150066]

Mr. Rooker: Over half of all pensioners, 5.5 million individual pensioners and pensioner couples, will benefit from the pension credit.

The detailed design and coverage of the pension credit are being considered in the light of the current consultation exercise.

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retirement pensioners are currently (a) entitled to income-related benefits but not liable to income tax and (b) entitled to income-related benefits and liable to pay income tax. [150067]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available.

War Pension Scheme

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the seven-year rule relating to the war pension scheme was introduced; and how it was announced to the House. [150532]

Mr. Bayley: The seven-year rule was introduced in May 1947 as an amendment to the 1946 Royal Warrant under Command Paper 7124.

Far East Prisoners of War

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many (a) former UK military personnel and (b) civilians imprisoned by the Japanese during the second world war have applied for the ex-gratia payment; and how many have been refused in each category; [150577]

(2) how many civilian internees imprisoned by the Japanese during the second world war, who at the time were not UK citizens but who subsequently were given British nationality, have been refused the ex-gratia payment. [150578]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not yet available. Figures will be available in due course.

Mobility Benefit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security from what date applications can be lodged for the higher rate mobility component for children aged three and four years; and who is entitled to this benefit from 9 April. [149914]

Mr. Bayley: I refer the right hon. Member to the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Helen Jackson) on 9 January 2001, Official Report, column 477W. From 9 April 2001, the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance will be extended to severely disabled three and four-year-old children who are unable, or virtually unable, to walk.

Claims can be made at any time on or after 9 January. Almost all the children most likely to benefit from this welcome change are already receiving DLA in respect of their care needs, and they will all be sent a letter by the end of February inviting them to apply for the higher rate mobility component.

Child Support

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents with care who are eligible for maintenance payments through the Child Support Agency receive the Working Families Tax Credit; [149850]

(2) how many parents with care in receipt of maintenance payments through the Child Support Agency are non-resident parents who are liable to pay maintenance for children of previous relationships. [149851]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

There are 234,000 parents with care with a current full maintenance assessment who are receiving the Working Families Tax Credit. This represents around 24 per cent. of all such parents with care on the Child Support Agency's books.

Notes:

1. Information on the number of parents with care who are also non-resident parents is not available since there is no facility on the existing child support computer system for linking data in this way.

2. Figures are taken from 5 per cent. scan of the Child Support Computer System and are rounded to the nearest hundred.

Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social security appeal tribunal hearings concerning cohabitation or living together as man and wife cases there were in each of the last five years; and in what percentage the tribunal found in favour of the client. [149450]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Appeals heard in the periods shown with an issue code of "Living Together" from 1 October 1998

	Appeals cleared at hearing	Appeals decided in favour of the appellant

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for Scotland and each local authority area in Scotland (a) the weekly median earnings and (b) the amount of median earnings for those in the first and ninth deciles for (i) all manual, (ii) all non-manual and (iii) all workers. [146247]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Alasdair Morgan, dated 15 February 2001:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question on weekly earnings for workers in Scotland and the local authorities in Scotland (146247).

The New Earnings Survey (NES) can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. However, the NES has incomplete coverage of those on low pay because the sample is limited to people earning above the income tax threshold. The release of NES data is restricted to figures that are derived from a sufficiently large sample of employees, and have an acceptable level of accuracy. I have provided the available data for Scotland and the unitary authorities in Scotland in the attached tables, only where the samples are large enough and have an acceptable level of accuracy. These are based on the 2000 NES, the latest survey for which data are available.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average weekly earnings are (a) including and (b) excluding overtime, for part-time workers in (i) Scotland, (ii) each of the local unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (iii) the UK, broken down by (A) men and (B) women in (1) manual employment, (2) non-manual employment and (3) all employment. [145664]

Mr. Andrew Smith: This information falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Dominic Grieve, dated 15 February 2001:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your question on weekly earnings for workers in Scotland, the unitary authorities in Scotland and the United Kingdom (145664).

The New Earnings Survey (NES) can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. However, the NES has incomplete coverage of those on low pay, because the sample is largely limited to people earning above the income tax threshold. This under-coverage will particularly affect results for part-time workers. The release of NES data is restricted to figures that are derived from a sufficiently large sample of employees, and have an acceptable level of accuracy. The data for the United Kingdom is not yet available. I have provided the available data for Scotland, the unitary authorities in Scotland and Great Britain in the attached tables, where the sample sizes are large enough and have an acceptable level of accuracy. These are based on the 2000 NES, the latest survey for which data are available.

Pensioners (Tax Returns)

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many retirement pensioners completed a tax return in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what proportion they represent of total retirement pensioners. [150064]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that about 1.3 million (around 12 per cent.) pensioners compieted a tax return for 1998–99.

Taxation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he plans to be the national revenue from taxation in each of the next five years. [150119]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Forecasts of tax revenues were published in Tables B8 and B11 of the pre-Budget report. Updated forecasts will be published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there are any proposals to amend the Inland Revenue Departmental Expenditure Limit and Running Costs Limit for 2000–01. [151115]

[illegible] Primarolo: The Inland Revenue Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be decreased by £411,000 from £2,230,571,000 to £2,230,160,000. The Inland Revenue Running Cost Limit will also be reduced by £2,911,000 from £2,373,579,000 to £2,370,668,000.

The reduction in DEL and running cost limit reflect an inter-departmental transfer of £450,000 running costs provision to Customs and Excise to enable Customs to meet its main commitments from the Grabiner report into the hidden economy. This is partially offset by a £39,000 transfer from the Department of Social Development (Northern Ireland) for a bookkeeping service they provide in respect of the national insurance fund.

In addition, there is a further reduction in Inland Revenue's Running Cost Limit of £2,500,000 in respect of an intra-departmental transfer to the Valuation Office agency, to deal with more appeals than anticipated arising from the 2000 revaluation and increased legal costs.

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to Her Majesty's Treasury's Departmental Expenditure Limit and Running Costs Limits for 2000–01. [151114]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XVI Vote 1 (HM Treasury) and class XVI Vote 2 (HM Treasury: UK Coinage), the Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £12,940,000 from £264,023,000 to £276,963,000.

The increase for Class XVI Vote 1 (HM Treasury) is the net effect of the take up of running costs EYF (£3,400,000) to meet the additional costs of the Treasury's planned programme of work, and to cover the custody charges for holding collateral on debt management office's behalf generated as part of the investment of the Spectrum proceeds; provides for the transfer of provision from other current to running costs for payments under the framework agreement for Partnerships UK (£4,000,000); and an increase in running costs of £540,000 to draw down the moneys allocated from the civil service modernisation fund for the Royal Mint Trading Fund. The running costs limit for HM Treasury will accordingly be increased by £7,940,000 from £64,064,000 to £72,004,000.

The increase for Class XVI Vote 2 (HM Treasury: UK Coinage) is the net effect of the take up of other current EYF (£9,000,000), to meet the increased demand for UK coins.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there are any proposals to amend the Office for National Statistics Departmental Expenditure Limit and Running Costs Limit for 2000–01. [151113]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XVI, Vote 12 (Office for National Statistics), the DEL will increase by £5,000,000 from £135,166,000 to £140,166,000 and the Running Costs Limit will increase by £5,000,000 from £132,161,000 to £137,161,000.

The changes in Vote 12 are the result of the take up of £5,000,000 of the end-year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury in Table 7 of the 1999–2000 Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper (CM 4812) published on 18 July 2000.

The overall increase is made up of increases in running costs provision in Section A of the Vote of £5,000,000; increases in running costs provision in Section B of £2,500,000 to reflect increased demand for certificate sales and surveys, which will be fully met by additional receipts of £2,500,000; and increases in anticipated EC receipts in Section C of £500,000.

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise Departmental Expenditure Limit or Running Costs Limit for 2000–01. [151112]

Dawn Primarolo: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XVI, Vote 4 (HM Customs and Excise: administration), the Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) will be increased by £9,319,000 from £886,858,000 to £896,177,000 and the Running Costs Limit will be decreased by £9,219,000 from £860,957,000 to £851,738,000.

The increase in DEL consists of:

an additional £450,000 running costs transferred from joint provision held by the Inland Revenue to implement recommendations of the Grabiner report into the hidden economy; an additional £1,550,000 running costs from Customs' share of the civil service modernisation fund; and an additional £1,538,000 other current and £6,000,000 capital from the take up of part of the Department's entitlement to end-year flexibility.

These increases are partly offset by:

a decrease in running costs of £99,000 transferred to the Home Office for development funding for drug action teams.

The Department is also proposing a number of other changes within its DEL, including increases in expenditure sub-heads which are entirely matched and offset by additional appropriations in aid, as well as virement of £11,000,000 from running costs and £3,000,000 from capital to cover increased legal and investigative expenditure.

There are no changes to the overall levels of public expenditure as a result of this Supplementary Estimate.

Brewing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many jobs in brewing there were in each region and nation of the United Kingdom for each year since 1995. [147009]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 24 January 2001]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Jim Cousins dated 15 February 2001:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your question about the number of people employed in brewing in each region of the UK since 1995 (147009).

The Annual Employment Survey (AES) provides information on employment for 1995 to 1998 for each region and nation of Great Britain. The AES may be accessed from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library.

Urban Migration

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the net migration from urban and suburban to rural areas of England and Wales in the past 10 years. [150359]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Colin Pickthall, dated 15 February 2001:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about estimates of net migration from urban and suburban to rural areas of England and Wales over the last ten years. (150359)

The Office of National Statistics produces quarterly estimates of migration using the movement of NHS doctor's between the former Family Health Service Authorities. They should not be regarded as an exact measure of migration particularly because there is variation in the delay between a person moving and registering with a new doctor.

The attached table shows migration from metropolitan areas (including London) to shire county areas. Migration estimates are only available for the last ten years for these administrative areas.

Movements[1] between London and metropolitan districts and the Shire counties of England and Wales during the years 1989 to 1999

HEALTH

Pharmacists (Reimbursement)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions during each of the last three years pharmacists were denied prescription reimbursement by the NHS because they had submitted forms for prescription charge exemption that had been erroneously completed by patients; and what was the estimated cost of these erroneously completed forms to pharmacists in each of those years. [149063]

Ms Stuart: No pharmacy contractors have been denied reimbursement because they have submitted prescription forms which have been incorrectly completed by patients claiming exemption from charges.

Pharmacists are required to collect a charge in respect of each chargeable item supplied unless a declaration of entitlement to exemption or remission is completed on the prescription form by or on behalf of the patient. This has been a requirement since 1968.

Pharmacists are also required to sort forms into "exempt" and "non-exempt" groups before submitting them to the Prescription Pricing Authority (PPA) for payment. When a form is submitted as exempt from charges but without a completed declaration, it will be treated as non-exempt. Forms submitted as exempt but showing a charge are also treated as non-exempt. Forms submitted as non-exempt are treated as exempt if they bear a completed declaration. In each case these forms are processed according to the declaration, as required by law, rather than according to the group in which the pharmacist has submitted them.

A temporary concession has been introduced for prescriptions dispensed from June 2000 onwards to encourage pharmacists and their staff to improve the completion rate. Under the concession, no adjustment is made in respect of forms for patients aged less than 16 or 60 or over on which the patient's age has been printed by the prescriber, even if the declaration required by law has not been completed. In conjunction with this, information is now routinely provided to pharmacists by the PPA about the number of forms which have been submitted as exempt but treated as non-exempt; which would have been treated as non-exempt but for the concession; or have been treated as exempt when submitted as non-exempt.

Information about forms submitted as exempt without a completed declaration of exemption prior to June 2000 is not available. Information about exempt and non-exempt forms since then is in the table.

	June	July	August	September
Items on forms submitted as exempt without a declaration	118,013	107,911	105,822	104,025
Items to which concession applied for patients under 16 or 60 and over	37,965	35,834	36,583	35,290
Charges deducted from payments—line one less line two x £6.00 (£)	480,288	432,462	415,436	412,410
Total items dispensed	45,049,254	42,314,572	43,062,881	42,518,754
Percentage of items on forms submitted as exempt without a completed declaration—line one/line four	0.26	0.26	0.25	0.24

If previous patterns of submitting forms without declarations of exemption were similar, then adjustments to payments would have been around £7 million in 1997–98, £7.4 million in 1998–99 and £7.8 million in 1999–2000.

Older People (Services)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out for the years (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04 how the £1.4 billion announced in the NHS plan for services for older people will be allocated; how much will be available through (i) NHS bodies and (ii) personal social services; and of the sums allocated through social services how much is made up of specific grants and how much is SSA. [150030]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 12 February 2001]: As stated at paragraph 15.2 of the NHS plan, from 2004 we are making available annually an additional £1.4 billion for new investment in health and social services for older people. The disposition of the funding for services to elderly people, including intermediate care and related services, within the national health service and the personal social services has been set out in two circulars, copies of which are available in the Library. They are:

Health Service Circular (2001) 01/Local Authority Circular (2001) 01; and together with a reply from my noble Friend Lord Hunt of Kings Heath to Lord Lipsey on 12 October 2000, Official Report, House of Lords, column WA51.

Organ Donation

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organs were offered for donation for each of the last 12 months for which information is available. [150100]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is in the table.

Note:

These are counts of separate whole organs offered from cadaveric donors. Some were not accepted and used and some were offered in combination (double lungs, heart/lungs) and livers in some cases were subsequently split or reduced.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to amend the Department of Health and Food Standards Agency Departmental Expenditure Limit and Running Costs Limit for 2000–01. [151196]

Mr. Milburn: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class II, Votes 1 and 2, the overall Departmental Expenditure Limit for Class II, which includes the Department of Health and the Foods Standard Agency, will be increased by £196,888,000 from £45,090,755,000 to £45,287,643,000.

Of this increase the Department of Health Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £196,888,000 from £44,997,888,000 to £45,194,776,000. The increase is the net effect of changes to Class II, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) of £156,025,000 made up of £74,977,000 in respect of take up of end year flexibility, (£35,217,000) for capital and (£39,760,000) for family health services as set out in Table 7 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper Cm4812, published on 18 July 2000, and £82,214,000 Trust end year flexibility; transfers from Northern Ireland of £1,373,000 (£1,307,000) for Out of Area Treatments and (£66,000) for contributions to medical training costs of Royal Colleges; £144,000 from the Scottish Executive for contributions to medical training costs of Royal Colleges; £92,000 from the National Assembly for Wales for contributions to medical training costs of Royal Colleges and £88,000 from Class III, Vote 1 (Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions) for the Rough Sleepers Unit; partially offset by transfers of £512,000 to the National Assembly for Wales for Out of Area Treatments; £1,065,000 to Class XII, Vote 2 (Department of Social Security: administration) for operating costs of the Road Traffic Accident element of the Compensation Recovery Unit; £536,000 to Class IV, Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) (£221,000) for Drug Action Teams Development funding and (£315,000) for Drugs Action Teams Recruitment Initiative and £750,000 to Class I, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) for the Institute of Psychiatry new research facilities.

An increase of £1,352,000 for Class II, Vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) is the net effect of transfers (detailed below) and the take-up of £4,000,000 (running costs) end year flexibility as set out in Table 7 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper Cm4812, published on 18 July 2000. Transfers of £1,106,000 from the Scottish Executive (£141,000 running costs) for reserved health bodies; £19,000 (running costs) from Northern Ireland for reserved health bodies; £459,000 from Class IV, Vote 1 (Home Office administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) £130,000 (running costs) for the Youth Justice Board inspections and (£329,000) for drug grants and drug related initiatives; £200,000 from Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) for the teenage pregnancy campaign; offset by net transfers of £464,000 to Class X, Vote 1 (Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food) (£1,118,000) for the BSE Inquiry, less (£654,000) for research into BSE; and £388,000 to Class 1, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) (£455,000) for the drug advisers project, less (£67,000) for Protection of Children's Act Tribunal costs; and transfers of £3,000,000 to Class V, Vote 1 (Lord Chancellor's Department) for start up costs for the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Services (CAFCASS) and £580,000 to Class III, Vote 1 (Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions) for the Rough Sleepers budget.

Within the departmental DEL there is also a net transfer of £308,000 from Class II, Vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) to Class II, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) of which £500,000 is reclassified as running costs following agreement by HM Treasury that Mental Health Review Tribunal clerk costs should no longer be classified as programme costs. There is no increase in Mental Health Review Tribunal costs as a result of this change.

The Department of Health's gross Running Cost Limit will be increased by £4,790,000 from £302,490,000 to £307,280,000 as detailed above.

The external finance limit for NHS trusts has decreased by £140,242,000 from £451,000,000 to £310,758,000 comprising of a reduction in voted trust loans of £173,853,000 partially offset by a take up of £33,611,000 (non-voted) from HM Treasury for Public Finance Initiative schemes.

The external finance limit for the Medicines Control Agency has increased by £5,900,000 from £700,000 to £6,600,000 in respect of take up of end year flexibility entitlement as mentioned above.

There are no changes to the Food Standards Agency element of the DEL.

All increases will either be offset by transfers to or from other Departmental Expenditure Limits (detailed) or charges to the DEL reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the expenditure on insurance against medical negligence claims by (a) North Bristol NHS trust and (b) all NHS hospital trusts in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [150566]

Ms Stuart: The clinical negligence scheme for trusts (CNST) commenced on 1 April 1995. This is not insurance, but rather a risk-pooling arrangement within the national health service administered by the NHS Litigation Authority. The size of an individual trust's contribution will depend on a number of factors including their claims history and excess level.

North Bristol NHS trust's net contribution to the CNST for 2001–02 was £342,956 with an excess level of £50,000; and for 2000–01 was £382,369 with an excess level of £100,000. This trust formed as a result of a merger between Frenchay and Southmead NHS trusts in April 1999, and so no directly comparable information is available before that date.

Figures for CNST contributions for all NHS trusts are available for each year back to 1995–96. Tables setting out this information will be placed in the Library in due course.

As the CNST did not exist before April 1995, no comparable figures are available before that date.

Correspondence

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a reply will be sent to the letters from the hon. Member for Maldon and East Chelmsford to his Department, dated 11 September 2000 and 26 October 2000. [150593]

Ms Stuart: A reply to the hon. Member was sent on 12 February.

Consultants (North Cumbria)

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are for consultants, by specialty, in hospitals in the North Cumbria health authority area; and if he will make a statement. [150459]

Mr. Hutton: The national health service trusts within the North Cumbria health authority currently have 11 vacancies for consultants. The Carlisle Hospitals NHS trust has vacancies for consultants in oncology, orthodontics, anaesthetics, histopathology, clinical radiology and neurology. The North Lakeland healthcare NHS trust has a consultant vacancy in child and adolescent mental health services. The West Cumbria Health Care NHS trust has consultant vacancies in endocrinology, gastroenterology, paediatrics and breast surgery.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals there are to amend the Departmental Expenditure Limits and Running Costs Limits for the Northern Ireland Office expenditure and the Northern Ireland Executive for 2000–01. [151005]

Dr. Reid: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XV, Vote 1 the Northern Ireland Office Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–2001 will be increased by £16,667,000 from £1,121,564,000 to £1,138,231,000. The running costs limit will be increased by £12,147,000 from £264,861,000 to £277,008.000.

The increase reflects the take-up of end year flexibility of £20,407,000 (£9,340,000 running costs, £10,263,000 other current and £804,000 capital), an increase of £140,000 in respect of Housing Benefit for occupants of bail hostels, £215,000 from the civil service modernisation fund, £610,000 from the capital modernisation fund, net transfers of £4,702,000 to the Northern Ireland Executive and a transfer of £3,000 to the Home Office (Class IV, Vote 1).

The Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Northern Ireland Executive 2000–01 will be increased by £172,993,000 from £5,199,903,000 to £5,372,896,000. The increases reflect:

The take up of end-year flexibility of £147,554,000;

£166,000 allocated in the pre-Budget report for e-learning;

Additional provision of £5,556,000 allocated in the pre-Budget report for Schools;

£8,826,000 for support to the farming industry;

£66,000 as part of the recently announced package to improve flood defences;

£916,000 from the invest to save budget;

£6,500,000 to enable a programme of welfare reform to be undertaken;

net transfers of £4,702,000 from the NIO;

transfer of £10,000 to DETR;

transfer of £1,392,000 to the Department of Health; transfer of £99,000 from the Department of Social Security; transfer of £266,000 from the Department of Trade and Industry for the Pheonix fund;

additional funding of £229,000 for the Pheonix fund; transfer of £39,000 to the Inland Revenue;

transfers of £193,000 to MAFF; transfer of £252,000 to the Scottish Executive; and transfer of £1,000 to the National Assembly for Wales.

The Northern Ireland Executive's welfare to work provision increases by £1,753,000 from £74,846,000 to £76,599,000.

These increases will be offset by a charge on the Departmental Expenditure Limit reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Prisoner Releases

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of each terrorist organisation were released under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998; and how many of those have subsequently been (a) arrested and charged with offences of a terrorist nature, (b) arrested for other criminal activity and (c) convicted of activity of the nature set out in (a) and (b). [150306]

Mr. Ingram: Information is held, for management purposes, in relation to the perceived paramilitary association of prisoners in Northern Ireland. The following table sets out details of the perceived association of the 434 individuals released under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998.

Details are held only in relation to those early release prisoners who come to the attention of the police while they are still under licence. At 14 February 2001, 18 of the 434 persons released under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 were arrested and charged with further offences while under licence.

Two early release prisoners were charged with offences of a terrorist nature and 16 were arrested for other criminal activity. Neither of the two cases in the former category have yet been dealt with by the courts. Of the other 16, eight were convicted, three had their charges withdrawn or were found not guilty and five have yet to have the charges against them resolved.

Hospital Violence

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions the RUC have been called to the accident and emergency and casualty departments of each hospital in Northern Ireland in (a) each month in 2000 and (b) January 2001 to deal with incidents of violence by patients and their visitors towards hospital staff and damage to equipment. [150294]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Transport Expenditure

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the outturn prices were of (a) public investment expenditure, (b) public resource expenditure and (c) private investment in transport in (i) strategic roads, (ii) rail, (iii) local transport, (iv) London and (v) other transport areas using the same criteria for these figures as was used in constructing Table A3 in Transport 2010: The 10 Year Plan in each year from 1987 to 1992. [144093]

Mr. Hill: It is not possible to provide this information for the years 1987 to 1992 using exactly the same criteria as was used to construct Table A3 in Transport 2010: The 10 Year Plan. However the table presents the information using similar criteria.

Public expenditure and private investment in transport (1987–88 to 1991–92)

	1987–88	1988–89	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92

[1] Figures may not total due to rounding.
[2] For 1987–88 to 1989–90, public expenditure in London consists of expenditure on London Underground only. Other public expenditure in London is included in strategic roads and local transport.
[3] The negative public resource numbers in 1988–89 and 1989–90 for London reflect the contribution in public capital investment provided by London Transport's farebox revenue.
[4] Excludes private investment of £110/331/453 million by Eurotunnel plc for the period 1987–88 to 1989–90.

Waste

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his policy is with regard to importing radioactive waste from overseas countries; and if he will make a statement. [146045]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 18 January 2001]: The Government's policy is that radioactive waste should not be imported or exported from the UK. Subject to approval by the Environment Agency, some exceptions can, however, be made. These are for the recovery of reusable materials provided that this is the genuine prime purpose; for treatment that will make subsequent storage and disposal of the waste more manageable; for treatment and disposal of spent sources which were manufactured in the UK; or waste from small users (such as hospitals). Such imports should only be considered until the earliest time that the exporting countries can feasibly be expected to put in place their own treatment facilities.

Since 1976, all contracts to reprocess foreign spent fuel have included an option for the return of the resulting waste to the country of origin. As far as high level waste is concerned, this should be as soon as practicable after vitrification.

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many waste management licences have been revoked because of breaches of the Environment Protection Act 1990 in the last six years. [148723]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Since the establishment of the Environment Agency in April 1996, six waste management licences have been fully revoked under section 38(4) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Agency's powers of revocation may be used in the circumstances set out in section 38(1) of the 1990 Act. Data on licence revocations before April 1996 are not held centrally.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the draft climate change levy negotiated agreements for public scrutiny before they are signed. [148911]

Mr. Meacher: The draft climate change agreement templates are available on the DETR website at www.environment.detr.gov.uk/ccl/index.htm. In addition, the sector-level agreements will be published as soon as they are agreed and approved.

Fylde Bathing Waters (EU Legal Action)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he is making to the EU Environment Commissioner to dissuade her from taking legal action against the UK over the state of the bathing waters off the Fylde coast; and if he will make a statement. [148759]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 6 February 2001]: The European Commission has announced its decision to initiate proceedings before the European Court of Justice. In the 2000 bathing season, seven out of the nine bathing waters on the Fylde coast passed the mandatory bacteria coliform standards of the Bathing Water Directive, compared with only three passing in 1999. This rate of improvement gives us optimism that there will be full compliance shortly and every effort is being directed towards achieving this. I have informed the Commissioner of this.

Rail Network (Merseyside)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on planned investment in the rail network on Merseyside. [149759]

Mr. Hill: Our Ten Year Transport Plan earmarked £60 billion of funding for the railways. The current franchise replacement process will also secure additional capacity, a step-change in customer service and a sustained improvement in performance through higher levels of investment. A new 'Northern' franchise, including First North Western services, is currently being negotiated. The Merseyrail franchise will be replaced in due course. The Strategic Rail Authority has recently negotiated a two-year extension to the Merseyrail franchise, securing an additional three coaches for morning peak services in the autumn and a further three coaches in the summer of 2002.

School Transport

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to issue guidance to local education authorities on the use of vehicles specifically designed to carry standing passengers for the transportation of school children. [149808]

Mr. Hill: I have no plans to issue guidance to local education authorities about the use of vehicles specifically designed to carry standing passengers for the transportation of school children. All buses have to comply with specified safety standards, which include the requirement to have seat belts fitted in minibuses and coaches when groups of children are carried on organised trips. But buses that fall outside these definitions (mostly those that can also carry standing passengers) are not required by regulations to have seat belts. Ultimately it is for the schools and local education authorities to ensure the vehicles they will be using are appropriate for the type of journeys planned, including if they should be fitted with seat belts, regardless of whether or not the regulations require belts.

Ministerial Visits

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the official engagements of his Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Oldham West and Royton (Mr. Meacher), for Monday 5 February indicating, for each event, the time it commenced and the constituency in which it took place. [149812]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 9 February 2001]: In my capacity as Minister for the Environment I visited the following in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton).

14:00 Welbourne Junior School

14:45 Jack Hunt Secondary School

15:45 The Boardwalks Nature Reserve.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the Ministers in his Department who visited any of the constituencies which are in the Peterborough Unitary Authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001, indicating in each case (a) the date of the visit, (b) the constituencies included in the visit and (c) if the local hon. Member met the Minister. [151024]

Ms Beverley Hughes: There was one such visit. On 5 February 2001, my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment met the hon. Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton) when he visited her constituency.

SSSI, Hindhead

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the Director-General of the National Trust concerning damage to the SSSI in the Hindhead area. [150304]

Mr. Hill: The National Trust were represented on the Steering Group of the recently completed road based study of the A3 at Hindhead but there have not been any discussions recently with the Director-General of the Trust.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer of 7 February 2001, Official Report, columns 532–33W, if he will quantify the indirect allowance made in the SSA for each fire authority in England for (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02. [150183]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The fire SSA is calibrated on 1990–91 expenditure data of fire authorities. This forms the basis of the underlying fire SSA formula. This expenditure data include the cost of responding the fire calls. However, these data are not detailed enough to identify what element of the base year expenditure relates to specific incidents, such as rescue activities and flooding incidents on inland waterways. It is, therefore, not possible to quantify the indirect allowance made to each fire authority for such specific incidents.

Coach Services (North Wales)

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from National Express Limited about their coach services along the North Wales coast; and if he will make a statement. [150202]

Mr. Hill: My Department has received no representations from National Express Limited in this regard, although of course I am aware from other correspondence of my hon. Friend's concern on this.

I am also aware that the National Assembly for Wales has asked the Welsh Transport Forum to consider the role that might be played by a network of long-distance express bus and coach services.

Turnham Green Tube Station

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure that Piccadilly Line trains stop regularly at Turnham Green tube station during the period of work that will disrupt District Line services to that station; and if he will make a statement. [150397]

Mr. Hill: This is an operational matter for London Underground (LUL), but Derek Smith, Managing Director of LUL, has kept in close touch with me about LUL's plans for the handling of the District Line closure between Earl's Court and High Street Kensington—i.e. the closure which will affect services to Turnham Green station. The Government recognise the pressing need to carry out vital safety works on the District Line, which must inevitably cause disruption to the system, but believe it is important that LUL continue to deliver the best service that can be provided to their customers in the circumstances.

LUL's forward planning for the closure involved a wide ranging examination of options. The work aimed in particular to take account of the impact on all the customers who would be affected, and the options considered included the scope for stopping Piccadilly Line trains at Turnham Green station. In other related work, LUL have also been working with Transport for London and London Buses to prepare detailed plans for alternative transport; and they have put in place a wide range of publicity measures to ensure that customers are fully informed about the implications of the closure and how to avoid its effects.

LUL have explained that in reaching conclusions about the best way to handle the closure they have sought to draw on the lessons of past closures, including the closure for similar work in 1999 of the adjacent Circle Line between Gloucester Road and High Street Kensington. I understand that one of the key lessons from that closure was that changes to timetables should be as simple as possible and as near to existing services as possible. Otherwise, attempts to amend a series of interlocking timetables can have the effect of magnifying the effect of the disruption, thereby inconveniencing a much greater proportion of customers overall.

LUL concluded that stopping Piccadilly Line services at Turnham Green station throughout the period of the District Line closure would cause unacceptably high levels of disruption to the Piccadilly Line, ultimately spreading the delay and inconvenience to an even greater number of customers across not one but two of the busiest lines. Instead, LUL believe that running the Piccadilly line reliably according to its existing timetable will make the most effective contribution to addressing the problem.

However, LUL have confirmed that they have set up a number of new arrangements. For the District Line as a whole they have set up a team to monitor closely the effects of the closure throughout the period. To date, robust operational planning has meant that service levels have been maintained in accordance with LUL's plans. Within that wider framework, special operational arrangements apply at Turnham Green. Extra staff will be in place on platforms to monitor the pressures on the station including any overcrowding. In the case of serious service problems on the District Line, local managers and operational staff will have discretion to instruct Piccadilly Line trains to stop temporarily at the station to relieve congestion; indeed, these plans have been operating for some days now and LUL tell me that they have already made use a number of times of the facility to stop Piccadilly Line trains on this basis. I understand from LUL that they are offering the best service they can realistically and safely provide throughout the period of this essential closure.

Departmental Policies (Bristol, East)

Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Bristol, East constituency, the effects on Bristol of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150549]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Since May 1997 my Department has introduced and developed a variety of initiatives which will help regenerate the more disadvantaged areas of Bristol. Those in my hon. Friend's constituency include:

New Deal for Communities

£50 million of additional Government funding under the New Deal for Communities programme to support regeneration of Barton Hill and surrounding localities.

So far there has been a 20 per cent. reduction in crime in the area, a measurable increase in street cleanliness as part of Project Pathfinder and the Employment Service/Benefits Agency is now operating from a New Deal shop in St. Judes.

Transport

Major public transport investment from Bristol's Transport Settlements of £21.287 million over the period 1998–99 to 2001–2002. This was used in Bristol, East for a host of traffic management priorities such as traffic calming measures (for example on Robertson Road in Eastville). It was also used for Safer Routes to Schools schemes (such as Whitehall Primary).

Housing

Improvements to dwellings under the Housing Investment Programme (amounts to £67.308 million over the same period for Bristol as a whole).

Neighbourhood Renewal Fund

Over the next three years Bristol will receive £8.022 million from the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund to help main programme spending to deliver better outcomes for the most deprived communities.

Single Regeneration Budget

Single Regeneration Budget spending in east Bristol is for a seven-year scheme costing £16.8 million, of which the Single Regeneration Budget is contributing £7.6 million. The scheme is heavily dependent on local residents getting involved. In November 2000 a Community Safety Library and Resource Centre was opened. This is a drop-in centre giving advice to people in three of the most deprived wards on a wide range of topics, including racial harassment and help for victims of crime.

European Structural Funds

The European Structural Fund Objective 2 programme will also provide funding in the constituency, but although £121.2 million is available across the south-west region, it is not possible to say how much of this will benefit Bristol, East directly.

Conservation Areas

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the Government's timetable is for (a) completing its selection of special areas of conservation and (b) completing the submission of the UK's sites to the European Commission. [150722]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: English Nature began consultations on possible additions to England's list of candidate special areas of conservation (cSACs) on 16 August 2000. As they conclude discussions on the scientific justification for each new site, or amendment to an existing cSAC, the site's details will be submitted to the European Commission. I anticipate that this process will be substantially completed by September 2001. Parallel processes are taking place in other parts of the UK where site selection is a devolved matter. In July 2000, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee were requested to initiate work necessary to identify sites beyond territorial waters. Their recommendations for selection criteria are expected by July 2001.

Sub-regions (South-West)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 2000, Official Report, column 117W, Ref. 150340, which parliamentary constituencies fall within more than one sub-region of the South-West Region. [150985]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I have nothing further to add to my answer of 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 117W. The sub-areas are broadly defined, overlap and, like the rest of the proposed changes to RPG 10, are open to public consultation. It is not possible to be as specific as the question suggests.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 117W, which sub-regions comprise all or part of (a) Dorset, (b) Wiltshire, (c) Somerset, (d) Devon, (e) Cornwall and (f) Gloucestershire. [150984]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The areas are described in Table 2 (reproduced) of the proposed changes to draft RPG10, which was published on 21 December 2000. The document was sent to all MPs in the region and placed in the House of Commons Library.

Table 2: Sub-regional structure

Sub-region	Main county areas	Principal urban areas in sub-region
Northern	Former Avon, Gloucestershire, Wiltshire except south	Bristol, Bath, Weston-super-Mare, Gloucester, Cheltenham, Swindon
South-Eastern	Dorset, southern Wiltshire	Bournemouth, Poole
Central	Eastern Devon, Somerset	Taunton, Exeter, Torbay
Western	Cornwall, northern and western Devon, western Somerset, Isles of Scilly	Plymouth

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 117W, if there is an overlap between the south eastern sub-region of the South West and the South East Region; and if he will make a statement. [150990]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The sub-regional approach proposed in the revised draft Regional Planning Guidance (RPG) for the South-West is limited to the South-West region. The Guidance recognises that cross-boundary issues may arise in the implementation of RPG and that regional planning bodies will need to liaise accordingly.

Quarries (Nottinghamshire)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Nottinghamshire County Council about the need for extensions to existing (a) red and (b) yellow sandstone quarries in the county. [150818]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State has had no discussions with Nottinghamshire County Council about the need for extensions to existing (a) red and (b) yellow sandstone in the county.

There are a number of applications currently before Nottinghamshire County Council concerning the extension of sandstone quarries. These have been submitted under the provisions of both the Town and Country Planning legislation and the Environment Act 1995. The County Council has statutory responsibility to determine these applications and a duty of legal impartiality prevents the Secretary of State from commenting on their planning merits.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the demand for (a) red and (b) yellow sandstone over the next 20 years. [150816]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State has made no estimate of the demand for (a) red and (b) yellow sandstone over the next 20 years.

Estimates of demand for aggregate minerals at the national and regional levels were published in Minerals Planning Guidance Note 6 "Guidelines for aggregates provision in England" in 1994. Figures were provided for crushed rock but not for separate types of crushed rock such as sandstone. It was left to Mineral Planning Authorities to consider the implications for specific types of mineral within their administrative areas. MPG6 is being reviewed with a view to publication of revised guidance next year. Current and likely levels of future demand for aggregates as a whole will be considered as part of that process.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the reserves of (a) red and (b) yellow sandstone with existing planning permissions. [150817]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State has made no estimate of the reserves of (a) red and (b) yellow sandstone with existing planning permissions.

A survey of aggregate minerals for 1997 in England and Wales, including permitted reserves, was undertaken by Minerals Planning Authorities. Results were collated and published for my Department by the British Geological Survey. These included figures for rock reserves in each region. Permitted reserves of sandstone in England totalled 244 million tonnes, mainly in the North West, West Midlands, and Yorkshire and the Humber Regions. Specific types of sandstone were not identified in this survey.

Rights of Way

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what areas he will designate for the diversion of public rights of way under Part II of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000. [150704]

Mr. Meacher: In designating areas within which local highway authorities may make special extinguishment orders and special diversion orders for crime prevention reasons under Part II of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000, we shall seek to identify locations where the new powers are most needed. We shall consult local authorities and others before making any orders to designate areas in which the powers will be available.

Nuclear Contamination

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of ports have used Geigercounters on a regular basis to check for nuclear contamination of cargo vessels for each year since 1981. [150799]

Mr. Meacher: Information of this nature is not held.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many inquiries he has received over the past 10 years about safety standards on ships that have previously been used to dump nuclear waste at sea. [150798]

Mr. Meacher: There have been no inquiries that my Department has been able to identify.

Aggregates

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with other EU Environment Ministers on proposals to tax aggregates. [150842]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning has not discussed the proposals to tax aggregates with other EU Environment Ministers. However, DETR officials have had contact on this and other aspects of aggregates policy with the officials of some other EU countries over the past three years.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with (a) quarry operators and (b) construction companies regarding the planned aggregates tax. [150841]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning and his predecessor have had a range of discussions about the proposed aggregates levy with quarry operators and construction companies.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the change in the number of lorry movements required in the 12 months following the introduction of the Aggregates Levy as a result of the substitution of recycled aggregates for virgin aggregates. [150683]

Ms Beverley Hughes: There are so many variables involved in making an estimate of the change in numbers of lorry movements required in the 12 months following the introduction of an Aggregates Levy that a meaningful figure could not be produced. Aggregates, whether virgin or recycled, will need to be carried to the market so the numbers of lorry movements may be broadly similar for given quantities of each. However it is expected that the Aggregates Levy will reduce consumption of virgin aggregates as a result of increased efficiency and less wastage at the construction site. Other things being equal, this should reduce the amount of lorry movements overall.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the amount of recycled aggregates that would be substituted for virgin aggregates as a result of the Aggregates Levy; and if he will make a statement. [150682]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The amount of recycled aggregates that would be substituted for virgin aggregates as a result of the Aggregates Levy cannot be predicted with certainty. The size of any change will depend on how the producers and consumers of aggregate respond to the levy and to consequent changes in prices in both the short and longer term. The Regulatory Impact Assessment that was prepared in 2000 to accompany the proposal for the levy noted that, using the short run estimate of price elasticity produced by ECOTEC for the Quarry Products Association in 1998, a best estimate of the impact of a £1.60 levy on the demand for primary aggregates would be a reduction of around 10 per cent. of production or, currently, about 24 million tonnes per year. Alternative materials, including recycled aggregate, would replace some of this reduced production, and less aggregate would be required as a result of increased efficiency and less waste of all aggregates. At any level of production, the levy should encourage a shift away from virgin aggregate towards alternative materials such as recycled aggregate.

Departmental Policies (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood)

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out, including statistical information, the effect on the Blackpool, North and Fleetwood constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150715]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The constituency of Blackpool, North and Fleetwood has benefited from a range of Government initiatives since 2 May 1997. The information given is based on local authority boundaries in some cases, as it not possible to break down the information to the constituency boundaries.

Capital allocations for housing—Blackpool

	£ million
1997–98	2.9
1998–99	[1]4.8
1999–01	5.06
2000–01	7.2
2001–02	8.3

[1] Including capital receipts initiative

The resources made available from Government to support the authority's housing capital investment programme will have nearly trebled in 2001–02 compared to 1997–98.

Wyre (includes Fleetwood)

	£ million
1997–98	1.3
1997–99	1.6
1999–2000	1.7
2000–01	1.5
2001–02	1.1

Wyre is a large scale voluntary transfer authority which transferred all its stock to Wyre housing association in 1996 and subsequently became debt free.

Neighbourhood Renewal Fund

Blackpool will receive the following indicative funding over the next three years:

Neighbourhood renewal fund

	£ million
2001–02	1.5
2002–03	2.3
2003–04	3.0

Single Regeneration Budget

These schemes cover the Blackpool, North and South areas.

SRB Round 2—Blackpool Challenge Partnership

This is a seven year strategy to halt decline of an area of need in the town centre behind the Promenade. This scheme is linked to the opportunity to create employment parks.

SRB total is £19.4 million.

SRB Round 6—Blackpool Challenge Partnership

This seven year scheme will start in April 2001. This scheme links support for growth of the tourist industry and improving the quality of life for Blackpool's most deprived communities. It has been allocated £20 million SRB funding.

Local transport plans

	£ million
1997–98	[1]9.5
1998–99	0.4
1999–2000	0.9
2000–01	1.2
2001–02	2.9

[1] This figure is for Lancashire county council before Blackpool became an unitary authority. Of the £9.5 million, £240k was allocated specifically for the Blackpool tramway, although other money would have gone into Blackpool.

Note:
All other figures are for the whole of Blackpool.

Local Government Finance Settlement

The following figures show the Government Grant to Blackpool borough council, Lancashire county council and Wyre borough council as part of the local government finance settlement.

Lancashire county council was reorganised in April 1988 when Blackpool became a unitary authority.

European Funding:
North West of England Objective 2 ERDF Programme 2000–07

This programme is still under consideration by the European Commission but it is expected this will be agreed soon and start in March/April 2001. Some wards of both Blackpool and Wyre are fully eligible areas for Objective 2 funding and will be able to bid for funding from £400 million.

European Community Initiative—PESCA

In 1997, two ERDF projects in Fleetwood were approved to a total grant value of £354k. This initiative finished in 1999. Its main aim was to help areas diversify away from the declining fishing industry.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from Sain Quintain plc and Grosvenor Estates in relation to the purchase of the site for the Dome. [150640]

Ms Armstrong: A consortium including Quintain Estates and Grosvenor wrote to the Deputy Prime Minister in January, in relation to proposed development on the Greenwich Peninsula, including the Dome. As the Government were in negotiations with Legacy plc as the preferred bidder at that time, this was forwarded to English Partnerships, which had been asked to register all such expressions of interest.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from (a) Mr. P. Y. Gerbeau and (b) Nomura in relation to their proposed interest in the purchase of the Dome site. [150636]

Ms Armstrong: Since Dome Europe's withdrawal from the competition in September 2000, the Government have received unsolicited expressions of interest both from P. Y. Gerbeau and Nomura International plc. These submissions were outside the terms of the competition. English Partnerships registered them while exclusive negotiations continued with Legacy plc.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what inquiries have been made by the Government in relation to the occupying of space in the Dome by (a) Sun Microsystems, (b) BT, (c) 3com, (d) NTL, (e) Imperial College and (f) the Open University. [150634]

Ms Armstrong: During the period of the preferred bidder status, it was for Legacy plc to assure the competition team about occupancy of space in the Dome had the contract been finalised. Advice was provided to the Government by the competition team on this issue.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions under what circumstances the sole bidder status enjoyed by Legacy plc in relation to negotiations for the purchase of the Dome site expires. [150638]

Ms Armstrong: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 15 February 2001, Official Report, column 221W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Ms Taylor).

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many meetings he has attended with representatives of (a) Legacy plc and (b) Treasury Holdings, to discuss the sale of the Dome site. [150641]

Ms Armstrong: The Deputy Prime Minister attended a small number of meetings with the representatives of Legacy plc to discuss the sale of the Dome site, but none specifically with Treasury Holdings.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from English Partnerships in relation to the proposed sale of the Dome to Legacy plc. [150637]

Ms Armstrong: English Partnerships have provided advice to the Government throughout the sale process, including on the offer from Legacy plc.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what inquiries have been made by (a) the Government and (b) their advisers of Westminster City Council in relation to its dealings with (i) Happy Badge Ltd. and (ii) other companies associated with Mr. Robert Bourne. [150635]

Ms Armstrong: None.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many approaches his Department has received from parties potentially interested in the purchase of the Dome site since 1 January [151275]

Ms Armstrong: Between 12 September 2000, when Dome Europe withdrew from the competition and 14 February 2001, when Legacy plc's preferred bidder status expired, English Partnerships registered, on behalf of the Government, 72 unsolicited expressions of interest, of which five were received after 1 January 2001.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if the deadline of 14 February set out for the negotiations with Legacy plc was specified in the letter setting out the terms of preferred bidder status; [151274]

(2) what deadline has been set for the exchange of contracts with Legacy plc for the sale of the Dome site. [151273]

Ms Armstrong: The preferred bidder letter, agreed by Legacy plc, required Legacy plc to meet several requirements to be delivered by 14 January 2001, and indicated that the Legacy team would work with the competition team with a view to exchanging contracts no later than 14 February 2001.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions at what time and on which day the decision to end the preferred bidder status of Legacy plc for the purchase of the Dome site and to reopen the competition was made. [151460]

Ms Armstrong: The position is set out in my reply of 15 February 2001, Official Report, column 221W to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Ms Taylor).

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contacts he, members of his Department or the competition team have had with potential new investors in Legacy plc. [151276]

Ms Armstrong: A small number of calls were received from parties wishing to know if they could join the Legacy team within the rules of the competition. They were advised of the rules, which permitted augmentation if the bidder so wished, and they were advised that any such proposal would have to be agreed with Legacy, and that neither Ministers or the competition team could play any part in that process. Legacy plc introduced representatives of Teesland to the competition team and government representatives on Monday 12 February.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he has sought on the credentials of Teesland plc as participants in the development of the Dome site. [151272]

Ms Armstrong: Appropriate advice was sought from and provided by the competition team, as is normal practice in a matter of this nature. The competition team advised on bids and bidders throughout the process and continued to do so while negotiations were ongoing with Legacy plc.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department last met executives of (a) Teesland plc, (b) Mr. Kevin McCabe and (c) the housebuilding company, Fairbriar; and for what purpose. [151271]

Ms Armstrong: Officials from my Department accompanied Lord Falconer and the competition team when they met Mr. McCabe and other representatives of Teesland plc, along with other members of the Legacy team, on 12 February to discuss their bid. No meeting has been held with Fairbriar.

Treasury Holdings

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions have taken place between members of Her Majesty's Government and the Irish Government in relation to the background, financial affairs and standing of Treasury Holdings and its directors. [150642]

Ms Armstrong: None.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports the Government have commissioned from independent advisers on the background of Treasury Holdings. [150639]

Ms Armstrong: In addition to the usual inquiries made within Government, advice was sought from and provided by the competition team. The competition team advised on bids and bidders throughout the process and continued to do so while negotiations were ongoing with Legacy plc.

Stowaways

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what security measures are in place to prevent stowaways on flights. [150626]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Under the UK National Aviation Security Programme, all those wishing to have access to an airport's Restricted Zone are required to be searched and screened, in order to prevent unauthorised interference with an aircraft.

Before entering service, all aircraft are required to be searched and checked internally and externally. Access is then controlled to that aircraft.

Airports are required to carry out mobile patrols of their airside areas which are physically secured and access is controlled to these areas.

Recycling Bins

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to introduce recycling bins to all households. [150657]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Waste Strategy 2000 announced our intention to set statutory performance standards for household waste recycling and composting for 2003, 2005 and 2010. The overall impact will be to raise national recycling rates to at least 17 per cent. in 2003–04 and at least 25 per cent. in 2005–06. It is for individual authorities to decide how best to achieve these targets in the light of local circumstances.

Under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 authorities may specify the type of receptacle in which waste for collection is to be placed, and may choose to provide separate receptacles, for example for recyclables, free of charge.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend his Departmental Expenditure Limits and running cost limits for 2000–01. [151109]

Mr. Prescott: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class III, Votes 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 11, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' Departmental Expenditure Limits for 2000–01 will change as follows. All references to the take-up of end year flexibility refer to the Public Expenditure 1999–2000 Provisional Outturn White Paper presented to Parliament by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 18 July 2000 (Cm 4812).

(a) The DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £118,721,000 from £11,114,883,000 to £11,233,604,000. This increase reflects the net impact of a take-up of end year flexibility of £53,709,000; net transfers into the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit of £5,686,000 and calls on the DEL Reserve of £59,326,000. The changes are set out in greater detail as follows.

(i) The changes for Class III, Vote 1 are as follows:

Take up of End Year Flexibility of £17,795,000 comprising £6,000,000 for the Rough Sleepers Initiative, and £11,795,000 for European Regional Development Fund projects which is ring-fenced for these ERDF programmes only. A net increase in provision of £7,118,000 arising from the following inter-vote transfers: £8,000,000 from Class IX, Vote 1 in respect of the Regional Development Agencies; £580,000 from Class II, Vote 2 in respect of the Rough Sleepers Initiative; £1,334,000 to Class XII, Vote 3 in respect of the Benefit Agency's costs for the New Deal for Communities programme; £88,000 to Class II, Vote 2 for Department of Health expenditure on the Rough Sleepers Initiative and £40,000 to Class IV, Vote 1 for Home Office expenditure related to the Special Grants Programme. A reduction of running costs of £430,000 arising from savings for the Rent Assessment Panel transferred to Class III, Vote 5.

(ii) The changes for Class III, Vote 2 are as follows:

A call on the Reserve of £50,000,000 for London Underground Jubilee Line Extension and a further net increase of £36,980,000 from the following inter-vote transfers: £43,230,000 from Class III, Vote 11 for grant in aid to Strategic Rail Authority; £2,000,000 to Class III, Vote 7 for the Highways Agency; £1,000,000 to Class III, Vote 6 for a loan to the Vehicle Inspectorate; £1,000,000 to Class III, Vote 5 for the TAN21 project; £1,500,000 to Class VI, Vote 1 for the Royal flight and £750,000 to Class XIII, Vote 1 for track access grants. There is also a net increase of £3,175,000 arising from transfers from non-voted credit approvals for grant funding of the Manchester Metrolink (£15,000,000); Sunderland Metro (£4,875,000) and World Squares (£200,000); £2,600,000 from non-voted Air Travel Trust Funds for Eurocontrol and transfers to non-voted credit approvals for the set-up costs associated with Road User Charging (£18,000,000) and a revised forecast IDA grant requirement (£1,500,000).

(iii) The changes for Class III Vote 3 are as follows: A transfer of provision of £6,182,000 from the non-voted element of DETR Main DEL for the Environment Agency to undertake work on contaminated land and to prepare for the Landfill Directive, to assist British Waterways with increased costs associated with flooding and towards clearing the maintenance backlog . A transfer of £500,000 from Class IX, Vote 1 for preliminary work establishing fuel poverty action zones under the Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme; transfers to and from Class III, Vote 5 of £489,000 for costs incurred establishing the Carbon Trust and £25,000 for the local authority air quality unit of the Environment Agency respectively.

(iv) The changes to Class III, Vote 5 are as follows:

The take up of £13,792,000 end year flexibility: for the Health and Safety Commission £7,000,000 of which £5,500,000 is running costs to meet the cost of the Cullen inquiry and other pressures; £856,000 for the PSA Services in respect of annual compensation payments for former employees; £1,800,000 to increase capital provision for Strategic IT projects and £4,136,000 to meet residual DETR relocation costs. A transfer of £4,644,000 from the Cabinet Office to increase running costs provision for the Civil Service Modernisation Fund of which £2,779,000 is for Central Administration, £895,000 for Government Offices Administration and £970,000 for the Health and Safety Commission. A net increase in provision of £663,000 arising from the following inter-vote transfers of £25,000 to Class III, Vote 3 for the Environment Agency; £250,000 to Class III, Vote 8 for the smart tachograph costs; £1,000,000 to Class III, Vote 7 to meet 10 year plan and budget 2000 costs; £111,000 to Class III, Vote 6 to meet costs of Secretariat support for major inquiries in the Planning Inspectorate Executive Agency; £50,000 to Class III, Vote 6 to meet additional pension costs for the Rent Officer Services Agency; £430,000 savings from Class III, Vote 1; £489,000 from Class III, Vote 3 for the Carbon Trust; £180,000 from Class III, Vote 4 for the cost of staff loaned by Government Office for London to Greater London Authority and £1,000,000 from Class III, Vote 2 for TAN21 project. There is a further draw down of £4,768,000 from the Departmental Unallocated Provision and an increase in Appropriations in Aid by £56,000 for Scottish Parking Appeal Fund and £80,000 for the sale of cars by Government offices.

(v) The changes to Class II, Vote 6 are as follows:

The take up of £8,449,000 end year flexibility for: the Planning Inspectorate (£1,136,000) dilapidation payments on Tollgate House; (£272,000) for works on Temple Quay; (£1,500,000) for lower than budgeted receipts; (£76,000 capital) for the Rent Officer Services Agency; (£2,500,000) to cover expenditure on furniture and equipment and on the Estates Rationalisation Programme; (£2,027,000) to cover slippage from 1999–2000 and (£938,000) to meet Information Technology system replacement costs. Transfers from the Cabinet Office Civil Service Modernisation Fund of £226,000 to the Maritime and Coastguard Agency; £290,000 to the Planning Inspectorate; £51,000 to the Vehicle Certification Agency; £187,000 to the Rent Officer Services Agency; £100,000 to the Vehicle Inspectorate; £100,000 to the Driving Standards Agency and £19,000 to the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre; transfer of £1,000,000 from the Capital Modernisation Fund to the Planning Inspectorate; transfers from the Departmental Unallocated Provision of £828,000 to the Rent Officer Services Agency to cover slippage from 1999–2000 and £112,000 to the Maritime and Coastguard Agency; a transfer of £94,000 from Class X, Vote 2 to the Maritime and Coastguard Agency for the testing of fishing vessel engine power, transfers of £111,000 from Class III, Vote 5 to the Planning Inspectorate to meet costs of Secretariat support for major inquiries and £50,000 to the Rent Officer Services Agency to cover a historic pensions liability. There is also a transfer of £1,000,000 from Class III, Vote 2 to cover a loan made to the Vehicle Inspectorate for building a new testing station at Chadderton.

(vi) The changes to Class III, Vote 7 are as follows:

The take up of end year flexibility of £6,021,000 programme capital and £687,000 running costs for dilapidation to Tollgate House, Bristol. The take up of £292,000 from the Departmental Unallocated Provision for running costs; transfer of £1,000,000 from Class III, Vote 5 for the 10 year plan and budget 2000 costs and £2,000,000 from Class III, Vote 2 for funding outlined in Highways Agency's Business Plan.

A further increase in expenditure of £15,298,000 will be offset by a compensating increase in Appropriations in Aid.

(vii) The changes in Class III, Vote 8 are as follows:

The take up of capital end year flexibility of £6,965,000; the draw down of £4,788,000 from the Reserve to cover costs of the Graduated VED and HGV Rebate Schemes less a £1,400,000 transfer to the Reserve under the demand financing agreement with the Treasury; take up of £2,500,000 from the Departmental Unallocated Provision and a transfer of £250,000 from Class III, Vote 5 for smart tachograph costs. A further increase in expenditure of £9,031,000 will be offset by a compensating increase in Appropriations in Aid.

(viii) The change to Class III, Vote 11 is a transfer of £43,230,000 to Class III, Vote 2 to reflect the establishment of the Strategic Rail Authority.

(ix) As a consequence of the changes to Class III, Votes 5, 6, 7 and 8 the DETR gross running costs limit has been increased by £16,045,000 from £702,154,000 to £718,199,000. The HSE gross running cost limit has increased by £6,470,000 from £180,717,000 to £187,187,000.

(x) Provision within the non-Voted element of the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit will be decreased by £18,357,000 from £2,650,148,000 to £2,631,791,000. This reflects transfers to: Class III, Vote 2 for grant funding of the Manchester Metrolink (£15,000,000); Sunderland Metro (£4,875,000); World Squares (£200,000); National Air Traffic Services Public Private Partnerships (£2,600,000); to Class III, Vote 3 £6,182,000 for the Environment Agency to undertake work on contaminated land and to prepare for the Landfill Directive, to assist British Waterways with increased costs associated with flooding and towards clearing the maintenance backlog and £500,000 to the Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Isle of Scilly water credit approvals. It also includes running costs transfers from the DETR Departmental Unallocated Provision of £8,500,000 comprising £4,768,000 to Class III, Vote 5; £940,000 to Class III, Vote 6 for the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (£112,000) and Rent Officer Services Agency (£828,000); £292,000 to Class III, Vote 7; and £2,500,000 to Class III, Vote 8. These decreases are partially offset by transfers from Class III, Vote 2 for costs associated with Road User Charging (£18,000,000) and for revised forecast of Industrial Development Act grant expenditure (£1,500,000).

(xi) The net increase in the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit will be offset by transfers to the Department of Health Departmental Expenditure Limit, Home Office Departmental Expenditure Limit, Department of Social Security Departmental Expenditure Limit, Ministry of Defence Departmental Expenditure Limit, DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit; from Department of Trade and Industry Departmental Expenditure Limit, Department of Health Departmental Expenditure Limit, Cabinet Office Departmental Expenditure Limit, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Departmental Expenditure Limit, the Capital Modernisation Fund and by a charge on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

(b) The DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit will be increased by £320,000 from £35,361,148,000 to £35,361,468,000. This increase is the net effect of a transfer of £500,000 from the DETR Main Programmes Departmental Expenditure Limit and a transfer of £180,000 to Class III, Vote 5.

(i) The changes for Class III, Vote 4 are as follows: increased provision for Emergency Assistance to Local Authorities by £20,000,000 (mainly offset by a reduction of £15,100,000 in Private Finance Initiative Special grant and £2,900,000 Grant in Aid to the Standards Board for England and a transfer of £1,700,000 from non-voted programmes) and a transfer of £180,000 from the Greater London Authority Preparation Costs to Class III, Vote 5.

(ii) Provision within the non-Voted element of the Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit will be reduced by £1,200,000 from £139,111,000 to £137,911,000. This reflects a transfer of £1,700,000 to Class III, Vote 4 and a transfer of £500,000 from the Main Department Departmental Expenditure Limit reversing a transfer to the Main Department DEL which took place at Winter Supplementary Estimates.

(iii) The net increase in the DETR Local Government Departmental Expenditure Limit will be offset by a reduction in the DETR Main DEL and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

(c) The Office of the Rail Regulator Departmental Expenditure Limit will increase by a token amount of £1,000. The gross running cost limit will increase by £238,000 from £13,768,000 to £14,006,000 but the overall total is offset in full by a corresponding increase in Appropriations in Aid.

Departmental Policies (North-East Derbyshire)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the North-East Derbyshire constituency, the effect on North-East Derbyshire of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150884]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The constituency of North-East Derbyshire has benefited from a range of Government initiatives since May 1997, including:

Housing resources made available to North-East Derbyshire district council

Year	£ million
1997–98[1]	0.805
1998–99	1.55
1999–2000	2.262
2000–01	3.439
2001–02	5.762

[1] Last year of funding determined by previous administration

Under the Government's first Comprehensive Spending Review, all local authorities received significantly more resources for housing. The increase in resources for North-East Derbyshire is illustrated in the table.

North-East Derbyshire has a large number of non-traditional properties requiring significant investment. North-East Derbyshire was successful in 1998 in attracting Private Finance Initiative (PFI) resources for a non-Housing Revenue Account (HRA) scheme on the Holmewood Estate, the first social housing PFI scheme to be approved by the Government. (Note: This scheme was worked out under the old Administration, but approved under the current one.) The council is taking forward a HRA PFI scheme to repair and refurbish defective stock centred on three housing estates comprising the former coalfield villages of North Wingfield, Danesmoor and Pilsley. This PFI bid has been put forward for appraisal.

European Funding

	Total grant (£)	Number of projects supported
Objective 2 1997 to 1999 (ERDF)	5,702,602	21
Rechar II (ERDF)	4,438,927	14
Objective 3 2000–06 (ESF)	151,114	2

These grants have been allocated to a range of regeneration, social inclusion, environmental and transport improvement projects. Under the new Objective 2 programme 2000–06, parts of North-East Derbyshire will continue to have direct access to regeneration funding from the ERDF and also transitional funding under the new Objective 2 programme.

Single Regeneration Budget

SRB 5 An Alliance for Action: DETR contribution is £24 million

Based on the vision that the Coalfield area is a strong, prosperous and forward-looking sub-region, projects will be aimed at improving competitiveness, job creation, building community capacity and promoting a culture of lifelong learning.

SRB 6 Positioned for Prosperity: DETR contribution is £15 million[1].

Two main themes are Housing and Skills and Learning.

[1] These schemes include a number of districts, one of which is North East Derbyshire. It is not possible to provide a separate figure for the area.

SRB 1 and 4: DETR contribution is £11.5 million

Four programmes targeted on sites in Chesterfield/ North-East Derbyshire and a fifth area-wide programme involving job creation, business support, education and training, community empowerment, and crime reduction measures. Approximately 50 per cent. of the funding for this scheme is allocated to North-East Derbyshire.

The increase in settlement for the year 2001–02 represents the first instalment of the massive investment programme, promised in the 10-Year Plan (Transport 2010). It is money to be spent on local transport priorities. It is not possible to determine exactly how much of these amounts have been spent on the North-East Derbyshire constituency. However, the constituency has benefited from Derbyshire county council's integrated transport policies.

This information is for general grant (Revenue Support Grant, National Non Domestic Rates and damping grants). It is not possible to determine the exact amount allocated by the county council to North-East Derbyshire.

Derbyshire Energy and Environment Group

The group includes North-East Derbyshire district council and received from DETR administrative help, the expertise of an energy adviser estimated at £7,000 and £3,000 for publicity. Two Home Energy Conservation Act 1995 Action Scheme projects were granted £148,500 by DETR to improve residential energy efficiency.

Spending Assessments (Bury)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the annual increase in (a) standard spending assessment and (b) education standard spending assessment for Bury Metropolitan Council, for each of the last eight financial years and for 2001–02. [150976]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information requested is given in the table:

[2] Figures supplied for 1997–98 and 1998–99 are based on the Local Government Finance Report (England) Amending Reports dated February 1999 and February 2000 respectively

Fats & Proteins UK Ltd.

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the report of the public inquiry into the appeal by Fats & Proteins UK Ltd. of Nightingale Hall Farm, Lancaster, against their environmental authorisation will be published. [151240]

Mr. Meacher: The parties to the Fats and Proteins appeal will shortly be issued with a copy of the Inspector's report into the appeal hearing in the light of the revision last year of the Secretary of State's Process Guidance Note PG6/1(00)—Animal By-Product Rendering. They will be invited to comment on how any changes in circumstances since the hearing or any changes in policy, outlined in the revised guidance note, may affect the appeal. Following consideration of their comments, the Secretary of State should be in a position to announce a decision.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if each of the bids for the NATS PPP enjoys full confidence on the question of safety of (a) NATS management, (b) the safety regulation group of the Civil Aviation Authority and (c) advisers appointed to assess the quality of safety management of the three bidders. [151325]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The Government received three bids for the NATS PPP on 31 January 2001. The Government are currently evaluating the bids, which include proposals with regard to safety and will take advice or comments from all those mentioned. We will make an announcement on the outcome of that evaluation in due course.

Endangered Species

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on plans to implement fully EC regulation 338/97. [151139]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Council Regulation (EC) No. 338–97 sets out the requirements on member states to implement the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES). The United Kingdom fully implements these Regulations, under which all commercial trade in critically endangered species is prohibited and trade in less endangered species is strictly regulated.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures are (a) in place and (b) planned to reduce the international trade in animals caught in the wild. [151138]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The United Kingdom is a Party to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES), which is implemented within the EU by Council Regulation (EC) No. 338/97 and Commission Regulation (EC) No. 939/97. These Regulations are enforced in the UK by the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 and the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1997 (S. I. No. 1372). The Regulations currently protect over 30,000 species of animals and plants, and trade is permitted only where we are satisfied that this will not be detrimental to the wild populations of the species concerned. Traders are also encouraged to make use of captive bred sources of animals, and artificially propagated sources of plants, where these can be shown to be produced in a sustainable manner.

The United Kingdom plays an active role within CITES. We are currently taking forward several initiatives aimed at reducing illegal trade in endangered species. These include publicity campaigns aimed at tourists and traditional medicine users and practitioners, and advising them of the constraints on buying wildlife souvenirs and on using endangered species in medicines. The Partnership for Action Against Wildlife Crime, a coalition of DETR, HM Customs and Excise, police and interested NGOs, has also been set up to address illegal trade in the UK. On the international front we are providing financial and practical support for a number of initiatives, including a CITES working group addressing unsustainable trade in bushmeat (mainly primates but also other endangered species) and a Tiger Enforcement Task Force which aims to provide all CITES Parties with technical advice and intelligence support on illegal trade in tigers and tiger products.

Dangerous Wild Animals Licences

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many dangerous wild animals licences are held by private individuals in the United Kingdom. [151131]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: This information is not normally held centrally as the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 is administered by local authorities. However, as part of a review of the Act's effectiveness, contractors have discovered that approximately 370 licences were issued last year covering nearly 12,000 animals. The contractors are due to report their findings in April.

Local Government Act

Mr. Neil Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in preparing a draft order under section 16 of the Local Government Act 1999 to liberalise local authorities' powers to engage in trading activities; and when such an order will be published. [150732]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We expect to publish next month a consultation paper on the use of powers in Section 16 of the Local Government Act 1999 to provide new and amended powers to promote and facilitate the achievement of best value through partnership working. This will include proposals for best value authorities to provide a wider range of goods and services to partners, both in the public and private sectors. Draft Orders will be laid before Parliament following the conclusion of the consultation exercise.

PRIME MINISTER

Lord Levy

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the expenses that Lord Levy has claimed while acting as his personal envoy. [146619]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 January 2001]: Lord Levy has claimed no expenses.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if Lord Levy is provided with an office allowance by Her Majesty's Government for his work as his personal envoy. [148515]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 February 2001]: No.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister what diplomatic status Lord Levy holds for protocol purposes. [148517]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 February 2001]: Lord Levy does not have diplomatic status. The countries Lord Levy visits accord him the courtesies they consider appropriate.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the statements issued by British embassies in (a) South American countries, and (b) Middle Eastern countries in relation to visits made by Lord Levy. [148518]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 February 2001]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Ruffley) on 5 February 2001, Official Report, column 390W.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will provide a breakdown of the costs of interpreters used to assist Lord Levy in his role as personal envoy during his visits to the Middle East and South America. [148512]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 February 2001]: In the Middle East, most of Lord Levy's meetings have been conducted in English. Where there has been interpretation, it has been provided by host countries at no cost to the United Kingdom.

In South America interpreters were used when necessary as usual on such visits. The costs to the Government are estimated as £1,141.71.

Personal Envoy

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will advertise the post of personal envoy for future appointments to the post. [148514]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 February 2001]: No. I shall continue to ask people to travel as my personal envoy when that seems appropriate and desirable.

Higher Education

Dr. Harris: To ask the Prime Minister what information he received on the contents of the Education and Employment Committee's report on access to higher education, and the proceedings of the Committee prior to the publication of the report. [150054]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 February 2001]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment on 14 February 2001, Official Report, column 162W.

Quintain Estates

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met representatives of Quintain Estates. [151428]

The Prime Minister: I have meetings with a wide range of organisations and individuals. As with previous Administrations it is not my practice to provide details of such meetings.

Hinduja Brothers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what steps he took at the time the Hammond Inquiry was established to ensure that the Cabinet Secretary made public his meetings with the Hinduja brothers. [150835]

(2) if he will make a statement on the meeting between the Cabinet Secretary and the Hinduja brothers in July 1998; [150832]

(3) what criteria are applied to determine whether it is appropriate for the Cabinet Secretary to meet persons external to Government. [150834]

The Prime Minister: The Secretary of the Cabinet met the Hinduja brothers through a speech which he gave about diversity in the Civil Service. He accepted their subsequent invitation to lunch because he was advised that to do so would be beneficial to British commercial interests in India. He was accompanied at the lunch by a private secretary who circulated a note of the discussion afterwards to the Departments concerned. The Secretary of the Cabinet has made no secret of the fact that the lunch took place. Passports were not discussed at the lunch, and nothing about the lunch was relevant to the Inquiry. Sir Anthony Hammond QC has been given full access to the papers in case he wishes to satisfy himself on the point. I am satisfied that the Secretary of the Cabinet acted entirely properly at every stage.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions between 1 January 1989 and 30 April 1997 when senior civil servants met the Hinduja brothers; and if he will make a statement. [150830]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) on 31 January 2001, Official Report, column 224W.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what factors underlay his decision not to ask the Cabinet Secretary to lead the inquiry into the passport applications by the Hinduja brothers. [150829]

The Prime Minister: I asked Sir Anthony Hammond QC to undertake this inquiry because I wanted his independent judgment on the matters covered by his terms of reference. It would not be appropriate to ask the Secretary of the Cabinet to carry out such a full and lengthy investigation.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if (a) he and (b) the Cabinet Secretary (i) have given and (ii) will be giving evidence to the Hammond Inquiry. [150836]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) on 29 January 2001, Official Report, column 70W (in reply to questions UIN 147716 and 147717).

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what independent mechanisms exist to ensure that those with responsibility for the Hammond Inquiry are not in a position to influence the content of the final report in respect of their roles. [150831]

The Prime Minister: As usual with inquiries of this sort, Sir Anthony Hammond QC has complete independence in preparing his final report. I have made it clear that I will publish the report.

Hospitality (Chequers)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the public expenditure incurred on the provision of hospitality for the Prime Minister's (a) official guests, (b) private guests other than family members and (c) family members at Chequers in each of the last 10 years. [151431]

The Prime Minister: In respect of non-official hospitality at Chequers, as under previous Administrations, all costs for private guests, including family members, are at my own expense with no cost falling to the public purse.

For expenditure on official hospitality at Chequers, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 970W. The figure for the first three quarters of 2000–01 was £6,981. This information was not recorded separately before 1997–98 and therefore it is not possible to give comparable figures for the years prior to 1997.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Opposition Policies (Costings)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the answer of the Minister for the Cabinet Office of 11 December 2000, Official Report, column 48W (1) what costings of (a) Liberal Democrat and (b) Conservative Party policies his Department has (i) undertaken and (ii) co-ordinated in the previous 12 months; and if he will place copies of such costings and relevant background documents in the Library; [146668]

(2) what costings of (a) Liberal Democrat and (b) Conservative Party policies his Department has (i) undertaken and (ii) advised upon in the previous 12 months; and if he will place copies of such costings and relevant background documents in the Library; [146665]

(3) if special advisers in his Department have been involved in (a) co-ordinating, (b) costing and (c) presenting costings of policies of opposition parties; and if he will make a statement. [146667]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 February 2001, Official Report, column 183W.

Truancy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many school truancies were recorded during the last 12 months in each local education authority area; and if he will make a statement. [148311]

Jacqui Smith: The number of half-days missed as a result of unauthorised absence (truancy) by pupils; and the percentage of those half-days missed, for each local authority area in England in 1999–2000 (the latest figures available) are shown in the table.

Although there has been some significant improvement in attendance levels, too many children are still missing school without good reason. Over half of these are primary school children, most of whom will be absent with their parents' consent. That is why, last autumn, we announced a renewed drive to tackle truancy including extra resources available to schools and LEAs to tackle poor behaviour, with truancy the top priority. £174 million will be available in 2001–02—10 times the level in 1996–97. We have also begun a co-ordinated nationwide programme of truancy sweeps to pick up youngsters who should be in school. In addition, our Excellence in Cities programme is being expanded to provide more on-site learning mentors in schools to support children with barriers to attending school and learning. We are also asking schools with above average truancy records to set new targets for attendance. On 28 February, I am giving "Truancy Buster" awards of up to £10,000 to up to 50 schools in the country which have done the most to reduce truancy. From 1 March, the provisions of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 will come into effect with higher fines for the parents of persistent truants. And from 1 April, the first Connexions Service Partnerships will start, and will give priority to improving attendance at school for all young people aged 13 and over. All these measures are designed to help schools improve attendance and learning.

New Deal for Disabled People

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the respective roles of the (a) Employment Service, (b) Disability Employment Adviser and (c) job broker in delivering the New Deal for Disabled People. [148936]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 7 February 2001]: The Employment Service, in partnership with the Benefits Agency, Department of Social Security and my Department, has responsibility for the delivery of the New Deal for Disabled People. Later this year, the Employment Service and the working age elements of the Benefits Agency will merge to form the new Working Age Agency. Disability Employment Advisers (DEAs) will continue to provide advice about job opportunities to all disabled people whatever their benefit status who are looking for work, providing access to specialist ES programmes aimed at securing a return to work and, in appropriate cases, provide details of local job brokers. The job broker will provide help to people claiming incapacity benefits in preparing for, finding and keeping paid work. Job brokers will work closely with DEAs to meet the individual needs of their clients. For example, where a client is eligible and requires support under Access to Work, this will be provided through the DEA. The job broker will also work with employers to match their requirements to the abilities and potential of their clients.

Departmental Policies (Staffordshire, Moorlands)

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to Staffordshire, Moorlands constituency, the effects on Staffordshire, Moorlands of his Department's policies and actions (a) since 2 May 1997 and (b) in the 12 months ending on 1 May 1997. [149190]

Mr. Wills: Outlined are details of the effect on the Staffordshire, Moorlands constituency and Staffordshire LEA of a range of the Department's policies since 2 May 1997.

Sure Start

Cannock Chase—£2.5 million

Telford and Wrekin—£1.8 million

Cannock Chase

The catchment area covers Broomhill, Chadsmoor, Huntingdon and part of Cannock Chase south. The partnership places strong emphasis on parental involvement and includes eight parents on its board. It has incorporated new activities which offer a series of initiatives that impact family lives. These include the Library and Information Project and Holiday Play schemes. The programme was allocated £2.5 million over three years from 2000–01.

Telford & Wrekin

The programme aims to enhance existing provision in the area such as outreach services, pre-school services, primary community healthcare and improve support to teenage parents. The catchment area covers the Lawley and Overdale ward in Telford. There are plans to create innovative work with families in the travellers site based in the area. The programme was allocated £1.8 million from 1999–2000 over three years.

Beacon Schools

Staffordshire has six beacon schools: Barnfields Primary School, Blackfriars School, Oakridge Primary School, Painsley RC High School, St. Joseph and St. Teresa Primary School and The Willows Primary School.

Specialist Schools

Staffordshire has three specialist schools: Wilncote High School (Arts), Clough Hall Technology School (Technology) and Thomas Alleyne's School (Technology).

Notes:

1. The Trainee Database System (TDS), from which these data are taken, is less complete than Management Information supplied to the Department by Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) (around 95 per cent.).

2. In addition, the postcode information on the TDS, from which parliamentary constituency data are compiled, are 95 per cent. complete.

3. TEC Management Information does not provide information at parliamentary constituency level.

New deal statistics

In the Staffordshire Moorlands constituency to the end of November 2000, 454 young people have joined the New Deal, with 254 finding employment. Of these, 183 have entered sustained employment.

Labour market

The working age employment rate in Staffordshire UA in Autumn 2000 was 79.0 per cent., above the UK rate of 74.7 per cent. The rate in autumn 1997 was 77.9 per cent. and in autumn 1999 78.9 per cent.

The claimant unemployment rate has fallen from 4.0 per cent. in December 1997 to 2.6 per cent. in December 2000 in the Staffordshire Moorlands constituency.

Departmental Policies (Tooting)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Tooting, Wandsworth parliamentary constituency, the effect of his Department's policies and actions since 1 May 1997 on this constituency. [149865]

Mr. Wills: Outlined are details of the effect on the Tooting constituency and Wandsworth LEA of a range of the Department's policies.

Modern Apprenticeships

Information about the number of Modern Apprenticeships in South West London is unreliable because of the inaccuracy of some postcodes on the Department's database. The inaccuracies are being corrected and information on Modern Apprenticeship starts for all parliamentary constituencies in England will be made available in the Library of the House in March.

Labour market statistics

The working age employment rate in Wandsworth UA in autumn 2000 was 79.9 per cent., above the UK rate of 74.7 per cent. The rate in autumn 1997 was 72.3 per cent.

The claimant unemployment rate has fallen from 11.0 per cent. in December 1997 to 6.8 per cent. in December 2000 in the Tooting constituency

New Deal statistics

In the Tooting constituency to the end of November 2000, 1,029 young people have joined the New Deal, with 413 finding employment. Of these, 317 have entered sustained employment.

Departmental Policies (Bristol, East)

Education Action Zone

Seven primary schools (Bannerman Road, Barton Hill, Hannah More, Whitehall, Millpond, St. Nicholas of Tolentine, Barton Hill Nursery and Infants) and one secondary school (St. George Community College) located within the Bristol, East constituency are among a group of 17 schools included in the Bristol Education Action Zone formed in September 2000.

Key activities:

Teaching and learning.

Pupil engagement—setting up groups within schools to support young people in establishing their cultural and gender identity.

Children as effective communicators.

Parental engagement—developing groups to support parents from minority ethnic backgrounds.

Participation and progression.

Developing effective urban leaders and managers.

ICT—providing networked computers, free training for teachers, out of hours access for community use.

Support from the Arts Council of England means that arts will form part of each of the above strands.

Excellence in Cities (EiC)

Bristol LEA was included in the second phase of Excellence in Cities, announced on 23 March 2000. All 22 maintained secondary schools in Bristol are involved in the EiC programme, and special schools have been involved in the partnership planning process too.

There are four EiC secondary schools in the Bristol, East constituency:

St. George Community College;

St. Mary Redcliffe and Temple school (a Beacon school designated through EiC);

Whitefield Fishponds Community School;

Brislington School and 6th Form Centre.

These have all benefited proportionately from Excellence in Cities but individual school allocations are determined within local partnerships. The table shows the resourcing of EiC strands across all Bristol's secondary schools.

Key strand	EiC status in Bristol
Learning Mentors	37.2 full-time equivalent—43 in total
Learning Support Units	4
City Learning Centres	2 planned for January 2002
Beacon and Specialist schools	3 in total—1 Secondary ; 1 Primary; 1 Nursery

Key strand	EiC status in Bristol
Extended opportunities for gifted and talented pupils	All schools have a EiC co-ordinator with a laptop; 5 to 10 per cent. cohorts identified in every school and year group; subject departmental policies being written in schools; cluster work on talented programmes; Easter schools targeting KS3 in English, maths and science, and KS4 maths; summer schools with Bristol and Exeter University; training for co-ordinators including a Thinking Skills day on 9 March; links with Learning Mentors.

Public Private Partnerships (PPP)

Bristol LEA has no PPP/PFI projects to date. The LEA has submitted a bid in the current allocation round (to be announced in March) for an £85 million PFI project covering eight secondary schools. However, the LEA's review of secondary provision will not be complete until July 2001, and DfEE has asked the LEA to reconsider the timing of its bid, as the investment needs of its secondary schools will not be known until the review is completed. As a result, Bristol LEA is considering whether to resubmit their bid as part of next year's schools capital allocation.

Departmental Policies (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood)

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out, including statistical information, the effect on the Blackpool, North and Fleetwood constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150720]

Mr. Wills: Outlined are details of the effects of a range of the Department's policies on the Blackpool, North and Fleetwood constituency and on Blackpool LEA.

Background

Blackpool, formerly part of Lancashire LEA, achieved unitary status on 1 April 1998 following local government reorganisation.

Sure Start

The programme is centred on Mereside. There is a strong emphasis on community capacity building, particularly through training both to increase self-confidence and to promote self-sufficiency. Parents and grandparents are involved in providing some of the services, such as running storytelling and rhyme clubs. Total funding up to £1,950,070.

Beacon Schools

Anchorsholme County Primary School and Christ the King Catholic Primary School.

Specialist Status Schools

Bispham High School (Arts) and Montgomery High School (Language). Both have gained their specialist school status since May 1997.

Excellence in Cities (EiC)

Blackpool is included in Phase 3 of the Excellence in Cities programme and will be submitting plans for implementation to begin in September 2001. Under EiC Blackpool is expected to receive allocations of some £3.7 million over the next three years.

Collegiate High School—This project (supported by NDS) was signed during summer 2000 between the School, LEA and Uforia (private contractor). Work commenced on 11 September and is expected to be completed by 7 May 2001. The project is to construct an indoor sports centre on the school grounds, which will also be available to another special school. The private sector partner will contribute capital and be granted a lease to operate the upgraded facilities out of school hours. The school currently pays rent for indoor sports facilities. Total value of the project is £1,200,000 (£750,000 NDS and £450,000 private sector contribution).

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding is available for the education of children with Prader-Willi Syndrome; and if he will make a statement. [149683]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 9 February 2001]: Funding is not made available for specific categories of special educational need. Rather, funding is allocated and distributed via local education authorities (LEAs), who have a duty to provide appropriately for all children in their area. This includes the duty to identify children's individual special educational needs and to deliver the most appropriate provision to meet those needs.

More than £21.5 billion is available annually for the education of school children, including children with special educational needs. Over £1 billion of this is used by LEAs to provide additional support for children with special educational needs. We are increasing Education Standard Spending by over £1 billion in 2001–02 and we expect LEAs to passport extra resources to education in full. It will be for individual LEAs and schools to decide what to spend on particular areas of the service.

We have also made £82 million of supported expenditure available for special educational needs in next year's Standards Fund (2001–02). This compares to £55 million this year. The fund can be used for a range of activities including training for staff in special educational needs, improvements in speech and language therapy provision for children with communication difficulties, the provision of information and advice to parents, and the greater inclusion of children with SEN in the mainstream. This latter includes early intervention for pupils with SEN, training on child development and behaviour management, and improved links between special and mainstream schools.

At the individual pupil level we are also working to promote better and more consistent practice, towards all pupils with special educational needs. In particular the revised SEN Code of Practice should promote more consistent practice by schools and LEAs. While individual pupils with SEN will vary in their needs it is important that schools and others adopt a consistent and rigorous approach in identifying and providing for these needs.

Music and Ballet Scheme

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many families with children currently in receipt of state assistance with fees with the music and ballet scheme will (a) benefit and (b) lose from the proposed restructuring of fee scales for Autumn 2001; what the maximum annual amount of this loss is; and for how many there will be no effect. [149752]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The music and ballet scheme helps exceptionally talented children who could not otherwise afford the full cost of intensive tuition. The amount of assistance with fees is based on a sliding scale linked to family income. In the academic year 2001–02, around 23 per cent. of families, those on low incomes, will get free places and make no contribution towards fees. We estimate that 85 per cent. of all families will benefit (or in some cases at least be no worse off) from the proposed restructuring of the parental contribution scales. A middle income family on £30,000 a year will be over £530 better off.

Supported Employment

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the results of the consultation carried out in connection with his Workstep proposals, with specific reference to target-setting. [149755]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The consultation sought views on how progression might be measured and how it could be increased to allow more people to participate in the Supported Employment Programme—to be known as Workstep from 1 April. The "Summary of Responses" to the public consultation exercise was published in May 2000 and were placed in the House of Commons Library.

Higher Education

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the percentage of higher education students (a) in England and (b) from North Somerset who discontinued their studies citing financial hardship/debt as the main reason in each of the past five years. [149902]

Mr. Wicks: The Department does not have data on the reasons given by higher education students who discontinue their studies. The non-completion rate in the UK has remained broadly steady at 17–18 per cent. since 1991–92.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money the Government estimate they have saved by abolishing the maintenance grant and introducing tuition fee contributions in higher education; and if he will make a statement. [149924]

Mr. Wicks: We estimate that continuing with the previous Government's student support policies for undergraduates normally resident in England and Wales, rather than replacing them with our new ones, would have led to an additional cost to the Government of £1.5 billion over the three years 1998–99 to 2000–01 on a resource basis (this is the full economic cost taking account of loan repayments in future years). The extra resources thus available through our policies, which share the cost of higher education more fairly between students, their families and taxpayers, have enabled us to invest substantially in higher education. Over the period 1998–99 to 2003–04, the increase in resources available to the HE sector will be 18 per cent. in real terms.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the capital value of the endowment that would be required to enable higher education institutions to generate an income sufficient to equal the total amount of public funding currently received on an annual basis. [150105]

Mr. Blunkett: The value of the required endowment is uncertain. Assuming a gross return of 6–7 per cent., of which some 2.5 per cent. points is used to maintain the real value of the capital, an endowment of over £80 billion is likely to be required in England to meet the costs of teaching currently funded through the Higher Education Funding Council for England. Including the costs of research funded through the Higher Education Funding Council for England, an endowment of over £110 billion is likely to be required.

Research Assessment Exercises

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many (a) men and (b) women (i) are serving as panel members in the 2001 Research Assessment Exercise and (ii) served in this capacity in the 1992 and 1996 Research Assessment Exercises; [150089]

(2) (i) are serving as panel chairpersons in the 2001 Research Assessment Exercise and (ii) served in this capacity in the 1992 and 1996 Research Assessment Exercises. [150090]

Mr. Wicks: The information requested is in the tables. Information about the gender of panel members for the 1992 Research Assessment Exercise is not available centrally. Some 10 per cent. of professors are women.

Childminders

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many responses to the consultation on National Standards for the Regulation of Day Care and Childminding in England published in July 2000 were received; how many of the responses received were included in the sample considered in the process of reaching the decision not to ban childminders from smoking in front of children in their care; what method was used to select the sample of responses considered in reaching this decision; and how many respondents whose responses were considered in making the assessment (i) opposed the proposal that parents should be allowed to decide whether childminders should be allowed to smoke, (ii) supported the proposal and (iii) neither supported nor opposed the proposal. [150130]

Ms Hodge: The Government have made clear that smoking will be prohibited in all group day care settings not based in the home, and in all childminding settings unless parents give their explicit consent. In addition the draft standards state that childminders must promote the good health of children in their care.

We received approximately 6,000 responses to our consultation exercise on the draft national standards for the regulation of day care. Of these, an initial analysis of 1,069 was carried out, of which 335 related directly to our proposals for national standards for childminders. The selection of responses for the initial analysis was done on the basis of a random sample, although we made sure that we also considered the responses of key organisations in the early years sector, including the National Childminding Association.

In answering the question "Do you agree with the criteria set down for this standard?", which contained the proposal to allow childminders to smoke in front of children in their care with parents' consent, 37 per cent. disagreed while 63 per cent. agreed.

Having completed our consultation on the national standards we were concerned that the views of parents had not been adequately represented. That is why the Government commissioned an independent opinion poll of over 1,000 parents to ask them whether parents or the Government should decide on whether childminders should be permitted to smoke in the presence of children in their care. A significant majority (74 per cent.) agreed with our view that this is a matter on which parents rather than the Government should decide.

Staffing Costs

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of (a) teaching and (b) non-teaching staff are covered by national pay scales in each local education authority in England. [150190]

Ms Estelle Morris: Qualified and unqualified teachers in maintained schools are covered by national pay scales, except for agency teachers, and teachers in the four former grant-maintained schools that opted out of national pay arrangements under the School Teachers Pay and Conditions Act 1991. The number of agency teachers employed in each local authority is not known.

Schools in Education Action Zones have the right to opt out of national pay arrangements, but DfEE has not been informed of any doing so. Independent schools, including City Technology Colleges and city academies, are not covered by national pay arrangements.

Information on pay scales of non-teaching staff is not held centrally.

The number of regular teachers in maintained schools in England increased by 6,900 between January 1998 and January 2000.

There was a growth of more than 2,000 in the number of people training to be teachers between 1999–00 and 2000–01, the first such increase since 1992–93.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average cost is of employing a teacher in each local education authority in England. [150193]

Ms Estelle Morris: The average cost (including National Insurance contributions and superannuation) of employing a full-time qualified teacher in the maintained schools sector at March 1999, the latest date for which information is available is as follows:

[1] Salaries for Hackney and Bath and North East Somerset are not available because of incomplete annual returns from the authorities for March 1999.

Note:
All costs have been rounded to the nearest £100.

The average pay cost per teacher has been estimated by taking the average salary of full-time qualified teachers (including heads and deputy heads) in each local authority and adding 14.8 per cent. for National Insurance contributions and superannuation.

It is estimated that the average pay of a full-time qualified teacher (including heads and deputy heads) in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector at April 2001 will be £27,900 (including the post threshold pay scale).

From April 2001 new graduate recruits can expect to earn £17,000 a year (up 6 per cent. from the previous year) and starting salaries in Inner London will rise to £20,000 (up 9 per cent. from the previous year).

An estimated 250,000 classroom teachers in England are eligible for the post-threshold pay scale, of whom 81 per cent. have applied. Teachers moving to the new scale will receive a £2,000 pay increase from 1 September 2000 and can progress on the basis of their performance up to the scale maximum of over £30,000 excluding allowances.

The number of regular teachers in maintained schools in England increased by 6,900 between January 1998 and January 2000.

There was a growth of more than 2,000 in the number of people training to be teachers between 1999–00 and 2000–01, the first such increase since 1992–93.

Fast Track Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 7 February 2001, Official Report, column 580W, how many of the fast track applicants were for (a) primary positions and (b) secondary positions; and if he will provide a breakdown of the secondary positions by subject. [150389]

Ms Estelle Morris: The total number of fast track applications now stands at 1,574. This includes 13 applications received since my answer of 7 February, which had been delayed in the post. The information requested is set out in the table.

Visual Classroom Testing

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of visual classroom testing; what school trials his Department has planned for visual classroom testing; what school trials have been completed of visual classroom testing; what the results indicated; and if he will make a statement. [150435]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department for Education and Employment does not carry out trials of commercial educational products. It is for schools and teachers to decide what if any use to make of such products.

Leeds LEA

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the capital investment in schools in Leeds local education authority was from 1996 to 1999 (a) in total and (b) by funding stream; and what his forecast is for the next three years. [150451]

Jacqui Smith: Leeds local education authority has received some £45 million of funding from central Government for capital investment in schools between 1996–97 and 1999–2000 as shown in table A. Table B shows the forecast investment over the next three years.

Nationally, investment in school buildings has tripled from £683 million a year in 1996–97 to over £2 billion in 2000–01. It will be £3.2 billion in 2003–04, including grant, credit approvals and Private Finance Initiative credits. There will be central Government investment of £7.8 billion in school buildings in total from 2001–02 to 2003–04.

[1] 'Future years' allocations shown in the above table are those already announced as being attributable to Leeds local education authority.

In addition to the amounts shown above, schools in the authority will also benefit from a share of other programmes where allocations have not yet been made. These include over £1 billion of credit approvals, mainly to provide new pupil places; £440 million of grant to governors of voluntary aided schools; £555 million funding through the NDS Modernisation programme and £170 million worth of funding under the Schools Access Initiative. Funding under the National Grid for Learning (NGfL) in 2002–03 and 2003–04 is a partial allocation based on a formula. Figures are provisional and confirmed levels of NGfL funding for 2002–03 and 2003–04 will be published in due course.

This funding will be augmented by capital receipts and other contributions from local education authority sources, and the contribution which governors of voluntary aided schools make to their building work. In addition, more than £1 billion is available nationally through private finance initiative credits for projects which will sign in 2002–03 and 2003–04.

Funding specifically ring fenced for the renewal of school laboratories and secondary learning support units is ending in 2001–02. Local authorities will be able to prioritise their other increased funding for this purpose, if they wish.

[2] Provisional figures, they also include a small proportion of revenue funding. (Also see [1]).

Learning and Skills Councils

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the readiness of the Learning and Skills Council for the assumption of its responsibilities in April. [150456]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 15 February 2001]: Good progress is being made with the establishment of the Learning and Skills Council (LSC), which is on track to assume its responsibilities from 1 April 2001. We are grateful to the support that staff in Training and Enterprise Councils and the Further Education Funding Council are giving with this process. At national level, all members of the National Council, and Adult and Young People's Learning Committees have been appointed; the council has met three times, the Young People's Learning Committee will meet on 15 February and the Adult Learning Committee will meet on 5 March. All 47 local LSCs have in place local chairs, local boards and executive directors and most local councils have met on at least one occasion. The process for appointing staff is well under way. The matching of staff with transfer rights to posts is on track. Some resulting vacancies have been advertised already and others will follow. Contracts have been concluded with IT suppliers and the first part of the IT systems that the LSC will need has been installed in every local LSC.

In November, we published "The Learning and Skills Council Remit Letter", which set out the Government's vision for the LSC and the priorities for its first corporate plan. The LSC plans to begin consultation on this corporate plan in March.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many representatives of schools with sixth forms sit on local Learning and Skills Councils. [151243]

Mr. Wicks: Eleven head teachers of schools with sixth forms have so far been appointed as council members to the local Learning and Skills Councils. Action is also in hand in a further six areas to fill local council member vacancies specifically left for school heads. In addition, further experience of schools matters will be brought by the 29 local council members appointed from a local education authority (LEA) background (typically directors of education), by the six local executive directors who have previous LEA officer or head teacher experience, and by a number of local council members who are school governors.

In April 2002, the LSC assumes responsibility for school sixth form funding, and in recognition of this we will encourage the LSC to appoint further school heads as vacancies arise on local councils.

Employment and Youth Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the outcome was of the Employment and Youth Council held in Brussels on 12 February; and if he will make a statement. [150525]

Mr. Wicks: Nicol Stephen MSP, Minister for Higher Education, represented the UK at the Council of EU Education Ministers in Brussels on 12 February.

Education Ministers adopted a report on the concrete future objectives of education and training systems, which will be presented to the Stockholm European Council on 23 and 24 March. The report will also be submitted to the European Parliament for information. There will be a discussion about the work programme arising from the report at the next Education Council meeting in May.

There was a discussion on strategies for lifelong learning, which included consideration of the Commission's memorandum on lifelong learning and the implementation of the lifelong learning aspects of the 2001 employment guidelines. It was noted that member states were currently in the process of undertaking national consultations on the memorandum on lifelong learning and that the Commission will draw up an action plan, based on the responses from member states, for discussion by the Council on 29 November.

Ministers received reports from the Commission on: the evaluation report on the first phase of the Community action programme, Leonardo da Vinci; progress on the European Year of Languages 2001; and the opening of the third phase of the trans-European co-operation scheme for higher education (Tempus III) to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The Presidency also provided information on the informal conference of Ministers of Education and Research, which will take place in Uppsala on 1–3 March.

Burma

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he has taken in response to the recent ILO resolution condemning the Burmese regime for its use of forced labour. [150586]

Ms Jowell: We have written to national employer and worker groups, asking them to draw their members' attention to the ILO resolution; and have discussed how best to give effect to its recommendations with other EU member states and the European Commission. The European Union has already taken a number of measures in response to the abuses of human rights including the practice of forced labour in Burma. The situation is being closely monitored and, should the authorities in Burma fail to take the necessary steps to effectively end the practice of forced labour, the EU stands ready to take further measures. We will shortly be writing to the Director General of the ILO setting out the Government's position.

Computers for Teachers

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to continue the Computers for Teachers initiative in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools. [150709]

Mr. Wills: The first phase of the Computers for Teachers initiative was very successful with nearly 28,000 teachers now owning a computer as a result of the scheme. Phase 2 of the scheme is currently under way and is focused on Key Stage 3 maths teachers. This scheme is part of an on-going commitment and although not all teachers will benefit from this phase, there will be similar opportunities for other teachers in the future. We are committed to continually exploring ways of widening teachers' access to computers and will continue to seek resources to do so.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the Computers for Teachers initiative. [150708]

Mr. Wills: The first phase of the Computers for Teachers initiative was very successful with nearly 28,000 teachers now owning a computer as a result of the scheme. Informal feedback from teachers has confirmed earlier research and indicates that key benefits of personal ownership of a computer are:

improved teacher confidence and competence in their personal use of ICT enhanced professional development improvements in teaching and learning increases in teacher enthusiasm for their work better efficiency.

The second phase of the scheme is currently under way and we are currently setting up an external evaluation covering both phases of the scheme. The results of this evaluation will be made available in due course.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about the availability of the Computers for Teachers initiative. [151359]

Mr. Wills: The first phase of the Computers for Teachers initiative was very successful with nearly 28,000 teachers now owning a computer as a result of the scheme. Phase 2 of the Computers for Teachers scheme was launched on 10 January 2001. The second phase of the initiative is focused on Key Stage 3 mathematics teachers who teach in the maintained secondary sector (including non-maintained special schools) in England. The decision to focus funds available in this phase on mathematics at Key Stage 3 reflects the Government's drive to improve standards at Key Stage 3. This scheme is part of an ongoing commitment and although not all teachers will benefit from this phase, there will be similar opportunities for other teachers in the future. We are committed to continually exploring ways of widening teachers' access to computers and will continue to seek resources to do so.

Learning Mentors

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to fund Learning Mentors in all secondary schools. [150711]

Ms Estelle Morris: Learning Mentors are school staff who work with pupils to help them overcome barriers to learning such as bullying, truancy or disaffection. Learning Mentors help raise standards by re-engaging pupils with learning, and by freeing up teachers to concentrate on teaching. Learning Mentors are currently being introduced in secondary schools through the Government's Excellence in Cities programme, and through new Excellence Clusters. These two policies aim to raise standards in city schools and in other deprived and low-performing schools. By the end of the next school year, nearly a third of all secondary schools will have learning mentors as a result of these policies. Last year, Excellence in Cities schools saw an increase of 2.3 per cent. in the proportion of students getting five good GCSEs, compared to a 1.3 per cent. improvement in other schools.

An estimated 1,500 Learning Mentors will be working in secondary schools by the end of this school year, in addition to some 900 in primary schools. This will rise to over 2,300 in secondary schools by the beginning of 2004. Learning Mentors are popular with head teachers, with parents and with pupils. The formal evaluation has just begun, but we have already seen dramatic changes in attitude, behaviour, school attendance and motivation in some individual pupils who have worked with a Learning Mentor.

We announced in the "Schools: Building on Success" Green Paper on 12 February that a further four Excellence Clusters would begin in September 2001 and that more areas would be included over the next three years. This will bring the benefits of Learning Mentors to more schools in the primary and secondary sectors.

Schools and LEAs outside the areas covered by Excellence in Cities and Excellence Clusters may fund Learning Mentors from the extra money that they receive to reduce truancy and exclusion. In addition, the Connexions Service will bring in a universal service for all young people aged 13–19, including individualised support from Personal Advisers for those young people who need it most, wherever they live. Over time, the full Connexions Service will be delivered to young people aged 13–19 in a variety of settings, including in secondary schools.

Classroom Assistants

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many extra classroom assistant positions have been created since 1997 (a) nationally (b) in Nottinghamshire. [150713]

Ms Estelle Morris: An additional 24,000 education support staff have been recruited in schools in England since 1997, including over 18,000 full-time equivalent teaching assistants.

Following the local government re-organisation on 1 April 1998, Nottinghamshire split into two—Nottinghamshire and Nottingham City.

In 1997 there were 1,289 teaching assistants in Nottinghamshire, compared to 1,065 in Nottinghamshire and 559 in Nottingham City in 2000.

Education Welfare Officers

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many education welfare officers he assumes Essex County Council has for the purpose of his Department's plan for the delivery of the Government's policy on education; [150805]

(2) how many education welfare officers he assumes each local authority on average has for the purpose of his Department's plan for the delivery of the Government's policy on education. [150811]

Jacqui Smith: Further to my reply of 12 February 2001, Official Report, column 46W, the number of education welfare officers employed in a local education authority is a matter for each authority to determine, bearing in mind the need to secure attendance of children at school. Numbers employed will depend on the size of the authority and the level of non-attendance at school. Essex local education authority employs 51 education welfare officers.

School Funding (Cambridgeshire)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the SSA per (a) primary school and (b) secondary school pupil was, in real terms, for Cambridgeshire in each year since 1990–91. [150812]

Ms Estelle Morris: The first table shows for 1990–91 to 1997–98 primary and secondary SSA per pupil for Cambridgeshire prior to local government reorganisation. The second table shows for 1997–98 to 2000–01 primary and secondary SSA per pupil and grants per pupil for Cambridgeshire after local government reorganisation. All figures are in real terms at 2000–01 prices.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the amount of capital made available to schools in the Cambridge constituency through the New Deal for Schools since May 1997. [150813]

Jacqui Smith: The table shows those schools in the Cambridge constituency which are benefiting from investment through the New Deal for Schools programme, allocated over the four years from 1997–98 to 2000–01. These allocations form part of the total £10.7 million investment made in schools in Cambridgeshire Local Education Authority under the New Deal for Schools programme over the same period. In that period, Cambridgeshire Local Education Authority has received some £56.9 million of funding in total for capital investment in schools.

In January this year, we announced that the New Deal for Schools would be extended over the next three years to 2003–04. Allocations benefiting schools in Cambridgeshire Local Education Authority announced in January under the New Deal for Schools total £19.8 million over three years. This amount will be increased later this year when allocations to local authorities of the new £550 million New Deal for Schools Modernisation programme are announced.

It will be for Cambridgeshire and its schools, working within guidelines provided by the Department, to allocate this new funding to individual projects.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to amend the departmental expenditure limit and gross running costs limit for 2000–01. [151370]

Mr. Wills: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates for Class I, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) and Vote 3 (the Employment Service), the Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) for 2000–01 (excluding Welfare to Work) will be increased by £1,538,000 from £18,996,375,000 to £18,997,913,000.

This overall increase is made up of a DEL decrease on Vote 1 and an increase on Vote 3 of £5,530,000 and £31,068,000 respectively and a decrease of £24,000,000 in non-voted expenditure. As a result, the Voted element of the Departmental Expenditure Limit (excluding Welfare to Work) will be increased by £25,538,000 from £17,470,053,000 to £17,495,591,000. The non-Voted element will be decreased by £24,000,000 from £1,526,322,000 to £1,502,322,000.

The changes in Vote 1 are the result of the take up of £6,000,000 of the end-year flexibility entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury in Table 7 of the 1999–2000 Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper (Cm 4812); a switch from non-voted credit approvals of £24,000,000 to capital support for former grant maintained schools; transfers of: £50,000 from Class IV, Vote 1 (Home Office: administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) as a contribution towards developing Connexions Direct; £99,000 to Class IV, Vote 1 (Home Office: administration, police, probation, immigration and other services, England and Wales) for Drug Awareness Teams; £455,000 from Class II, Vote 2 (Department of Health: administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) to support the Drug Advisers Project; £67,000 to Class II, Vote 2 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health and personal social services, England) for Child Protection Tribunals; £750,000 from Class II, Vote 1 (Department of Health: hospital, community health, family health and related services, England) for the Institute of Psychiatry, Kings College; £1,761,000 to Class XII, Vote 1 (Department of Social Security: Central Government administered benefits and other payments for Intercalating Students and to cover additional hardship payments to young people who would normally be receiving bridging allowance; £189,000 to Class IV, Vote 1 (Ministry of Defence: operational and support costs, logistic services and systems procurement and research) in respect of an intake of Modern Apprentices at MOD training centres; £5,014,000 from the Scottish Executive in connection with Open University students; £288,000 from Class I, Vote 3 (Employment Service) for a Modernise to Save project, contribution towards consultation events and for work undertaken by the University for Industry; £39,971,000 to Class I, Vote 3 (Employment Service) as support for Rover redundancies, modernising the ES, Access to Work and other smaller miscellaneous transfers.

The increase in the provision on Vote 3 is the result of the take up of £5,700,000 of end-year flexibility entitlement; £39,683,000 net transfers with Class 1, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services); the transfer of £14,315,000 to Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) to cover expenditure on ONE.

The departmental running costs limit (excluding Welfare to Work) will be increased by £32,220,000 from £1,092,394,000 to £1,124,614,000. This is made up of changes to Vote 1, Vote 3 and Vote 5 of £4,984,000, £26,736,000 and £500,000 respectively. The changes on Vote 1 are as a result of the take up of £6,000,000 EYF, the net transfer of £1,016,000 to Class I, Vote 3 (Employment Service). The changes on Vote 3 are the result of the take up of £5,700,000 of end-year flexibility entitlement, the transfer of £14,315,000 to Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) and the transfer of £35,351,000 from Class I, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services). The change on Vote 5 (Sure Start) is as a result of a virement of £500,000 from programme provision.

The Department's Welfare to Work provision is being increased by £176,304,000 from £1,255,695,000 to £1,431,999,000. The increase is made up of changes on Votes 1 and 3 of £173,034,000 and £3,270,000 respectively. The change on Vote 1 is as the result of the take up of £167,000,000 New Deal for Schools additional funding and £5,000,000 for the National E-Learning Foundation as announced in the pre-Budget statement and the draw down of new provision of £1,034,000. The change on Vote 3 is as a result of the draw down of £3,420,000 of Windfall Tax provision to fund additional expenditure on the New Deal for Disabled People and the New Deal for Partners and net transfers of £150,000 with Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) for New Deal for Partners and New Deal for Disabled People.

The departmental Welfare to Work running costs limit will be increased by £4,012,000 from £196,876,000 to £200,888,000. The change on Vote 1 is as a result of the take up of £78,000 of new provision. The change on Vote 3 is as a result of the draw down of £2,170,000 of Windfall Tax for the extension of New Deal for Disabled People, the virement of £2,070,000 from programme provision into running costs for New Deal for Partners and a transfer of £306,000 to Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security: administration) for the New Deal for Partners.

The decrease in non-Voted expenditure within DEL arises from the switching of £24,000,000 from non-voted credit approvals to capital support for former grant maintained schools.

The increases are the result of transfers or will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure was in his Department for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000, and what the planned expenditure and breakdown of expenditure for 2000–01 is on (i) public opinion research, (ii) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (iii) direct mail. [149260]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The Department's expenditure in these categories was:

Recent research projects undertaken in support of publicity campaigns include research on the best ways of communicating the benefits of parents getting more involved in their children's education; of employers recruiting disabled people; and of people taking up jobs in child care occupations.

Expenditure on advertising in 2000–01 includes £1,958,111 to raise awareness among young people of the benefits of staying on in learning; £2,116,779 to increase participation in New Deal 50+; £1,815,141 to encourage those out of work to take up taster courses in ICT and £2,178,120 to encourage recruitment into the child care sectors.

Pupil Expenditure

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for (a) Great Britain and (b) each local authority real terms expenditure per pupil in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) each year since 1992 for which figures are available. [147252]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested on local education authority real terms expenditure per pupil is contained in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library. The tables cover England, for which I have ministerial responsibility. Information based on net institutional expenditure is given for each local education authority for 1979–80, 1990–91 and each year from 1992–93 to 1998–99, the latest year for which this information is currently available. In addition, further tables for each local education authority based on funding per pupil, through the education standard spending assessment and central government grants, have been provided for the years 1997–98 to 2000–01.

Graduates (Starting Salaries)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the average starting salary for graduates in each employment sector in each year since 1974. [148710]

Mr. Wicks: Information on the average starting salary for each employment sector is not available. The table shows the median of the starting salaries paid by employers to graduates from 1974 to 2000 from the Association of Graduate Recruiters' Annual Graduate Salaries and Vacancies Surveys. 50 per cent. of employers in the sample pay less than this and we do not have figures for the lowest starting salary or the statistical mean. Members of the Association of Graduate Recruiters tend to be large employers recruiting graduates to professional and fast track managerial jobs and probably pay higher starting salaries than the overall average, but information on the latter is not available. A more detailed breakdown by sector than industrial and non-industrial is not available from this survey. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 8 January 2001, Official Report, column 403W, for figures on the starting pay for honours graduate teachers which from April will be £20,000 in inner London. Figures for other sectors are not collected centrally.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the answer of 29 January 2001, Official Report, column 33W, what the average salary has been, including relevant threshold payments, for (a) primary teachers, (b) secondary teachers, (c) graduates in other sectors and (d) all non-manual employees in each year since 1974. [148921]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 6 February 2001]: It is estimated that the average pay of a full-time qualified teacher (including heads and deputy heads) in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector at April 2001 will be £27,900 (including the post-threshold pay scale). There is nothing further to add to the previous answer about teacher salaries.

Average gross weekly earnings for full-time non-manual adults in Great Britain, whose pay in the survey pay period was not affected by absence, in April each year, are as follows:

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many press releases were issued by his Department in the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000; how many have been issued in the current financial year; and what his estimate is of the total number for the current financial year. [149253]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The number of press releases issued by my Department is as follows:

Financial year	Number
1996–97	382
1997–98	538
1998–99	582
1999–2000	596
2000–01 (to end January 2001)	523

It is not possible at this time to give an estimate of what the final figure will be for the financial year 2000–01.

Policy and Strategy Units

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when his strategy division was established; which of its reports are placed in the public domain; how many departmental or non-departmental special advisers participate in its work; how many regular (a) non-departmental and (b) departmental staff participate in its work; and how many of these work for the division on a full-time basis. [150367]

Mr. Wills: The strategy division was originally created in 1996 to provide the Department with the capability to identify and plan for the external changes, developments and potential challenges that education, training and employment policy would need to take account of in coming years. One of its first tasks was to co-ordinate and produce the document: "Learning and Working together for the future—A strategic framework to 2002", which was published by the Department in November 1998. This was given a wide public circulation and remains available.

No special advisers participate in the division's work, through freelance consultants are occasionally used to provide specialist knowledge and support. Currently 25 full-time staff work in the division.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when his policy innovation unit was established; which of its reports are placed in the public domain; how many departmental or non-departmental special advisers participate in its work; how many regular (a) non-departmental and (b) departmental staff participate in its work; and how many of these work for the unit on a full-time basis. [150368]

Mr. Wills: The policy innovation unit in the DfEE was established in January 2000. Staff have been recruited from a variety of private, voluntary and public sector backgrounds to work alongside a core civil service team, looking at new policy ideas for Ministers and senior officials. Strategy and policy units typically provide internal advice to Ministers. Any resulting reports will be published by the Department, and not the unit. No departmental or non-departmental special advisers work in the unit. The unit currently has 13 externally recruited team members. Of these, four are on casual civil service contracts (all full-time), two are on secondment (both part-time) and seven are working as consultants (two full-time and five part-time). The unit also has five departmental staff, all of whom are full-time.

Teachers

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the wastage rate for teachers in each of the last five years was; what the average earnings of teachers in each of the last five years were; and how many days on average were lost per teacher due to sickness in each of the last five years. [150473]

Ms Estelle Morris: The statistics on full-time and part-time teachers leaving the maintained schools sector in England for the last five years for which data are available are as follows:

Financial year	Leavers[1,2]	Rate[3]
1994–95	32,510	7.8
1995–96	31,150	7.4
1996–97	33,150	7.9
1997–98	34,250	8.2
1998–99[4]	27,570	6.6

[1] Teachers leaving the maintained nursery, primary, secondary, special and PRU sector including those moving to the FE, HEE or the independent schools sector.
Teachers retiring but then rejoining the maintained nursery, primary, secondary, special and PRU sector have not been included in the figures. Teachers retiring and then joining the FE, HE or the independent schools sector are included.
Teachers barred from service and dying in service are included

[2] The number of teachers leaving on early or ill-health retirement has now stabilised at a lower level, following the reform of the Teachers Pensions Scheme in 1997.

[3] Leavers expressed as a percentage of teachers in post at the start of the year shown.

[4] Provisional.

Average salaries of full-time teachers in the maintained schools sector in England for the last five years were as follows:

March 1996	22,180
March 1997	22,920
March 1998	23,570
March 1999	24,460
March 2000	25,320

Note:
The March 2000 salary is estimated by increasing the March 1999 figure by the 1 April 1999 pay rise of 3.5 per cent.

It is estimated that the average pay of a full-time qualified teacher (including heads and deputy heads) in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector at April 2001 will be £27,900 (including the post threshold pay scale).

From April 2001 new graduate recruits can expect to earn £17,000 a year (up 6 per cent. from the previous year) and starting salaries in Inner London will rise to £20,000 (up 9 per cent. from the previous year).

In calendar year 1999, full-time and part-time teachers in maintained schools in England took an estimated average of five days' sick leave. This is the only year for which data are available.

The number of regular teachers in maintained schools in England increased by 6,900 between January 1998 and January 2000,

There was a growth of more than 2,000 in the number of people training to be teachers between 1999–2000 and 2000–01, the first such increase since 1992–93.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of (a) the number of qualified supply teachers and (b) the number of these that were in post in schools on 17 January for each of the last five years. [150091]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number of qualified supply teachers is not collected centrally.

The number of qualified short-term supply teachers on contracts of under one month employed in maintained schools in England for the whole day, on the third Thursday in January over the last five years, is as follows:

Year
1996	12,600
1997	13,600
1998	13,100
1999	14,100
2000	16,700

Note:
All numbers have been rounded to the nearest 100

A number of factors may have affected the demand for short term supply teachers in January 2000 including the requirement for schools to give teachers in their induction year a 10 per cent. reduction in timetable, and the flu epidemic that some LEAs reported at the time.

Supply, temporary and agency teachers on a contract of at least one month cannot be separately identified from teachers in regular service.The number of regular teachers (ie excluding short term supply) in maintained schools in England increased by 6,900 between January 1998 and January 2000.

There was a growth of more than 2000 in the number of people training to be teachers between 1999–2000 and 2000–01, the first such increase since 1992–93.

Universities (Early Leavers)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many 18 to 25-year-olds left university without finishing their courses in the last three years. [150651]

Mr. Wicks: The latest "Performance Indicators in Higher Education", published by the Higher Education Funding Council for England, give an overall non-completion rate for students starting full-time first degree courses in the UK in 1997–98 of 17 per cent., a figure which has stayed roughly constant since 1991–92. It is not possible to disaggregate the relevant data by age.

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will next review his policy in respect of the employer threshold provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [150820]

Ms Hodge: The Disability Rights Task Force has made recommendations about reducing and removing the threshold below which small employers are exempted from Part II of the Disability Discrimination Act. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 20 November 2000, Official Report, column 39W. I confirm that we will be responding shortly to the Task Force's recommendations.

Camden LEA

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list his funding allocations to Camden Local Education Authority for each year since May 1997. [150961]

Ms Estelle Morris: I refer my hon. Friend to the letter of 16 February from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, which sets out the increases in funding that the Government have made available to her local education authority since 1996–97, and the increased funding for 2001–02. My right hon. Friend has written in similar terms to all hon. Members. Between 1997–98 and 2000–01 funding per pupil in Camden has increased by £470 in real terms. Under the last Government funding per pupil in Camden fell by £170 in real terms between 1995–96 and 1997–98.

Ministerial Visits

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the Ministers in his Department who visited any of the constituencies which are in the Peterborough Unitary Authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001, indicating in each case (a) the date of the visit, (b) the constituencies included in the visit and (c) if the local hon. Member met the Minister. [151023]

Mr. Wills: Two Ministers from the Department have visited constituencies in the Peterborough unitary authority between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities visited North-West Cambridgeshire on 16 November 2000; she did not meet the local Member. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Employment and Equal Opportunities visited the constituencies of Peterborough and North-West Cambridgeshire on 9 February 2001 and met my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton).

In accordance with departmental guidance, hon. Members are informed, in advance, of all ministerial visits to their constituencies.

Centres of Vocational Excellence

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress in the establishment of centres of vocational excellence in further education. [151160]

Mr. Wicks: On 21 November 2000 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced Centres of Vocational Excellence at the Association of Colleges annual conference. Centres of Vocational Excellence are central to our vision of modern further education sector in which colleges are more sharply focused on meeting the skills needs of employers at local and sectoral levels. By 2005, we want half of all general further education colleges to have a Centre of Vocational Excellence. We are allocating £100 million in support of the centres.

We will consult employers, general FE colleges and other key partners in education and employment in March to develop the operational detail of the centres. We plan to have the first pathfinder Centres of Vocational Excellence up and running in the autumn with most centres opening for business from April 2002 onwards.

School Funding

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of schools with sixth forms which (a) have not received funding for the revised sixth form curriculum in the current financial year and (b) will not receive funding for the next financial year. [151241]

Ms Estelle Morris: £35 million was included in Education Standard Spending for 2000–01 and a further £60 million was included for 2001–02. This funding is unhypothecated: it is for local education authorities to decide, in consultation with their schools, how much should be allocated to each of their schools for the Qualifying for Success reforms of the sixth form curriculum. Information on this is not collected centrally. All secondary schools received £40,000, £50,000 or £60,000 in direct grants in 2000–01, and will receive £50,000, £60,000 or £70,000 in 2001–02.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate he has made of the net change in revenue funding for each former grant maintained school for each of the last three academic years and for the next academic year; [151242]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of maintained schools for which the revenue funding per capita will be less (a) for the current academic year than for the last academic year and (b) for the next academic year than for the current academic year. [151245]

Ms Estelle Morris: No such estimates can be made on the basis of the information available to the Department. Nationally, however, funding per pupil has increased by over £300 in real terms under the present Government, and it will increase by a further £150 per pupil for 2001–02. Under the last Government, funding per pupil fell by £60 in real terms between 1994–95 and 1997–98. There will be further increases in funding following the year 2000 Spending Review, with a further £370 per pupil over the three-year period, taking the total increase to nearly £700 between 1997–98 and 2003–04.

Former grant maintained schools are entitled to minimum levels of funding per pupil, derived from the amounts of annual maintenance grant per pupil which they received in 1998–99, with an adjustment for inflation. They have further benefited from the introduction of direct grants to schools in 2000–01: a typical primary school receives £9,000 and a typical secondary school £40,000, rising in 2001–02 to £20,000 and £60,000 respectively.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of local education authorities which will be unable to access standards fund money as a result of an inability to supply match funding. [151244]

Ms Estelle Morris: We expect over 99 per cent. of the match funded allocations to be taken up. However, final information is not yet available.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will indicate for each local education authority the dates on which (a) profit-related pay funds were paid to the local education authority by his Department and (b) those funds were passed on by the local education authority to schools. [151246]

Ms Estelle Morris: There are no profit-related pay funds. However, the Government are providing special grant to cover the additional salary costs of classroom teachers being paid on point 1 of the upper pay scale having crossed the performance threshold. Under Special Grant Report (No. 70), local education authorities were paid monthly instalments of grant on 6 December 2000, 12 January 2001 and 14 February 2001. The December instalment represented four months of grant backdated to September 2000.

Further instalments of grant will be made under Special Grant Report (No. 74) which requires that we pay local education authorities by the 15th of each month.

We do not hold data centrally of when local education authorities pass these funds on to schools. We have given clear guidance that local education authorities should adjust teachers' salaries or, where the authority is not the payroll provider, schools' budgets as soon as administratively possible following receipt of the results of assessments in individual schools.

Schools Green Paper

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if graduate teachers in the qualifying subjects detailed in the recent schools Green Paper will have their tutorial fees reimbursed if they choose to teach in Scotland or Northern Ireland. [151270]

Ms Estelle Morris: The recently published Green Paper "Schools: Building on Success" in which this scheme is proposed relates to England only. However, the eligibility criteria for the repayment of student loans are still being worked up in detail. We have indicated that the scheme will apply in Wales, and DfEE officials are currently discussing the proposals with colleagues in Scotland and Northern Ireland. A consultation document outlining how the scheme might work in detail will be published in due course.

Schools (Crosby and Sefton)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much direct grant was received by each school in the Crosby constituency in each year since 1996. [151292]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the amount of school standards grant payable to each school in the constituency for the 2000–01 financial year. This is the first year in which this grant was payable. The total is estimated to rise to £807,000 in 2001–02, and grants will increase by 2.75 per cent. in each of the following two years.

Total	436,000

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the annual increase has been in the Standards Fund since 1996; and how much standards funds have been spent in (a) the constituency of Crosby and (b) the Borough of Sefton in each year since 1996. [151295]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the annual cash increase in the Standards Fund since 1996–97:

£ million

Year	Total allocations	Increase on previous year	DfEE contribution	Increase on previous year
1996–97	265	14	163	12
1997–98	320	55	211	48
1998–99	620	300	395	184
1999–2000	1,260	640	862	467
2000–01	2,490	1,230	1,913	1,051

Note:
The total allocation figures include both Government and local authority contributions.

Figures for the amount of grant spent in an individual constituency cannot be provided, but the following table shows the Standards Fund grant spent in Sefton local education authority since 1996–97. The figures include all grants paid through the Standards Fund payment system excluding New Deal for Schools capital, which is not part of the Standards Fund programme.

Amount of standards fund spent in the borough of Sefton

	Total expenditure	DfEE contribution
1996–97	1.3	0.8
1997–98	1.5	1.0
1998–99	3.5	2.2
1999–2000	6.0	4.2
2000–01	12.9	9.7

Note:
1. The total expenditure figures include both Government and local authority contributions.
2. The figures for 1996–97, 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are audited outturn expenditure figures.
3. The figures for 2000–01 are the total expenditure currently expected to be incurred in this financial year.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what average funding was allocated per school-age child in the Borough of Sefton in each year since 1996. [151333]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is in the tables. Since 1996–97 funding has increased by £410 per pupil in real terms. Grant figures have not yet been finalised for 2001–02, so no comparable figure is available for that year.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of its local schools budget Sefton council has delegated to schools in each year since 1996. [151334]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is as follows:

Financial year	Percentage of schools budget delegated
1996–97	79.3
1997–98	79.6
1998–99	79.0
1999–2000	80.2

Note:
For 1998–99 and previous years, the figures represent the percentage of Sefton's General Schools Budget (less capital expenditure and capital financing costs) delegated to schools in accordance with the LEA's school funding formula.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on trends in numeracy and literacy among children in junior schools in the borough of Sefton since 1996. [151335]

Ms Estelle Morris: In the 2000 Key Stage 2 tests, 80 per cent. of Sefton's 11-year-olds achieved the expected standard for their age in English, an increase of 15 percentage points since 1996. In mathematics, 77 per cent. of pupils achieved the expected standard, a 16 percentage point increase since 1996. These results are clear evidence of the success of the National Literacy and Numeracy Strategies.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the contracts that exist between SERCo and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151352]

Mr. Wills: There are currently no contracts in existence between SERCo and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies. Contracts which have existed in the last three years are listed as follows:

From 1 April 1994 to 31 July 1999—a contract existed for facilities management services for the Department's Head Office site in Runcorn, which was formerly part of the Employment Department estate.

From 1 April 1994 and 30 September 1998—a contract existed for facilities management services for the Department's Head Office site in London, which was formerly part of the Employment Department estate.

Resuscitation Policies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will instruct Ofsted to inspect all establishments for which it is responsible to ensure that (a) resuscitation policies which respect the rights of all pupils and students for whom they are responsible are in place, (b) such policies are understood by relevant staff and accessible to them and (c) such policies are subject to robust audit and monitoring arrangements. [151439]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is for schools, colleges and others to develop their own first aid policies and procedures based on an assessment of local need. My Department has issued "Guidance on First Aid for Schools: a good practice guide" which provides advice for schools on drawing up first aid policies and ensuring that they are meeting their statutory duties. It specifically advises that first aid training should include resuscitation techniques for children. I have asked HM Chief Inspector, Mike Tomlinson, to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery Funds

9. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is taking to ensure national lottery funds are distributed in a way that targets areas with the greatest social needs. [149393]

Mr. Chris Smith: Following the 1998 reforms to the National Lottery, distributors are required to take into account the need to ensure that all areas have access to funding and the scope for reducing economic and social deprivation. Since then, distributors have increasingly targeted funding on areas of need, on people and activities rather than just capital projects, and on smaller grants to community groups. All of this means that, more than ever, the communities with the greatest needs are experiencing the positive effects of National Lottery funding.

23. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the amount of national lottery proceeds not yet disbursed in favour of good causes. [149409]

Mr. Chris Smith: All the money raised by the National Lottery for good causes has been allocated to one of the 15 National Lottery distributing bodies. As at 31 December 2001, the distributors' balances totalled £3.45 billion, all but £125 million of which has been committed to specific projects.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for the investment of capital reserves arising from the National Lottery into a National Endowment for Sport and Arts Coaching for young people between the ages of seven and 21 years; and if he will make a statement. [148852]

Kate Hoey: The overwhelming majority of the balance of the National Lottery Distribution Fund has already been committed. The Government and Lottery distributors are, however, working to ensure children and young people have access to high-quality sports and arts education. In sport, for example, Sport England and the New Opportunities Fund are using Lottery funds to establish a network of 1,000 co-ordinators across the country to facilitate better PE and sporting opportunities within schools. In the arts, the Government are working with partners on a range of policies, including Creative Partnerships, Artsmark, the National Foundation for Music and the Department for Education and Employment's Music Standards Fund, to deliver high quality arts education.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the fees paid by (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful applicants for lottery funding to consultants in each of the last three years. [150540]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 February 2001]: None. I have, however, asked the Quality, Efficiency and Standards Team (QUEST) to investigate the costs of applying for lottery grants. Their first report, published in August 2000, investigated these costs in relation to grants of up to £100,000 and concluded that the main difficulties for these applicants related to administrative burden rather than cost. QUEST is currently carrying out an examination of the costs to applicants of applying for grants over £100,000. This study will establish how feasible it is to quantify the costs incurred by recent applicants (both successful and unsuccessful), including any fees paid for consultants and other professional services. If this study, which will conclude in May, demonstrates that such a quantification of costs is feasible, QUEST may undertake a full-scale investigation.

National Minimum Wage

15. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Department of Trade and Industry regarding abatements to the national minimum wage to take account of board and lodging in the tourist trade. [149401]

Janet Anderson: My Department maintains a regular dialogue with the Department of Trade and Industry over the application of the national minimum wage to the tourism industry. For example, we discussed the Government's recent evidence to the Low Pay Commission. Our discussions have included the level of the weekly offset allowed to recognise the benefit of the provision of accommodation. The Government have asked the Low Pay Commission to consider whether there is a case for making any change to the maximum accommodation offset.

Museums and Galleries

16. Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to strengthen collaboration between the national museums and galleries and the museums and galleries funded by his Department. [149402]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The national museums and galleries sponsored by my Department already have a good record for assisting their regional counterparts through, for example, tours and loans of their works and the provision of curatorial advice.

In recent years the national museums and galleries have established direct liaison with their regional counterparts involving closer interaction. We will be encouraging the further development of such interaction.

Currently, a number of directors of our national museums and galleries are involved with a task group created by the Secretary of State and chaired by Lord Evans, Chairman of Resource, which is looking at issues facing regional museums and galleries and ways to help maximise their contributions to our cultural life.

Sport and Arts (Participation)

18. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures the Government have taken to encourage participation in sport and the arts in areas of deprivation. [149404]

Mr. Chris Smith: The opportunity to participate in the arts, sport and other culture and leisure activities is vital to building a decent quality of life in areas of deprivation. Promoting participation among those who may not have had their fair share in the past is central to the work of my Department. We are ensuring a better deal from the lottery for deprived communities through simplified application procedures and more small grants. Recently I have been able to announce proposals to invest £580 million in sport for deprived areas, and that the initial programme of Sport Action Zones will be extended to other deprived areas. In addition to the creative partnerships initiative outlined today in the answer to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, column 571, the National Foundation for Youth Music is working to provide opportunities for young people to make music in areas where least opportunity exists. We are also providing £130 million to provide space for sport and arts in primary schools in areas of multiple deprivation and we will be announcing details of the schools shortly.

Football Facilities

19. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to increase investment in grass-roots football facilities. [149405]

Kate Hoey: The creation of the Football Foundation—which uses 5 per cent. of money from TV rights—will make a significant difference to grass-roots football in England. The foundation has some £18 million to invest in grass-roots football this year.

Millennium Dome

21. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the sponsorship of the millennium dome. [149407]

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the sponsorship of the millennium dome. [149387]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company achieved a total sponsorship and donation income, including cash and value in kind, of £119.7 million. This figure excludes the direct funding by BT and Ford of the costs of their zones and the extra funding for marketing and promotion spent by a number of sponsors over and above the requirements of their contracts. Taken together the overall sponsorship and donations relevant to the dome is estimated at £150 million—the most ever raised for a single event in the UK.

26. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the average monthly running costs of the millennium dome at Greenwich have been since its closure. [149412]

Janet Anderson: The current monthly running costs of the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) are between £2.5 million and £3.5 million excluding physical decommissioning costs. Monthly running costs are intended to reduce as the company moves towards solvent liquidation.

School Sports

22. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if funding from the new opportunities fund's sport in schools initiative will be targeted on schools with greatest need of new sports facilities. [149408]

Kate Hoey: New opportunities fund money under the Opportunities for Young People—PE and sport strand will be invested in strengthening the foundation of sport across England by building and refurbishing PE and sports facilities in and for schools.

Swimming

24. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to promote swimming lessons. [149410]

Kate Hoey: Swimming and water safety are an important part of the National Curriculum for Physical Education. Swimming remained compulsory when the non-core subjects were temporarily suspended to allow for the establishment of the national literacy and numeracy strategies. The Government want to ensure that, by Key Stage 2, children are able to swim unaided for 25 m. We are aware that, currently some children are not meeting this standard.

Outdoor Activities (Children)

25. Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to give schoolchildren greater opportunities to take part in outdoor activities, with particular reference to walking, climbing and canoeing. [149411]

Mr. Chris Smith: £50 million from the new opportunities fund will be devoted to programmes of activity for young people, based around challenging activities, aimed at those most at risk of losing contact with education and training opportunities. We also expect that up to £50 million of the £750 million of new opportunities fund money for school sport will fund the refurbishment of outdoor activity centres for use by school.

Space for Sport and Arts Scheme

27. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many primary schools will receive new facilities under the space for sport and arts scheme. [149413]

Kate Hoey: Having considered around 500 outline proposals submitted in December by the 65 LEAs allocated funding under the Space for Sport and Arts (SSA) scheme, the project board recommended detailed applications should be developed on nearly 300 projects. Each LEA has been asked to confirm by 7 March 2001 its final portfolio of projects for which applications will be submitted by the end of October 2001. A final list of schools for which applications are being developed will be published in due course.

Access Radio

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the development of Access Radio on the revenues of existing commercial radio broadcasters; [150730]

(2) what plans he has to ensure that Access Radio does not compete unfairly with existing commercial radio broadcasters. [150731]

Mr. Chris Smith: The White Paper "A New Future for Communications" invited views on whether the benefits of community radio would justify greater public intervention, and, if so, on possible sources of funding. We are now considering the many responses on this issue, including those from commercial broadcasters.

"Seeing Salvation" Exhibition

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 9 February 2001, Official Report, column 706W, on the "Seeing Salvation" Exhibition, what representations were made by his Department to the National Gallery regarding the content of the "Seeing Salvation" Exhibition, prior to its opening. [150878]

Mr. Chris Smith: None. The choice of theme and content of the exhibitions staged by DCMS's sponsored museums and galleries is entirely a matter for their trustees.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list all overseas visits made by ministers in his Department, together with the purpose of each visit and the cost to the public purse in each case, since 1 May 1997. [151520]

Mr. Chris Smith: This Government have given a commitment to publish an annual list of visits overseas by Cabinet Ministers costing more than £500 as well as an annual figure on spend by all Ministers on overseas visits. The list for the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 1999 was published on 17 June 1999, Official Report, column 196W, and the list for 1999–2000 was published on 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 969W. The list for 2000–2001 will be published in due course.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the Ministers in his Department who visited any of the constituencies which are in the Peterborough Unitary Authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001, indicating in each case (a) the date of the visit, (b) the constituencies included in the visit and (c) if the local hon. Member met the Minister. [151021]

Janet Anderson: I visited Peterborough on 6 December 2000 and met my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton). We had a number of engagements including a visit to Peterborough Football Club which, I understand, is located in the North-West Cambridgeshire constituency. I was unaware of this at the time and I was therefore unable to give the right hon. Member advance notice of this visit. I have apologised to him since.

No other Ministers in this Department have visited the Peterborough unitary authority area in this period.

Television Licences

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to the answer of 30 January 2001, Official Report, column 133W, on television licences, how many prosecutions for licence evasion were brought in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) England in each of the last four years; and what action is being taken to reduce the evasion rate in Northern Ireland, Scotland and England. [151448]

Janet Anderson: Figures for England and Wales cannot readily be disaggregated because, in border areas, courts in Wales may try cases where the defendant's address is in England and vice versa. The number of prosecutions in each of the last four years was:

	Northern Ireland	Scotland	England and Wales
1997–98	2,966	2,120	94,714
1998–99	2,495	499	94,566
1999–2000	2,107	992	86,133
2000–01[1]	2,363	3,733	123,755

[1] Year to date

Statutory responsibility for the administration and enforcement of the television licensing system rests with the BBC. The BBC and its agent, TV Licensing, have adopted a range of measures to reduce evasion, including advertisements, correspondence and occasional telephone reminders to remind people of the television licensing requirements, followed up if necessary by visits from TV Licensing inquiry officers.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the contracts that exist between SERCo and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151341]

Mr. Chris Smith: No contract exists directly between SERCO and my Department. We have contacted the non-departmental public bodies and the Royal Parks Agency to request the information required in relation to their activities, and I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as it is available, placing copies of my letter in the Libraries of both Houses.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tourists he estimates visited the north-west in (a) 1998, (b) 1999 and (c) 2000. [151304]

Janet Anderson: Estimates for the number of tourists visiting the North West Tourist Board region from the UK, staying at least one night, and from overseas in 1998 and 1999 are shown in the table. Estimates for tourists visiting the North West Tourist Board region in 2000 are not yet available. Figures for the number of day visits by UK residents to the North West Tourist Board region are available only for 1998 and show an estimated 118 million visits in that year.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many (a) single parents and (b) people over the age of 50 are employed in the tourism industry in the North-West. [151305]

Janet Anderson: Estimates from the Labour Force Survey for the quarter September to November 2000 show that 13,000 single parents and 27,000 people aged 50 and over were employed in tourism related industries in the North-West Tourist Board region.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to encourage the tourism industry to develop training programmes for employees. [151306]

Janet Anderson: Our tourism strategy, Tomorrow's Tourism, contains several recommendations for action to develop a trained and motivated workforce. In particular, we are working with those National Training Organisations (NTOs) which cover the tourism industry to develop training products and qualifications which are of high quality and meet the training needs of the industry. The NTOs in turn work closely with employers in the industry and training providers to identify skills gaps and provide the training to fill those gaps. We also plan to work closely with the new local Learning and Skills Councils to ensure that tourism's training needs are provided for at the regional level.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the average annual wage paid to (a) full-time and (b) part-time employees in the tourism industry was during (i) 1998, (ii) 1999 and (iii) 2000. [151296]

Janet Anderson: Estimates for the average annual wage paid to full-time and part-time employees in tourism related industries during 1999 and 2000 are shown in the table. For 1998, only full-time employees' earnings are shown, as a reliable figure for part-time employees is not available.

Regional Arts Boards

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which regional arts boards experienced a standstill in their arts grant from central Government funding between 1992–93 and 1998–99; and for what reasons. [151297]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The regional arts boards are not directly funded by central Government but from the allocation of grant in aid made to the Arts Council of England. Fluctuations in funding to individual arts boards reflect the increases and decreases in grant in aid to the Arts Council, these being a matter for its decision. The following table drawn from ACE's annual reports and accounts details both the grant in aid to the Arts Council between 1992–93 and 1998–99 and for each of the regional arts boards.

Departmental IT Projects

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the IT projects his Department plans to undertake in the next year; and if he will state in each case the (a) expected date of commencement and completion and (b) cost. [151475]

Mr. Chris Smith: The IT projects currently being planned by the Department for the next year are as follows:

Redevelopment of the Department's website—start date May 2001, end date October 2001.

Review the functionality of the Government Art Collection website—start date September 2001, end date February 2002.

Replacement of remainder of desktop PCs—start date December 2001, end date April 2002.

Development of communications management processes—start date July 2001, end date February 2002.

Redevelopment of Department's intranet—start date June 2001, end date December 2001.

Development and implementation of e-business strategy—on-going.

The individual cost of each project is currently budgeted at less than £100,000, save for the replacement of desktop PCs, where the cost will be of the order of £300,000.

Alongside these projects the Department will be taking forward a number of major initiatives including the development of Culture Online, e-tourism pilots and, with funding provided through the New Opportunities Fund, the rollout of the UKOnline Learning Centres which will see all public libraries connected to the internet.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the IT projects currently undertaken in his Department; and if he will state the (a) expected completion date and (b) cost of each project. [151516]

Mr. Chris Smith: The IT projects currently being undertaken by the Department with expected completion dates are as follows:

Development of a database for recording export licensing requests for works of art—May 2001.

A website for the Government Art Collection—April 2001.

Replacement of desktop PCs—April 2001.

Implementation of the Knowledge Network—April 2001.

Conversion of internal systems to support web access—March 2001.

Review of communications—June 2001.

Development and implementation of e-business strategy—next key milestone July 2001.

The individual cost of each project is less than £100,000, save for the replacement of desktop PCs, where the cost is currently under discussion with potential suppliers.

In addition we are supporting additional development work on the 24 Hour Museum.

Arts Council Salaries

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had regarding proposed salary levels at the Arts Council; and if he will make a statement. [150545]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 February 2001]: None.

Olympic Games

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has made to the Greek authorities about possible development of a sports complex for the 2004 Olympics on the site of the Battle of Marathon. [150271]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 15 February 2001]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not made any representations to the Greek authorities on the matter of the development of the Battle of Marathon site for the 2004 Olympics. This is purely a matter for the Greek authorities.

Sporting Activities (Deprived Children)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action the Government are taking to encourage children from deprived areas to take up sporting activities. [150628]

Kate Hoey: The Government have a number of initiatives—including School Sports Co-ordinators, Sport Action Zones, Space for Sport and Arts—aimed at improving sport in schools and for communities which have the needs of people living in deprived areas at their heart. We will also ensure that the mechanism for distributing New Opportunities Fund Round 3 money will include some weighting to take account of deprivation.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans there are to amend his Department's departmental expenditure limit and running costs limit for 2000–01. [151193]

Mr. Chris Smith: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XI, Vote 1, the DCMS Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) for 2000–01 will be reduced by £9,839,000 from £1,030,565,000 to £1,020,726,000 and the running costs limit will be reduced by £4,400,000 from £35,256,000 to £30,856,000.

The changes are to provide for the use of £5,700,000 of the proceeds from the sale by the British Library of 25 Southampton Buildings for meeting the costs of a new conservation and digitisation studio, a further amount of £9,840,000 from the sale proceeds is being surrendered to the Consolidated Fund as Extra Receipts; to provide for the use of £3,000,000 of the proceeds from the sale of 6 Burlington Gardens to assist English Heritage with the purchase of land for the construction of a new visitor centre at Stonehenge, and for use by the Department of £2,000,000 of the sale proceeds for capital works at its headquarters buildings; to provide for a reduction of £4,400,000 in the gross running costs of the Royal Parks offset by an increase of the same amount in their other current expenditure to reflect the reclassification of the expenditure of the Royal Parks Constabulary out of running costs; and to provide for increased expenditure of £630,000 on DCMS gross running costs offset by an increase in recoveries of eligible deductible input VAT.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Third Archbishopric

31. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners what calculation has been made of the impact on the budget of the Commission of the establishment of a third archbishopric. [149417]

Mr. Stuart Bell: No such calculation has been made.

Employment Relations

32. Mr. Quinn: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners if he will make a statement on employment relations within the Church of England. [149418]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The great majority of clergy in the Church of England are office holders rather than employees. Clergy with the freehold enjoy greater job security than many employees. As to the Church of England's administrative staff, the national organisations of the Church together employ about 600 staff on lines broadly comparable with the Civil Service, with which they have a pay and employment conditions analogue. Others throughout the Church of England are employed by Diocesan Boards of Finance, Boards of Education, parishes and so on.

Clergy Recruitment

33. Mr. Loughton: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what steps they are taking to increase recruitment to the clergy and shorten periods between incumbents in parishes. [149419]

Mr. Stuart Bell: My hon. Friend will recall from my answer in December that the Archbishops Council, within whose responsibility matters such as clergy vocations fall, confirms that although the total number of stipendiary clergy in the Church of England is projected to decline on present trends the number of candidates coming forward for ordination training has risen over the last five years.

The length of time between incumbencies will depend in part upon the policy of individual dioceses. Some will wish to allow time for parishes to reflect on local pastoral needs before a new incumbent arrives.

Church Pensioners/Church Attendance

34. Mr. Flynn: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what his calculation is, based on current trends, on the probable numbers of (a) church pensioners and (b) people attending Anglican churches in 2030. [149420]

Mr. Stuart Bell: No authoritative forecast exists to 2030, whether for church pensioners or people attending Anglican churches. As to the latter, I understand from the Statistics Unit of the Archbishop's Council that the way church attendance is counted is being changed from a Sunday-only basis to an average weekly attendance, in order to take fuller account of actual patterns of attendance.

Conditions of Service (Clergy)

35. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on clergy conditions of service. [149421]

Mr. Stuart Bell: My hon. Friend will know from the answer given to him in January, conditions vary slightly from diocese to diocese, but the national average stipend for clergy of incumbent status as at July 2000 was £16,480. In addition, clergy receive free accommodation or a housing allowance, membership of a non-contributory pension scheme and should receive full reimbursement of all working expenses.

House of Commons (Removal of Clergy Disqualification) Bill

36. Mr. Swayne: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what assessment he has made of the impact of the provisions of the House of Commons (Removal of Clergy Disqualification) Bill on pensions and stipends. [149422]

Mr. Stuart Bell: No assessment has been made. We would expect that any priest or deacon elected as an MP and wishing to continue his or her ministry as a priest would have to become a non-stipendiary minister. Stipend would cease and the years as an MP would not count as pensionable service under the clergy pension scheme. Comparatively few people will be in this position and the impact of this Bill upon stipends and pensions costs for the Church of England as a whole is likely to be negligible.

Redundant Churches

37. Mr. Bercow: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, how many redundant churches were disposed of in the last year; and what covenants relating to subsequent use were agreed. [149423]

Mr. Stuart Bell: During 2000 the future of 25 churches was settled by appropriation to alternative uses—nine for residential use, four for community purposes, four for use by other Christian congregations, four for use for offices or for retail purposes, two for educational purposes, one for use by another faith body and one as a monument. The Commissioners usually impose covenants on the new owner of a redundant church restricting its use to that approved and prohibiting unauthorised architectural changes, the disturbance of any human remains or memorials, and demolition.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the special advisers working for him will relinquish their posts when the next General Election is called. [149308]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Export Credits

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many credits have been supplied by the Export Credits Guarantee Department for (a) renewable energy projects, (b) demand site energy efficiency projects and (c) civil nuclear projects, including nuclear fuel cycle projects, in each of the last 10 years; what the (i) value and (ii) use of each credit was; when each was supplied; and when the work was completed. [149614]

Mr. Caborn: ECGD does not hold its information on cases on a basis which would enable it to answer this question readily in the detail requested. Due to these limitations a complete answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, from information available on ECGD's systems we have been able to identify a list of guarantees that meet the criteria of the question.

Steel Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the arrangements established to transfer the steel industry to private ownership contained provisions that excluded the new owners from liability to implement the decontamination of contaminated areas of steel plant sites. [149660]

Mr. Byers: No such provisions were introduced. Private owners have full liability in respect of decontamination of contaminated areas.

The Government will vigorously enforce their powers in this area.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the decision of Corus plc not to allow an employee buy-out of Llanwern Steel Works to the (a) Office of Fair Trading and (b) Competition Commissioner. [150205]

Mr. Byers: Under UK competition law, in the first instance it is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading to investigate any possible breaches of competition law and only then can cases be referred to the Competition Commission.

I have no formal powers to refer competition issues to the Office of Fair Trading, but I have drawn this case to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the decision of Corus plc not to allow an employee buy-out of the Llanwern Steel Works to the European Union Competition Commissioner. [150206]

Mr. Byers: I have no formal powers to refer competition issues to the European Union Competition Commissioner, but I have drawn the matter to his attention.

Manufacturing (Wales)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the prospects for the manufacturing sector in Wales. [150233]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 13 February 2001]: I have been particularly encouraged by recent announcements. Ford are investing £240 million at their Bridgend plant, creating over 600 new jobs, Toyota have invested £100 million at their Deeside plant and Wireless Systems International are currently creating over 260 new jobs in Cwmbran. These are major coups for Welsh industry, underlining the high regard in which the Welsh work force and economy are held and a welcome sign that manufacturing investment is back on track after a very difficult period.

Mineshafts

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the Heriot Watt paper on mineshafts. [150434]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Stevenson) on 15 February 2001, Official Report, column 281W.

Rural Post Offices

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what definition he uses of rural in relation to post offices. [150522]

Mr. Alan Johnson: A rural post office is defined as one serving a community of up to 10,000 inhabitants.

Arms Deals

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the extent of arms trafficking and brokering activities conducted (a) in the UK and (b) by UK nationals abroad; what countries are buying arms by such arrangements; and if the countries involved are on the UN Embargo List. [150472]

Dr. Howells: It is already a legal requirement for persons in the UK and UK nationals to obtain a licence in order to traffic in or broker arms to any country subject to a binding United Nations embargo. However, such licences are granted only in exceptional circumstances (for example, to supply UN peacekeeping forces). The Government do not have powers under existing legislation to control trafficking and brokering in arms to countries not subject to binding UN embargoes, and the Government therefore have no powers to require information to be submitted to them about other arms trafficking and brokering activities.

However, as part of the review of the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls we have examined information available from both public sources and internal Government sources about arms trafficking and brokering activities conducted in the UK or by UK nationals abroad. As a result of the review, the Government have decided to introduce a system of licensing for arms trafficking and brokering. Full details of the Government's proposals on trafficking and brokering will be set out when the draft Export Control Bill is published. The introduction of the new licensing regime will of course result in information on the arms trafficking and activities subject to control being submitted to the Government.

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the arms deals that have been brokered by (a) brokers based in the UK and (b) UK nationals to (i) Angola, (ii) Congo Brazaville, (iii) the Democratic Republic of Congo, (iv) Eritrea and (v) the Sudan in each of the years (1) 1997, (2) 1998, (3) 1999 and (4) 2000. [150468]

Dr. Howells: Arms deals brokered by UK nationals or brokers based in the UK do not normally require a licence issued by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

At present controls on brokering only apply to destinations subject to binding United Nations arms embargoes. A binding UN arms embargo against UNITA in Angola was imposed in 1993 and against Eritrea in 2000. No licences covering brokering have been issued under these embargoes since 1997.

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the number of private military and security companies operating from the United Kingdom and providing (a) combat personnel, (b) training personnel and (c) operational support for foreign Governments, militias or irregular armed groups. [150470]

Dr. Howells: My Department has made no such assessments of private military and security companies operating from within the UK.

Departmental Policies (Bristol, East)

Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Bristol, East constituency, the effects on Bristol of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150551]

Mr. Caborn: Since May 1997 my Department has introduced and developed a variety of initiatives which will help regenerate the more disadvantaged areas of Bristol. Those in my hon. Friend's constituency include: £7.6 million in total from the EC URBAN programme used to fund projects such as Bristol East Traders—an innovative scheme which has brought together under common aims trading communities previously separated by physical and cultural barriers; a £300,000 grant to the Easton Business Centre towards a £741,000 project to provide 19 enterprise workshops on derelict land in the heart of the area; nearly £100,000 to the Black Development Agency for a scheme dedicated to providing a major resource centre giving black-led voluntary organisations the opportunity to co-locate in accessible serviced premises; and under the Estate Action programme over £1 million has recently been used to continue the improvements being made to tower blocks and estates in east Bristol.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those businesses in the north-east which have received regional selective assistance in the last year. [150631]

Mr. Caborn: Twenty five companies received and accepted offers of regional selective assistance in the last year. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, details of offers are not routinely published until after the first payment of grant. Information on such offers (of £75,000 or more) can be found in Labour Market Trends. However, two companies have received payment of grant and these are Appleyard Plastics Ltd. and Marine & General Engineering Services and Supplies Ltd.

Motor Vehicle Licences

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the feasibility of increasing the number of post offices able to issue motor vehicle licences. [150851]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Post Office acts as agent for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) in issuing motor vehicle licences through 4,000 post offices. In order to safeguard the interests of taxpayers, DVLA has to ensure that the relicensing service is cost effective. Increasing the number of post offices offering the facility increases the costs without increasing the total revenue collected.

Trent 900/600 Aero Engines

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what EU approvals were obtained or have been applied for in respect of the launch aid loan for Rolls-Royce to develop the Trent 600 and 900 aero engines. [150668]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The appropriate information has been made available to the European Commission, which has discretion concerning any necessary EU approval procedures.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Government's launch aid criteria for the proposed loan to Rolls-Royce plc for the development of the Trent 600 and 900 aero engines. [150669]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Like other launch investments, the investment for the development of the Trent 600 and 900 aero engines was subject to rigorous appraisal on a number of different counts covering:

(a) Technical viability.

(b) An assessment of the market.

(c) The financial viability.

(d) The extent to which Government's investment was necessary for the project to proceed.

(e) Wider economic benefits to the UK.

Government investment is subject to stringent appraisal by the DTI with external advice from independent financial advisers, MOD and DERA.

Launch investment is not a loan, but is a repayable investment in a public-private partnership which is expected to secure a real rate of return for the taxpayer as well as securing wider economic benefits for the UK. This arrangement is very similar to a Risk and Revenue Sharing Partnership Partnerships (who co finance and/or produce specific programmes. The Government share the market and technical risks and revenues from engines sold.

It is available only to the aerospace sector and stems from the provisions of the Civil Aviation Act 1982.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what rate of return the Government expect to receive on the launch aid loan to Rolls-Royce plc to develop the Trent 900 and 600 aero engines including the (a) applicable royalty rate, (b) interest rate and (c) repayment schedule. [150671]

Mr. Alan Johnson: We expect to receive a substantial real rate of return. However the conditions of the investment are commercially confidential under exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he took to establish whether private finance would be available for development of the Trent 900 and 600 aero engines; and what reasons were given for it not being forthcoming. [150670]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government took advice on this issue from independent financial advisers, who confirmed that Launch Investment was necessary for the project to go ahead. Details of their advice are confidential to Government under exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Miners' Compensation

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many miners are claiming compensation under the medical assessment procedures for chest disease, in each region. [150905]

Mr. Hain: To date, IRISC, the Department's claims handlers, have registered over 134,000 compensation claims for respiratory disease. Of these, almost 66,000 claimants have been tested and the results have generated 11,500 expedited offers. In terms of payments, the Department has been able to make over 30,900 individual payments, including bereavement awards, interim settlements and full and final payments amounting to £113.7 million.

The number of miners claiming compensation under the medical assessment procedures for chest disease broken down by region is as follows:

Respiratory Disease

Postal region	Total number of claims
Wales
South Wales	26,788
Other	1,129
Scotland

North East	18,985
North West	7,644
Midlands	13,742
South	3,454
Other	781
Total	134,342

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was paid out to miners, in each region, (a) for vibration white finger and (b) for chest disease from January 2000. [150906]

Mr. Hain: In total, the Department has now made around 74,500 individual payments, including bereavement awards, interim settlements and full and final settlements to claimants in respect of compensation for respiratory disease and vibration related disease, totalling over £334 million. The Department continues to pay out around £1 million per day in compensation.

The amount paid out to miners, broken down by region for Vibration White Finger, and respiratory disease is as follows:

Postal region	Vibration white finger	Respiratory disease

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many medical assessment procedures were conducted under the miners' compensation for chest disease agreement from January 2000 to date in each region. [150907]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for East Carmarthen and Dinefwr (Mr. Williams) on 7 February 2001, Official Report, columns 553–56W.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what efforts he is making in speeding up compensation payments to miners in the North East Region for (a) chest disease and (b) vibration white finger. [150904]

Mr. Hain: To date, IRISC, the Department's claims handlers, have registered over 134,000 claims for respiratory disease of which almost 19,000 are from claimants in the North East region. In relation to Vibration White Finger, around 19,000 claims of the 116,000 claims received are from claimants in the North East region.

With regard to claims for respiratory disease, there have been problems getting the Medical Assessment Process, MAP, up to speed. One of the most significant problems affecting the UK as a whole, is the limited number of respiratory specialists who are able to assess claimants to the degree for which the Department was found liable. Healthcall, the company contracted to undertake the Medical Assessment Process, MAP, continues to actively recruit respiratory specialists and lung function technicians. We are considering with them how to increase specialist resources for the North East centres. In addition, the Department has been continuously streamlining the process to maximise the efficiency of these scarce resources.

Currently, there have been over 3,900 individual payments, including bereavement awards, interim and full and final settlements, to claimants in the North East region for respiratory disease amounting to £15.7 million. With regard to progress in the North East region for Vibration White Finger, I would point out that the centre catering for this area is one of the three centres with the greatest testing capacity overall in the UK. To date, the Department has made over 9,200 individual payments, including interim settlements and full and final payments amounting to £55.3 million in this region.

RR Spey Turbofan Engines

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many RR Spey turbofan engines have been sold to China; and if he will make a statement. [150533]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 15 February 2001]: Licences to export arms and other goods whose export is controlled for strategic reasons are issued by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry acting through DTI's Export Control Organisation (ECO). Any export from the UK of RR Spey turbofan engines would normally require a licence under ML10 of the Military List (Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994). Information about a particular company's commercial transactions is commercial in confidence under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government information and the company concerned should be approached for such information.

Departmental Polices (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood)

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out, including statistical information, the effect on the Blackpool, North and Fleetwood constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150716]

Mr. Caborn: The Department does not maintain statistical information at constituency level.

My hon. Friend's constituents, like many others throughout Lancashire, will have benefited from my Department's employment rights policies which include national minimum wage, working time directive, part time working regulations and improved maternity leave.

In addition, all wards in the borough of Blackpool are eligible for the Enterprise Grant Scheme.

In the North West region, my Department's policies have contributed to growth in employment by 107,000 and a fall in unemployment by 63,000; reductions in youth unemployment by 75 per cent. and long-term unemployment by 54 per cent.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Liwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the (a) Environmental Impact Assessment

Report and (b) Resettlement Action Plan on the Ilisu Dam project will be published; and if he will make a statement. [150646]

Mr. Caborn: We expect that a presentation on the Environmental Impact Assessment Report will be made to the export credit agencies shortly, and that the Environmental Impact Assessment Report will be made publicly available after this presentation, and before any decision is taken regarding export credit support from the UK. As we are not the owners of the reports we cannot be more specific about timing.

We do not know whether the owners of the Resettlement Action Plan will make it publicly available, although we have advocated that they do so. However, we expect the Environmental Impact Assessment Report to cover resettlement issues.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people will be affected by the construction of the Ilisu Dam; how many will need to be resettled; and if he will make a statement. [150673]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 6 February 2001, Official Report, column 466W.

Post Office Closures

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post office closures there were between (a) April 1999 to the end of March 2000 and (b) April 2000 to the end of December 2000. [150868]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I understand from the Post Office that the number of post office closures in the year ending March 2000 was 382 and between April and December 2000 was 434.

Mobile Phone Operators

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the frequency bands the Government have sold to mobile phone operators in the last 10 years. [150667]

Ms Hewitt: Frequency bands licensed exclusively to the mobile phone operators for which licence fees have been paid in the last 10 years are as follows:

MHz

872.0–888.0

890.0–915.0

917.0–933.0

935.0–960.0

1710.0–1785.0

1805.0–1880.0

2110.3–2169.7.

With the phasing out of analogue mobile the 872–888 and 917–933 MHz blocks are being reassigned for other radio uses including digital mobile services. Mobile operators also have access to some spectrum channels for network fixed links on a shared basis with other radio users.

World Trade Organisation (TRIPs Agreement)

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his policy is on the reform of WTO's TRIPs Agreement to improve poor people's access to essential drugs and medicines. [150969]

Dr. Howells: The Government are actively involved in helping to improve poor people's access to health care, including essential drugs. However, the TRIPs Agreement does not concern 95 per cent. of the essential drugs recommended by the World Health Organisation since they are patent free.

The TRIPs Agreement requires WTO member states to provide minimum standards of intellectual property protection, including patents, in their domestic legislation. We believe the agreement provides WTO members with sufficient flexibility to develop domestic intellectual property rights regimes that enable access to on-patent medicines, while ensuring adequate intellectual property protection to encourage investment, research and innovation, including for future medicines.

The recent White Paper "Eliminating World Poverty: Making Globalisation Work for the Poor" announced a Commission on Intellectual Property, to look at ways that intellectual property rules need to develop in the future to take greater account of the interests of developing countries and poor people.

In addition there are a range of policy ideas currently being examined as part of a Performance and Innovation Unit (PIU) study which will address the twin problems of how to improve incentives to accelerate the development and availability of effective health interventions to tackle HIV-AIDS, TB and malaria; and how to ensure that new and existing health interventions are widely affordable in developing countries.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implementation of the WTO's TRIPs Agreement. [150968]

Dr. Howells: The United Kingdom participated in reviews of developed country WTO Members' TRIPs implementing legislation carried out by the TRIPs Council throughout 1996 and 1997. Records of introductory statements made by the United Kingdom delegation, questions put to the United Kingdom delegation and the responses given were published by the WTO in four documents with references IP/Q/GBR/1, IP/Q2/GBR/1, IP/Q3/GBR/1 and IP/Q4/GBR/1. All of these documents are available to the public on the WTO website, www.wto.org.

Following the end in January 2000 of the transitional period for the implementation of the TRIPs Agreement by developing country WTO Members the TRIPs Council commenced reviews of those Members' implementing legislation in June 2000. In two sessions the Council has reviewed the legislation of 21 developing country Members who had volunteered for early consideration. In three further sessions during 2001 the remaining developing country Members' legislation will be reviewed.

Least developed country Members have a further transition period ending in 2006 in which to implement the terms of the TRIPs Agreement.

Japanese Electricity Industry (MOX Fuel)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he received a statement of intent of Japanese electricity utilities relating to the fabrication of mixed oxide fuel; and if he will place a copy of the statement in the Library. [151563]

Mr. Hain: HM Government support BNFL in its efforts to secure MOX business with Japanese electricity utilities. Such business is, however, a commercial matter for BNFL and those utilities. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has not received, nor given the commercial relationship of the companies would expect to receive, a statement of intent from the Japanese utilities.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) short term and (b) long term projects the Export Credits Guarantee Department estimates it will underwrite in the current financial year; and what are the values of each project. [150950]

Mr. Caborn: The table summarises this information in relation to guarantees issued by ECGD in the current financial year. The table excludes business covered under the Overseas Investment Insurance which does not readily meet the criteria of the question.

ECGD estimates that it will issue guarantees in support of approximately a further £1 billion of Cash and Credit business by the end of the current year but is unable to provide the detail requested, partly on grounds of commercial confidentiality and partly on grounds of uncertainty as to which business in the pipeline will be the subject of a guarantee by 31 March.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which 10 countries have received the highest level of Export Credits Guarantee Department cover; and what was the value of credit attached to each country in 1999–2000. [150952]

Mr. Caborn: The information requested, which is included in ECGD's Annual Report, is as follows:

Saudi Arabia	1,000.0
Malaysia	884.7
USA	254.1
Turkey	240.6
Oman	217.7
South Africa	217.6

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many contracts that were due to be settled in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01 for the Export Credits Guarantee Department are still outstanding; and if he will make a statement. [150949]

Mr. Caborn: ECGD estimate that the position is as follows:

Year	Number of payments	Number of contracts	Amount (£ million)
1999–2000	210	105	278
2000–01	139	70	202

The majority of these payments have either been rescheduled or are eligible for rescheduling via the Paris Club.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) short term and (b) long term projects in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000 and (iv) 2000–01 the Export Credits Guarantee Department underwrote; and what was the total value of each project in each year. [150951]

Mr. Caborn: The table provides the information requested. This information excludes business covered under the Overseas Investment Insurance which does not readily meet the criteria of the question.

Dounreay

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the safety impact on residents in the North of Scotland of the decommissioning of Dounreay. [150938]

Mr. Hain: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) published last year a comprehensive plan for the decommissioning of the Dounreay site and its environmental restoration. A key objective of this plan is to remove the major hazards from the site as soon as practical.

UKAEA and its contractors are subject to strict safety procedures for the decommissioning process and are governed by the regulations and guidelines laid down by the independent regulators, the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency.

Office of Gas and Electricity Markets

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a more detailed breakdown of the £5,512,000 expenditure by Ofgem in 2000–01 on the regions. [151178]

Mr. Hain: Ofgem's budget for expenditure on regional activities in 2000–01 was £5,350,513 (the figure of £5,512,000 includes internal staff costs attaching to HQ staff responsible for the regions). Of this budget, Ofgem spent £2,771,592. Expenditure was principally divided between Ofgem's regional offices (£2,149,565), the Electricity Consumer Committees (£297,490) and a consumer helpline (£293,952). The remaining budget of £2,578,921 was transferred to the Gas and Electricity Consumer Council following its establishment in November 2000.

Trade Tariffs

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has made to the European Commission regarding the Everything but Arms proposal; and if he will make a statement. [150980]

Mr. Caborn: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) on 15 November 2001, Official Report, column 438.

Ultra-low Sulphur Fuel

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on encouraging the provision of ultra-low sulphur fuel. [150688]

Mr. Hain: Ultra-low sulphur diesel is already widely available and my Department is monitoring the continued roll out of ultra-low sulphur petrol across the country. I have recently had a series of meetings with the industry to take this forward.

Vishakhapatnam Project

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of cover the Export Credits Guarantee Department has provided for the Vishakhapatnam project in Andhra Pradesh; on what date this cover was provided; and if he will make a statement. [151205]

Mr. Byers: No cover has been provided by ECGD for the Vishakhapatnam project in Andhra Pradesh.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on which dates (a) he, (b) Ministers in his Department and (c) officials in the Export Credits Guarantee Department held meetings with (i) the HNP Corporation and (ii) International Power regarding the Vishakhapatnam project in Andhra Pradesh; if he will place the minutes of such meetings in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [151206]

Mr. Byers: ECGD was actively engaged in development of the Vishakhapatnam project from 1994 onwards, with a concentration of meetings and commercial negotiations with the Hinduja National Power Corporation Ltd. (HNPCL) and its legal advisers between December 1997 and December 1999. HNPCL is a joint venture consisting of the Hinduja Group and National Power. International Power evolved from National Power in October 2000.

It is not the normal practice of the Government to release details of meetings or discussions with private individuals or companies. Similarly, under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information it is not appropriate to place in the Library the minutes of such meetings which record positions given in confidence by commercial entities.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date and by which organisation the Export Credits Guarantee Department was first approached for export cover for the Vishakhapatnam project in Andra Pradesh; and if he will make a statement. [151207]

Mr. Byers: The Vishakhapatnam project was first proposed in 1993 and generated preliminary inquiries from National Power Plc, interested bankers and potential UK power equipment suppliers during 1994 and 1995.

National Power joined with the Hinduja Group to form Hinduja National Power Corporation Limited ("HNPCL"), sponsors of the project. HNPCL first approached ECGD for a formal indication of support for the UK element of the project on 8 September 1995.

White Paper (Leak Inquiry)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) who is heading the inquiry into the premature disclosure of the White Paper on Enterprise, Skills and Innovation; what are its terms of reference; and from whom evidence is to be sought; [151220]

(2) when, and by what means, he intends to report to the House on the outcome of his investigations into how the details of the White Paper on Enterprise Skills and Innovation appeared in the press before the White Paper had been published. [151216]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, North East (Dr. White) on 15 February 2001, Official Report, columns 283–84W.

Near Earth Objects Taskforce

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will respond to the report of the Near Earth Objects Task Force headed by Dr. Harry Atkinson. [151266]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's response to this report was published on Saturday 24 February. The Government are broadly in agreement with the majority of the Task Force's recommendations. The Government endorse the view of the Task Force that since the possible dangers posed by Near Earth Objects are not limited to any one nation, an international approach is essential. At a European level, the European Space Agency is to work to devise a European Strategy on Near Earth Objects. The Government are investigating with the OECD their offer to set up an international forum for discussion of and action on the threat to earth from Near Earth Objects. The British National Space Centre will continue to act as lead unit within Government on Near Earth Object policy.

Copies of the Government's response to the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Employment Relations Act (Clergy)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has declared that clergy can be deemed to be employees under section 23 of the Employment Relations Act 1999; and if he will make a statement. [150992]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I intend to publish later this year a discussion paper on all the legal issues relating to employment status as they affect the coverage of statutory employment rights. I envisage that the position of members of the clergy will be one of the issues raised. Any future proposals for changes in the legislation in this regard will be considered in light of responses to the discussion paper.

Departmental Policies (North-East Derbyshire)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the North-East Derbyshire constituency, the effect on North-East Derbyshire of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150883]

Mr. Caborn: The constituency of North-East Derbyshire has benefited from a range of initiatives since May 1997 including:

Regional Selective Assistance—a discretionary grant which provides assistance towards capital projects which would not otherwise go ahead and will create or safeguard employment in an Assisted Area. Grants of £2.001 million given to support capital expenditure of £21.589 million to create 385 new jobs and safeguard a further 146 jobs.

Enterprise Grants—new initiative introduced in 2000. A discretionary grant to SMEs investing in capital projects which would not otherwise go ahead. £162,000 in grant offered to support project costs of £1.389 million. Grants expected to safeguard or create approximately 35 jobs.

Smart—discretionary grant available to SMEs to help them develop technologically innovative products and processes. Six offers of grant made worth £475,000 in total.

Business Link—the Business Link network provides a wide range of business advice and support to SMEs. It is not possible to isolate Business Link data for the North-East Derbyshire constituency area. However, from 1997 to date, Business Link North Derbyshire, which includes the North-East Derbyshire constituency, has helped a total of 4,987 businesses and assisted 1,422 business start ups.

Invest UK—an initiative to help investors wishing to set up business in the UK. No inward investors have come to North-East Derbyshire under this scheme since 1997. However, five investors have been attracted to Chesterfield, providing access to jobs for people living within the Chesterfield Travel to Work Area.

Regional Supply Office—an initiative which provides a range of support for supply chain development. It is not possible to isolate data for the North-East Derbyshire constituency alone. However companies from the north Derbyshire area have actively benefited from this initiative. £70 million of business opportunities have been matched to north Derbyshire companies and 73 companies have benefited from a European Regional Development Fund backed project designed to improve supply chain performance and make them more competitive.

European Regional Development Fund—in addition to its domestic initiatives, the Department of Trade and Industry is also the lead Department for European Structural Funds in the UK. Under ERDF Objective 2 (1997–99) North-East Derbyshire has benefited from 70 projects totalling £11.617 million. Under RECHAR II, four projects totalling £120,000 have been supported. These projects have delivered a range of business support and vocational training activities. In some instances, where projects cover the whole of the eligible programme area in the East Midlands, not all of the grant will have been spent inside the North-East Derbyshire constituency.

Industrial Injuries Benefit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the costs and benefits to business and the wider economic implications of privatising industrial injuries benefit. [149600]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

As part of our wider programme of Welfare Reform, we have examined the costs and benefits of an option for the modernisation of the industrial injuries scheme by replacing it with a no-fault compensation scheme fully funded by employers through the use of compulsory private insurance.

We continue to keep the industrial injuries scheme under review. Under the Employer's Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969, all employers (with specific exceptions) carrying out business in Great Britain are required to take out cover against liability for work-related bodily injury and disease. The cost of such insurance is a matter for employers and the insurance industry.

HEALTH

Nurses' Allowances

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy for awarding extra allowances to nurses in (a) West Sussex and (b) East Sussex. [143433]

Mr. Denham: The introduction of cost of living supplements for qualified nurses and professions allied to medicine is one of a targeted range of initiatives designed to tackle the most serious recruitment and retention problems linked to low participation rates. Health authorities have been included where they have a staff market forces factor (MFF) of 117 or higher.

Further details of the staff MFF are included in the National Health Service Executive document "Resource Allocation: Weighted Capitation Formulas", which is available in the Library.

Hospital Building Programme

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the applications he has received in respect of the hospital building programme. [145770]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 15 February 2001, Official Report, columns 467–82.

Departmental Surveys

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95, (d) 1995–96, (e) 1996–97, (f) 1997–98, (g) 1998–99, (h) 1999–2000 and (i) 2000–01, (I) his Department's total spending on quantitative and qualitative surveys of policy issues by focus groups, opinion polling, task forces or other means and (II) the cost of each individual project. [146590]

Ms Stuart: Copies of research reports are not routinely placed in the Library although a list giving details of market and opinion research undertaken by my Department is made available. A list of research projects carried out by the Department in the financial year 1999–2000 was placed in the Library in May 2000. A list of research projects in 2000–01 will be placed in the Library. These lists may not include all research projects, as some information is not centrally available.

A list of the Department's total spending for quantitative and qualitative surveys of policy issues by focus groups, opinion polling, task forces or other means and the cost of each individual project for the years 1992–2001 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

We are committed to consulting and involving the public to help inform both policy formulation and the delivery of better quality public service. Responsive public services are an important part of the Modernising Government initiative.

We only conduct or commission market or opinion research when it is justified by the needs of the policy or programme and is the most economical, efficient and effective way to achieve the purpose.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the budget for hospital and community health services of (a) health authorities and (b) PCGs/PCTs was spent on administrative costs in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [147263]

Mr. Denham: Figures for management costs are published annually in the individual accounts of health authorities and primary care groups. The national management cost expenditure for England as a percentage of the expenditure on hospital and community health services in health authorities and primary care groups are given in the table.

		Management costs
Year	Expenditure (£000)	(£000)	Percentage
Health authorities
1996–97	18,947,018	604,429	3.2
1997–98	19,725,339	571,257	2.9
1997–98[1]	19,725,339	542,289	2.7
1998–99	21,426,832	541,621	2.5
1999–2000	24,644,333	511,811	[2]2.1
Primary care groups
1999–2000	14,645,108	121,322	[2]0.83

[1] 1997–98 out-turn was re-based to reflect a change in the HA management costs definition in 1998–99 and thus ensure a consistent time series for measuring management costs savings.

[2] For 1999–2000 the primary care group expenditure and HA management costs are included within the health authority totals. Final adjustments are being made to these figures but these will not materially affect the percentage given. The figures prior to 1999–2000 include the general practitioner fundholding practice management allowance.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has received from the Advisory Committee on Cervical Screening; and what proposals he has with respect to the hydrolysised DNA test. [147248]

Yvette Cooper: The Advisory Committee on Cervical Screening (ACCS) discussed the hydrolysised DNA assay (HDA) test developed by Dr. Andrew Sincock of King's College, and funded by Quest Cancer Research, at its meeting on 24 January 2001. Dr. Sincock provided a further paper on the test for the meeting. The ACCS advised that there are a large number of emerging technologies in the cervical screening field, and there was not enough evidence for the HDA test to warrant further consideration at this time.

Chiropody and Podiatry

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to issue guidance from the NHS Executive on NHS chiropody and podiatry services; and if he will make a statement. [147266]

Mr. Hutton: We have no immediate plans to issue guidance. The NHS Plan sets out our commitment to over 6,500 more therapists and other health professionals working in the National Health Service by 2004 and this includes chiropodists and podiatrists.

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the locations where podiatric surgery is available to NHS patients; and if he will make a statement on availability. [147267]

Mr. Hutton: We will shortly be publishing the names of trusts offering podiatric surgery.

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many podiatric surgeons work in the NHS; and if he will make a statement on their contribution to best practice in foot healthcare. [147264]

Mr. Hutton: We do not collect this information routinely at national level as these are rewarded under the speciality of "general surgery". We recognise the excellent contribution of podiatric surgeons to foot health.

Wheelchairs

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria govern the granting of wheelchairs for (a) indoor use and (b) outdoor use only. [147834]

Mr. Hutton: Health authorities and trusts set local criteria for the provision of wheelchairs. For indoor/outdoor powered wheelchairs, the local criteria are determined within the broad national framework set out in Health Service Guidance (HSG (96)34), copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what Civil Service grade level decisions are taken to determine the criteria for supplying wheelchairs. [147849]

Mr. Hutton: Criteria are determined by health authorities and trusts at local level according to local circumstances.

Abattoirs

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered working abattoirs there were in England and Wales on 1 January. [148050]

Ms Stuart: I am informed by the Food Standards Agency that in England and Wales on 1 January there were 351 licensed red meat abattoirs and 121 licensed white meat abattoirs. It is understood that of these, 315 red meat abattoirs and 118 white meat abattoirs were operating during the first week of January 2001.

A number of licensed abattoirs may not be operating at any one time for a variety of reasons, such as seasonal operation, refurbishment or if their licence is in the process of being revoked.

Genetic Information

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the benefit of allowing insurance companies to have access to genetic information about individuals. [147026]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 30 January 2001]: While individuals cannot be required to take a genetic test by an insurance company, they may be asked to divulge the results of certain specific genetic tests already taken. We recognise that there is widespread unease about the possible unfair use of genetic information in general. Because of this we have asked the Human Genetics Commission to look at the wider social and ethical issues involved in the use of genetic data in insurance and to report their recommendations to Ministers.

Nurses and Doctors

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) nurses and (b) doctors were working in the National Health Service in January. [149169]

Mr. Denham: The latest information available is in the table.

National Health Service nurses and doctors in England as at 30 September 2000

At 30 September 2000	Whole-time equivalents	Numbers/ headcount
All Nursing staff[1]	358,860	462,050
Of which:
Qualified nurses	266,990	335,950
All NHS doctors[2,3]	90,640	97,440

[1] Hospital and community health service nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff including learners and general medical service practice nurses.
[2] Includes hospital medical and dental staff and general practitioners.
[3] Whole-time equivalent general medical practitioners are estimated using the results from the 1992–93 GMP workload Survey.

NHS Vacancies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) nationally and (b) by health authority, the number of NHS vacancies for (i) doctors, (ii) nurses, midwives and health visitors and (iii) the professions allied to medicine, for each year since 1990 for which figures are available. [150900]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table.

Health Funding

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of growth in real terms of NHS funding by 2004. [149129]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service expenditure is planned to increase by around 5.8 per cent. in real terms in each of the next three years. This is on top of the planned real-terms increase of 8.4 per cent. for this year. Over all four years, the NHS will benefit from an average annual increase in real terms of 6.4 per cent.—the largest ever sustained increase in NHS funding over such a period.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the planned funding will be for (a) the NHS and (b) personal social services in (i) Wales, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Northern Ireland per head of population in 2000–01. [150693]

Mr. Hutton: Issues relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for the devolved Assemblies.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the special advisers working for him will relinquish their posts when the next General Election is called. [149316]

Ms Stuart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Medical Training

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 2001, Official Report, column 51W, on training places, how many of the nurses in the NHS Plan will be (a) returning to nursing, (b) from overseas, (c) newly qualified and (d) others in each year from 2000 until 2004; and if he will make a statement. [149378]

Mr. Denham: The NHS Plan commitment is that between now and 2004 there will be 20,000 more nurses. Annual targets have not been set. The increase in staff will be made up of students coming out of training and a range of recruitment and retention initiatives including staff returning to practice, international recruitment and measures to reduce the number of staff leaving the National Health Service.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 February 2001, Official Report, column 264W, on medical school training places, how many of the (a) general practitioners and (b) consultants pledged in the NHS Plan will be (i) those returning to medical practice, (ii) doctors from overseas, (iii) doctors from elsewhere in the NHS and (iv) others, for each year from 2000 until 2004; and if he will make a statement. [149435]

Mr. Denham: The NHS Plan commitments are for 7,500 more consultants and 2,000 more general practitioners by 2004. Annual targets have not been set. The increase in staff will be made up of doctors coming out of training and a range of recruitment and retention initiatives including staff returning to practice, international recruitment and measures to reduce the number of staff leaving the National Health Service.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 2001, Official Report, column 51W, on training places, how many of the therapists in the NHS Plan will be (a) returning to the profession, (b) professionals from overseas, (c) newly qualified professionals and (d) others, in each year from 2000 to 2004; and if he will make a statement. [149432]

Mr. Denham: The NHS Plan commitment is for an increase of 6,500 therapists and other health professionals by 2004. Annual targets have not been set. The increase in staff will be made up of students coming out of training and a range of recruitment and retention initiatives including staff returning to practice, international recruitment and measures to reduce the number of staff leaving the National Health Service.

Overseas Doctors

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms he is putting in place to facilitate the recruitment of the overseas doctors identified in the NHS plan. [149805]

Mr. Denham: Over the last six months we have put into place an effective infrastructure capable of supporting the increased levels of international recruitment envisaged in the National Health Service.

A director of international recruitment has been appointed to implement a national strategy for international recruitment and co-ordinate the work of regional office leads in this area.

To practise in this country, all overseas doctors need to satisfy the registration requirements of the General Medical Council (GMC); doctors employed at consultant level also need to satisfy the Specialist Training Authority (STA) that they hold satisfactory specialist medical qualifications. The Department is working with the GMC, STA and the royal colleges to ensure overseas doctors are able to progress quickly and efficiently through the necessary registration procedures.

A Government to Government agreement was signed with Spain in November 2000 to promote closer working between the two countries. As part of this agreement, the first 63 nurses arrived in the North West on 19 January 2000 to work in four NHS trusts. Following this successful recruitment, the initiative is being extended to medical staff through a pilot project also being led by North West Region.

We are also investigating the recruitment of doctors from other countries who have a surplus of doctors, both within the European Economic Area and outside.

Autism/Crohn's Disease

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of (a) autism and (b) Crohn's disease among children aged (i) 18 months and (ii) three years in (1) 1987, (2) April 1992 and (3) April 2000; and if he will make a statement. [149626]

Mr. Denham: Autism is rarely diagnosed in children as young as 18 months. An estimated prevalence rate of classic autism of between four and five per 10,000 population is widely accepted. Prevalence of all autistic spectrum disorders is more difficult to estimate but could be as high as 91 per 10,000. These figures would imply that, in England in 1999, between 250 and 300 children of three years of age were affected by classic autism and that up to 5,500 children may have been affected by autistic spectrum disorders.

The incidence of Crohn's disease in childhood in the United Kingdom is not currently known. The disease is likely to be underdiagnosed in very young children, who cannot express specific symptoms as adults do.

Hospices

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of extra NHS funding for the period 2001–02 relative to the previous year is dedicated to special palliative services and hospice care; [149607]

(2) if he will calculate the level of NHS statutory funding for hospices in each of the last 10 years; and what proportion of total hospice operational costs the statutory funding covered in each of the last 10 years; [149608]

(3) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current level of NHS statutory funding for hospices; and if he will make a statement. [149609]

Yvette Cooper: 70 per cent. of specialist palliative care is provided by voluntary sector providers. Information on total hospice expenditure and the National Health Service contribution over the last 10 years is not available.

A current estimate of expenditure on hospice and specialist palliative care for adults is £300 million. Of this, £170 million is provided by the voluntary sector and £130 million by the NHS.

The NHS Cancer Plan acknowledged that

"hospices have rightly argued that the NHS should invest more in palliative care services".

In response, the Plan set out the commitment that by 2004 the NHS will invest an extra £50 million to end inequalities in access to specialist palliative care and to enable the NHS to make a realistic contribution to the cost hospices incur in providing agreed levels of service. This will mean that, for the first time ever, NHS investment in specialist palliative care services will match that of the voluntary sector.

The NHS Plan Implementation Programme sets out key targets and milestones for the NHS for 2001–02 including the requirement for all cancer networks to develop and begin implementing costed strategic plans for palliative care in partnership with the voluntary sector. This process is now under way.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been paid to (a) Darien House Children's Hospice and (b) St. Catherine's Hospice in 2000–01. [150338]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 13 February 2001]: During 2000–01, Derien House Children's Hospice received statutory funding totalling £21,000 from the south and east Lancashire health authorities. St. Catherine's Hospice received £488,384 during the same period from the south Lancashire and north-west Lancashire health authorities.

Strokes

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) following the publication of "Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation and the developing National Service Framework for older People" what priority will be accorded in (a) his Department's policy research and (b) the NHS Research and Development Programme to deal with strokes; and if he will make a statement; [149770]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 9 January 2001, Official Report, columns 532–36W, on strokes, if he will indicate which of the stroke research projects listed are still in progress; and how much money was committed in (a) 2000 and (b) 2001 for each one. [149784]

Yvette Cooper: Through the National Health Service research and development programme for cardiovascular disease and stroke, one of a number of time-limited research programmes, the Department made a major investment in stroke research, commissioning 57 projects at cost of £11.8 million. The Department continues to support stroke research through the NHS health technology assessment programme (HTA) and the Department's policy research programme and other NHS research and development programmes. Research to underpin the national service frameworks is a priority for the Department and NHS research and development programmes. Future Departmental/NHS research on stroke is likely to be taken forward as part of the overall research strategy to support the National Service Framework for Older People and to meet the research needs of the National Institute of Clinical Excellence.

We are also providing support for stroke research through the Medical Research Council (MRC) who are always willing to consider well-designed research projects.

The following projects funded by the Department of Health and listed on 9 January 2001, Official Report, columns 532–36W, are still in progress.

British Regional Heart Study: a prospective study into the causes of CHD, hypertension and stroke in a cohort of men now aged about 60–79

Professor Peter Whincup, St. George's Hospital Medical School

2000—£79,011

2001—£104,304

Contract renewed from end of 2000

A related study in a cohort of women of similar age

Professor Shah Ebrahim, University of Bristol

2000—£234,990

2002—£196,782

Contract finishes at end of 2001

The following ongoing projects are supported by the HTA Programme, and a figure is provided for the total cost of the projects. Figures for 2000 and 2001 spend are not available.

Insulin Pumps

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what his Department's most recent guidance is regarding use of insulin pumps; [149845]

(2) how many health authorities provide funding for insulin pump therapy. [149844]

Ms Stuart: There has been no comprehensive evaluation of the place of insulin pumps in diabetes treatment. The Department has not issued specific guidance on their use.

However, if resources allow, hospital consultants may prescribe equipment such as insulin pumps as part of National Health Service treatment. Health authorities may provide such equipment, prescribed as part of NHS treatment, either permanently or on loan, and in these circumstances no charge may be made. It is for health authorities to make decisions about the best use of their resources on the basis of clinical priorities and local needs.

No information is collected centrally on which health authorities provide funding for insulin pump therapy.

Care Home Standards

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the final version of the national minimum standards for homes for older people; and if he will make a statement on the consultation process, including who was consulted, in formulating compensatory quality standards contained in the final version. [149843]

Mr. Hutton: We consulted extensively on the proposals for care homes for older people, set out in the consultation document "Fit For The Future?"; the formal consultation period ended in January 2000. Following this, we consulted provider organisations, and in particular smaller providers, and other interested parties, and achieved broad agreement for the flexibilities we announced last year. These decisions should ensure that any improvements in the quality of care homes necessary will be achieved smoothly, and that stability in the care homes sector and sufficient capacity is maintained while changes are made. We intend to publish the finalised standards shortly.

Compulsory Hospital Admissions

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many compulsory admissions there were to hospital in England and Wales in each year between 1990 and 2000 under the powers in the Mental Health Act 1983. [150003]

Mr. Hutton: The Department collects and publishes information annually relating to patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 on:

Admissions to hospitals under the Act by section of the Act, sex and category of disorder as defined and required under the Act.

Changes in patient's legal status while in hospital.

Patients in hospital at the end of the year, by sex and category of disorder.

The latest data are published by the Department, in a statistical bulletin "In-patients formally detained in hospitals under the Mental Health Act 1983 and other legislation, England: 1989–1990 to 1999–2000". The National Assembly for Wales published a separate statistical report entitled "Admission of patients to mental health facilities in Wales, 1999–2000 (including patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983)". Both publications are available in the Library.

Loughborough General Hospital

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he has made on the completion of the new Loughborough general hospital. [149982]

Yvette Cooper: The full business case for the development of Loughborough hospital was approved by the Trent Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive in November 1999. Since that time, Leicestershire and Rutland Healthcare NHS Trust has continued to develop the design and costing of the scheme and was able to confirm in December 2000 that the project programme was on target.

Outstanding issues around planning conditions pertaining to the main hospital site entrance are being resolved.

Work is planned to start on site at the end of February 2001, with a completion and in-use date forecast for early February 2003. It is planned that the bulk of the capital spend will be in 2000–01(£4,020,000) and 2002 (£4,306,000).

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the walk-in centre at Loughborough general hospital on general practitioners. [149978]

Yvette Cooper: The Department has put in place systems to gather monthly management information on the operation of walk-in centres. In addition, it has commissioned a full national evaluation led by Dr. Chris Salisbury at University of Bristol. This began on 1 June 2000 and will report at the end of 2001. Each of the 40 pilot sites nationally is also undertaking local evaluation.

In Loughborough, general practitioners and primary care group support was achieved on the basis that the impact of Loughborough walk-in centre on local GP services would be assessed. To achieve a realistic and effective evaluation a comparison of the "before" and "after" opening positions was considered essential.

Leicestershire Health Authority's Public Health Department began collecting the "before" data in January 2000. When Loughborough walk-in centre opened on July 3 2000, data began to be collected on the impact of the centre on local GP surgeries, the GP out of hours co-operative and a range of other healthcare provider sites.

In order to allow for seasonal fluctuations in both the student population and general healthcare demand, data will continue to be collected for this particular evaluation until the end of June 2001. These will then be analysed between July and September 2001.

Leicestershire Health Authority

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the average level of increase was in percentage terms for health authorities between 1992–93 and 2000–01; and what has been the percentage increase for Leicestershire health authority; [149983]

(2) how much funding would be received by Leicestershire health authority were it funded at 100 per cent. of its weighted capitation. [149984]

Mr. Denham: The table shows the average cash increase for health authorities between 1992–93 and 2000–01 and the cash increase for Leicestershire health authority.

Year	Average cash increase in percentage terms	Leicestershire health authority cash increase in percentage terms

[2] Figures for 1999–2000 onwards are for unified allocations which cover hospital and community health services, prescribing and discretionary family health services. These figures are not strictly comparable with earlier years which cover hospital and community health services only

Leicestershire health authority's weighted capitation target for 2000–01 is £586.39 million.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were available in Leicestershire health authority in each year between 1987–88 and the most recent year for which figures are available. [149980]

Yvette Cooper: The table shows the average daily number of available beds in wards open overnight in the Leicestershire health authority area from 1987–88 to 1999–2000. Figures are taken from the annual Korner return KH03 "bed availability and occupancy".

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in which health authorities more than one patient in eight who are waiting for in-patient treatment has waited over one year; [150319]

(2) which health authorities have more patients waiting over one year for in-patient treatment now than on 1 May 1997. [150379]

Mr. Denham: No more than one patient in eight is waiting over one year for in-patient treatment in any health authority in England.

The health authorities which have more patients waiting over one year for in-patient treatment now than on 1 May 1997 are shown in the table.

Department of Health form QF01

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics his Department collects on the number of patients who die while on waiting lists for general surgery. [151253]

Mr. Denham: The Department does not collect statistics on how many patients die while waiting for surgery. Data are collected on how many patients are removed from the waiting list without being treated but these are not broken down into the reasons why.

Health Service Inequalities

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to tackle inequalities in health services. [150378]

Yvette Cooper: The NHS Plan published in July 2000 sets out targets for the National Health Service and social services which are focused on delivering fast, convenient and people centred services. They are aimed at providing the highest standards of care, tackling the major causes of disease and reducing inequalities in health and in access to health services. These include national health inequalities targets to narrow the gap between socio-economic groups and between deprived areas and the rest of the country, a review of the existing weighted capitation formula with reducing inequalities a key criterion for allocating NHS resources, new partnerships between health and social services to tackle inequalities, improved access to primary care for all patients, and more and better screening programmes.

E.coli

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many outbreaks of E.coli there were in (a) 1996, (b) 1997, (c) 1998, (d) 1999 and (e) 2000; how many people were affected in each year; and how many fatalities were linked to these outbreaks. [150318]

Ms Stuart: The table gives details of all general outbreaks of verocytotoxin-producing E.coli O157 infection in England and Wales reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre and Laboratory of Enteric Pathogens in each year from 1996 to 2000. The table also shows the number of laboratory-confirmed cases and the number of fatalities linked to these outbreaks.

Cruse Bereavement Care

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with Cruse Bereavement Care concerning the role they might play in alleviating the distress of relatives following the removal of internal organs from deceased people. [R] [150400]

Mr. Denham: Officials have contacted Cruse Bereavement Care to obtain their consent for NHS Direct to provide their national phone number if a specific request to be put in touch with the organisation was made by a caller inquiring about the removal of organs following post-mortem.

Health Authority Allocations

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each health authority, the difference between its capitation targets and allocation in cash and percentage terms (a) prior to and (b) following their 2001–02 allocations. [150528]

Mr. Denham: The 2001–02 distance from capitation targets in cash and percentage terms prior to and following allocations are listed for each health authority in the table.

[1] Distances from target have changed since 2000–01 as a result of adjustments to initial 2000–01 allocations and changes to data, ie the updating of population and other data sources used in the weighted capitation formula.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis health authorities were selected for a Years of Life Lost allocation; how Years of Life Lost allocations took into account the age-profile of the population; which health authorities received Years of Life Lost allocations; and which health authorities would qualify for the allocation had it been weighted for the age profile of the population. [150527]

Mr. Denham: Allocations to health authorities for 2001–02 include an adjustment based on rates of years of life lost (YLL) for circulatory diseases, all cancers, accidents, suicides and undetermined injury. £70 million was shared between the 47 health authorities with rates at or above 137 on the YLL index. The health authorities that received the YLL adjustment are shown in the table.

The YLL index takes account of the age structure of the population. Other things being equal, a health authority with an older population is likely to have a higher YLL rate than a health authority with a younger population.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of the current year's allocation to health authorities was directed towards moving health authorities closer to their capitation targets; and what the (a) cash and (b) percentage difference between allocation and capitation target was in each case, in each of the last three years. [150529]

Mr. Denham: Health authorities received an additional £2.79 billion with 2000–01 allocations. £110 million was directed specifically towards moving under target health authorities closer to their capitation targets.

The cash and percentage differences between allocation and capitation target (distance from target) for each of the last three years are shown in the table.

[1] Figures for 1999–2000 onwards are for unified allocations, which cover hospital and community health services, prescribing and discretionary family health services. These figures are not strictly comparable with those for previous years which cover hospital and community health services only.

[2] Figures are not comparable due to the merger of the former North West Anglia into the new health authorities of Cambridgeshire and Norfolk.

Health Authority Spending

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding has been spent in each region on voluntary sector and prevention work by health authorities in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [150391]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not held centrally in the form requested and cannot be collected without incurring disproportionate cost.

The NHS Plan sets out the actions needed by the National Health Service to tackle the causes of ill health. The NHS must work in partnership with other agencies including the voluntary sector.

Doctors' Hours

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS junior doctors in England are routinely working hours above those set out in the New Deal on working hours. [150388]

Mr. Denham: At 31 September 2000, 38.4 per cent. of junior doctors in England were working hours which did not comply with the New Deal hours limits and rest requirements. Monitoring figures for 31 March 2001 will be available in May.

Mobile Phone Technologies

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been commissioned into the health implications of mobile phone technologies since the publication of the Stewart report. [150178]

Yvette Cooper: The Stewart report on mobile phones and health made a recommendation that a substantial research programme should be set up under the aegis of a demonstrably independent panel and financed by the mobile phone companies and the public sector. This programme, jointly funded by Government and industry, was announced in December 2000 and was launched at a scientific workshop in London on Friday 9 February when the first call for proposals was issued. The research will be undertaken under the direction of an independent programme management committee chaired by Sir William Stewart.

The Department is also continuing to provide financial support for the World Health Organisation International Electromagnetic Fields (EMF) Project which is comprehensively reviewing EMF effects, including those of radio waves.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of mobile telephone masts on elderly people's and children's health; and what plans he has to carry out research on this in the future. [150991]

Yvette Cooper: The Stewart report on mobile phones and health was published in May 2000. This rigorous and comprehensive assessment of existing research considered the possible effects on health of mobile phones and base stations (masts). The report concluded that the balance of evidence indicates that there is no general risk to health of people living near base stations on the basis that exposures are expected to be small fractions of guidelines. However, in view of the concerns expressed by residents near base stations and the indirect effect on people's wellbeing, the report made a number of recommendations aimed at improving the public consultation and the availability of information about the siting of base stations.

In its summary the Stewart group commented that the upsurge of mobile phone technology should be matched by good quality research. It recommended that a substantial research programme should be set up under the aegis of a demonstrably independent panel and financed by the mobile phone companies and the public sector. This programme, jointly funded by Government and industry, was announced in December 2000 and was launched at a scientific workshop in London on Friday 9 February when the first call for proposals was issued. The research will be undertaken under the direction of an independent programme management committee chaired by Sir William Stewart.

Readmitted Patients

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients, by health authority, were readmitted to hospital within one month of their discharge in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [150392]

Mr. Denham: Information for 1998–99 on emergency readmission to hospital within 28 days of discharge was published in tabular form in July 2000 in "Quality and performance in the NHS: NHS Performance Indicators", copies of which are available in the Library. Standardised rates for all health authorities for 1998–99 and for the years 1997–98 and 1996–97 are available on the Department of Health's website, http://www.doh.gov.uk/nhsperformanceindicators/hlpi2000/h1137t.html

Figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

TB Inoculations

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the injection rates for TB have been in each year since 1990; what percentage of the United Kingdom population has been inoculated against TB in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [150396]

Yvette Cooper: Information about immunisation against tuberculosis (BCG) is contained in the Statistical Bulletin "NHS Immunisation Statistics, England: 1999–2000". A copy of the bulletin is in the Library and can also be found on the Department of Health website www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0026.htm.

Although the routine schools immunisation programme for 10 to 14-year-olds was suspended in September 1999 due to severe manufacturing problems encountered by the sole United Kingdom licensed source, Celltech Medeva, BCG vaccine against tuberculosis has always been available for those individuals at higher risk of TB. On 19 July, the Department announced that there is now sufficient supply of vaccine to initially restart the routine schools programme in the London area, where the highest rate of tuberculosis in the country currently occurs.

The Department is doing all it can to secure a robust supply of UK licensed and batch released BCG vaccine, and will announce as soon as possible when the routine schools programme can resume across the country. All those who missed their BCG vaccination due to the suspension of the programme will be recalled as part of a catch-up programme.

Dystonia

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for improved training of medical staff and general practitioners in diagnosing and treating dystonia; and how much is spent annually on research into the causes and treatment of dystonia. [150423]

Mr. Denham: All doctors, including general practitioners, and medical staff receive training designed to ensure they have the basic skills, knowledge and experience to provide quality services to patients and to respond to changing patterns of disease and modern methods of health care delivery.

The main Government agency for research into the causes of, and treatment for disease, is the Medical Research Council (MRC) funded via grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The MRC has spent the following amounts on research related to dystonia:

1994–95	1,435,000
1995–96	1,702,000
1996–97	1,784,000
1997–98	1,731,000
1998–99	1,769,000

In 1999–2000 the MRC spent over £3 million on research into movement disorders including dystonia.

Food Labelling

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recommendations the Food Standards Agency has made on mandatory country of origin labelling. [150241]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The Food Standards Agency is pressing for changes to labelling rules at European and international levels to require compulsory origin labelling on a wider range of foods, particularly meat products, and for clear rules on the use of terms like "produce of".

Variant CJD

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals do not have the facilities to sterilise instruments against VCJD; and if he will make a statement. [150432]

Mr. Denham: We have received advice from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee that a key factor in reducing the theoretical risk of person-to-person spread of variant CJD during surgery is high standards of decontamination of surgical instruments. In October, we issued a circular (Health Service Circular 2000–032) to the National Health Service emphasising the importance of effective decontamination in preventing the spread of variant CJD. As a result of this circular, all NHS trusts in England have been instructed to perform an all-embracing review of their decontamination facilities and procedures. In addition, the Department is carrying out a comprehensive survey of the NHS in England to assess the effectiveness of decontamination and we expect it to be complete by April 2001.

On 4 January I announced that we were investing £200 million to modernise NHS decontamination and sterilisation facilities. The money will ensure that surgical equipment is cleaned and sterilised to the highest standards possible to protect patients from a theoretical risk of variant CJD. The investment will underpin a major overhaul to provide the NHS with the most up-to-date decontamination services.

Newcastle, North Tyneside and Northumberland NHS Trust

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he approved the creation of a Mental Health Trust for Newcastle, North Tyneside and Northumberland; when the Trust is due to commence its responsibilities; who was appointed (a) Chair and (b) Chief Executive of the Trust and when their appointments began. [150895]

Mr. Denham: The decision to create the Newcastle, North Tyneside and Northumberland Mental Health National Health Service Trust was taken on 27 October 2000 and the trust will become operational on 1 April 2001. The recruitment process for the chair and non-executive directors is now complete and a decision on the chairmanship will be announced soon. The post of chief executive has been advertised nationally but the short-listing and interview process will need to involve the chair of the trust once he or she has been appointed.

Organ Donations

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department is taking to reassure potential organ donors and encourage the maximum number of organ donations to be made. [150358]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 February 2001]: We announced a comprehensive strategy for the development and reorganisation of transplant services in this country last February. In order to explore further ways of increasing organ transplantation, a National Summit on organ donation will take place shortly.

Organ Retention

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 75W, on organ retention, when he expects the Commission to permit NHS trusts to (a) provide specific information and (b) begin the process of returning organs and tissues to members of the public. [151215]

Mr. Denham: Further guidance is being prepared which will enable information to be provided once the Retained Organs Commission is satisfied that trusts can provide accurate responses to relatives who have made inquiries. The guidance will be issued as soon as possible.

NHS Trust Boards

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidance on the circumstances under which NHS trust boards should decide (a) disciplinary cases and (b) cases involving amendments of performance. [150685]

Mr. Denham: The existing guidance, "Code of Conduct, Code of Accountability", sets out the role and responsibilities of trust boards. These include the need to ensure that high standards of corporate governance and personal behaviour are maintained in the conduct of business of the whole organisation. Chairs and non-executive directors are responsible for taking disciplinary action against executive directors who breach the Code of Conduct.

Resuscitation Policies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how and when compliance with Health Service Circular 2000/028-Resuscitation policy will be monitored and audited by his Department; what sanctions will be administered on the NHS trusts which have not complied; and how and when the outcomes of these monitoring activities will be made available to the general public. [151446]

Yvette Cooper: We have asked the Commission for Health Improvement (CHI) to pay particular attention to resuscitation decision-making processes as part of its rolling programme of clinical governance arrangements put in place by National Health Service organisations. Where CHI finds notable practice or areas for action relating to resuscitation practices, these will be outlined in the review report.

CHI will work with the NHS organisation, and the appropriate NHS Executive regional office (and local health authority where relevant), to set objectives for improvement. The organisation will then develop an action plan, the implementation of which will be monitored by the regional office to ensure any necessary action is taken.

Home/Domiciliary Care (Charges)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received relating to inaccurate statements or examples in his Department's draft statutory guidance on charging for home or domiciliary care. [150821]

Mr. Hutton: We have received one representation. However, we believe the draft guidance is in fact correct on the points which have been questioned.

Newcastle Health Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what deficit he estimates for Newcastle City Health Trust; what bridging loan have been granted to Newcastle City Health Trust; and how these deficits and loans are to be apportioned in respect of its successor authorities. [150954]

Mr. Denham: The Newcastle City Health National Health Service Trust is forecasting a revenue breakeven position for 2000–01. The NHS Executive has not provided any direct assistance in the form of brokerage in 2000–01. The trust has received £1 million assistance in respect of the Newcastle Strategic Review (NSR) bridging arrangements, which is partially funded from national special assistance funding. As the trust is forecasting breakeven, no brokerage has been provided; and as the NSR bridging funding is non-repayable, there is no impact on the successor organisations.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many PMS services have been approved in Newcastle City; if these are located in the area of greatest health need; if approval been given for a PMS for asylum seekers in Newcastle; and how this will be funded. [150953]

Mr. Denham: A total of 12 personal medical services (PMS) pilots have been approved in the City of Newcastle since April 1998.

PMS pilots under the National Health Service (Primary Care) Act 1997 are an opportunity for general practitioners, nurses and community trusts to test different ideas for delivering primary care services, focusing on local service problems and bringing about health improvements. Health Service Circular 2000/018 outlined our priorities for future PMS Pilots. Pilot schemes are not necessarily restricted to areas of greatest health need, however that may be defined.

Approval has been given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Newcastle Asylum Seeker Unit as a PMS pilot to become operational on 1 April 2001. For all PMS pilots a transfer of funds is undertaken at a national level from the General Medical Services (GMS) non-discretionary budget to the unified budget. The transfer of existing resources is based on the appropriate GMS and other funding paid to GPs or practices moving to pilot status.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been allocated for bridging support for the Newcastle City Strategic Review in each financial year from 1996–97 to 2001–02; and if he has decided to terminate support from 2002 onwards. [150955]

Mr. Denham: Newcastle and North Tyneside Health Authority has received special assistance funding in support of strategic change as follows:

£ million

Year	Special assistance
1996–97	2
1997–98	4.5
1998–99	3.5
1999–2000	4.8
2000–01	3

Decisions on special assistance funding are taken annually and an announcement will be made shortly with regard to 2001–02. No decisions have been taken in respect of 2002–03 onwards.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the PFI for Newcastle City Hospitals Trust will go to open advertisement for bidders; if he has received a request to prioritise work on the new cancer treatment centre; and if he intends to put the new cancer treatment centre on a faster track for completion. [150956]

Mr. Denham: The private finance initiative (PFI) schemes to complete the implementation of the Newcastle Strategic Review will be able to go to advert for bidders once the outline business cases for the various capital investments have been assessed and approved by the National Health Service Executive. The business cases were received on 14 February 2001 and work on their assessment will be completed by the end of March 2001.

We are aware of local aspirations that the cancer treatment centre element of the Newcastle Strategic Review be publicly funded in advance of the remainder of the PFI developments. However, the business cases advocate that the new cancer treatment centre should be procured as one part of the overall PFI developments proposed at both the Freeman Hospital and Royal Victoria Infirmary, and not separately. The PFI has been the major element of our modernisation of the NHS's capital stock and has enabled a much faster pace of development than if there had been a reliance on public capital funds alone. Subject to satisfactory progress being made in progressing the scheme, the new facilities at Freeman Hospital should be operational in 2005.

Electronic Booking System (Hospital Appointments)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the estimated value is of the computer contract to provide an electronic booking system for hospital appointments. [151483]

Ms Stuart: A Strategic Outline Case (SOC) is being developed for Electronic Booking, in line with guidance from the Central Communications and Telecommunications Agency. The SOC will establish a number of options to be pursued in later stages of business case development.

It is not possible to provide a meaningful estimate of the value of possible future contracts until the scope of any possible future contracts has been further defined through the development of a business case.

NHS Walk-in Centre (Clapham Junction)

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish an NHS Walk-in Centre at Clapham Junction; and if he will make a statement. [151152]

Mr. Denham: We have not received an expression of interest from the local health committee to set up a walk-in centre at Clapham Junction.

We are considering the roll-out of additional walk-in centres in the wider context of improving access.

Ambulance Services (Work Injuries)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of litigation are being considered by the ambulance service relating to work injuries sustained by employees; and what has been the cost of such litigation in each of the last five years. [150679]

Ms Stuart: Since 1 April 1999, the National Health Service Litigation Authority has indemnified National Health Service trusts against employers liability claims. There have been 312 such claims against ambulance trusts. Fifty five of these cases have been closed without any payment being made. Two cases were settled during 2000–2001 at a total cost of £4,700. All other cases remain outstanding.

Figures in respect of employer's liability claims brought before 1 April 1999, and in respect of cases settled by National Health Service ambulance trusts without the involvement of the NHS Litigation Authority, are not held centrally.

Patient Referrals

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce new incentives for patients referred to consultants by their general practitioners to keep their appointments. [151319]

Mr. Denham: In 1998 we launched our National Booked Admissions Programme under which growing numbers of patients are being given the opportunity to agree a date and time for their outpatient appointment, or a date for admission to hospital. Booked dates enable patients to plan ahead and make any necessary work, childcare or other arrangements. Patients who have a say in their appointment date are much more likely to keep it. Under the NHS Plan all patients will be able to book their outpatient appointments and admission to hospital by the end of 2005.

Clinical Waste Disposal

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the annual cost to the National Health Service of clinical waste disposal. [151318]

Mr. Denham: From year end figures for 1999–2000 we are able to identify that the total annual cost to the National Health Service in England for clinical waste disposal was £29.2 million.

To help the NHS reduce the cost and environmental impact of incinerating clinical waste, we issued Health Technical Memorandum 2065 "Healthcare in waste management—segregation of waste streams in clinical areas" (1997). This document advocates a change of focus from simply disposing to managing waste throughout the production process.

Planning Permission

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occasions since 3 May 1997 (1) when an NHS hospital trust applied for outline planning permission before public consultation was initiated on the proposed development concerned; and which NHS hospital trusts were involved; [151456]

(2) when a health authority has applied to a local authority for outline planning permission before public consultation was initiated on the proposed development concerned. [151258]

Mr. Denham: Information is not held centrally on planning applications made by National Health Service trusts and health authorities.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Pavilion

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the cost of the EU pavilion at the Hanover World Fair was; what its purpose was; what the UK share of financing the Euro-Kiosk was; what the cost of the EURODISC was; and if he will make a statement on the purpose and future use of the latter. [147465]

Mr. Wilson: The EU pavilion and associated structures at Expo 2000 in Hanover were financed and managed by the European Commission. Detailed information requested is available from the London office of the European Commission Representation in the United Kingdom.

Lord Levy

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the (a) cost to public funds and (b) purpose was of Lord Levy's visit to the Middle East in January. [146518]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 26 February 2001]: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Ruffley) on 5 February 2001, Official Report, column 390W.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries visited by Lord Levy on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, and the purposes of each visit together with the cost to public funds in each case. [148308]

Mr. Wilson: I refer to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Ruffley) on 5 February 2001, Official Report, columns 390–91W, and to the right hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Maude) on 20 December 2000, Official Report, column 236W.

Lord Levy also visited Israel and the Palestinian Authority as the Prime Minister's personal envoy on 21–23 February, to exchange views with leaders on regional issues.

Srebrenica Massacre

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests he has received from the French National Assembly to provide evidence to their inquiry into the Srebrenica massacre. [148554]

Mr. Vaz: The British Government have received no requests from the French National Assembly for written material relating to the Srebrenica massacre. However, we understand that the inquiry are interested in speaking to senior British officers who were serving in UNPROFOR at the time.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Special Advisers working for him will relinquish their posts when the next General Election is called. [149317]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many press releases were issued by his Department in the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000; how many have been issued in the current financial year; and what his estimate is of the total number for the current financial year. [149251]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office issues a daily bulletin of ministerial engagements and announcements. We do not keep records of the number of additional press releases issued each year.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [149772]

Mr. Vaz: The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no immediate plans to visit the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Kosovo Albanian Prisoners

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions have been taken by (a) UNMIK, (b) the EU, (c) the International Committee for the Red Cross, (d) the International Commissioner for Human Rights and (d) his Department to secure the release of the Kosovo Albanian prisoners detained in Serbia. [149778]

Mr. Vaz: UNMIK and the EU regularly raise the issue of Kosovo detainees with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) authorities. The International Committee of the Red Cross visit and provide humanitarian assistance to all Kosovo Albanian prisoners in Serbia and report regularly too on their findings. Representatives of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights visit Kosovo Albanians in Serbian prisons, monitor trails and lobby the authorities in cases of sick, juvenile and women prisoners.

We have stressed to the FRY authorities that it is unacceptable that people should be held for a prolonged period without trial. We have repeatedly made clear the importance we attach to the rapid resolution of this issue. We welcome the draft Amnesty law on political prisoners and call on the FRY and Serbian Governments to release all Kosovo Albanian prisoners held without charges or on political grounds.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Kosovo Albanian prisoners are detained in Serbia. [149777]

Mr. Vaz: According to Special Representative Mr. Henrik Amneus, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (UNHCHR), 673 Kosovo Albanians are imprisoned in Serbia.

North Korea

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospects for bilateral links between the UK and North Korea. [149908]

Mr. Battle: Following the establishment of diplomatic relations between the UK and the DPRK on 12 December 2000, both sides have agreed to set up a resident Embassy in each other's capital, and have appointed Charges d'Affaires who will be responsible for developing relations until Ambassadors are appointed later this year.

Initially we propose to increase our contacts with the DPRK through English language teaching, and training. Sir John Kerr, Permanent Under-Secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, will also visit the DPRK in March for talks on political, economic, foreign trade and cultural issues.

I have recently met a senior delegation from the Korean Workers' Party, the ruling party in the DPRK, and met DPRK participants at a recent conference on North East Asia at Wilton Park. They later called on my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 20 February.

During this meeting the Secretary of State raised a number of issues including human rights and non-proliferation.

Policy and Strategy Units

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his policy planning unit was established; which of its reports are placed in the public domain; how many departmental or non-departmental Special Advisers participate in its work; how many regular (a) non-departmental and (b) departmental staff participate in its work; and how many of these work for the unit on a full-time basis. [150362]

Mr. Robin Cook: Policy Planners Department has been in existence since 1967–68 when it was a part of the Planning, Research, Defence and Disarmament Group. Policy Planning Staff is the present name of the department. It reports direct to the Permanent Under-Secretary, Sir John Kerr, who chairs the FCO Policy Advisory Board which is made up of civil servants. The papers produced for the board are not normally in the public domain. Policy Planning Staff contribute to several FCO public documents including the FCO departmental report and the FCO website.

There are 11 full-time staff and two secondees from outside the UK. No Special Adviser works in the department.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many technical committees and working parties of the EU Council of Ministers the Scottish Executive have been informed about in advance by (a) UKREP and (b) UK Government Departments, since 1 July 1999. [150352]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 14 February 2001]: Under the arrangements set out in the EU concordat, the Scottish Executive are informed by Government Departments of all technical committees and working parties in which they have an interest.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many technical committees and working parties of the EU Council of Ministers have been attended by (a) UK officials and (b) UK delegations including Scottish Executive Ministers since 1 July 1999. [150354]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 14 February 2001]: Detailed information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ministers do not attend working level meetings.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) formal and (b) informal EU Council of Ministers meetings have been attended by British Government delegations which include Scottish Executive Ministers since 1 July 1999; and if he will list the dates and subjects of these meetings. [150356]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 14 February 2001]: The information is as follows.

Year	Date	Council	Minister
1999	24–25 September	Informal meeting of Ministers of Education	Sam Galbraith
1999	26 October	Fisheries Council (Luxembourg)	John Home Robertson

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UK joint ministerial committee meetings regarding European Union issues have been held since 1 July 1999. [150351]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 14 February 2001]: The first UK joint ministerial committee meeting on EU issues will take place on 1 March.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which technical committees and working parties of the EU Council of Ministers, attended by UK Government delegates, have been led by Scottish Executive Ministers on behalf of the UK. [150353]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 14 February 2001]: Ministers do not attend working level meetings.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) formal and (b) informal EU Council of Ministers meetings attended by British Government delegations were led by Scottish Government Ministers since 1 July 1999; and if he will list the dates and subjects of these meetings. [150355]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 14 February 2001]: On 8 June 2000 and 12 February 2001 Nicol Stephen, currently Deputy Minister for Education, Europe and External Affairs in the Scottish Executive, led for the UK at Education Councils. These are the only occasions since May 1997 that the UK delegation has been led at the Council of Ministers by a Minister who is not a Member of the Westminster Parliament. These substitutions were agreed with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) formal and (b) informal EU Council Ministers meetings have been attended by UK Government Ministers since 1 July 1999; and if he will list the dates and subject of the meetings. [150357]

Mr. Vaz: Since 1 July 1999 there have been 131 formal Council meetings and 33 informal meetings, as shown in the following list. UK Government Ministers or Ministers from the devolved Administrations have attended the vast majority of these. Where appropriate, senior officials have attended in their place.

Detailed information of who attended individual meetings is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Peace Brigades International

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the Colombian Government concerning the safety of British volunteers with Peace Brigades International in Colombia. [150633]

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Colombian Government following the recent declaration of the Colombian Parliament that humanitarian workers for Peace Brigades International are to be targeted as a military objective. [150702]

Mr. Battle: We were appalled to learn about the threats made against Peace Brigades International volunteers in Colombia. As I made clear in a statement on 13 February, we are very concerned about the safety of all human rights workers in Colombia, who operate in extremely difficult and dangerous conditions. We have asked that the Colombian Government take further steps to protect human rights workers so that they may go about their lives and work in safety. In addition, the EU presidency, on behalf of all EU member states, has expressed concern about the threats made against Peace Brigades International and other human rights workers, and has urged that appropriate measures be taken by the Colombian authorities to protect them.

Shooting

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has consulted, and what plans he has to consult, sporting shooting organisations in the United Kingdom before the UN Conference on the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in July. [150695]

Mr. Wilson: In line with our commitment to the success of the UN Conference, we are working in partnership with Governments, NGOs and representatives of civil society, and also with business. We already have regular contacts with the Defence Manufacturers' Association. We have also had contact with the British Shooting Sports Council, which has highlighted issues as marking and tracing of weapons, the potentially important role of Interpol and end-user certification. We plan to continue our dialogue with industry in the run-up to the UN Conference and beyond.

HMG are actively engaged in preparations for the July 2001 UN Conference on the Illicit Trade in Small Arms and Light Weapons in All Its Aspects. We attach great importance to a successful outcome. The Conference will be a milestone in international attempts to combat the proliferation of small arms. It is an ideal opportunity for nations and regional groups to unite, under the UN, in giving political impetus to their efforts. Our objective is to agree global political commitment and the adoption of norms, measures and timely follow-up action aimed at reducing the levels of illicit trade in—and establishing accumulations of—small arms. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary plans to attend and address the Conference.

The UK hosted a policy brainstorming seminar for around 30 countries at Lancaster House, London, on 13–14 February. The seminar considered possible UN Conference outcomes and the political and financial commitments these will require. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave an opening address. He highlighted the need to better regulate the legal small arms trade, to work to combat the illicit trade and to reduce the volume of small arms in illegal circulation throughout the world.

Al-Kosheh Trial

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Egyptian authorities concerning the recent verdict in the El-Kosheh trial. [151019]

Mr. Wilson: None. Following the violence in Al-Kosheh, we encouraged the Egyptian authorities to conduct a thorough investigation and to take appropriate action against anyone found to have committed a crime. The Egyptian Government quickly set up an investigation into the incident sending some 50 prosecutors to the area. They co-ordinated their efforts with leaders of both religious communities. The subsequent trial was conducted in a normal criminal court where due legal process was followed. It is important that we now concentrate on the promotion of inter-faith dialogue and an increase in tolerance.

Indonesia

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Indonesia about the allegations of attacks made on Christians in that country; and if he will make a statement. [151499]

Mr. Battle: We are deeply concerned by reports of attempts to force Christians to covert to Islam in Maluku and our Embassy has raised this with senior officials at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Jakarta.

Both the Secretary of State for International Development and I visited Indonesia in October 2000 and discussed the situation in Maluku with President Wahid and senior Ministers. We urged tolerance and restraint and made clear to them the Indonesian Government's responsibility to maintain law and order and to take immediate steps to bring the perpetrators of the violence to justice. I also discussed events with Alwi Shihab, the Indonesian Foreign Minister, in the margins of the EU-ASEAN meeting in Vientianne on 12 December.

Ministerial Visits

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many overseas ministerial visits have been undertaken by the Foreign Secretary since 1992; and which countries were visited. [146871]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 23 January 2001]: I have placed in the Libraries of the House a list detailing my visits overseas from 2 May 1997 to 31 January 2001 and overseas visits undertaken by the then Foreign Secretaries from 1 January 1992 to 1 May 1997.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers (Vacancies)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vacancies for prison officers were filled in each institution in the north-west of England between July 2000 and the latest date for which information is available. [151235]

Mr. Boateng: The following prison officer vacancies were filled in the north-west of England between July 2000 and February 2001:

Prison establishment	Number of vacancies filled
Haverigg	2
Lancaster Castle	1
Lancaster Farms	3
Liverpool	2
Risley	1
Wymott	1

Departmental Policies (Bristol, East)

Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Bristol, East constituency, the effects on Bristol of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150559]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office annual reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 1999–2000, is available in the Library. Information on recorded crime and policing is also published. 'Recorded Crime England and Wales, 12 months to September 2000' and 'Police Service Strength England and Wales, 30 September 2000' can be found in the House of Commons Library. The Recorded Crime Statistics includes information on recorded crime by Basic Command Unit and Crime and Disorder Partnership.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested although set out are examples relating to the Bristol, East constituency or the immediate locality:

Targeted Policing

One scheme, awarded £1,050,000 under round two of the Targeted Policing Initiative, proposes to tackle robbery and fear of crime in the Central Bristol area.

An Avon and Somerset forcewide project was awarded £27,500 under round two, increasing the numbers and effectiveness of confiscations imposed by the courts.

Closed Circuit Television (CCTV)

One bid for a CCTV scheme in Brislington, which proposes to modernise an existing car park system, has been submitted under round two of the CCTV Initiative. The bid is under consideration, along with others from the region.

Reducing Burglary Initiative

One project submitted under round two of the Reducing Burglary Initiative was awarded £34,200. The scheme proposes to tackle burglary in Upper Easton using the following interventions: Concentrated policing; target hardening; locks and alarms; inter agency work; information newsletters; neighbourhood watch and drug referrals.

Three projects, total capital of £930,400 have been received under round three of the Reducing Burglary Initiative, and are currently under consideration.

The Bristol Youth Offending Team (YOT) during 2000–01 has worked with 2,200 young offenders and supervised 330 young people on community-based orders. The YOT has prepared more than 450 court reports and its appropriate adult volunteers have attended 350 interviews with young people at police stations. The YOT has established offender-victim mediation services and are providing intervention programmes to confront young offenders with the views of their victims. The YOT is also working to deliver the Government's Pledge to halve the average time taken from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders, from 142 to 71 days. The most recent figure for Bristol is 89 days.

Bristol is also receiving funding from the Youth Justice Board's development fund of £1,044,505 over three years for a bail supervision scheme and five intervention programmes.

Funding is also being provided by the Youth Justice Board from the inter-departmental Youth Inclusion Programme for a project at Barton Hill in the Bristol, East area. The Programme seeks to reduce offending, truancy and exclusion in disadvantaged neighbourhoods. Each project receives annually £75,000 from local partnerships and £75,000 from the Youth Justice Board.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of Bristol East to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

the asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 66,195 by the end of December 2000;

good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website (www.homeoffice.gov.uk).

Fire Services

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on fire services per head of population in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years. [150014]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 9 February 2001, Official Report, columns 732W.

Departmental Policies (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood)

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, including statistical information, the effect on the Blackpool, North and Fleetwood constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150717]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office Annual Reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 1999–2000, is available in the Library. Information on recorded crime and policing is also published. "Recorded Crime England and Wales, 12 months to September 2000" and "Police Service Strength England and Wales, 30 September 2000" can be found in the Library. The recorded crime statistics include information on recorded crime by Basic Command Unit and Crime and Disorder Partnerships.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested although set out are examples relating to the Blackpool, North and Fleetwood constituency or the immediate locality:

Targeted Policing

One project covering Blackpool was awarded £103,000 under round 2 of the Targeted Policing Initiative, which proposes to reduce vehicle crime and anti-social behaviour within the town centre and main car parks.

Closed Circuit Television (CCTV)

Three projects were awarded a total of £786,000 under first round of the CCTV initiative:

i. Blackpool town centre and car parks—awarded £559,000, proposed 36 cameras to cover two car parks and to increase the security of three other parking areas.

ii. Community Safety on Housing Estates—awarded £107,400, will site nine cameras to target crime and disorder problems at two housing estates in Blackpool, including two mobile cameras to be placed in crime "hot spot" areas.

iii. Wyre Mobile CCTV Unit—awarded £120,000, proposed two fully equipped mobile vehicle units capable of being deployed to any part of Wyre borough, targeting crime "hot spots" and areas suffering from youth crime and disorder.

Reducing Burglary Initiative

Two projects, total capital of £285,000, submitted under round three of the Reducing Burglary Initiative and are currently under consideration.

Neighbourhood Wardens

One project, awarded £199,000 to provide a co-ordinated, responsive and community focused approach to promoting the safety and well being of local residents, by providing trained high profile wardens to work with communities and address issues as identified by those communities.

Youth Offending Teams (YOT)

The Lancashire YOT covers the constituency and different units have been established to provide a countywide service. They are all fully operational. One of these units is located within the centre of Fleetwood. The YOT is providing a very successful offender/victim mediation scheme in support of the final warning scheme and community based sentences. The take up rate of this service by victims is very high. The YOT and local police are working together with a local Youth Referral Scheme to respond to concerns about incidences of juvenile nuisance. The YOT was involved in running a Splash scheme during the summer holidays in 2000 which provided activity schemes for children most at risk of offending. The YOT is intending to run similar schemes over the Easter and summer holidays in 2001.

Blackpool borough council has implemented a bail supervision scheme—Blackpool Youth Court Bail Support Scheme—to reduce the incidence of secure remands and re-offending while on bail for 10–17 year olds. The scheme has been awarded a grant from the Youth Justice Board's development fund of approximately £100,000 over three years.

Barnados is operating a parenting scheme in Blackpool—Parenting Matters—to provide support to parents whose children get into trouble. The scheme is also receiving grant funding from the Youth Justice Board's development fund of approximately £143,000 over three years.

The Lancashire Restorative Justice Project which provides a victim/offender mediation service across the county, including Blackpool, is receiving grant funding through the Youth Justice Board's development fund of approximately £36,748 over three years.

The work of the team is well integrated into the local Crime and Disorder Partnership regarding joint activities and common targets. In particular, the YOT has taken an active lead in The Fleetwood Action Group which is a sub-group of the Community Safety Partnership. This project has recently been involved in identifying a local youth crime hotspot, arranging meetings with local residents and young people separately, and then bringing the two groups together to agree an action plan for the area.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of Blackpool, North and Fleetwood to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

the asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 66,195 by the end of December 2000;

good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website (www.homeoffice.gov.uk).

Departmental Policies (Clwyd, South)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Clwyd, South constituency, the effects on Clwyd, South of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150911]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office Annual Reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 1999–2000, is available in the Library. Information on recorded crime and policing is also published. The recorded crime statistics include information on recorded crime by Basic Command Unit and Crime and Disorder Partnerships.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested although set out below are examples relating to the Clwyd, South constituency or the immediate locality:

Reducing Burglary Initiative

1 scheme, awarded £33,300 under round 2 of the Reducing Burglary Initiative, covering a virtual community of houses in multiple occupancy in Colwyn Bay, Abergele and Rhyl, elderly person's sheltered housing in Flintshire, and the areas of Gwenfro and Y Wern in Wrexham. Main interventions under the project include: covert observations; high profile and targeted policing; preparation/distribution of crime prevention literature and a crimestoppers campaign.

Arrest Referral Scheme

An arrest referral scheme is currently operating in the area and is being developed alongside the Drug Treatment and Testing Orders scheme. Figures will be available shortly. A further investment of £70,000 has been awarded in the criminal justice agencies.

Youth Offending Teams (YOT)

The Wrexham YOT covers the constituency. The YOT has been working with local police to pioneer a nuisance reporting scheme which means that any young person stopped by the police or coming to the notice of police will have their details recorded and some action will take place. All young people going through the courts carry out some form of reparation irrespective of the community disposal they receive. The YOT is also the lead agency concerning anti-social behaviour orders. More than 17 families have been successfully engaged resulting in a reduction in their previous anti-social behaviour. The YOT is also working to deliver the Government's Pledge to halve the average time taken from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders, from 142 to 71 days. The most recent figure for North East Wales is 79 days.

North-East Wales is operating a bail supervision scheme to reduce the incidence of secure remands and re-offending while on bail among 10–17 year olds. The scheme is receiving grant funding from the Youth Justice Board's development fund of £50,000 over two years.

The Youth Justice Board is also providing grant funding through its development fund for the North Wales Drug, Alcohol and Substance Abuse Treatment Service for Young People. The service covers six local authorities in north Wales, including Wrexham, and is receiving funding of approximately £42,000 over three years. Funding is also being provided by the Youth Justice Board from the inter-departmental Youth Inclusion Programme for a project on the Caia Park Estate in Wrexham. The programme seeks to reduce offending, truancy and exclusion in disadvantaged neighbourhoods. Each project receives annually £75,000 from local partnerships and £75,000 from the Youth Justice Board.

The Youth Justice Board also provided funding for the operation of Splash schemes during the Summer holidays in 2000. These schemes provided constructive and positive leisure activities for young people most at risk of offending. A Splash scheme was run in Plas Madoc.

The YOT has also developed criminal justice protocols with Stoke Heath Young Offender Institution to ensure that the explicit needs of Welsh young offenders in custody are being addressed.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of Clwyd, South to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

the asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 66,195 by the end of December 2000;

good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website. (www.homeoffice.gov.uk).

Departmental Policies (North-East Derbyshire)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the North-East Derbyshire constituency, the effect on North-East Derbyshire of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150887]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office Annual Reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 1999–2000, is available in the Library. Information on recorded crime and policing is also published. 'Recorded Crime England and Wales, 12 months to September 2000' and 'Police Service Strength England and Wales, 30 September 2000' can be found in the Library. The recorded crime statistics include information on recorded crime by Basic Command Unit and Crime and Disorder partnerships.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested although the following are examples relating to the North-East Derbyshire constituency or the immediate locality:

Targeted Policing

Two projects covering Derbyshire were awarded funding totalling £485,000 under the Targeted Policing Initiative: £317,000 to concentrate on mapping of drugs markets in the region and £168,000 to focus on distraction burglary.

Closed Circuit Television (CCTV)

Under the CCTV Initiative Steering Group a project in Clay Cross and Danesmoor received funding totalling £194,850. The project begun on 1 August 2000, and has extended the existing town centre system, with a view to reducing further, crime and fear of crime, in particular vehicle crime and burglary. Coverage has been increased to include main routes to residential areas, car parking, community facilities and business community areas.

Reducing Burglary Initiative

Two schemes have received funding in Derby City totalling £120,000. The areas of Peartree and City West have each received £60,000 to fund development of an anti-burglary task group, which will initiate local projects using a multi-agency approach.

Youth Offending Teams (YOTs)

The Derbyshire YOT is providing appropriate adult services for young people when interviewed by police and has dealt with 242 requests for their services between April and December 2000. The Derbyshire YOT is utilising the ASSET assessment system in order to ensure intervention work is effectively targeted at the personal, family, social, educational and health problems that contribute to the causes of a young person's offending behaviour. The health staff attached to the YOT are carrying out basic assessments of young offenders for substance misuse and, where appropriate, referring them on to specialist substance misuse services for young people.

The police officers seconded to the Derbyshire and Derby City YOT have delivered 50 training sessions on the final warning scheme to over 1,200 police officers in order to ensure consistency of police assessment and referral to the YOTs. More than 12 community reparation schemes have been established throughout Derbyshire in order to allow the YOTs to deliver victim-offender mediation services. There is a wide range of activities available to meet the needs of the young person and provide opportunities for further development through accredited training and skills.

Derbyshire is benefiting from the Youth Justice Board's development fund which has awarded grants of approximately £613,000 over three years for two bail support schemes and two intervention programmes in the county.

The Derbyshire YOT also received funding from the Youth Justice Board and the Home Office Crime Reduction Programme to run a Splash scheme during the Summer holidays in 2000. The scheme provided various activity schemes for young people most at risk of offending in four wards of Bolsover. This resulted in a marked reduction in nuisance calls and offending in the local area.

The Derbyshire YOT is also benefiting from funding from the National Lottery to operate a community sports initiative in Clay Cross. The initiative is currently being implemented.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of North-East Derbyshire to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

the asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 66,195 by the end of December 2000;

good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website (www.homeoffice.gov.uk).

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female foreign nationals were being held in prisons in England and Wales on 1 February. [150445]

Mr. Boateng: Provisional information shows that on 31 January 2001 there were 6,298 male and 627 female foreign nationals in prisons in England and Wales. This information is also available in successive volumes in 'Prison Statistics England and Wales' (Table 6.2 in the 1999 edition, CM 4805), copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the age of the oldest (a) male and (b) female inmate being held in prison in England and Wales; for what offence they are being detained; and on what date and for how long they were sentenced. [150449]

Mr. Boateng: Provisional information shows that on 31 January 2001 the oldest male prisoner was 89 years old, sentenced on 25 May 2000 to 730 days for committing a sexual offence. The oldest female was 74 years old, sentenced on 31 January 1984 to life for committing murder.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners have died in prisons in England and Wales from the effects of taking illegal drugs while in prison during the last 12 months. [150444]

Mr. Boateng: One prisoner—an adult male—has died since 1 January 2000 following the apparent use of illegal drugs while in prison custody; the coroner's inquest is awaited.

UK Passports

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many United Kingdom passports were issued in 2000. [150443]

Mrs. Roche: The number of United Kingdom passports issued by the Passport Agency in 2000 was 5,089,598.

Victim Support

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations to which he gave grants for the support of (a) murder victims and (b) victims of crime other than murder, and the amount per organisation, for each of the last three years for which figures are available. [150562]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In the past three years the Home Office has given grant to Support After Murder and Manslaughter (SAMM), which offers help to relatives and friends of homicide victims, and to Victim Support which, as part of its wider support services to victims of crime and witnesses, supports those bereaved by homicide. Grant details are given in the table.

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
Support After Murder and Manslaughter (£ million)	43,000	100,000	100,000
Victim Support (£)	12.682	17.500	18.600

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations to which he gave grants for the support of those killed in or as a result of road crashes, and the amount per organisation, for each of the last three years for which figures are available. [150563]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office has provided £23,000 per annum since 1999 to the road safety organisation BRAKE for the supply of the booklets "Coping with grief" and "Procedures following a death on the road in England and Wales" free of charge to all the police forces in England and Wales, for the families of those killed in road crashes.

From April 2001 the Home Office will pay BRAKE an additional £15,000 per annum for administration costs and training undertaken in connection with the use of the booklets.

Correspondence

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East about Mr. Abdul Rastomi, reference R1019683/2, of 27 November 2000. [150450]

Mrs. Roche: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, Lord Bassam, wrote to the hon. Member on my behalf on 15 January 2001.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to reply to correspondence concerning Mrs. Brenda Williams dated 23 September 1999, reference IMPW25862 5(9) and PO18327/S8 and 16641/99. [147423]

Mrs. Roche: I wrote to the hon. Member on 15 February. I am sorry for the delay in replying. Unfortunately, the original letter did not reach my office.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the hon. Member for Manchester, Central's letter of 2 August 2000 regarding Mr. H. (Ref: S1020866). [149769]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 15 February 2001]: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 22 February 2001. I am sorry that it was not possible to send an earlier reply.

Police and Fire Services (Pensions)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the state's total liability at 2001 prices to pay the pensions of (a) police and (b) fire officers, assuming all existing contributors retire and that all pensioners die at the age projected by the pension scheme actuaries. [148007]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In 1998, when the appraisal was last undertaken, the Government Actuary's Department estimated that the total accrued liabilities for police and fire officer pensions were broadly £25 billion and £5 billion respectively.

Naturalisation Applications

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) at what level within his Department authority can be given for an application for naturalisation to be treated other than in date order of receipt (a) in respect of initial consideration and (b) during subsequent stages of the process; [149576]

(2) at what level in his Department discretion can be exercised to treat an application for naturalisation other than in date of receipt order. [149577]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 8 February 2001]: Decisions to start consideration of a case other than in date of receipt order can be taken at the normal caseworking level. Decisions to give case priority throughout its various stages have to be taken at Higher Executive Officer level or above.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of naturalisation decisions taken in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000 were made within (i) six months, (ii) nine months, (iii) 12 months, (iv)18 months and (v) more than 18 months of the date of receipt of the application. [150056]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 12 February 2001]: Applications for naturalisation concluded under section 6(1) of the British Nationality Act 1981 in a specified time are shown in the table.

Naturalisation decisions

	Total 6(1)	6 months	Percentage	9 months	Percentage	12 months	Percentage	18 months	Percentage
1997	6,125	331	5.4	758	12.0	1,946	31.8	4,594	75.0
1998	22,935	486	2.1	722	3.1	1,935	8.44	9,965	43.4
1999	21,607	1,112	5.1	1,345	6.2	1,819	8.42	4,339	20.1
2000	25,159	1,371	5.4	1,819	7.2	4,733	18.8	15,231	60.5

Notes:
1. Totals for each year are cumulative.
2. 1997 figures are for January to March and October to December only. Due to technical problems other months' figures are not available. The "Total" number also covers only these months.
3. For the same reason, 2000 figures are for January and May–December only. Again, the "Total" number covers only these months.

Asylum Seekers

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set a target for the length of time the security services take to complete the security check on those applying for settlement in the UK. [150097]

Mrs. Roche: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate aims to deal with 70 per cent. of non-asylum applications within three weeks. Within that overall target, there are no specific targets for applications which may require security checks, and no plans at present to set such targets.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning asylum seekers going without food because of problems with the administration of vouchers; and if he will make a statement. [150936]

Mrs. Roche: We have received a number of communications, by letter or telephone, concerning asylum seekers who have encountered difficulties in receiving their vouchers. The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has set up a dedicated telephone inquiry service to enable asylum seekers in this position to register their position as quickly as possible. A special team within NASS ensures any difficulty is resolved as soon as possible.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the asylum application made on 1 April 1997 under Home Office reference M718960LTN/97/259/1L will be determined. [151432]

Mrs. Roche: The asylum application was refused on 22 August 1998 and the appeal was finally dismissed on 12 December 1998. The outstanding application on the basis of marriage will now be considered.

Post-mortems

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many post-mortem examinations took place in each year since 1995; and how many of these in each year were undertaken (a) because there was suspicion of criminal activity in the death, (b) because the doctor was unsure of the cause of death, (c) for research purposes and (d) for other specified purposes; [150124]

(2) how many post mortems in each year since 1995 (a) established a prima facie criminal case, (b) established a previously unknown cause of death and (c) did not establish a cause of death. [150125]

Mr. Boateng: Information about the reasons for coroner post-mortem examinations is not held centrally. Available information up to 1999, including data on non-coroner post-mortems held by the Office for National Statistics, is set out in the table.

	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999

European Union Humanitarian Operations

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers the UK may be called upon to supply in order to provide civil assistance for European Union humanitarian operations under the terms of the treaty of Nice; and if he will make a statement. [150033]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 12 February 2001]: In the event of the European Union carrying out a civilian policing operation, the United Kingdom would not be obliged to contribute any police officers, but would decide in the light of circumstances whether it was appropriate for the United Kingdom to contribute to the operation, and if so, in what numbers.

Police Officers (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in Gloucestershire in each year from 1993 to 2000; and what the projected numbers are for the next three years. [150854]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Police numbers in Gloucestershire in each year from 1993 to September 2000 (the latest date at which figures are available) are given in the table.

Year	Number
March 1993	1,149
March 1994	1,159
March 1995	1,163
March 1996	1,133
March 1997	1,133
March 1998	1,104
March 1999	1,104
March 2000	1,114
September 2000	1,142

The Chief Constable has informed me that on present estimates the force's planned staffing levels are 1,187 officers from April 2001, 1,222 officers from April 2002 and 1,244 officers from April 2003.

Firearms

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has consulted, and what plans he has to consult, sporting shooting organisations in the United Kingdom before the UN Conference on the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in July. [150696]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Arrangements for participation in the United Nations Conference are being taken forward by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. I understand that his Department has already had contacts with a wide range of organisations, including representatives of the shooting community.

Defendants (Previous Convictions)

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of defendants who elected for trial by jury at the Crown court (a) were subsequently convicted and had previous convictions and (b) were acquitted and had previous convictions. [150649]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not collected centrally. Research conducted by the Home Office showed that nearly 90 per cent. of convicted offenders who had elected trial in 1989 had previous convictions and over a third had more than 10 previous convictions.

Departmental Travel Costs

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total gross running cost to his Department for travel, including fares, subsistence, accommodation and other expenses met from public funds for visits exclusively within the United Kingdom by (a) him and (b) Ministers in the last 12 months. [149138]

Mr. Straw: The available information on the cost of travel, including fares, subsistence, accommodation and other allowances met from public funds for ministerial visits exclusively within the United Kingdom between 1 February 2000 and 31 January 2001 is set out. The figures include where relevant the cost of an accompanying Private Secretary.

(a) £14,523.38

(b) £48,295.38.

Animal Welfare

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's progress in preventing cruelty to animals. [150280]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This Government are committed to improving standards of animal welfare and I am pleased to report that since May 1997, we have agreed a significant number of measures designed to prevent the unnecessary suffering of animals, these include:

a whole range of United Kingdom, European Union and Council of Europe legislation and recommendations designed to improve the conditions in which farm animals, of all kinds, are kept, transported and slaughtered; revising pre-export procedures for sheep and pigs destined for fattening, production or slaughter in other European Union member states; announcing a review of the Veterinary Surgeons Act 1966 to ensure that we have veterinary para-professionals are effectively regulated; supporting the private Member's Bill which became the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Act 2000: this will allow for better care to be made of commercial animals while proceedings under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 are in hand; legislation to prohibit fur farming in England and Wales—the Fur Farming (Prohibition) Act 2000; introducing the Pet Travel Scheme, which allows dogs and cats coming from Western Europe and certain other rabies-free islands to enter the United Kingdom without quarantine, provided that they meet certain conditions. The Government are consulting on statutory provisions for the welfare of those animals still subject to quarantine while there; agreeing, during the United Kingdom's Presidency of the European Union, the European Union Zoos Directive which requires zoos to accommodate animals under conditions that satisfy their biological and conservation requirements;

creating the Zoos Forum which advises the Government on all zoo matters and came into existence following a review of the Zoo Licensing Act 1981;

updating the Secretary of State's Standards of Modern Zoo Practice; commissioning a review of the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 to look at its effectiveness; supporting a private Member's Bill which became the Breeding and Sale of Dogs (Welfare) Act 1999, a measure aimed at tightening regulation of commercial dog breeding establishments, and the issue to local authorities of related detailed guidance; preparing, with the Association of Circus Proprietors, a code of practice on the care and welfare of animals in travelling circuses; making an order that allows for an indefinite prohibition of the culling of seals on the east coast of England.

We are also working to ensure that the highest possible standards of animal welfare are applied to those used in scientific procedures and that they are used only where it is fully justified—where the benefits outweigh the costs and where there are no suitable alternatives. To this end we are promoting the fullest application of the 3Rs—the replacement of procedures with others which do not use animals, the reduction of the number of animals used and the refinement of procedures to minimise pain and suffering.

In addition to our commitment to the 3Rs, the other main individual measures this Government have introduced since the election to ensure that animals are used only where fully justified are as follows. We have:

secured a voluntary ban on testing cosmetic finished products on animals; increased the budget made available to the Animal Procedures Committee to sponsor research on alternatives by 45 per cent. to £265,000 for 2000–01; banned the use of animals to test alcohol and tobacco products;

increased the size of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate from 18 to 21, and recruited seven new inspectors to fill these and other vacancies; introduced a requirement that all establishments licensed under the 1986 Act have local ethical review processes as a complement to the existing controls under the Act; announced our intention never to allow the use of Great Apes (gorillas, chimpanzees, pygmy chimpanzees and orang-utans); announced the phasing out of the use of ascitic animals in certain forms of monoclonal antibody production; and ended the licensing of the LD50 test and of tests for skin corrosivity and phototoxic potential where valid alternatives exist.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total gross running cost to his Department in the last 12 months was of alcoholic drinks. [149045]

Mr. Straw: Provisional expenditure on alcoholic drinks for official guests at ministerial functions in the last 12 months to 31 January 2001 was £3,007. The cost of alcoholic drinks taken with meals when entertainment is provided by civil servants for official guests cannot be identified separately.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total gross running costs were to his Department in the last 12 months of (a) stationery and (b) printing and publishing. [149140]

Mr. Straw: The provisional total gross running costs to my Department in the last 12 months to 31 January 2001 were (a) £3,675,956 for stationery and (b) £6,257,404 for printing and publishing.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the total gross running costs to his Department of the non-departmental public bodies accountable through his Department in the last 12 months. [149143]

Mr. Straw: The Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies 2000", contains information for the 1999–2000 financial year of the total costs to Departments of sponsoring their non-departmental public bodies. "Public Bodies 2000" was published on 4 January 2001 and copies have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total gross running costs to his Department of fees and disbursements paid to consultants in the last 12 months. [149151]

Mr. Straw: The total gross running costs to the Home Department of fees and disbursements paid to consultants in the 12 months ending 31 December 2000 were £14,234,969.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department's total gross running costs were for travel, including fares, subsistence, accommodation and other expenses met from public funds, but excluding such costs for journeys and stays exclusively within the United Kingdom, (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the last 12 months. [149044]

Mr. Straw: Provisional costs are (a) £8,334,486 in the period from 1 May 1997 to 31 January 2001 and (b) £2,206,897 in the last 12 months to 31 January 2001.

Departmental Visits

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visits abroad have been made by him and his Ministers on departmental business (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the last 12 months. [149043]

Mr. Straw: The information requested is as follows:

(a) between 1 May 1997 and 31 January 2001 Home Office Ministers made 107 overseas visits on departmental business, 86 of which were within the European Union.

(b) between 1 February 2000 and 31 January 2001 Home Office Ministers made 26 overseas visits, 24 of which were within the European Union.

Road Accidents (Police Vehicles)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) injuries and (b) deaths were caused by police cars in each year from 1996 to 2000, broken down by police authority. [150888]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the number of injuries and deaths in road traffic accidents involving police vehicles on immediate response or in a pursuit are given in the table.

Recommendations from the report "Police Pursuit Driver Training", issued in September 1998, which have been taken forward on a national basis are well advanced and many forces are now working towards full implementation of the report. National standardised police pursuit driver training courses are now available.

Robert Thompson

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department was informed of allegations about an incident involving Robert Thompson which took place on 16 January 1997; what action was taken; and if he will make a statement. [151045]

Mr. Boateng: The alleged incident was first brought to our notice in The Sunday People newspaper on 11 February 2001. The High Court considered the allegation in the course of judicial review proceedings and concluded in its judgment on Friday 16 February that the allegation was without foundation.

Postal Votes

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the suggested format for the new form for postal votes being sent by his Department to electoral registration offices includes a request that those aged 70 years or over should tick a box. [151519]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no requirement or any proposal for electors aged 70 years or over to declare their age when applying for a postal or proxy vote. I recently circulated to all Members two application forms: one for use when registering under the new rolling registration system and one for use when applying for a postal vote. The registration form asks those who are over 70 to tick a box. This is standard registration procedure and allows those electors to avoid being called for jury service from which they are exempt. The postal vote form makes no mention of age.

British Crime Survey

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate from the latest

British crime survey the percentage of each tenure group classified as (a) owner occupiers, (b) social renters and (c) private renters who are victims of crime in each region and nation of the United Kingdom. [150994]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The available information is given in the table.

The 2000 British Crime Survey (BCS) is a representative survey of adults living in private households in England and Wales. Scotland and Northern Ireland have their own separate crime surveys.

The BCS estimates that 30.5 per cent. of adults in England and Wales were victims of crime in 1999. It is possible to provide a breakdown of victimisation figures for each type of tenure on a regional basis. However, some caution should be exercised when interpreting the results for the private rented sector category, as the regional sample sizes for this group are comparatively small.

Hoax Emergency Calls

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in each of the last five years in the Metropolitan Police area have been (a) prosecuted and (b) cautioned for making hoax 999 calls. [150959]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Hoax 999 calls fall within section 43 of the Telecommunications Act 1984. The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that where an individual is identified as a "persistent 999 hoax caller" the normal practice is for the Metropolitan Police Service to pass the details of the calls and caller to the service providers, who then deal with the case individually.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Metropolitan Police log the telephone numbers of callers to the 999 service. [150958]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has informed me that when a 999 call is received at New Scotland Yard, an entry is made on the Computer Aided Despatch System and the telephone number recorded on the entry.

Drug Testing (Prisons)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made to (a) procedures, (b) methods and (c) equipment for drug testing in prisons since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [150982]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested can be found in the Prison Service Orders listed in the table and is available in the Library.

Community Court Orders

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons who are subject to a community court order are (a) male and over 65 years of age and (b) female and over 60 years of age. [150981]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the number of persons subject to a community sentence at any one time is not collected centrally. However, information taken from the Home Office's court proceedings database is given in the table and shows the number of males over 65 years of age and females over 60 years of age sentenced to a community sentence by all courts in England and Wales during 1998 and 1999.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were electronically tagged in England and Wales at the latest date for which figures are available. [151012]

Mr. Boateng: 3,558 women were electronically tagged in England and Wales between the start of the current electronic monitoring contracts on 28 January 1999, and 31 January 2001. At midnight on 31 January 2001, a total of 264 women were still being monitored.

Petrol Crisis

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the correspondence sent by his Department in 2000 to chief constables asking them to submit claims for special grants to cover costs incurred by the petrol crisis. [150687]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My officials wrote to police authorities and to chief officers of police on 18 September and 15 December 2000 inviting claims for additional policing costs necessarily incurred during the fuel distribution emergency last year. Guidance was given that costs should be reasonable, proportionate to immediate local need and that claims should be audited in due course.

Claims for expenditure are now being examined and payment of the bulk of each claim will be made before the end of this financial year.

Copies of the correspondence have been placed in the Library.

Rehabilitation Programmes

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners had successfully completed (a) an offending behaviour programme and (b) a sex offender treatment programme by the most recent date for which figures are available; [151249]

(2) how many prisoners he estimates will have completed (a) an offending behaviour programme and (b) a sex offenders treatment programme by 31 March; and if he will make a statement. [151248]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service estimates that between 1 April 2000 and 31 March 2001 there will be 6,512 completions of accredited offending behaviour programmes, of which 849 will be of the Sex Offender Treatment Programme (by 31 January there had been 4,034 completions, 332 of the Sex Offender Treatment Programme). However, these figures precede the annual round of audit and quality assurance, which determines the final number of formally recognised completions.

Between 1992, when the Prison Service introduced accredited offending behaviour programmes, and 31 March 2000 there have been 13,986 completions of formally audited and quality assured programmes, of which 4,094 were of the Sex Offender Treatment Programme.

Hinduja Brothers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he personally took the decision to grant the naturalisation application for Mr. S. P. Hinduja. [151247]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him, the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) and the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmonds (Mr. Ruffley) on 30 January 2001, Official Report, column 167W.

Trial Outcomes

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases in which the defendant chose trial by jury (a) ended in terminations without a formal decision of the court and (b) resulted in a court decision in each year since 1990. [150680]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Prison Visitors

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of boards of visitors for prisons in England and Wales were serving magistrates in each of the last five years. [151494]

Mr. Boateng: The proportion of serving magistrates on Boards of Visitors for prisons in England and Wales over the last five years was as follows:

Date	Total number of Board Members	Number of Board Members who were serving Magistrates (%)
19 February 2001	1,733	467 (27)
31 December 2000	1,755	485 (28)
31 December 1999	1,779	492 (28)
31 December 1998	1,588	426 (27)
31 December 1997	1,708	510 (30)
31 December 1996	1,680	407 (24)

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people serve on each board of visitors for prisons in England and Wales; [151490]

(2) what proportion of board of visitors places in each prison establishment were not filled at the latest date for which figures are available. [151491]

Mr. Boateng: Out of a potential membership of 2,074 there was a total of 342 vacancies on Boards of Visitors in England and Wales as at 16 February 2001. A breakdown is set out in the table:

Prisoners' Activities

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are employed in prison workshops and other employment in total and in each category of prison; and if he will make a statement. [151209]

Mr. Boateng: The number of prisoners employed in the public sector in prison workshops is 9,527, and engaged in other employment is 16,139, totalling 25,666. The number of prisoners employed in the private sector in prison workshops is 1,041, and engaged in other employment is 1,686, totalling 2,727.

For public sector prisons the breakdown by category is:

Category	Numbers employed in industrial workshops	Numbers employed elsewhere
Category A	1,158	966
Category B	1,221	1,271
Category C	3,488	4,050

Local	628	1,280
Young Offender Institution	—	65
Total	1,041	1,686

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much time on average prisoners spent unlocked (a) per weekday and (b) per day per weekend, in (i) each category of prison and (ii) in the prison service as a whole in each year since 1995; and if he will make a statement. [151208]

Mr. Boateng: Time out of cell data, in hours, per weekday and per day per weekend for the years 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are set out in the tables.

Comparable data for 1995–96 and 1996–97 are not available.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners work a full eight-hour day; and if he will make a statement. [151214]

Mr. Boateng: Prisoners undertake a range of purposeful activities including education, work, offending behaviour programmes, library and resettlement programmes. For many prisoners full-time employment would not be appropriate. Regimes must allow time for those who need it to complete offending behaviour or basic education programmes. Prison Service establishments record the number of hours of purposeful activity undertaken by prisoners. However, it is not possible to identify how many prisoners work a given number of hours.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons operate industrial workshops; how many prisoners are employed in such workshops; what the income and expenditure of each prison workshop is; and if he will make a statement. [151210]

Mr. Boateng: There are 106 industrial workshops in public sector prisons and six in private sector workshops. On 31 March 2000 there were 1,041 employed in public sector workshops and on 19 February 2001, there were 1,041 prisoners employed in private sector workshops. This is the most recent available data.

It is not possible to provide information on income and expenditure of each public sector prison workshop as it is not recorded centrally. It is not possible to provide information on income and expenditure in each private sector prison workshop, as it is commercial in confidence.

Prison Population

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the prison population of England and Wales is; how many prisoners are (a) on remand and (b) serving sentences of one month or less; and if he will make a statement. [151177]

Mr. Boateng: Provisional information shows that on 31 January 2001, there was a prison population of 63,974. Of these prisoners, 10,952 were on remand and 1,158 were serving sentences of one month or less.

Assaults (Prisons)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults by prisoners on (a) staff, (b) prisoners and (c) other people took place in prisons and resulted in a positive disciplinary adjudication in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98, (iii) 1998–99, (iv) 1999–2000, and (v) the period since 1 April 2000; how many prisoners and what percentage of the average prison population during the relevant period this represented; and if he will make a statement. [151212]

Mr. Boateng: Data for positive assault adjudications for the years in question are set out in the table. Data since 1 April 2000 are provisional and subject to validation.

	Assaults on prisoners	Rate of assaults on prisoners (%)	Assaults on staff/others	Rate of assaults on staff/others (%)
1996–97	2,747	4.8	2,531	4.5
1997–98	3,004	4.8	2,857	4.6
1998–99	3,131	4.8	2,998	4.6

April 2000—January 2000[1]	3,248	5.0	3,050	4.7

[1] Data since April 2000 are annualised.

The Prison Service does not collect data on assaults on staff and others separately. Data on assaults have been previously published in Her Majesty's Prison Service Corporate Plan 1999–2000 to 2001–02, Her Majesty's Prison Service Annual Reports and Accounts 1998–99 (HC 748) and Her Majesty's Prison Service Annual Reports and Accounts 1999–2000 (HC 622). Her Majesty's Prison Service Corporate Plan for 2001–02 to 2003–04 is available in the Library.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults by prisoners, expressed as a percentage of the average prison population, occurred on (a) staff (b) prisoners and (c) other people and resulted in positive disciplinary adjudication in (i) all prisons, (ii) local male prisons and (iii) young offender institutions in (A) 1996–97, (B) 1998–99 (C) 1999–2000 and (D) the period since April 2000; and if he will make a statement. [151213]

Mr. Boateng: Data for positive assault adjudications for the years in question are set out in the tables. Data since 1 April 2000 are provisional and subject to validation. The Prison Service does not collect data on assaults on staff and others separately. For completeness, the year 1997–98 is included.

Criminal Justice System Business Plan

Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the criminal justice system business plan for 2001–02. [151323]

Mr. Straw: My right hon. and noble Friends the Lord Chancellor, the Attorney-General and I have today published the business plan for the criminal justice system in England and Wales for 2001–02. The plan describes the aims, objectives and performance targets which the Government expect the criminal justice system as a whole to work to deliver. Copies of the plan have been placed in the Library.

CABINET OFFICE

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her answer of 25 January 2001, Official Report, column 763W, on Special Advisers, which clauses of Schedule 1 (Part 1) of the "Model Contract for Special Advisers" set out the role of Special Advisers in costing the policies of opposition parties. [148844]

Marjorie Mowlam: The "Model Contract for Special Advisers" makes it clear that Special Advisers can discharge their duties with a degree of party political commitment and association which would not be possible for a permanent civil servant.

Section (iv) of Schedule 1 (Part 1) sets out the duties of Special Advisers which include devilling for the Minister and checking facts and research findings, and adding party political content to material prepared by permanent civil servants.

Strategic Communications Unit

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what role will be played by (a) the Prime Minister, (b) ministers, (c) Special Advisers and (d) the Chief Press Secretary in relation to the Strategic Communications Unit in the period following the calling of a general election. [150240]

Marjorie Mowlam: The activities of Government during an Election period are undertaken in line with the requirements of "the Ministerial Code", "the Civil Service Code", "the Model Contract for Special Advisers", and the additional Election Guidance that is routinely issued to all civil servants once an Election has been called. The Prime Minister's Chief Press Secretary has already made it clear that he will resign as soon as an Election is called.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what guidance is given to the Strategic Communications Unit relating to information concerning the policies of Opposition parties. [150237]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) on 11 December 2000, Official Report, column 47W.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the contracts that exist between Serco and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if she will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151342]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Cabinet Office, including its executive agency, has contracts with Serco for the provision of:

messengers, post room, security and other support services for the main Department; security services for the Government Car and Despatch Agency; and a helpline for users of secure telephone facilities.

In addition, the Department's Special Services Group has a number of contracts with Serco for the supply of services at Government establishments throughout the UK at which Serco acts as Facility Manager or main contractor.

Departmental IT Policies

Mr. Field: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) if she will list the IT projects currently undertaken in her Department; and if she will state the (a) expected completion date and (b) cost of each project; [151504]

(2) if she will list the IT projects her Department plans to undertake in the next year; and if she will state in each case the (a) expected date of commencement and completion and (b) cost. [151468]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The IT projects currently being undertaken by the Cabinet Office are as follows:

Ukonline.gov.uk citizen portal

In July 2000 the Cabinet Office awarded a contract to BT (British elecommunications plc) to build and operate the Ukonline.gov.uk citizen portal, for one year (until July 2001). This initial development phase is expected to cost around £10 million, of which around £4 million has been spent so far. We are currently considering the longer-term arrangements for operating the site.

Government Gateway

In October 2000 the Cabinet Office began working with a group of suppliers including Microsoft and Cable and Wireless to deliver the initial phase of the Government Gateway. The initial phase of delivery will be complete by June 2001 and will have cost around £18 million.

The initial development phases of both the ukonline.gov.uk citizen portal and the Government Gateway projects will continue into the next financial year, ending in July and June 2001 respectively. Both projects are part of the long term strategy for delivering electronic government, and the Cabinet Office has applied for CMF funding to enable both projects to continue beyond these dates. The value of this work will depend upon which aspects of each project are selected for development during the next phase.

Pierre-Yves Gerbeau

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when she last met Mr. Pierre-Yves Gerbeau. [151429]

Marjorie Mowlam: I met Mr. Gerbeau from time to time on an informal basis. We last met in an official capacity at a meeting of the Millennium Commission on 14 June 2000.

WALES

Steel Industry

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has made to the European Commission about extra funding for the Llanwern and Ebbw Vale areas; and if he will make a statement. [150231]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 13 February 2001]: Any redirection of Structural Funds in Wales would be for the Assembly to discuss with the Commission. I understand that the Commission has indicated a willingness to engage in such discussions.

Departmental IT Projects

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the IT projects currently undertaken in his Department; and if he will state the (a) expected completion date and (b) cost of each project. [151512]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There is none. My Department's IT requirements are provided by the National Assembly for Wales under the terms of a service level agreement.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the IT projects his Department plans to undertake in the next year; and if he will state in each case the (a) expected date of commencement and completion and (b) cost. [151471]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None. My Department's IT requirements are provided by the National Assembly for Wales under the terms of a service level agreement.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) murders, (b) shootings, (c) beatings, (d) bombings, (e) expulsions and (f) other crimes have been carried out by (i) Republican and (ii) Loyalist paramilitary groups since the signing of the Belfast Agreement. [150223]

Mr. Ingram: The tables show the number of deaths, bombings, shootings, and the number of casualties as a result of the security situation in Northern Ireland. These figures would include, for example, where an armed robbery is believed to have been committed by a paramilitary grouping. There may be other incidents recorded under the heading of a criminal offence, for example, robbery, where a paramilitary group may have been involved, but this cannot be confirmed.

There are no figures available which indicate the number of persons who may have been forced to leave the province through paramilitary/terrorist intimidation. Attribution for shootings and bombings cannot be given after 31 March 1999 (these details are no longer held centrally and therefore are not readily available), and figures for 2001 are provisional and may be subject to minor adjustment.

Security statistics 10 April 1998 to 31 March 1999

Explosions	90	16
Defused	106	11
Shootings	88	51
Casualties as a result of Paramilitary Style Shootings	39	30
Casualties as a result of Paramilitary Style Assaults	111	60

Security statistics 1 April 1999 to 8 February 2001

	By Loyalist	By Republican	Not known
Deaths	16	5	2
Casualties as a result of Paramilitary Style Shootings	134	73	—
Casualties as a result of Paramilitary Style Assaults	139	86	—
Bombings:
Incidents	—	—	223
Exploded	—	—	100
Defused	—	—	165
Shootings	—	—	421

Notes:
1. The following types of shootings incidents are included:
(a) Shots fired by terrorists
(b) Shots fired by security forces
(c) Paramilitary-style attacks involving shootings
(d) Shots heard (and later confirmed)
(e) Other violent incidents where shots are fired eg armed robbery
2. An individual bombing incident may involve one or more explosive devices. Incidents recorded include explosions and defusing. Incidents involving hoax devices, petrol bombings or incendiaries are excluded.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many convictions for paramilitary (a) beatings and (b) shootings there were in (i) 1999 and (ii) 2000. [150308]

Mr. Ingram: I regret that the information requested is not available. Court Database records are maintained by the type of offence e.g. Assault Occasioning Actual Bodily Harm. It is not therefore possible to link such convictions to paramilitary-style assaults as there is no such offence.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Northern Ireland Secretaries in the last 20 years have been provided with a Jaguar. [148195]

Dr. Reid: The answer is four.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how much it cost to buy and adapt the Jaguar for the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) as Secretary of State for Northern Ireland; [148193]

(2) how much it cost to buy and adapt the official car for the right hon. Member for Redcar (Marjorie Mowlam) as Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. [148194]

Dr. Reid: This information cannot be provided on the grounds of security.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what use is made of the official car which was used by the right hon. Member for Redcar (Marjorie Mowlam), when she was Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. [148191]

Dr. Reid: This information cannot be provided on the grounds of security.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many former Northern Ireland Secretaries have chauffeur-driven Jaguars provided for their current use. [148192]

Dr. Reid: One. My right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) has retained a relief Jaguar for security reasons.

RUC

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC officers were absent on the grounds of illness on average in each month since 1 April 1998 to the latest date for which figures are available. [150296]

Mr. Ingram: The following table provides the information requested.

Policy and Strategy Units

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when his economic policy unit was established; which of its reports are placed in the public domain; how many departmental or non-departmental Special Advisers participate in its work; how many regular (a) non-departmental and (b) departmental staff participate in its work; and how many of these work for the unit on a full-time basis. [150375]

Dr. Reid: Economic policy has been devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly and an Economic Policy Unit has been set up within the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister. It is therefore no longer a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts that exist between SERCO and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151350]

Dr. Reid: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hill Farmers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much public subsidy there was for a typical hill farmer in England for the most recent year for which figures are available. [148400]

Ms Quin: The average total direct subsidy payment to full-time LFA cattle and sheep farm businesses in England in 1999–2000 is estimated as £24,400 per farm. This figure excludes the additional support farmers receive from the consumer, through the maintenance of EU agricultural prices above world levels by the CAP.

Sheep

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (a) assessments of and (b) representations he has made concerning the recent reduction in payments of the sheep annual premium scheme by the European Commission. [148872]

Ms Quin: The rate recently determined for Sheep Annual Premium for the 2000 marketing year is 17.477 euro/ewe (£10.73). This is the lowest level set for a number of years.

There are two reasons for this low premium. First, it is the difference between a Community-set basic price and average prices on the EU market. High sheep prices across the Community have reduced the premium. Secondly, the £/euro exchange rate reduces the sterling value to British farmers of the euro rate.

Nevertheless we are satisfied that all the rules for calculating the premium have been applied correctly.

BSE

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cows were detected with BSE (a) over and (b) under the age of 30 months in each month of (i) 1999 and (ii) 2000. [148877]

Ms Quin [holding answer 5 February 2001]: No cases of cows with BSE under the age of 30 months were detected in the period referred to. The number of cases confirmed in 1999 and 2000 in Great Britain by month of restriction aged over 30 months is as follows:

Month	1999	2000
January	250	140
February	244	147
March	280	145
April	198	104
May	185	131
June	190	93
July	156	81
August	156	94
September	159	91
October	129	113
November	167	105
December	140	[1]62
Total	2,254	1,306

[1] There are three cases pending from 1999.

The figures do not include animals tested under the active surveillance programme, which numbered 20 in 1999 and 32 in 2000, as at 9 February 2001 (these figures also include private submissions).

Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what communications with the Agriculture departments of other EU member states his Department (a) has had and (b) plans to have to pass on the UK's environmental experience and good practice of large-scale culling and incineration of cattle liable to be infected with BSE. [150011]

Ms Quin: The Intervention Board has had considerable contact on these matters with representatives from other member states. In particular, in mid January the Intervention Board hosted a two day seminar on the Over Thirty Month Scheme at which representatives from Spain, Portugal, France, The Netherlands, Germany, Austria, Denmark, Sweden and the European Commission were present.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he plans to make in the UK standards for the disposal of animal carcases suspected of harbouring the BSE agent as a result of recent large-scale slaughter of possible BSE infected cattle in other EU member states. [150012]

Ms Quin: None. All cattle slaughtered as BSE suspects in the United Kingdom are incinerated.

Fishmeal

Mr. Curry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the cost to the United Kingdom feed manufacturing industry of a ban on the use of fishmeal in feeds for cattle and sheep; [149653]

(2) if it is his intention to seek a derogation for the United Kingdom from EU proposals banning the use of fishmeal in feeds for cattle and sheep. [149654]

Ms Quin [holding answer 9 February 2001]: Interested parties have been consulted on the impact of the new EU-wide feed controls, including the ban on fishmeal. Representations received are currently being examined. When this assessment is complete, we will announce how we intend to proceed.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the proposed European ban on the use of fishmeal in animal feedingstuff; and what reply he has sent. [150062]

Ms Quin [holding answer 14 February 2001]: We have received letters from 12 hon. Members and 53 other interested parties, including agricultural trade associations, farmers, feed manufacturers, feed nutritionists, veterinarians and welfare groups.

In responding to letters addressing the Agricultural Council decision on feed controls, we have made clear our intention to implement the ban on fishmeal from ruminant feed in a proportionate way, so far as we are able. Letters relating to the consultation on implementation of the feed controls will be considered as part of the consultation process and individual replies issued in due course.

GM Vines

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will propose to the (a) European Commission and (b) Council of Ministers that they review support for the proposed provision under Directive 68/193/EEC in respect of the commercialisation of genetically treated grafted and non-grafted rooted vines; and if he will make a statement. [150441]

Ms Quin: The horizontal EU Directive on GMO releases 90/220 already allows for the marketing of genetically modified vine varieties, subject to rigorous controls to safeguard human health and the environment. The Commission's proposal to amend Directive 68/193 on the marketing of vines does not introduce anything new in this respect but mirrors the relevant provisions of Directive 90/220. Nevertheless, the Agriculture Council agreed at its most recent meeting that the proposal should be subject to further detailed consideration before there is any question of its possible adoption.

Agrimonetary Compensation

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy on paying agrimonetary compensatory amounts to (a) cereal producers, (b) pig producers and (c) other producers. [148948]

Ms Quin: The decision to pay each tranche of agrimonetary compensation is considered on a case by case basis, taking into consideration the state and prospects for the industry and other calls on the UK Exchequer.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what mechanism has been proposed by the Government to replace the agrimonetary compensation scheme. [150705]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister to the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) on 14 February 2001, Official Report, column 141W.

Departmental Business (Overseas Visits)

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many visits abroad have been made by his Department's officials on departmental business (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the last 12 months. [149142]

Ms Quin: Information about the number of individual visits overseas undertaken by my officials on departmental business since 1 May 1997 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Travel Costs

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were his Department's total gross running costs for travel, including fares, subsistence, accommodation and any other expenses met from public funds but excluding all such costs for journeys and stays exclusively within the United Kingdom (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the last 12 months. [149139]

Ms Quin: The information requested is set out in the table.

Support Payment

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the normal procedure is for notifying farmers of changes to their support payments. [149287]

Ms Quin: Proposals for major changes in the structure of agricultural support, such as the Agenda 2000 proposals, are the subject of consultations with farmers' organisations and other interested parties that are designed to inform the discussions which take place in the Council of Ministers, as re proposals for implementing such changes in the United Kingdom once agreement is reached in the Council. The outcome of any consultation is notified to the farming industry in a Press Notice.

Changes to the rules of the aid schemes are announced in scheme literature issued by the Ministry and the Intervention Board Executive Agency or in letters sent directly to farmers and traders. The scheme literature gives details of payment rates fixed in Euros but, where the Sterling rates are given, it is made clear that these are estimates and that the final rates of payment will depend on the exchange rate effective on the date which sets the conversion rate applicable to the scheme in question. These dates vary from scheme to scheme. Changes in payment rates resulting purely from changes in the Euro/Sterling exchange rate are published in Notices to Traders issued by the Intervention Board.

Individual claimants are notified by the Regional Service Centre of the Ministry which handles their claim (or by the Intervention Board, as appropriate) of the amounts of aid that will be paid to them.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the effect to date of BSE on the consumption of beef in the EU. [148762]

Ms Quin [holding answer 7 February 2001]: Beef consumption in some member states has remained stable while in others, particularly France, Germany, Spain, Italy, Greece, Belgium and Austria, significant short-term falls have been reported. In January these latter countries indicated (on the basis of market intelligence reports rather than official statistics) that beef consumption had fallen by between 20 and 50 per cent. The Commission has estimated that overall EU consumption might fall by 10 per cent. or more in 2001. It is too early to judge whether this forecast will prove to be accurate.

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what internal audit report he has commissioned into the plans to create a new CAP paying agency; and if he will place copies in the Library. [150867]

Ms Quin: The MAFF and Intervention Board Internal Audit Units have recently reviewed the programme controls which are being put in place to ensure the successful delivery of the new CAP Payments Agency.

An Action Plan covering the recommendations in the audit report is currently being finalised. I will place copies in the Library when it is available.

Farm Aid

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a breakdown of expenditure of the £203.5 million, announced to United Kingdom farmers in March 2000. [150707]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister on 16 January 2001, Official Report, columns 138–42W.

Fruit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage producers to bring on to the market varieties of (a) apples, (b) pears and (c) other fruits that were readily available in 19th-century England but are rarely found today. [149743]

Ms Quin: The England Rural Development Programme can assist growers to pursue new market opportunities, for example grants under the Rural Enterprise Scheme can help with the marketing of quality agricultural products, including older varieties of apples, pears and other fruit. The National Fruit Collection of Brogdale is a rich resource containing over 3,000 distinct varieties of apples, pears and other stone and bush fruits which are available to those interested in identifying old varieties suitable for niche markets. The Government support the National Fruit Collection at Brogdale at a cost of £180,000 per annum.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many press releases were issued by his Department in the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000; how many have been issued in the current financial year; and what his estimate is of the total number for the current financial year. [149248]

Ms Quin [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The number of MAFF News Releases put out for the years 1996–97 to date are as follows:

Year	Number
1996–97	491
1997–98	467
1998–99	553
1999–2000	571
2000–01	[1]381

[1] To date

It is not possible to forecast the total number of MAFF Press Releases for this financial year.

Pet Travel Scheme

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people in Pendle have benefited from the pet travel scheme since its inception; and if he will make a statement. [149921]

Ms Quin: Up to end of December 2000, the owners of 14,500 cats and dogs had used the Pet Travel Scheme to bring their pets into England. Unfortunately, data are not collected on numbers of people using the scheme from specific areas of the UK.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to complete a review of the inclusion of the USA and Canada in the reformed quarantine regulations for pets. [149999]

Ms Quin: The Pet Travel Scheme was extended to include pet cats and dogs from certain rabies-free islands, including Hawaii, on 31 January 2001.

A risk assessment following the Kennedy Committee Report indicated that cats and dogs from North America could be included within the Pet Travel Scheme only with a further increase in risk. Any increase, even a small one, is obviously undesirable. We are however committed to reviewing the possibility of the inclusion of the USA and Canada in the Pet Travel Scheme on the basis of new data received.

Farming (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the total value to Leicestershire farmers of CAP payments for the most recent year for which figures are available. [149987]

Ms Quin: Total subsidies under the CAP paid to Leicestershire farmers by MAFF during the EU financial year 16 October 1999 to 15 October 2000 amounted to £36,493,221. In some cases amounts include an element of national as well as EU funding. Farmers also benefit from expenditure on market support measures, even though this is not paid directly to them.

Animal Exports

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what percentage of animals exported live from the UK undergo an inspection by an independent veterinary inspector; [150313]

(2) what procedures exist for the inspection of animals exported live from the UK. [150314]

Ms Quin: All consignments of live farm animals destined for export are inspected by a Local Veterinary Inspector (LVI) in the 24 hours prior to loading as part of the export health certification procedures. Arrangements vary for other animals but almost all are inspected prior to export so that the health certification can be completed. Notes for guidance which accompany each certificate outline the procedures to be followed by LVIs and exporters. Specific guidance on pre-export procedures for LVIs certifying live sheep and pigs for fattening or slaughter to other member states was issued on 31 May 1999. Copies will be made available to hon. Members in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what percentage of animals exported live from the UK are exported under the procedure of further fattening certificates; [150315]

(2) what percentage of animals exported live from the UK are exported for slaughter where details of the destination abattoir are required. [150316]

Ms Quin: 'Fattening' and 'slaughter' export health certificates apply to live sheep and pigs. In 1999, 99 per cent. of live sheep and 2 per cent. of live pigs were exported from the UK under 'fattening' certification and 1 per cent. of live sheep and 43 per cent. of live pigs under 'slaughter' certification. Animals exported under 'slaughter' certification must be delivered to a specified abattoir of destination. The figures for 2000 will be available shortly.

GM Crops

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence from the USA and Canada on boundary contamination by GM crops he has taken into account in determining separation distances for GM crop trials in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [150102]

Ms Quin: Separation distances for this spring's GM farm scale trials were announced on 6 February 2001, Official Report, columns 460–91W. The Government asked SCIMAC to increase distances in two cases, following a review by the National Institute for Agricultural Botany (NIAB) of the available scientific data in this area, including evidence from North America on boundary levels of cross-pollination. The separation distances being applied, however, reflect expected levels of cross-pollination on a whole field to field basis. The NIAB report is available on the Ministry website at www.maff.gov.uk.

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the throughput was for the over-30-months scheme in each year of its existence in terms of cattle weight and, for each year, the proportion of the throughput exceeding weight limits for compensation that applied at the time. [150243]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The table details the total throughput figures for each year in tonnes. During 1996 there was no weight cap restriction and therefore compensation was paid on the full weight. From 4 August 1997 until 5 June 2000 compensation was limited to a maximum 560 kgs. With the lifting of the weight cap on 5 June 2000 compensation now continues to be paid on the full weight. The proportion of the weight presented which exceeded the weight limit is also shown as a percentage together with the average carcase weight of the animals presented in each year.

	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000
Weight cap (560 kilo)	0	[1]560	[2]560	[2]560	[3]560
Total weight (tonnes)	688,799	492,907	506,192	538,521	548,289
Overall % of animal weight over weight cap	0	3.00	7.42	6.84	3.27
Average carcase weight (kilo)	605	582	565	555	562

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date the last shipment of nuclear waste was dumped at sea by MV Gem. [150800]

Mr. Morley: The last shipment of radioactive waste was dumped by MV Gem in the North Atlantic in August 1982.

Farming Costs

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will report on the progress of the task force looking at the input costs in farming. [151437]

Ms Quin: The Inputs Task Force published an interim report on 5 February. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House. A final report is due at the end of March.

TREASURY

EU Budget

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the anticipated (a) gross and (b) net UK contribution is to the EU Budget in the current financial year. [144042]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Government estimates of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the EC Budget for future years are given on a financial year basis. The Government's latest forecast for 2000–01 and 2001–02 can be found at footnote 1 to Table B17 of the pre-Budget Report (Cm 4917) published in November. Details of the spring forecasts of the United Kingdom's gross and net contribution in 2000–01 will be published in the Chancellor's Departmental Report.

Debt Servicing (HIPC)

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was paid in total to the United Kingdom in debt servicing payments, in the last year for which figures are available, by (a) Angola, (b) Burundi, (c) Central African Republic, (d) Chad, (e) the Republic of Congo, (f) the Democratic Republic of Congo, (g) Côte d'Ivoire, (h) Ethiopia, (i) Ghana, (j) Kenya, (k) Lao PDR, (l) Liberia, (m) Myanmar, (n) Sierra Leone, (o) Somalia, (p) Sudan, (q) Togo, (r) Vietnam and (s) Yemen. [144479]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Her Majesty's Government have received amounts of debt service payments under bilateral debt agreements from the following countries in 2000:

Country	Payment (£)
Central African Republic	27,637
Ethiopia	525,526
Ghana	1,417,864
Kenya	6,357,388
Vietnam	66,285
Yemen	201,103
Total	9,205,803

No payments were made in 2000 by Angola, the Republic of Congo, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan or Togo. Nor was any payment received from Myanmar, which has no debt agreement with the UK.

Burundi, Chad and Lao PDR have no liabilities to Her Majesty's Government.

In addition, in 2000 the Commonwealth Development Corporation (CDC) received £5,020,124 from Ghana and £1,947,456 from Kenya. CDC is a PLC owned by Government: economic interest in CDC loans to HIPCs has been transferred to DFID.

With effect from 2 December, in line with the joint announcement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of State for International Development, Her Majesty's Government will receive no financial benefit from any future payments by any of these countries. They will be held in trust and refunded to the country when Decision Point under the enhanced HIPC initiative is reached, at which time 100 per cent. of future payments will also be relieved.

In order to reach Decision Point, HIPC countries must demonstrate their commitment to a programme agreed with the IMF to deliver macroeconomic stability and alleviate poverty. Poverty eradication must be the recognised priority: the UK cannot provide debt relief for conflict countries where defence spending is high or for those with no track record of economic reform.

Lump Sum Tax Payments

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers have arrangements with the Inland Revenue whereby in exchange for payment of a fixed sum of tax they are absolved from having to file detailed accounts and tax returns; how many of these individuals are British subjects; and if he will list the nationality of those who are not. [145788]

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals were permitted to make an agreed annual lump sum payment to the Inland Revenue in lieu of submitting a tax return in the last financial year. [146006]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 January 2001]: The Inland Revenue has a small number of agreements of this sort, entered into at various dates since 1988, though none of the individuals concerned has been absolved from the general obligation to file a tax return. Whether an individual is a British subject, and the question of their nationality, are not features of the agreements which have been made. The policy in relation to these agreements is currently under review.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the special advisers working for him will relinquish their posts when the next general election is called. [149307]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Select Committee Report

Dr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he received on the contents of the Education and Employment Committee's report on access to higher education, and the proceedings of the Committee prior to the publication of the report. [150051]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 12 February 2001]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for lifelong learning, my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, North (Mr. Wicks) on 14 February 2001, Official Report, column 162W.

Ultra-low Sulphur Petrol

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken since the March 2000 Budget to monitor changes in use of ultra-low sulphur petrol. [150113]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The Treasury does not monitor changes in the usage of individual road fuels. However, figures are produced each month showing deliveries from refineries. The most recent figures for mid-January 2001 indicate that ultra-low sulphur petrol accounted for 47.8 per cent. of all petrol released in the UK.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations oil refineries have made to him to have defrayed the additional production costs of low sulphur petrol; and what response he gave them. [150228]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 13 February 2001]: The Government receive a wide range of representations in the run-up to each Budget. These include representations from oil producers. All such representations were taken account of before announcing in Budget 2000 a 1p per litre reduction in the duty rate for ultra-low sulphur petrol.

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made on the introduction of ultra-low sulphur petrol in the United Kingdom [151634]

Mr. Timms: The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in the pre-Budget report in November that the Government would reduce duty on ultra-low sulphur petrol (ULSP) on Budget day this year, in recognition of its environmental benefits, subject to consultation and it being widely available.

The Minister for Transport and I met the major oil companies on 21 February to discuss this issue. On the basis of that meeting, I am glad to say that we believe that the oil companies are on track to meet their target to supply ULSP nationwide at their retail sites by the end of March.

The Minister for Transport and I also met representatives of independent petrol retailers on 21 February. They operate over 5,000 retail sites across the country. Many are small businesses, often playing a vital role supplying rural and urban communities.

Although some independents are already supplying up to 50 per cent. ULSP, their representatives indicated that they anticipate that it could take independent retailers longer to complete the nationwide transition to ULSP than for the major oil companies, because of constraints on the capacity of UK oil refineries.

The independent retailers could move faster by increasing imports, but this might cause uncertainty in the wholesale and retail markets and would not necessarily be to the benefit of motorists.

The Government's objectives are to ensure that everyone should be able to share the environmental benefits of ULSP, and the benefits of the duty cut associated with it. It is in the whole country's interests that these objectives are achieved, and achieved as smoothly as possible.

Any decisions on actual duty rates will be taken and announced by the Chancellor in the Budget itself but, as a sensible measure that will be supported by independent petrol retailers to guarantee that all motorists would benefit from a cut in duty on Budget day, I can announce that the Government intend to match any reduction in duty on ULSP that is announced in the Budget with a reduction in duty on unleaded petrol for a temporary period until 14 June 2001.

This will ensure that the introduction of ULSP across the country will happen in the smoothest way, and that car drivers—especially in rural areas supplied by independent petrol retailers—will be able to benefit from any duty cut that is announced in the Budget for ULSP. We want to match nationwide availability at the major oil companies with all motorists benefiting from any duty cut at independent stations too.

In this way we best achieve our aims set out in November—first, that the long-term benefits to the environment are achieved; secondly, that motorists would be able to benefit from a cut in petrol duty on Budget day; and thirdly, that the benefit would go to all motorists in all areas.

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the outcome was of the ECOFIN Council held in Brussels on 12 February; and if he will make a statement. [150526]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I attended the meeting of the Economic and Finance Council of Ministers.

The Council examined and agreed Opinions on Stability and Convergence Reports for Denmark, Greece, France, Ireland, Italy, Austria and the United Kingdom.

The Opinion on the UK programme confirms that the UK is meeting its obligations under the Stability and Growth Pact and has delivered a sound, stable, macroeconomic performance. Government debt is one of the lowest in all member states, and the Opinion welcomes the sustainable long-term position of the UK's public finances. The Opinion also notes that the UK is projected to move into deficit in the medium term. I made clear to the Commission that this reflects the more than doubling of net investment announced in the 2000 Spending Review to promote the renewal and modernisation of the country's capital stock, and that financing this essential investment by borrowing is in line with the Growth and Stability Pact and the Government's fiscal rules.

The Council also adopted a Recommendation addressed to Ireland under Article 99 paragraph 4 of the Treaty establishing the European Community.

The Commission presented its report on the functioning of product and capital markets. The Council discussed a Presidency orientation document on the Broad Economic Guidelines. There was broad support on the need to press ahead with structural reforms and liberalisation of markets, particularly in financial services and network industries; and on the need to promote innovation and research and development. The Presidency will draft a key issues paper for the 12 March ECOFIN.

The Commission presented its Communication on E-commerce and Financial Services. The draft Directive on companies that manage common funds and unit trusts (UCITS) was referred back to the Committee of Permanent Representatives of the member states (COREPER) for further work.

Ministers confirmed their agreement to a proposed supplementary amending budget to allow for measures against BSE.

Political agreement was reached on measures against euro counterfeiting and on the Presidency compromise proposal on derogations for excise duties under the mineral oils Directive.

Departmental Policies (Bristol, East)

Jean Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Bristol, East constituency, the effects on Bristol of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150556]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Bristol, East, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, is benefiting from the long-term action we have taken to build economic stability and secure high and stable levels of growth and employment. Since the general election, claimant unemployment in the constituency has fallen by 1,637, or 43 per cent., youth unemployment is down by 79 per cent., and long-term unemployment has fallen by 80 per cent.

Macroeconomic stability is being complemented at the microeconomic level by the Government's policies to ease the transition from welfare into work and to make work pay. To the end of November 2000, the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds had helped 1,229 young people in Bristol, East constituency gain valuable skills and experience—566 (46 per cent.) of whom had moved into employment. The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), introduced in October 1999, is helping to make work pay for low and middle income families. In August 2000, 1,700 families in the constituency were benefiting from WFTC.

The Government are also committed to developing policies which enable all pensioners to share in the country's rising prosperity. As a result of the recent pre-Budget report, all pensioners, including 15,500 in Bristol, East, will receive an above-inflation increase in the basic state pension from April 2001. Single pensioners will receive an extra £5 a week, and couples will receive an extra £8 a week. All pensioners aged 75 or over have also been entitled to a free TV licence since November 2000—including around 10,000 in Bristol, East.

Departmental Policies (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood)

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, including statistical information, the effect on the Blackpool, North and Fleetwood constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150721]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Blackpool, North and Fleetwood, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, is benefiting from the long-term action we have taken to build economic stability and secure high and stable levels of growth and employment. Since the general election, claimant unemployment in the constituency has fallen by 660, or 24 per cent., youth unemployment is down by 77 per cent., and long-term unemployment has fallen by 75 per cent.

Macroeconomic stability is being complemented at the microeconomic level by the Government's policies to ease the transition from welfare into work and to make work pay. To the end of November 2000, the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds had helped 833 young people in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood constituency gain valuable skills and experience—419 (50 per cent.) of whom had moved into employment. The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), introduced in October 1999, is helping to make work pay for low and middle income families. In August 2000, 2,400 families in the constituency were benefiting from WFTC.

The Government are also committed to developing policies which enable all pensioners to share in the country's rising prosperity. As a result of the recent pre-Budget Report, all pensioners, including 23,600 in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood, will receive an above-inflation increase in the basic state pension from April 2001. Single pensioners will receive an extra £5 a week, and couples will receive an extra £8 a week. All pensioners aged 75 or over have also been entitled to a free TV licence since November 2000—including around 14,500 in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood.

Departmental Policies (Clwyd, South)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Clwyd, South constituency, the effects on Clwyd, South of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150910]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Clwyd, South, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, is benefiting from the long-term action we have taken to build economic stability and secure high and stable levels of growth and employment. Since the general election, claimant unemployment in the constituency has fallen by 397, or 28 per cent., youth unemployment is down by 80 per cent., and long-term unemployment has fallen by 64 per cent.

Macroeconomic stability is being complemented at the microeconomic level by the Government's policies to ease the transition from welfare into work and to make work pay. To the end of November 2000, the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds had helped 546 young people in Clwyd, South constituency gain valuable skills and experience—289 (53 per cent.) of whom had moved into employment. The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), introduced in October 1999, is helping to make work pay for low and middle income families. In August 2000, 1,900 families in the constituency were benefiting from WFTC.

The Government are also committed to developing policies which enable all pensioners to share in the country's rising prosperity. As a result of the recent pre-Budget Report, all pensioners, including around 13,000 in Clwyd, South, will receive an above-inflation increase in the basic state pension from April 2001. Single pensioners will receive an extra £5 a week, and couples will receive an extra £8 a week.

Departmental Policies (North-East Derbyshire)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the North-East Derbyshire constituency, the effect on North-East Derbyshire of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150881]

Miss Melanie Johnson: North-East Derbyshire, along with the rest of the United Kingdom, is benefiting from the long-term action we have taken to build economic stability and secure high and stable levels of growth and employment. Since the general election, claimant unemployment in the constituency has fallen by 440, or 18 per cent., youth unemployment is down by 67 per cent., and long-term unemployment has fallen by 62 per cent.

Macroeconomic stability is being complemented at the microeconomic level by the Government's policies to ease the transition from welfare into work and to make work pay. To the end of November 2000, the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds had helped 952 young people in North-East Derbyshire constituency gain valuable skills and experience—484 (51 per cent.) of whom had moved into employment. The Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), introduced in October 1999, is helping to make work pay for low and middle income families. In August 2000, 1,700 families in the constituency were benefiting from WFTC.

The Government are also committed to developing policies which enable all pensioners to share in the country's rising prosperity. As a result of the recent Pre-Budget Report, all pensioners, including 18,100 in North-East Derbyshire, will receive an above-inflation increase in the basic state pension from April 2001. Single pensioners will receive an extra £5 a week, and couples will receive an extra £8 a week. All pensioners aged 75 or over have also been entitled to a free TV licence since November 2000—including around 11,500 in North-East Derbyshire.

Self-Employment

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue has been received from self-employed people in national insurance contributions whose contributions were inadequate to qualify them for contributory benefits in each of the last 10 years. [150453]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is not available.

Aggregates Tax

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received (1) about the impact of the proposed tax on aggregates on prices to (a) the primary producer and (b) the purchaser from the primary producer; [150893]

(2) on the increase in the cost of a cubic metre of concrete which will result from the imposition of the aggregates tax; [150892]

(3) on the increased cost of producing 1,000 aggregate/cement (a) bricks and (b) other building blocks normally used in house construction as a consequence of the imposition of the proposed tax on aggregates; and by how much he estimates the cost of the average sized dwelling constructed of such materials will increase. [150896]

Mr. Timms: The Chancellor has received numerous representations regarding taxation, including the planned aggregates levy. Decisions regarding taxation are made as part of the Budget process. Budget 2000 announced that the aggregates levy would be introduced from April 2002.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much aggregate, broken down by type, was (a) imported to and (b) exported from the United Kingdom by (i) land transport and (ii) sea transport, indicating his estimates of the value of such materials, in the current year and each of the previous three years. [150917]

Mr. Timms: Data on exports and imports of aggregate are published annually in the British Geological Survey's United Kingdom Minerals Yearbook. It is not possible to break this down between land transport and sea transport.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the impact on prices of the imposition of the proposed aggregates tax in road building. [150894]

Mr. Timms: Budget 2000 announced that the Government have decided to introduce an aggregates levy with effect from April 2002. The impact on prices will be dependent on the commercial decisions of aggregates suppliers and purchasers.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom of the policies and proposed policies of each EU state in relation to the taxation of aggregates. [150855]

Mr. Timms: Policies relating to the extraction of aggregates vary between member states outside the UK. These do not have a direct impact on the price of aggregates in the UK.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what his estimate is of the quantities of material which arise each year from (a) the UK as a whole, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales, (d) Northern Ireland and (e) England, which are suitable for recycling to produce aggregates; and how much under each of these headings is actually recycled; [150935]

(2) what (a) tonnage and (b) value of aggregates were produced, broken down by type, in (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) Northern Ireland in the current financial year and in the previous three financial years. [150920]

Mr. Timms: Data on the production of aggregate are published annually in the British Geological Survey's United Kingdom Minerals Yearbook. Data on the scope for increased use of recycled aggregate are contained in a report for the Environment Agency by Symonds Group Ltd., "Construction and Demolition Waste Survey: National Survey of the Production, Recycling and Disposal of Construction and Demolition Waste In England and Wales, 1999–2000, Environment Agency R&D Technical Report P402". A summary of this report has been published through the DETR.

Mr. Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he has made in public procurement policy to encourage a greater use of recycled aggregates; and if he will make a statement. [150681]

Mr. Timms: The joint Treasury/DETR note on Environmental Issues in Purchasing explains that purchasers can specify their requirements in green terms and should award their contracts on the basis of whole life costs and quality, consistent with this policy. The procurement of aggregates—recycled or otherwise—can be undertaken within this framework, by appropriate specifications where justified and technically possible. It is for the purchasing Department to make these decisions in the specific circumstances.

Halifax/Equitable Life

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if (a) his Department and (b) the Financial Services Authority is carrying out an investigation into the implications of the proposed acquisition by Halifax plc of the operations of Equitable Life and its implications for policyholders. [150440]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 15 February 2001]: We understand that the FSA is working closely with Equitable Life and the Halifax to ensure that the proposal meets the FSA's regulatory criteria and that it protects the interests of policyholders.

Children's Tax Credit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families in Lancashire will benefit from the introduction of the Children's Tax Credit. [150629]

Dawn Primarolo: An estimate of the number of families in Lancashire eligible to claim the Children's Tax Credit (CTC) is unavailable, but an estimate of the number of families in North West Government Office Region who will be eligible to claim CTC is 625,000.

Brit Disc

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when he plans to introduce the Brit disc on foreign lorries; [150934]

(2) what meetings, correspondence and phone calls his Department has had with the European Commission over the introduction of a Brit disc for continental lorries; [150933]

(3) if he has (a) sought and (b) been granted permission by the EU to introduce a user charge for foreign lorries. [151018]

Mr. Timms: Officials from the Treasury are continuing to discuss with others how a user charge might operate, bearing in mind the experience of other countries that operate similar schemes. European Community law permits member states to introduce user charges for goods vehicles.

Church Repairs (VAT)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 7 February 2000, Official Report, column 622W, concerning VAT on church repairs, if he will set out details of the special arrangements to help congregations pay for repairs to listed buildings. [150576]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 2001]: Discussions on the details of the special arrangements to help congregations pay for repairs to listed places of worship are on-going.

Pensioners (Tax)

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many retirement pensioners are liable to pay income tax; at what rates; and what proportion each group represents of total retirement pensioners. [150065]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 2001]: The numbers of taxpayers of over state retirement pension age are set out in the table.

Estimates for 2000–01	Number of pension age[1] taxpayers (million)[2]	Percentage of pension age[1] population
Starting rate[3]	0.8	7
"Savers" rate[4]	0.6	6
Basic rate[5]	2.7	25
Higher rate[6]	0.2	2
All taxpayers	4.3	40

[1] Women aged 60 or over, men aged 65 or over

[2] Estimates rounded to the nearest 100,000

[3] Taxpayers with a marginal rate at the 10 per cent. starting rate from an extra £1 of earnings.

[4] Taxpayers with a marginal rate at the 20 per cent. lower rate for savings income or the 10 per cent. ordinary dividend rate from an extra £1 of earnings.

[5] Taxpayers with a marginal rate at the basic rate from an extra £1 of earnings.

[6] Taxpayers with taxable income above the higher rate threshold.

Note:

The estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and consistent with the November 2000 pre-Budget report.

Census Form

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to include (a) English, (b) Scottish, (c) Welsh and (d) Northern Ireland tick boxes to indicate nationality on the next census form; and if he will make a statement. [151361]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Lawrence Robertson, dated 26 February 2001:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking what the plans were for including English, Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland tick boxes to indicate nationality on the next census form.

As Registrar General for England and Wales I can only comment on the 2001 Census in England and Wales.

The 2001 Census form in England and Wales does not include a question on nationality. All the questions proposed in the White Paper were widely consulted upon and shown to have satisfied certain strategic criteria; such as the need for the information by a substantial number of census users, and that the information was not available from any other source in the detail or area level required.

The 2001 Census form in England and Wales does include a question on country of birth which includes tick boxes for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, and a question on ethnic group. The prime purpose of the ethnic group question is to identify areas with high levels of ethnic minority populations, which would help provide valuable baseline information on which to plan and provide services and monitor racial disadvantage and social exclusion. A "write-in" response category within each of the main ethnic groupings provides the opportunity for persons to describe their ethnicity as "English", "Scottish", "Welsh", or "Northern Irish" or in whatever other way they wish.

Private Finance Initiative

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to publish updated information on the Government's PFI activity. [151633]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Tables containing this information will be published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report on 7 March.

In the course of updating the PFI information, errors in Tables C14, C15 and C16 of FSBR 2000 came to light, arising from mistranscription of data. I am placing corrected copies of these tables in the Library today.

Gold

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the individuals, firms and financial institutions to which gold was sold by the Bank of England in auctions conducted since 1 January 1997; and if he will show in each case the amount of gold sold. [151040]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Details of individuals, firms and financial institutions to which gold was sold are commercially confidential. Information on entitlement to bid is set out in the Bank of England's "Information Memorandum: HM Government's Gold Auction Programme 2000–01", published on 3 March 2000, copies of which are in the Library.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the individuals, firms and financial institutions to which the Bank of England loaned and leased gold between 1995 and 1999; and if he will show in each case the amount of gold loaned or leased. [151039]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Details of individuals, firms and financial institutions to which gold was loaned and leased are commercially confidential.

Single Currency

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what officials were instructed to tell other EU Governments in respect of Britain's national changeover plan for the single currency and its timing. [150889]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The second Outline National Changeover plan was published on 9 March 2000. On 10 March, copies of the plan were sent to the European Commission for distribution to other EU Governments.

European Union

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what currency (a) UK contributions to the EU Budget and (b) EU payments to the UK are made. [150874]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Both the United Kingdom's contributions to the EC Budget and EC payments to the United Kingdom are made in sterling.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the net cost per month has been of UK contributions to the EU since January 2000. [150873]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government publish details of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the EC Budget on an annual, financial year, basis. The United Kingdom's net contribution in 1999–2000, together with the Government's latest forecast in respect of 2000–01, can be found at footnote 1 to Table B17 of the Pre-Budget Report (Cm 4917) published in November 2000.

Details of the Government's spring forecast of the United Kingdom's net contribution in 2000–01 will be published in the Chancellor's Departmental Report.

Wage Bill

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the (a) national wage bill and (b) public sector wage bill for 2001–02. [151369]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In line with the convention adopted by previous Administrations, this Government do not publish forecasts for employment, earnings or the wage bill.

Credit Unions

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with ABCUL over the proposal that credit unions should introduce a central services unit. [150843]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Treasury maintains regular contact with ABCUL and the other representative bodies.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate restrictions on credit unions regarding their ability to (a) lend to and (b) borrow from other voluntary groups. [150844]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government will be consulting shortly on a number of measures aimed at relaxing some of the restrictions on credit unions' operational powers.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what discussions he has had with the Post Office network on allowing access by credit unions to its network; [150845]

(2) what plans he has to uprate the maximum amount an individual is allowed to borrow from a credit union. [150846]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Responsibility for the regulatory framework for credit unions is being transferred to the Financial Services Authority (FSA). The FSA is currently consulting widely on the new framework.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Financial Services Authority on the requirement of bonds from credit unions. [150847]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government have no role in the regulation of credit unions, which is the responsibility of the Financial Services Authority.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Moore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (1) the average weekly earnings, including and excluding overtime, for full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain for (i) all manual, (ii) all non-manual and (iii) all workers; [151558]

(2) the percentages of full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain earning, including and excluding overtime, less than (i) £279.21 per week, (ii) £257.73 per week, (iii) £193.30 per week and (iv) £140 per week for the categories (1) male manual, (2) male non-manual, (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual, (6) all female workers, (7) all manual, (8) all non-manual and (9) all workers. [151559]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Michael Moore, dated 26 February 2001:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent questions on weekly earnings for workers in Great Britain, Scotland and the unitary authorities in Scotland (151558, 151559).

The New Earnings Survey (NES) can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. The release of NES data is restricted to figures that are derived from a sufficiently large sample of employees, and have an acceptable level of accuracy. I have provided the available data for Scotland, the unitary authorities in Scotland and Great Britain in the attached[1] tables only where the samples are large enough and have an acceptable level of accuracy. These are based on the 2000 NES, the latest survey for which data are available.

[1] The tables attached to the letter are available in the Library.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many workers earn, excluding overtime, (a) less than £67 per week, (b) between £67 and £72 per week, (c) between £72 and £87 per week and (d) between £335 and £375 per week; and how many of them are (i) women, (ii) part-timers and (iii) disabled. [151371]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Huw Edwards, dated 26 February 2001:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about weekly earnings for women, part-time workers and the disabled.

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) is the principal source of earnings data for the disabled. This source has therefore been used in order to provide comparable figures for the groups covered by the question. The LFS provides weekly earnings data on a basis which includes overtime; this cannot be excluded.

Table 1: Gross weekly pay in main job, including overtime, all employees and those on schemes

	Number of workers of working age (thousands—not seasonally adjusted)
Gross weekly pay	Total	Female	Part time	Disabled
Less than £67	1,944	1,459	1,795	254
£67 to £71	172	135	160	[1]—
£72 to £86	649	511	591	89
£335 to £374	1,557	525	72	159

Labour Force Survey—autumn (September 2000 to November 2000)—United Kingdom

Mr. Moore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the percentages of workers on adult rates of pay in part-time employment whose hourly earnings, including and excluding overtime pay are less than (a) £5.11, (b) £6.82, (c) £7.39 and (d) £3.70 in (i) Scotland, (ii) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (iii) Great Britain, broken down by (1) male manual, (2) male non-manual, (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual, (6) all female workers, (7) all manual, (8) all non-manual and (9) all workers. [151560]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him on 18 January 2001, Official Report, column 302W.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (a) the number of people on working families tax credit whose hourly earnings fall into the earnings bands (i) £3.70 to £3.90, (ii) £3.91 to £4.11, (iii) £4.12 to £4.32, (iv) £4.33 to £4.53, (v) £4.54 to £4.74, (vi) £4.75 to £4.95, (vii) £4.96 to £5.16, (viii) £5.17 to £5.37, (ix) £5.38 to £5.58, (x) £5.59 to £5.79, (xi) £5.80 to £6.00, (xii) £6.01 to £6.21, (xiii) £6.22 to £6.43, (xiv) £6.44 to £6.64 and (xv) £6.65 to £6.85 and (b) the average award received in each band. [151426]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 8 March 2000, Official Report, column 771W.

Death Certificates

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what increase in revenue is expected by the use of original death certificates instead of solicitor-certified copies in the administration of estates; [R] [151175]

(2) what representations he has received on the abolition of the use of solicitor-certified copy death certificates; [R] [151174]

(3) what steps he is taking to protect estate assets before the granting of representation is issued; [151168]

(4) what information he collated relating to fraudulent practice among solicitors in the administration of estates when solicitor-certified copy death certificates have been used, prior to deciding to end the use of solicitor-certified death certificates. [151169]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 6 February 2001, Official Report, columns 494–95W. Solicitors could give financial institutions early notice of a death by letter or electronically, as they would have to do when the registration of a death is delayed by an inquest. The evidential value of a letter would be at least the same as a photocopy death certificate.

Equitable Life

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the management of Equitable Life regarding the honouring of guaranteed annuities; and if he will make a statement. [151360]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The regulator monitors companies on an on-going basis to ensure that regulatory requirements are met.

EU Stability and Growth Pact

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to alter the Government's budgetary statement, set out in the Red Book 2000, as it affects public expenditure in the United Kingdom following his discussions with the European Commission and ECOFIN about the Opinion of the Council under Regulation EC No. 1466/97 and Article 99EC. [151117]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Fiscal policy in the UK is designed to deliver sound public finances and to help ensure economic stability and sustainable investment in public services. The Budget statement will be delivered in the normal way on Wednesday 7 March.

National Insurance

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer of crediting in those earning between £67 and £72 per week to the national insurance system. [151425]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret a reliable answer cannot be provided because of the difficulty of making a long-term estimate of benefit costs for a relatively small number of people.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in revenue to the Exchequer in the financial year 2001–02 as a result of (a) raising the upper earnings limit on employee national insurance contributions to the threshold of the higher rate of Income tax, (b) removing the upper earnings limit on employee national insurance contributions, (c) extending the 10 per cent. rate of income tax band to £7,272 per year of gross income and implementing it as a restricted allowance, restricted to the basic rate of 22 per cent. and (d) extending the 10 per cent. rate of income tax band to £10,052, and implementing it as a restricted allowance, restricted to the basic rate of 22 per cent. assuming the personal allowance is £7,272. [151427]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates for the effects of raising and abolishing the upper earnings limit were given to my hon. Friend in my answer to him on 29 November 2000, Official Report, column 591W. Without further details I am unable to provide an answer to the final two parts of my hon. Friend's question.

Endangered Species Smuggling

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have been prosecuted for smuggling CITES listed (a) animal species and (b) reptiles into the United Kingdom for each year since 1992. [151130]

Dawn Primarolo: Numbers of persons prosecuted for smuggling offences involving CITES species since 1992 are as follows:

1992

Animals/birds—one person (spiders), one person (parrots and cockatoos)

Reptiles—nil

1993

Animals/birds—nil

Reptiles—one person (tortoises)

1994

Animals/birds—one person (parrots)

Reptiles—one person (chameleons)

1995

Animals/birds—five persons (parrots—all part of one case)

Reptiles—one person (snakes)

2000

Animals/birds—one person (macaws and parrots)

Reptiles—nil.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received EU permission to introduce lower stamp duty rates in the inner cities, in line with his pre-Budget statement. [151041]

Dawn Primarolo: Further announcements about the stamp duty relief for disadvantaged communities will be made in due course.

Married Couples Allowance

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much he estimates the Treasury will have saved in the 2000–01 financial year through the withdrawal of the married couples allowance. [151010]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

EU-Israel Association Agreement

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the time limit set out in the EU-Israel Association Agreement is for responses from the Israeli authorities to requests for documentation of origin as part of the verification exercise being carried out by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. [151135]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is set out in article 32 of Protocol 4 to the EC-Israel Agreement.

SCOTLAND

Taoiseach

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when her Department was first informed of the projected visit to Scotland of the Irish Taoiseach to unveil a memorial at Carfin on 11 February; [150828]

(2) when her Department was first informed that the hon. Member for Motherwell and Wishaw (Mr. Roy) had written to the Irish Consul in Edinburgh to urge the Irish Taoiseach to cancel his visit to Scotland on 11 February; [150824]

(3) what discussions (a) she and (b) her predecessor had with the hon. Member for Motherwell and Wishaw (Mr. Roy) prior to his writing to the Irish Consul in Edinburgh urging the Irish Taoiseach to cancel his visit to Scotland on 11 February, concerning the contents of that letter; [150825]

(4) when, and by whom, her Department was first informed that the planned visit to Scotland of the Irish Taoiseach due to take place on 11 February had been cancelled; [150823]

(5) when her Department was first informed of the content and nature of the letter written by the hon. Member for Motherwell and Wishaw (Mr. Roy) urging the Irish Taoiseach to cancel his visit to Scotland on 11 February; [150826]

(6) what consultations took place between her Department and (a) the Scottish Executive and (b) the Irish Government concerning the planned visit to Scotland of the Irish Taoiseach to unveil a memorial at Carfin on 11 February; and when such consultations first took place. [150827]

Mrs. Liddell: My Department was not involved in preparations for the visit of the Irish Taoiseach planned for 11 February, nor was it consulted by my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell and Wishaw (Mr. Roy) or by the Irish authorities before the decision was taken to cancel that visit. I received a letter of invitation to the ceremony at Carfin on Friday 2 February, and I learned of the Irish decision to cancel the visit from news reports on Thursday 8 February.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when she will answer the Question from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston Reference Number 146986 tabled for answer on 22 January. [151164]

Mr. Foulkes: I answered my hon. Friend's Question on Thursday 15 February.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if the special advisers working for her will relinquish their posts when the next general election is called. [149314]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Earthquake (India)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the material and financial assistance her Department has given to the Government of India for specific use in Gujarat State following the recent earthquake. [149465]

Mr. Mullin: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the House on 29 January 2001, Official Report, columns 21–22, the Department for International Development has allocated a total of £10 million to support this emergency relief effort without reducing our spending in other parts of India. The table summarises the allocation of funds spent to date.

We dispatched a 69-person search and rescue team who rescued six people and supported the Russian Ministry of Emergency for the provision of 75 search and rescue personnel who rescued 17 people. In addition we arranged for numerous relief items including tents, other shelter items, medical supplies and blankets to be transported to the region.

Our assessment and liaison team continues to work closely with the Indian authorities and the operational agencies to provide invaluable information on the remaining needs to enable appropriate allocation of the remaining funds.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure was in her Department for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000, and what the planned expenditure and breakdown of expenditure for 2000–01 is on (i) public opinion research, (ii) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (iii) direct mail. [149270]

Clare Short: The information is as follows:

Public Opinion Research

A study on public attitudes to development was undertaken in 1997–98 at a cost of £43,000. There was no expenditure in 1996–97 or 1998–99. A repeat survey to measure changes in public attitudes and the effects of our public education work was undertaken in 1999–2000 costing a total of £45,000.

In 2000–01 a further repeat study costing £33,000 was undertaken and a school children's survey is currently underway at a cost of £9,800.

Advertising

DFID does not have a specific advertising budget. The vast majority of advertising relates to recruitment advertising in newspapers and journals, and costs £1 million—£1.2 million annually.

Direct Mail

There was no significant expenditure on direct mail promotion of DFID materials between 1996–97 and 1999–2000. In 2000–01 our spending on direct mail promotion of DFID publications is projected at around £55,000.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many press releases were issued by her Department in the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000; how many have been issued in the current financial year; and what her estimate is of the total number for the current financial year. [149255]

Clare Short: Press releases issued for financial years from 1996 are as follows:

Overseas Development Administration

(a) 1996–97: 50.

Department for International Development

(b) 1997–98: 80

(c) 1998–99: 63

(d) 1999–2000: 72.

During the current financial year, 2000–01, my Department has issued 24 press releases. I do not have an estimate for the total number of press releases we will issue in the current financial year.

EU Sexual and Reproductive Health Programmes

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she last met the EU Commissioner for Development, and what representations she made concerning measures to ensure that aid funding is not used to support forced abortion, coercive sterilisation and compulsory population control programmes in developing countries. [150084]

Clare Short: I last met EC Development Commissioner Neilson on 8 February. European Assistance on sexual and reproductive health is governed by the European Community (EC) Council regulation number 1487/97 of 22 July 1997 on

"aid for population policies and programmes in the developing countries".

This regulation denounces any violation of human rights in the form of compulsory abortion, compulsory sterilisation, and other forms of curbing population growth which are contrary to the principles of free and informed choice agreed at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD). The EC submits yearly reports to the European Parliament on the implementation of the Regulation.

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what information she collects on expenditure by the European Union on family planning and population control programmes in the Third World; what steps she takes to ensure that the United Kingdom contribution to that aid does not fund forced abortion, coercive sterilisation and compulsory population control programmes; and if she will make a statement. [150083]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development monitors European Union sexual and reproductive health programmes at headquarters and at country level.

European Assistance on sexual and reproductive health is governed by the European Community (EC) Council Regulation Number: 1487/97 of 22 July 1997 on

"aid for population policies and programmes in the developing countries".

This regulation denounces any violation of human rights in the form of company abortion, compulsory sterilisation, and other forms of curbing population growth which are contrary to the principles of free and informed choice agreed at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD). The EC submits yearly reports to the European Parliament on the implementation of the Regulation.

Medicines (Access)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps the Government are taking to encourage major pharmaceutical companies to offer discounts on drugs that are needed in developing countries. [150655]

Clare Short: The Government are working through a number of channels to increase substantially access to medicines. We are building partnerships with industry to improve access to affordable medicines, and support World Health Organisation initiatives such as Roll Back Malaria and STOP TB (tuberculosis). The Government welcome the Accelerating Access to HIV/AIDS-related Care and Treatment Initiative, whereby several pharmaceutical companies are working with UNAIDS to reduce the cost of anti-retroviral therapy for AIDS in developing countries, although more needs to be done in terms of transparency in prices and further discounts. We are working with developing country Governments to strengthen the basic health care systems, without which drugs will not reach the poorest.

The Cabinet Office Performance and Innovation Unit is carrying out a study on a wide range of policy options for public-private partnership, with the aim of improving access and affordability of essential drugs in developing countries. Possibly policy measures include differential pricing agreements (selling drugs more cheaply in poor countries), tax incentives and common purchase funds.

Drugs (Access)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to allow developing countries to make cheap copies of drugs to treat diseases including AIDS, respiratory tract infections and childhood diarrhoea. [150656]

Clare Short: The majority of medicines required for the diseases of poverty are off-patent, and are available at competitive prices from generic companies. The Government believe that TRIPs (the Agreement on Trade-Related Intellectual Property Rights) provides WTO members with sufficient flexibility to implement domestic intellectual property rights regimes that take account of their national circumstances. The agreement allows national governments to use compulsory licensing in certain situations of 'national emergency', when Governments may authorise production of drugs without the consent of patent holders.

We believe the best way forward is through negotiation with pharmaceutical companies, on price and licensing. The Government are considering a range of policy options for improving affordability of essential drugs in poor countries through the Performance and Innovation Unit's Global Health Project.

Africa Trade and Poverty Programme

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she expects to start the Africa Trade and Poverty Programme. [150840]

Clare Short: Activities under the Trade and Poverty Programme will start in the second quarter of 2001 in several African countries (provisionally Kenya, Uganda, Tanzania, Mozambique, Zambia and Botswana) and with the east African community.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the contracts that exist between SERCO and her Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if she will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151338]

Clare Short: My Department has not entered into any contractual arrangements with SERCO over the specified period.

Departmental IT Projects

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the IT projects currently undertaken in her Department; and if she will state the (a) expected completion date and (b) cost of each project. [151507]

Clare Short: DFID has three current IT projects:

A new CAT6 cabling network with associated patch panels and equipment for our London office at 1 Palace Street. Expected completion December 2001. Cost £2 million.

ASSIST 2000, a project to replace all PCs, and upgrade operating systems and key software. Estimated completion in all UK and overseas offices November 2002. Cost £7.6 million.

Enhanced communications links to overseas offices. Expected completion August 2002. Cost £7.7 million.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the IT projects her Department plans to undertake in the next year; and if she will state in each case the (a) expected date of commencement and completion and (b) cost. [151474]

Clare Short: DFID will have two IT projects on-going next year (both started in 2001):

ASSIST 2000, a project to replace all PCs, and upgrade operating systems and key software. UK offices completed in 2001. Estimated completion of overseas offices November 2002—Total cost £7.6 million.

Enhanced communications links to overseas offices. Expected completion August 2002—Cost £7.7 million.

Tropical Rain Forests

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to reduce the rate at which tropical rain forests are being destroyed. [150727]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development's purpose is poverty elimination. Forests play a major role in providing livelihoods for poor people, and this is the starting point for our involvement in the sector. The causes of deforestation are complex and often lie outside the forest sector in such areas as property law, governance and the economic incentive framework. DFID works with developing countries to help them, and particularly their poorer forest communities, gain long-term benefit from trees through sustainable management, which secures both the existence of forests and the global environmental benefits they provide. DFID currently spends circa £30 million per annum on forest-related projects. A copy of the 2001 directory of DFID forest projects will be placed in the House of Commons Library as soon as it is available.

My Department works internationally in a variety of forums to promote sustainable forest management which supports the needs of the poor. DFID also funds the Global Environment Facility which includes forests within its support to biodiversity conservation. As stated in our recent White Paper, we will press for a 50 per cent. increase in the resources of the GEF at the next replenishment.

Mongolia

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of the severe weather in Mongolia this winter on the country's economy; and what steps her Department is taking to assist those adversely affected. [151315]

Clare Short: Mongolia has been hit by two consecutive winter disasters or "Dzuds" (1990–2000 and 2000–01) caused by widespread drought in the summer, unusually cold temperatures in the autumn and heavy snow fall in winter. These conditions are seriously affecting both animal and human welfare. Last year's dzud affected 450,000 herders and killed approximately 3 million livestock. This year's dzud is more serious. Over 300,000 herders are affected in 20 our of 21 provinces and 600,000 livestock have already died.

The Government of Mongolia have been active in disaster preparedness and relief assistance in dzud-affected areas. However, the two consecutive dzud have overstretched national capacity. The Government have therefore requested international relief assistance following a needs assessment, in which my Department was involved. An Appeal for $11.8 million has been launched by the Government through the United Nations.

The Appeal aims to target vulnerable groups on the most severely affected provinces and seeks to fulfil unmet relief needs. It focuses on building the disaster management of the Mongolian State Emergency Commission and other relevant national partners to enhance preparedness and future response.

We have provided US $1 million for the provision of emergency relief under the framework of the UN appeal to be channelled through humanitarian agencies working in Mongolia.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Ministerial Visits (Peterborough)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will list the Ministers in his Department who visited any of the constituencies which are in the Peterborough unitary authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001, indicating in each case (a) the date of the visit, (b) the constituencies included in the visit and (c) if the local hon. Member met the Minister. [151029]

The Solicitor-General: Neither the Attorney-General nor I visited any of the constituencies in the Peterborough unitary authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001.

Crown Prosecution Service (Chester)

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the matters discussed, and the content of and conclusions from those discussions during his visit to the Cheshire offices of the Crown Prosecution Service in Chester on Friday 16 February. [151286]

The Solicitor-General: I visited the Chester office of CPS Cheshire in order to discuss the local agencies' performance in prosecuting persistent young offenders. I also discussed with the management team their progress with the recommendations of Sir Iain Glidewell, relations with the Press, progress on diversity issues and the findings from the very recent report by Her Majesty's Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate. I was told how CPS Cheshire intends to make use of the increased funds available for the next financial year and I left the office satisfied that good progress is being made with all the matters that we discussed.

Child Sex Offenders

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Solicitor-General what guidance is issued to the Crown Prosecution Service regarding the prosecution of those involved in illegal sexual acts performed on under-age children. [151356]

The Solicitor-General: As with any alleged offence, Crown Prosecutors review each case in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors. They apply both the evidential and public interest tests set out in the Code.

If there is a realistic prospect of conviction for a sexual offence, relevant considerations as to whether a prosecution is in the public interest include the age of the defendant, the age difference between the parties, whether there was a breach of trust and whether the child willingly entered into the relationship.

It would be rare that a sexual offence against a child by an adult would not be prosecuted on public interest grounds. In respect of unlawful sexual intercourse, the public interest requires a prosecution where the child victim is under 13 years of age unless exceptional circumstances exist.

Departmental Politics (Clwyd, South)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Clwyd, South constituency, the effects on Clwyd, South of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150916]

The Solicitor-General: In October 1999, in line with national policy, the Wrexham office of the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS), in liaison with the police and Wrexham Maelor magistrates court, introduced the Narey proposals. The North Wales Area, within which the Wrexham office falls, had been a Narey Pilot site since October 1998. All defendants charged with a criminal offence now make their first appearance before Wrexham Maelor magistrates court within 96 hours. This is in line with the Government's policy of speeding up and modernising the criminal justice system. Current figures indicate that around 40 per cent. of defendants now have their cases finalised at the first hearing. CPS North Wales is also piloting Statutory Time Limits in youth cases and has worked together with the other agencies locally to speed up youth justice, particularly those involving persistent young offenders. This has resulted in the target of 71 days being achieved in two of the quarters in the current year. Thereafter since May 1997, the Crown Prosecution Service has reduced the time taken to finalise prosecutions arising in the South Clwyd Area, especially cases involving young offenders. On 1 November 1999 the Wrexham Branch office altered its structure in line with the proposals contained in the Glidewell review. This enabled the CPS to place greater emphasis on more serious crime proceeding to the Crown court.

CPS North Wales is also piloting the Victim Notification arrangements and has established a Victim Information Bureau at Wrexham, which provides detailed explanations to victims when cases are dropped or charges substantially amended. Meetings are also offered to victims in certain cases and so far, since the commencement of the pilot in April 2000, seven meetings have been held.

Actions and policies of the Treasury Solicitor's Department and Serious Fraud Office affect my hon. Friend's constituency only indirectly.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will list the contracts that exist between SERCO and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151347]

The Solicitor-General: The Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers, Treasury Solicitor's Department, Serious Fraud Office and the Crown Prosecution Service have no existing contracts with SERCO and have not had any during the past three years.

Crown Prosecution Service (Guildford)

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Solicitor-General whom he met at his meeting in Guildford at the Crown Prosecution Service at 9 am on 12 February; and what the purpose and content of the meeting was. [150660]

The Solicitor-General: On 12 February I visited Guildford to meet the staff of the Crown Prosecution Service, Surrey. The hon. Member was invited to accompany me, but unfortunately was not able to.

Prior to the visit, I chaired a ministerial meeting at 9 am, to review progress on the Youth Justice Pledge in Surrey. The meeting was hosted by the Chief Crown Prosecutor and attended by senior members of the criminal justice agencies in Surrey including Surrey Police, Surrey magistrates courts, the Court Service, Surrey Youth Offending Team, PA Consulting and CPS Surrey.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints were lodged against the Child Support Agency in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01; and for what reasons they were lodged. [151444]

Angela Eagle: The total number of letters of complaint received by the Child Support Agency in 1999–2000 was 21,015.

The total number of letters of complaint received between April 2000 and 31 January 2001 was 16,789. The categories are shown in the table.

Category of complaints	1999–2000	2000–01[1]
Delay/failure to take appropriate action	12,001	8,652
Incorrect action	4,675	3,713
Communication	4,376	3,079
Policy	4,011	3,147
Complaints about staff	1,500	1,109
Disclosure of information	316	282
Good cause	174	40
Human Rights Act	0	77
Total	27,053	20,099

[1] Year to date

Note:

The total number of complaints is higher than the number of letters because some letters of complaint covered more than one subject.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when and how often child support cases are reviewed by the Child Support Agency. [151440]

Angela Eagle: Either parent can apply to the Child Support Agency (CSA) for their case to be looked at again if they think the latest decision on their case is wrong, or there has been a change in circumstances since their case was last considered.

The CSA can also revise or supersede a decision on a case, without an application from either parent, if it is clear that the decision needs to be changed.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what circumstances the Child Support Agency becomes involved in child maintenance cases. [151441]

Angela Eagle: Every child has the right to a decent start in life whether the parents live together or apart.

The Child Support Agency (CSA) will accept an application for child maintenance from a person with care or non-resident parent provided that they do not already have a court order or written maintenance agreement dated before April 1993. In Scotland, a child of 12 or over may also apply for child support maintenance provided there is no court order in place and at least one parent is living apart from them.

The CSA only has jurisdiction to assess and collect child support when the parent with care and child concerned are habitually resident in Great Britain or Northern Ireland. In cases where the non-resident parent lives abroad, the CSA can handle maintenance only if the non-resident parent is working for a UK-based employer.

A parent with care who is in receipt of Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, or who is the partner of someone who receives one of these benefits, can be required to co-operate with the Child Support Agency in seeking child maintenance, unless doing so would put themselves or their children at risk of harm or undue distress.

Pensions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will calculate for someone on earnings of £15,000 (a) the size of a contracted-out rebate for a final salary occupational scheme and (b) the proportion of the National Insurance contribution for someone on earnings of £15,000 that is contributed to SERPS if they are not contracted out. [151489]

Mr. Rooker: For someone with annual earnings of £15,000 in the 2000–01 tax year, the size of the contracted-out rebate for a final salary occupational scheme would be £529.74. The employee's share of the rebate would be £184.26. It is not possible to provide details of the proportion of the National Insurance contribution that is contributed to SERPS for someone on earnings of £15,000 who is not contracted out. This is because Class 1 National Insurance contributions are not separable into elements for the State Earnings Related Pensions Scheme (SERPS) or for other benefits paid out of the National Insurance Fund.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will calculate the outstanding liability to SERPS for each of the next 40 years if all workers turning 25 years were automatically contracted out of SERPS at the standard occupational pension rate. [150729]

Mr. Rooker: None.

Benefit Take-up

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for funding the Citizens Advice Bureau from the Benefits Agency for promoting benefits take-up. [151368]

Mr. Rooker: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the Government have allocated to promote benefits take-up; and how this money is spent. [151367]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle) on 22 January 2001, Official Report, column 466W.

Departmental Policies (Copeland)

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Copeland constituency, the effect of his Department's policy initiatives and actions since May 1997 on pensioners living in Copeland, indicating (a) the numbers and (b) the percentage of pensioners who have been affected in each case; and if he will make a statement. [150676]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objective to combat poverty and promote security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty, so we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Over 14,000 older people in Copeland have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter.

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Over 14,000 pensioners in Copeland will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic State pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. In addition, we have introduced free TV licences for the over-75s, of whom we estimate there are about 4,700 in Copeland. Around 1,700 pensioner families in Copeland are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, which we introduced in April 1999 to help our poorest pensioners. From April they will be at least £15 a week, or £800 a year, better off in real terms as a result of Government measures since 1997.

Other reforms in the pipeline include: the new Pension Credit in 2003, designed to ensure that pensioners benefit from their savings; the launch of Stakeholder Pensions in April this year; and the introduction of the State Second Pension in April 2002, both of which will help provide greater security for tomorrow's pensioners.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the identity of the private sector partner contracted to process claims for winter fuel payments for customers not already in receipt of a benefit; and what are (a) the terms of the contract in respect of the time scale for processing claims; and (b) the contractual arrangements for ensuring that the published helpline telephone number can cope with every inquiry from the public. [151434]

Mr. Rooker: The Private Sector Partner contracted to process claims for Winter Fuel payments is CAPITA Business Services Ltd.

Under Part II, paragraph 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, information is not available about the status of the contract, as it is commercial in confidence.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to ensure maximum take-up of the winter fuel payment for men aged 60 to 65 years. [149842]

Mr. Rooker: An information campaign commenced in April 2000 and continued throughout the year informing people of the changes to the Winter Fuel Payment scheme and what, if any, action was required of them. The campaign also encouraged people who were newly eligible for payments to make a claim. The campaign included: advertisements in national and local press; a dedicated leaflet and poster made available in a variety of venues, including local social security offices, post offices and doctors' surgeries.

A mailshot was also undertaken, beginning in early May, to people we could identify as being newly eligible inviting them to make a claim.

Full arrangements for the delivery of winter 2001 payments have yet to be determined.

Departmental Policies (North-East Derbyshire)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the north-east Derbyshire constituency, the effect on north-east Derbyshire of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150880]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

Promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and,

Combating poverty and promoting security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

These goals are being pursued nationwide and our achievements are set out in our annual "Opportunity for all" reports. Our second report, "Opportunity for all—One year on: making a difference" (CM4865, September 2000) sets out what progress has been made in the past year, as well as highlighting what more needs to be done. Nationwide statistical information is necessarily more complete than constituency level data, but the following provides a comparative guide to the effect of the Department's policies and actions in north-east Derbyshire since May 1997.

Measures in our first four Budgets will lift over one million children out of poverty. These include record increases to Child Benefit, Working Families Tax Credit, increases in the income-related benefits, the minimum wage and tax changes.

Child Benefit will be worth £15.50 a week for the eldest child and £10.35 a week for other children from April 2001: nationally about 7 million families receive Child Benefit, and in north-east Derbyshire 11,124 families benefit.

We now have the lowest unemployment rate in 25 years. The New Deals have helped lone parents, the young unemployed, the long-term unemployed, the over-50s and partners of the unemployed to move from benefit into work. In the period since May 1997, the number of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance nationally has reduced from 1,562,400 to 1,044,900; in north-east Derbyshire the number has reduced from 2,400 to 1,600. Since May 1997, the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally and in north-east Derbyshire from 1,000 to 600.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty, so we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Over 19,500 older people in north-east Derbyshire have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter.

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Some 18,100 pensioners in north-east Derbyshire will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic state pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. In addition we have introduced free TV licences for the over-75s of whom we estimate there are about 6,900 in north-east Derbyshire. 2,700 pensioner families in north-east Derbyshire are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, which we introduced in April 1999 to help our poorest pensioners. From April they will be at least £15 a week, or £800 a year, better off in real terms as a result of Government measures since 1997.

Other reforms in the pipeline include: the new Pension Credit in 2003 designed to ensure that pensioners benefit from their savings; the launch of Stakeholder Pensions in April this year; and the introduction of the State Second Pension in April 2002, both of which will help provide greater security for tomorrow's pensioners.

Departmental Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library results of the pilot stage of the Targeting Fraud television advertising campaign. [151455]

Mr. Rooker: A report on the pilot stage of the Targeting Fraud advertising campaign has been placed in the Library.

Departmental Policies (Bristol, East)

Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Bristol, East constituency, the effects on Bristol of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150553]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

Promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and,

Since May 1997, the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally and in Bristol, East from 2,300 to 2,200.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty, so we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Around 17,000 older people in Bristol, East have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter.

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Some 15,500 pensioners in Bristol, East will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic state pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. Minimum Income Guarantee (Leeds, Central)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in the Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee. [150674]

Mr. Rooker: There are around 3,800 recipients of the Minimum Income Guarantee in Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency.

Notes:

1. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.
2. Pensioners are defined as where the claimant, and/or partner are aged 60 or over.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest 100.
4. Cases are allocated to each parliamentary constituency by matching the postcode against the 2000 version 1 ONS Postcode Directory.

Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, November 2000:

Company Pensions

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will assess the benefits of introducing a pension fund safety net, similar to the Redundancy Payments Fund, to protect the pensions of employees whose pensions have been affected detrimentally by the insolvency of their employer. [150700]

Mr. Rooker: The consultation exercise on the paper "Security for Occupational Pensions" closed on 31 January. This consultation document sought views on a range of approaches to providing protection for pension scheme members' rights, including options such as a central discontinuance fund, compulsory scheme insurance as well as other possible measures. We are giving careful consideration to the responses received and will then decide on the best way forward.

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provisions are in place to protect employees whose pensions have been affected detrimentally by the insolvency of their employer. [150919]

Mr. Rooker: The Pensions Act 1995 brought in a number of measures to promote security for members of pension schemes, including the Minimum Funding Requirement which requires defined benefit schemes to hold a minimum level of assets to meet their liabilities.

In the event of a sponsoring employer's insolvency, the legislation requires that an independent trustee must be appointed. The role of the independent trustee is to ensure that the interests of the members are represented in insolvency proceedings and to make any necessary decisions about winding up the scheme. If on wind up the scheme is not fully funded on a Minimum Funding Requirement basis, the amount outstanding becomes a debt on the employer and the trustee must pursue recovery of this amount. Where the scheme finds itself in deficit due to fraud, compensation may be payable under the Pensions Compensation Scheme. Unpaid employer and employee contributions may be payable from the National Insurance fund through the Department of Trade and Industry's Redundancy Payments Service.

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend the powers of OPRA, or other relevant regulators, to require them to ensure the timeous winding up of company pension funds when the employer has become insolvent. [150697]

Mr. Rooker: We have extended and strengthened OPRA's powers with regard to schemes that have started to wind-up (including cases where the sponsoring employer is insolvent). There are a number of provisions in the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act 2000, under which draft regulations will be issued later this year to come into effect in April 2002.

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the performance of companies who manage company pension schemes; and if he will publish the results. [150699]

Mr. Rooker: We have no plans to review the performance of companies that sponsor pension schemes. The performance of companies in general is a matter for their shareholders.

Under the provisions of the Pensions Act 1995, pension schemes are required to have a schedule setting out the levels of contributions and the times when contributions should be paid. Companies are required to pay contributions in accordance with these schedules. If an employer fails to comply with the schedule this must be notified to the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (OPRA) who can, in certain circumstances, apply sanctions. If an employer fails to pay employee contributions within a set time OPRA can apply a civil or even criminal sanction on the employer.

Departmental Policies (Clwyd, South)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Clwyd, South constituency, the effects on Clwyd, South of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150909]

Departmental Policies (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood)

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out, including statistical information, the effect on the Blackpool, North and Fleetwood constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150718]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

Child benefit will be worth £15.50 a week for the eldest child and £10.35 a week for other children from April 2001: nationally about 7 million families receive child benefit, and in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood 11,025 families benefit.

We now have the lowest unemployment rate in 25 years. The New Deals have helped lone parents, the young unemployed, the long-term unemployed, the over 50s and partners of the unemployed to move from benefit into work. In the period since May 1997, the number of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance nationally has reduced from 1,562,400 to 1,044,900; in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood the number has reduced from 3,000 to 1,600. Since May 1997, the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally and in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood from 1,700 to 1,300.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty, so we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Around 25,000 older people in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter.

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Some 23,600 pensioners in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic state pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. In addition, we have introduced free TV licences for the over 75s of whom we estimate there are about 10,200 in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood. 3,700 pensioner families in Blackpool, North and Fleetwood are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, which we introduced in April 1999 to help our poorest pensioners. From April they will be at least £15 a week, or £800 a year, better off in real terms as a result of Government measures since 1997.

Other reforms in the pipeline include: the new Pension Credit in 2003 designed to ensure that pensioners benefit from their savings; the launch of Stakeholder Pensions in April this year; and the introduction of the State Second Pension in April 2002 both of which will help provide greater security for tomorrow's pensioners.

Customer Helplines

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 8 January 2001, Official Report, columns 470–71W, on customer helplines, if he will set out the (a) performance of the helplines and (b) targets set for them, for the last year for which figures are available. [148502]

Mr. Rooker: Performance of the helplines and the targets for the last year for which figures are available are as follows:

National Benefit Fraud Hotline

The performance in 1999–2000 against a target of 99 per cent. was 97.9 per cent.

CSA National Enqiry Line

In 1999–2000 the performance of 80 per cent. of calls responded to within 20 seconds was 28.19 per cent. The performance of calls to the Client Helplines (CHL) to be answered first time was 81 per cent. against a target of 80 per cent.

The percentage of customers surveyed on Quality Callbacks to be at least satisfied with the service they have received was 97.29 per cent. against a target of 90 per cent[1].

Benefit Enqiry Line

In 1999–2000 the percentage of calls answered within 30 seconds was 100 per cent[2]. The percentage of internal calls answered was 85 per cent. against a target of 90 per cent.

War Pensions Helpline

For the year ending 31 December 2000 the percentage of calls answered in 30 seconds was 100 per cent.

Public Enqiry Office

The average percentage of all calls answered in any one month during 1999 was 58.25 per cent. against a target of 65 per cent.

Child Benefit Centre

From September to December 2000 the number of calls to be taken per week was targeted at 42,000. The number of calls taken was 39,410. The performance against target was 92.3 per cent.

DLA/AA Customer Care Helpline

In 1999–2000 the percentage of calls aimed to be answered within 30 seconds was 18 per cent. against a target of 100 per cent[3].

To improve performance we have taken on new staff and introduced new technology as part of an on-going programme of planned improvements.

Notes:

[1] This followed contact with NEL, Client Helplines (CHL) and Face to Face.

[2] The Customer Charter states that they aim to answer calls within 30 seconds. Due to technical reasons BEL is unable to say whether or not they met this for the year 1999–2000.

[3] DLA/AA Customer Care Helpline. This year's target has been revised to a more realistic 60 seconds and further work is on-going to meet Cabinet office and DSS Call Centre Guidelines, the format of which is at present being finalised. In 1999–2000 Helpline answered 3,963,478 calls, an increase of 12 per cent. on the previous year when 3,513,902 calls were answered. The target of aiming to answer calls within 30 seconds was a BA generic target primarily aimed at switchboards and direct dialled numbers. It is based on the tenet 'answer a call within 5 rings' which takes approximately 30 seconds, but was not designed with call centres in mind.

Departmental Policies (Tooting)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Tooting parliamentary constituency, the effect of his Department's policies and actions since 1 May 1997. [149864]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

Promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and

Combating poverty and promoting security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

These goals are being pursued nationwide and our achievements are set out in our annual "Opportunity for all" reports. Our second report, "Opportunity for all—One year on: making a difference" (CM4865, September 2000), sets out what progress has been made in the past year, as well as highlighting what more needs to be done. Nationwide statistical information is necessarily more complete than constituency level data, but the following provides a comparative guide to the effect of the Department's policies and actions in Tooting since May 1997.

Measures in our first four Budgets will lift over one million children out of poverty. These include record increases to Child Benefit, Working Families Tax Credit, increases in the income-related benefits, the minimum wage and tax changes.

Child Benefit will be worth £15.50 a week for the eldest child and £10.35 a week for other children from April 2001: nationally about seven million families receive child benefit, and in Tooting 9,377 families benefit.

We now have the lowest unemployment rate in 25 years. The New Deals have helped lone parents, the young unemployed, the long-term unemployed, the over-50s and partners of the unemployed to move from benefit into work. In the period since May 1997 the number of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance nationally has reduced from 1,562,400 to 1,044,900; in Tooting the number has reduced from 3,900 to 2,000. Since May 1997 the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally and in Tooting from 2,000 to 1,700.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty, so we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Over 11,000 older people in Tooting have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter.

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Some 10,000 pensioners in Tooting will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic State pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. In addition we have introduced free TV licences for the over-75s, of whom we estimate there are about 4,500 in Tooting. 2,700 pensioner families in Tooting are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, which we introduced in April 1999 to help our poorest pensioners. Departmental Policies (Pendle)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what initiatives embarked upon since May 1997 have benefited Pendle; and if he will make a statement. [149905]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

Promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and

Combating poverty and promoting security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

Nationwide statistical information is necessarily more complete than constituency level data, but the following provides a comparative guide to the effect of the Department's policies and actions in Pendle since May 1997.

Measures in our first four Budgets will lift over one million children out of poverty. These include record increases to Child Benefit, Working Families Tax Credit, increases in the income-related benefits, the minimum wage and tax changes.

Child Benefit will be worth £15.50 a week for the eldest child and £10.35 a week for other children from April 2001: nationally about seven million families receive Child Benefit, and in Pendle 11,116 families benefit.

We now have the lowest unemployment rate in 25 years. The New Deals have helped lone parents, the young unemployed, the long-term unemployed, the over-50s and partners of the unemployed to move from benefit into work. In the period since May 1997 the number of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance nationally has reduced from 1,562,400 to 1,044,900; in Pendle the number has reduced from 1,500 to 1,300. Since May 1997 the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally and in Pendle from 1,600 to 1,400.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty, so we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Over 16,000 older people in Pendle have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter.

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Some 14,200 pensioners in Pendle will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic State pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. In addition we have introduced free TV licences for the over-75s, of whom we estimate there are about 6,300 in Pendle. 2,800 pensioner families in Pendle are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, which we introduced in April 1999 to help our poorest pensioners. From April they will be at least £15 a week, or £800 a year, better off in real terms as a result of Government measures since 1997.

Debt Accounting and Management System

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what the savings were that the Debt Accounting and Management System was projected to achieve in (a) the first year of operation and (b) each of the four subsequent years; [151484]

(2) what the sums allocated to the Debt Accounting and Management System were in each year of its design and implementation; [151485]

(3) if he will list the private sector firms with which he has contracts for the strategic debt solution, stating in each case the monetary value and nature of the contract; [151487]

(4) what funds have been allocated by his Department for the strategic debt solution for each year between 1990–2000 and 2002–03; [151486]

(5) when the strategic debt solution began operation. [151488]

Mr. Rooker: The potential benefits that the Debt Accounting and Management System (DAMS) would provide in improved management of debt from first year of live running, initially planned for 1999–2000, are in the table.

£ million

	Savings area
	Increased recoveries	Administration savings
1999–2000	15.43	9.70
2000–01	14.01	9.61
2001–02	9.01	9.31
2002–03	9.01	9.31
2003–04	9.01	9.31

Under part II, paragraph 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, information on the sums allocated to DAMS is not available as it is commercial in confidence.

There are no private sector firms with which the Department has contracts for the strategic debt solution. Following on from termination of DAMS development, in order to meet the demands of debt management, financial and business control, a fundamentally different strategy has been developed.

A Strategic Debt Solution (SDS) project was set up after DAMS. Its purpose was not to deliver IT but to take forward the operational control and compliance improvements, to maintain and improve business outputs following DAMS, and at the same time research, drive out and document root causes for weaknesses surrounding debt management and recommend strategic resolutions for these root causes.

The long-term vision is replacement of all legacy systems through service modernisation, but only after the debt organisation has undergone considerable business change and consolidation.

Funds were allocated for this work, to be taken forward as the SDS project as follows:

	£ million
1999–2000	0.936
2000–01	0.679

The Strategic Debt Solution Project commenced in October 1999 and completed in October 2000, having implemented a number of controls and business improvements following DAMS termination and also recommendations and a full study for a strategic direction for debt. A Debt Programme has been established to implement the business changes, starting with consolidation of the organisation under a dedicated line management.

National Pensioners Convention

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he plans to make to the petitions from the National Pensioners Convention forwarded to him on 8 November; and if he will make a statement. [150564]

Mr. Rooker: I replied to the National Pensioners Convention on 29 November 2000.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what studies his Department has undertaken on (a) privatising industrial injuries compensation and (b) the cost and extent of existing employer financed industrial injuries insurance. [151322]

Mr. Rooker: As part of our wider programme of Welfare Reform, we have examined the costs and benefits of an option for the modernisation of the Industrial Injuries scheme by replacing it with a no-fault compensation scheme fully funded by employers through the use of compulsory private insurance.

We continue to keep the industrial injuries scheme under review. Under the Employer's Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969, all employers (with specific exceptions) carrying out business in Great Britain are required to take out cover against liability for work-related bodily injury and disease. The cost of such insurance is a matter for employers and the insurance industry.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) of 30 January 2000, Official Report, column 140W, concerning industrial injuries benefits, what proportion of such benefits are industrial injuries compensation. [151321]

Mr. Rooker: The figure of £756 million given in my answer to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) was net of benefits recovered from compensation payments.

Gross expenditure on Industrial Injuries benefits in 1999–2000 was £787 million and the amount of benefits recovered from compensation payments was £32 million.

Note:

The figures do not sum due to rounding.

Ministerial Visits (Peterborough)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the Ministers in his Department who visited any of the constituencies which are in the Peterborough Unitary Authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001, indicating in each case (a) the date of the visit, (b) the constituencies included in the visit and (c) if the local hon. Member met the Minister. [151033]

Mr. Rooker: None.

SERCO Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the contracts that exist between SERCO and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151348]

Mr. Rooker: There are no existing contracts between the Department and SERCO Ltd.

The only contracts awarded to SERCO during the last three years were in the year 1 January 1998 to 31 December 1998 and were a Review of IS/IT Projects and Consultancy support.

DEFENCE

Ground-based Theatre Air Defence

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the extent to which British forces can be provided with adequate ground-based theatre air defence against (a) aircraft, (b) Cruise missiles and (c) ballistic missiles in the event of an operational deployment where such cover is not by allies; and if he will make a statement. [143343]

Mr. Hoon: When deployed without support from our allies, UK forces would operate a concept of layered air defence. Point Defence is currently provided by a mixture of the Javelin and High Velocity Missile systems which are in service the with Army and Royal Marines. In addition we have a short range air defence capability which is provided by the Rapier air defence system in service with both the Army and RAF Regiment. All these systems have a capability against aircraft and Rapier has a limited capability against cruise missiles. Additional support could be provided by Naval systems which include Sea Dart and Seawolf. In the air we would operate the Tornado F3 and Sea Harrier FA2 fighter aircraft which would provide longer range defence against aircraft and a limited capability against cruise missiles. We continue to assess the potential role of theatre ballistic defence (TBMD) systems in countering missiles attacks but it remains our position that it would be premature to decide to acquire TBMD. Currently we would counter a ballistic missile threat through a broad range of offensive and defensive measures.

Opposition Policies (Costings)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to the answer of the Minister for the Cabinet Office of 11 December 2000, Official Report, columns 47–48W, what costings of (a) Liberal Democrat and (b) Conservative party policies his Department has (i) undertaken and (ii) advised upon in the previous 12 months; and if he will place copies of such costings and relevant background documents in the Library; [146618]

(2) if special advisers in his Department have been involved in (a) co-ordinating, (b) costing and (c) presenting costings of policies of opposition parties; and if he will make a statement; [146674]

(3) pursuant to the answer of the Minister for the Cabinet Office, 11 December 2000, Official Report, column 48W, what costings of (a) Liberal Democrat and (b) Conservative Party policies his Department has (i) undertaken and (ii) co-ordinated in the previous 12 months; and if he will place copies of such costings in the Library. [146675]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 February 2001, Official Report, column 183W.

Warship Building

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what financial inducements his Department has received in order to procure two extra ALSLs beyond the requirement identified in the Strategic Defence Review; [150279]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the warship building capacity in the UK required to meet the future requirements of the Royal Navy; how this is affected by the ALSL procurement decisions; and if he will make a statement; [150273]

(3) what his estimate is of the additional cost of splitting the construction of four ALSLs between Swan Hunter and BAE Systems Marine rather than constructing all four ships on Tyneside; [150274]

(4) what the additional cost is of four ALSLs rather than two; [150275]

(5) what the value of the contracts placed with Swan Hunter and BAE Systems Marine is for each to supply two ALSLs; and what is the price differential between the two companies; [150276]

(6) on what grounds Appledore/BMT was not considered for the build of two additional ALSLs; [150277]

(7) what industrial factors were taken into account in his decision to allocate construction of two ALSLs to BAE Systems Marine; and if he will make a statement. [150278]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 15 February 2001]: The invitation to tender issued in April 2000 was based on our original requirement for two Alternative Landing Ship Logistics (ALSL) with an option for up to a further three. Bids were submitted by interested companies on this basis. In light of recent operating experiences, in particular in Sierra Leone and Mozambique, we decided to procure a further two ALSLs making four in total. These vessels will provide us with significantly enhanced operating capability, in particular increased lift capacity and the ability to off-load in a wider range of sea conditions. They will also provide better long-term value for money for the taxpayer than running a mixed fleet of two new ALSLs and three ageing LSLs until the latter are replaced. Funding for the extra vessels will come from the Defence Votes.

In deciding where to place the contract for the additional two ALSLs, all the shipyards associated with the final tender process were considered. A range of factors were taken into account including value for money considerations and operational benefits resulting from an early delivery. On balance, the best option was for two vessels to be built by Swan Hunter and two by BAE Systems Marine using a common design.

The estimated value of both contracts will be £300 million but this is dependent upon the successful conclusion of the negotiations currently under way with BAE Systems Marine. The price for the two vessels to be built by BAE Systems Marine at Govan will be governed by the firm price agreed for the two vessels being built at Swan Hunter.

The detailed costs associated with a split order are commercially sensitive as we are currently negotiating separately with Swan Hunter for lead yard service support to Govan, and with BAE Systems Marine for the build of the two additional ALSL vessels at Govan. This information is therefore withheld under Exemption 7 (effective management and operations of public service) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

We keep under review a broad assessment of whether there is sufficient capacity in UK shipyards to undertake our forward Royal Navy and Royal Fleet Auxiliary shipbuilding programme. Our assessment indicates that there remains sufficient capacity in UK shipyards to undertake our current and forward warship building programme including all four ALSLs.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 February 2001, Official Report, columns 262–63W, on Sierra Leone, for what reasons his Department (a) accepted the validity of the personal injury claim for one serviceman and (b) rejected the validity of the personal injury claims for 14 servicemen; what factors influenced that decision; and if he will make a statement. [150899]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence has accepted liability for one claim for compensation from a serviceman suffering from malaria following deployment to Sierra Leone on the basis that he was not given an anti-malarial tablet until he had been in theatre for a few days and therefore was not afforded adequate protection.

Claims from 14 servicemen were repudiated on the basis that they were issued with anti-malarial tablets on 6 May 2000, prior to deployment the following day. The British National Formulary states that the anti-malarial tablets can be started "up to one or two days before travel".

Thus, unlike the first case, the Ministry of Defence did not consider it had a legal liability to pay these servicemen compensation.

These decisions were based on legal advice.

Gurkhas

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many peacekeeping tours of duty Gurkha troops have made in the last five years. [151255]

Mr. Spellar: During the last five years, Gurkha units have made 24 separate peacekeeping tours of duty in Bosnia, Kosovo, East Timor and Cyprus. Gurkha soldiers have also assisted in establishing or keeping the peace on 14 operations in Sierra Leone, Turkey and Kuwait. A detailed breakdown of these tours is shown in the table.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 February 2001, Official Report, columns 519–20W, on depleted uranium, which units and sub units that served in the Balkans were not subject to pre-deployment course briefing on medical issues, including depleted uranium, (a) from June 1999 to August 2000 and (b) since August 2000; how many troops were involved; who decided to curtail the pre-deployment course briefing on medical issues; and what steps he is taking to ensure that the situation is not repeated. [150972]

Mr. Spellar: All units and sub-units deploying to the Balkans between 1 June 1999 and 12 September 2000 attended a course run by the Operational Training and Advisory Group (Warminster) (OPTAG(W)), previously called the United Nations Training and Advisory Team (UNTAT), prior to deployment. This included a general briefing on environmental industrial hazards, including radiological hazards, delivered by the Mobile Health Instructional Team (MHIT).

In view of the large number of operational deployments last autumn, the course for troops deploying to the Balkans was reduced in length to ensure that all troops received the best preparation for their deployment in the time available. OPTAG(W) considered the priority for topics to be included in the course and the medical briefing was dropped. This decision was taken by OPTAG(W) in the light of circumstances at the time and, in view of the fact that all troops receive an annual medical training package under unit arrangements.

The following units, or elements of the units, did not receive the MHIT briefing between 12 September and 13 December 2000 prior to deployment to the Balkans:

Unit

2nd Battalion The Light Infantry
2nd Battalion The Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment
One squadron from the Queen's Dragoon Guards
33 Engineer Regiment
59 Commando Squadron Royal Engineers
4 Regiment Army Air Corps
3rd Regiment Royal Horse Artillery
661 Squadron Army Air Corps
16 Signal Regiment
24 Regiment Royal Logistic Corps
33 Field Hospital
847 Naval Air Squadron
23 Pioneer Regiment
50 Independent Commando Squadron RE
4 General Support Regiment Royal Logistic Corps
8 Transport Regiment Royal Logistic Corps

Note:

Troops to be deployed as individual reinforcements are trained alongside units and sub-units.

Therefore, some 3,100 troops in these units and sub-units and some 400 troops who were deployed as individuals, did not receive the pre-deployment MHIT briefing. Instructions to reinstate the briefing were issued formally on 12 January, but action had already been taken to revise the course programme for the first OPTAG(W) course after the Christmas and New Year break. This took place between 8–10 January; all troops participating in this course were given the MHIT brief.

As stated in my answer of 7 February 2001, Official Report, columns 519–20W, all troops deploying to Kosovo should have received briefing at unit level on depleted uranium in accordance with the instructions in the Mounting Order, although we now know that this process was not comprehensive.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many depleted uranium rounds have been discharged at the Dundrennan ranges; and when the last round was discharged at a hard target. [150939]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a hard target Warrior at Dundrennan ranges is a casualty of depleted uranium shells from the Gulf War. [150940]

Mr. Spellar: There is no hard target Warrior vehicle at Kirkcudbright training area, nor are there any records to suggest that depleted uranium projectiles have ever been fired at a Warrior vehicle or any other hard target at Kirkcudbright. Furthermore, there is no evidence that the UK Warrior vehicles destroyed during the Gulf War were hit by depleted uranium projectiles.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of all minutes made of meetings held between representatives from the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency since May 1997, in respect of the environmental monitoring programme of the test firing of depleted uranium shells at the Kirkcudbright test range. [145299]

Mr. Spellar: There has been one such meeting since May 1997. This was hosted by the Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA) at East Kilbride. No formal minutes of the meeting were produced. I am, however, arranging for a copy of the SEPA letter recording the formal actions placed on DERA to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests have been received from the European Commission for information gathered by monitoring programmes on exposure to depleted uranium of British troops who have served in the Balkans; what assessments of depleted uranium dangers are being undertaken by NATO; and if he will make a statement on the current state of knowledge gained from the United Kingdom depleted uranium monitoring programme. [145281]

Mr. Spellar: The European Commission has made no requests for information gathered by monitoring programmes on exposure to depleted uranium of British troops who have served in the Balkans.

The NATO Chiefs of Medical Military Services Committee (COMEDS) met on 15 January to discuss health concerns related to service in the Balkans. The COMEDS concluded that: there is no evidence of a link between depleted uranium and reported cancers; there is no indication of any atypical illness linked to the Balkans, and those soldiers with health complaints must be given the best appropriate medical care. The COMEDS have, however, made recommendations for further investigative work.

In recognition of the fact that recent press coverage concerning depleted uranium will have caused some concerns among our people, I announced an initiative to identify an additional appropriate voluntary screening programme for our service personnel and civilians who have served in the Balkans on 9 January 2001, Official Report, columns 877–79. It is currently envisaged that this programme will also be available to Gulf veterans. The first phase of work has been completed and, on 13 February, we published a consultative document setting out the technical issues associated with such a programme, inviting advice and comment from a wide range of expert bodies. A copy of the document has been placed in the Library of the House.

UK Gulf veterans who are concerned that their health has been adversely affected by service during the Gulf conflict, including by possible exposure to DU, are entitled to seek a referral to the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme for a full medical assessment. Any tests that are considered clinically appropriate by the examining MAP physician, including those to detect the presence of uranium, will be arranged.

Out of 3,000 patients examined by MAP physicians, two have exhibited symptoms that, in the judgment of the examining physicians, have indicated a clinical requirement for testing to detect uranium and have been tested. These test results show that uranium, in any form, is not a contributory factor to the patient's ill health.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has published explaining the risks associated with using depleted uranium munitions; and if he will make a statement. [150215]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave on 25 January 2001, Official Report, column 653W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Coaker), in which he states that the Ministry of Defence was publishing a paper that explained the Department's position on the risks posed by DU. This paper included reference to my Department's earlier paper published on 19 March 1999, entitled "Testing for the Presence of Depleted Uranium in UK Veterans of the Gulf Conflict: the Current Position". Copies of both these papers are available in the Library of the House and on the MOD website at www.gulfwar.mod.uk.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what evidence he bases his conclusions concerning the risks to human health from depleted uranium munitions; and if he will make a statement. [150531]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence has followed the debate concerning depleted uranium (DU) and human health very closely. A great deal of material has been reviewed. I refer the hon. Member to the very authoritative and independent publications from the United States: notably the RAND report on DU issued in 1998, the US Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry "Toxological Profile for Uranium" of September 1999, and the Institute of Medicine's publication on Gulf War and Health in September 2000. All of those reviews agreed that there was as yet no evidence to link exposure to DU with either cancer or diseases of the kind exhibited by Gulf veterans.

The medical evidence from the 1990–91 Gulf conflict further underscores the findings. The mortality data published by the Ministry of Defence on 22 January 2001, Official Report, columns 414–16W, show that overall, in the period 1 April 1999 to 31 December 2000, the mortality of UK Gulf veterans was only slightly greater then that of the Control group. There were 477 deaths in the Gulf cohort, compared to 466 in the control group. Within the overall figure, deaths from disease were lower in the Gulf cohort (168 compared to 208). Deaths from cancer were lower (69 compared to 77). In addition, we have the findings from the physicians at the Gulf Veterans Medical Assessment Programme (GVMAP) whose examination of over 3,000 patients has determined that the symptoms presented by individuals who had attended were not likely to have been caused by DU exposure. Furthermore, there is no indication of an increase in the incidence of illness among the GVMAP patients compared with the general population.

Other US work we keep under close review is that undertaken at the Baltimore Veterans Affairs Medical Center. Since 1993, a clinic based at the centre has run a DU follow-up programme for 33 US Gulf veterans (whose records showed they had been involved in friendly fire incidents involving DU), which includes 15 who have embedded DU shrapnel in their bodies. To date, any health impairments among those being monitored appear to be related to their original injuries rather than to DU. None of the 33 is excreting higher than usual levels of uranium, except those with embedded shrapnel. We continue to monitor the work.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of continued firing of depleted uranium ammunition at Dundrennan ranges. [150942]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Morgan) on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 87W, and 18 January 2001, Official Report, column 298W.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what premature explosions in the breech with depleted uranium ammunition have taken place at Dundrennan ranges; when they took place; and how and where the ensuing fragments were dumped. [150941]

Mr. Spellar: There have been no premature explosions in the breech with depleted uranium ammunition at the Kirkcudbright (Dundrennan) ranges. However, it is believed that there were some 79 occasions between 1983 and 1993 on which rounds partially broke up during firing. These were all at the Raeberry firing point, which is 180 metres from the cliff edge. In all cases, although some fragments hit the ground, the majority of the mass proceeded out to sea, a fact confirmed by radar and optical observations.

Gulf War

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many chemical mines the Iraqi Army laid on (a) land and (b) sea in the course of the Gulf War; where they were found; and what (i) advice and (ii) protection was made available to personnel clearing them. [150946]

Mr. Hoon: Analysis of the information available to the Government has produced no evidence that chemical weapons, including mines, were issued to operational Iraqi forces during the 1990–91 Gulf conflict. There is no indication that Iraqi laid chemical-agent-filled mines and the Iraqi Government have never declared that they hold or have developed such weapons. UK forces neither discovered nor cleared any such mines.

UK forces were, however, advised that the threat of Iraqi use of chemical mines was a possibility. An assessment contained in the diary of one of the UK Engineer Regiments in theatre in late January 1991 was that Iraq may deploy land mines containing up to 5kg of chemical agent, probably mustard gas or a variation of it, and that these may be laid some 15cm below the subsurface, and could be remotely detonated from a central point. This engineer unit was also advised that such mines might be protected by conventional anti-personnel and anti-tank mines in order to prevent their neutralisation.

We do not have details of what advice was provided on how to make such mines safe, or what protection was to be employed in the course of handling any chemical mines encountered. However, it is believed that personnel undertaking explosive ordnance disposal duties were made aware of the need to wear NBC protective clothing during the handling of chemical or biological warfare munitions of any type, and that this would therefore include any mines with a chemical-agent filling.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has plans to research chromosome 22 and 22/IE in Gulf War veterans; and what discussions it has had with (a) the US Department of Defense and (b) other agencies on this matter. [150943]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has no such plans and has had no discussions on this matter.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to make TH1 and TH2 tests available to Gulf War veterans; and what the cost of such tests would be per capita. [150944]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has no such plans.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if members of the armed forces who received immunisation in preparation for deployment during the Gulf war have access to their medical records on request. [150261]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: The Ministry of Defence handles requests for medical records in accordance with the Data Protection Act 1998. The Act allows an individual full and complete access to his medical records on written request. Access to any part of a health record may, however, be refused if, in the opinion of the appropriate health professional:

(a) disclosure of the record would be likely to cause serious harm to the physical or mental health of the individual or any other person; or

(b) the record contains information relating to or provided by another person who could be identified from that information, unless consent has been given or the person was a health professional involved in the treatment of the individual making the request.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decontamination facilities were available in the theatre of the Gulf War for personnel, vehicles and aircraft; in what quantities; and where they were located. [150945]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Finchley and Golders Green (Dr. Vis) on 7 December 2001, Official Report, columns 455–56W, and to paragraphs 131–38 of the paper "British Chemical Warfare Defence during the Gulf Conflict (1990–91)", which is available in the Library of the House.

Defence Agencies

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (1) the total expenditure of each defence agency in the last year for which figures are available, indicating expenditure in Scotland; [149568]

(2) the total value of the fixed assets of each of the defence agencies, indicating the value of each in Scotland. [149567]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 8 February 2001]: Information on the assets and expenditure of each defence agency has been presented to Parliament, most recently for the year 1999–2000, and is available in the Library of the House. Many defence agencies have a significant presence in Scotland, and details of the associated fixed assets were provided following a special exercise, in a letter of 8 May 2000 to the hon. Member for Angus (Mr. Welsh). A copy was also placed in the Library of the House. To identify the relevant portion of their expenditure would involve disproportionate cost.

Common Threat Assessment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent steps have been taken to arrive at a common threat assessment with the UK's allies; and if he will make a statement. [150804]

Mr. Hoon: NATO undertakes periodic assessments, in consultation with Allies, of the threats to Alliance security. These assessments form one of the major inputs into Alliance defence planning.

Albanian Extremists

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 February 2001, Official Report, column 5, how many Albanian extremists operating in Kosovo and southern Serbia, who have been detained in possession of illegal weapons and handed over to the Americans at Camp Bondsteel, have been charged; and for what offences they have been charged. [150701]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the RAF to take delivery of its first single-seater European fighter aircraft. [150725]

Mr. Hoon: Delivery of the first single-seater Eurofighter to the RAF is planned for March 2003. The first Eurofighter to be delivered, in June 2002, will be twin-seat.

HMS Tireless

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects HMS Tireless will be ready to resume her fleet duties; and if he will make a statement. [151436]

Mr. Spellar: The repair work to HMS Tireless is scheduled to be completed at the end of March and she will sail from Gibraltar as soon as possible thereafter. HMS Tireless will then resume fleet duties.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of work carried out on HMS Tireless; what the expected total cost is of bringing the submarine back in service; and if he will make a statement. [151435]

Mr. Spellar: As of December 2000 the cost committed on the repair work to HMS Tireless was approximately £1.8 million.

The estimated total cost of work is £2.5 million to £3.0 million. This includes Tireless' share of the cost of developing a generic solution for all submarines affected by this defect. In addition, the cost of supporting the boat's crew during the repair period and providing essential operational training in order to return the submarine to operational service is expected to amount to £0.6 million.

Armed Forces (Married Quarters)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force married quarters are occupied by cohabiting couples; and what Government policy is regarding the allocation of married quarters to members of the armed forces who are not married. [151354]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence uses marital status as the determinant in its policy when allocating married quarters. Married personnel, and lone parents with dependant children for whom they have prime responsibility, are currently entitled to Service Family Accommodation (SFA) and Substitute Service Family Accommodation (SSFA). Single personnel and lone parents are not authorised to cohabit with a partner in SFA or SSFA.

From time to time cases do come to light. Currently, in Great Britain, two suspected cases are being investigated and in two other cases irregular occupants, who may be cohabiting, are under notice to vacate.

MOD Police

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce a start date for the single-source document for terms and conditions for Ministry of Defence police officers. [151282]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence Police (MDP) Policy and Procedures Manual, incorporating MOD police terms and conditions of service, was issued in electronic format on 10 May 2000. Distribution of the hard copy commenced in June 2000. Further chapters continue to be issued as soon as they are agreed with the Defence Police Federation. The manual became effective from 10 May 2000.

Military Pensions

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the indexation of military pensions for those who retired between 1964 and 1974. [151443]

Mr. Spellar: There are no plans to review the indexation of public sector pensions.

HMNB Clyde

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the single bed capacity of the barracks being constructed at HMNB Clyde for the Fleet Royal Marines Protection Unit; how much it has cost; and what is its completion date. [150947]

Dr. Moonie: The single bed capacity of the barracks being constructed at HMNB Clyde for the Fleet Royal Marines Protection Group is 216. The contract value of the construction is approximately £7 million and it should be completed in August 2001.

RM Condor

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for alternative units to use the accommodation at RM Condor when the Fleet Royal Marines Protection Unit completes its move to Faslane. [150948]

Dr. Moonie: As a result of an initiative emerging from the Strategic Defence Review, the Army is seeking to identify suitable locations for five planned new Army Medical Regiments in the UK, each comprising some 250 Regular personnel. RM Condor, Arbroath is being considered as a location for such a unit.

Even if Arbroath were finally selected as a future location for an Army unit of this sort, it would not form there until 2005 at the earliest.

Sonarbuoys

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel within the DPA are employed on sonarbuoy procurement; how many DPA personnel have been employed on sonarbuoy procurement for (a) three to five years, (b) five to seven years and (c) greater than seven years; and if he will make a statement. [150286]

Dr. Moonie: There are currently five personnel working full time on sonarbuoy procurement within the DPA. Of these, one has done so for over seven years (although not consecutive years) and the others each for less than three years. They are supported by a number of other colleagues from various functions on an occasional basis.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the price is of (a) UK and (b) US Navy passive sonarbuoys and (i) UK and (ii) US Navy sonarbuoys; and if he will make a statement. [150289]

Dr. Moonie: The prices paid by the Defence Procurement Agency (DPA) for UK sonarbuoys are commercially confidential and are withheld under exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Price information on US Navy sonarbuoys has been provided to the DPA on the basis that its confidentiality would be protected. Consequently, this information is withheld under the same exemption.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for incorporating an SR3 ASSS capability in (a) RN helicopters and (b) VAV's; and if he will make a statement. [150287]

Dr. Moonie: There are no current plans to incorporate SR(SA)903 Active Search Sonarbuoy System on RN helicopters or Unmanned Air Vehicles (UAV).

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how interoperability aspects for SR903 are to be managed with (a) US forces and (b) European forces; and if he will make a statement. [150290]

Dr. Moonie: There is no requirement for the Active Search Sonarbuoy System (ASSS) to be interoperable with US or European forces, though SR(SA)903 ASSS will conform with NATO standards, thereby offering future potential for systems interoperability.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current procurement strategy for SR903 Active Search Sonarbuoy System; for what reasons this has changed; and if he will make a statement. [150283]

Dr. Moonie: BAE Systems is the Prime Contractor for the Nimrod MRA4 and the SR(SA)903 Active Search Sonarbuoy System (ASSS) Risk Reduction Programme. The original strategy for the ASSS programme included a sub-contract competition between two consortia for the next phase of the ASSS programme, to fully develop and integrate the system into the Nimrod MRA4. Thomson Marconi Sonar Ltd.(TMSL) led one of the Consortia, with Ultra Electronics Limited leading the other. Subsequently TMSL advised my Department that, though they would complete their contracted activity during the Risk Reduction Phase, they did not intend to bid into the next, Demonstration and Manufacture, phase of the project. The Defence Procurement Agency is working with BAE Systems to review options and develop a proposal for the SR(SA)903 Demonstration and Manufacture phase.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much funding has been allocated for the acquisition programme for SR903; when he expects an operational capability to be available; what target was set for SR903 during the renegotiation of the MRA4 Nimrod programme; and if he will make a statement. [150288]

Dr. Moonie: A contract for the Demonstration and Manufacture phase to meet SR(SA) 903 Active Search Sonarbuoy System (ASSS) has yet to be awarded. Consequently, the funding allocation is withheld under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. ASSS performance targets are classified and are withheld under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government information. Renegotiation of the Nimrod MRA4 contract included an option to provide an ASSS capability at the Nimrod MRA4 ISD, contracted for March 2005.

Chinook Crash

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from what distance helicopter ZD 576 could have detected the guidance beacon at Corran on 2 June 1994. [150413]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 February 2001]: There is no guidance beacon at Corran.

RAF Fylingdales

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what payments have been received by his Department from the US military for use of facilities at RAF Fylingdales in each of the past three years. [150477]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 15 February 2001]: No payments have been received by the Ministry of Defence from the US military for use of facilities at RAF Fylingdales in any of the past three years.

Tour Cycle

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is regarding monitoring the cycle of tours while on peacekeeping duties and its effect on families and retention. [150659]

Mr. Spellar: We recognise that the welfare of service personnel and their families is vital for retention and, therefore, for operational effectiveness. The tour cycle is just one aspect of service life that bears on retention, and we already collect data on this and a range of other relevant factors. This includes continuous attitude surveys of the views of service personnel and their spouses, as well as those seeking premature voluntary retirement, to understand the factors that affect retention. However, we are concerned to ensure that monitoring arrangements are adequate and a number of changes are either in hand or under consideration to improve our capability to monitor individual separation.

Military Establishments (Northern Ireland)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on (a) capital works, (b) refurbishment of buildings and (c) repairs in respect of each (i) Army and (ii) other military establishment in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years and in the current year. [150921]

Dr. Moonie: The figures for the current year and last three years are in the table. It is not possible separately to identify "refurbishment of buildings" and "repair" costs, and these are shown together as "maintenance". The figures for the current year represent the forecast spend for this year, and include both actual spend to date and further spend anticipated by the end of the financial year. The "other military establishments" column includes the RAF, as well as Territorial Army and other volunteer reserves.

£ million

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	Total
Army
Capital works	25.1	18.3	14.1	14.3	71.8
Maintenance	41.6	41.4	45.1	43.3	171.4
Other military establishments
Capital works	2.2	0.7	1.5	9.0	13.4
Maintenance	3.2	3.4	3.2	3.3	13.1

Service Personnel

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military service personnel (a) resigned and (b) retired from each of the military services in the last 12 months. [148330]

Mr. Spellar: For the period 1 January to 31 December 2000 the outflow from UK regular forces is as follows:

	Naval service	Army	RAF
Trained outflow
PVR[1]	1,489	5,758	1,847
Retirements[2]	1,240	2,048	1,731
Other[3]	858	2,118	331
Untrained outflow[4]	1,506	5,759	670
Total	5,093	15,683	4,579

[1] For military service personnel figures are quoted for the number leaving early on Premature Voluntary Retirement (Officers), and Premature Voluntary Release (Other Ranks). This results from the open engagement system which means servicemen can serve for 22 years. As these are not engagement periods as such those who leave earlier do so on Premature Voluntary Requirement.
[2] Defined as personnel leaving at the end of an agreed period of service.
[3] All other outflow of trained personnel. This includes medical, death, disciplinary, dismissal and services no longer required.
[4] No breakdown of this category is available.

Steel Production

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the impact on the UK's defence industries of the decision of Corus plc to restructure its steel production; [149878]

(2) what proportion of steel in the production of military goods is sourced from the UK; [150209]

(3) what recent discussions he has had with Corus plc concerning the sourcing of steel from the UK for military production. [150208]

Dr. Moonie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has had no discussions with Corus plc concerning the sourcing of steel from the UK for military production. We have not made any assessment of the impact on the UK's defence industries of the decision of Corus plc to restructure its steel production. Steel is a raw material and as such is not, in the main, purchased directly by the Ministry of Defence, but rather by the manufacturer of the end product. It is the responsibility of the relevant supplier to purchase the necessary steel from the source it considers offers the best long-term value for money, whether from UK or overseas suppliers. We have no reason to believe that the recent changes by Corus will affect their ability to do this. In view of this it is not possible to say what proportion of steel in the production of military goods is sourced from the UK as this information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

A400M

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the UK aerospace industry about the development costs of the A400M; and if he will make a statement; [150218]

(2) what discussions he has had with his European counterparts about the funding to Airbus Military for the development costs of the A400M; and if he will make a statement. [150219]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 13 February 2001]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has had no recent discussions with representatives of the UK aerospace industry or with his European counterparts on the development cost of the A400M. Officials have met with a number of companies recently, including Dowty Aerospace Propellers of Cheltenham, with which this issue was discussed. The negotiations which we and our partner nations are having with Airbus Military are on the basis of a commercial approach for a single phase development and production programme. Such an approach, coupled with open competition, does not involve a separate contracted development phase or access to detailed cost information.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many goats had to be killed on humane grounds after being used in the submarine escape and rescue research programme in each month since April 2000; what percentage this represents of all goats used; and if he will make a statement. [150723]

Dr. Moonie: The number of goats which were killed on humane grounds after being used in the submarine escape and rescue research programme during the period between April 2000 and the current date is as follows:

Year/month	Number of goats humanely killed at end of experiment
2000
April	4
July	0
August	18
September	0
October	0
November	1
December	14
2001
February	0

This represents some 63 per cent. of the total animals used between April 2000 and February 2001.

HMS Shetland

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the location of HMS Shetland is; and what duties she is carrying out. [151281]

Mr. Spellar: HMS Shetland is currently in Portsmouth undergoing maintenance, having recently returned from patrolling the part of British fishery limits that has been closed to fishing vessels as part of the North Sea Cod Recovery Plan. She is due to go on patrol again on 12 March. The likely patrol location will be the Western British fishing limits.

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which live firing exercises HMS Shetland has carried out in the past three months; and where these exercises have taken place. [151280]

Mr. Spellar: During the last three months, HMS Shetland has conducted two periods of live firing. The first took place on 14 February 2001 in the North sea, and the second on 23 February 2001 in the south coast exercise area.

Service Personnel (Legal Proceedings)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel, and from which units, have been flown out of (a) Bosnia, (b) Kosovo and (c) other theatres of operation to give evidence in legal proceedings in the past year as (i) defendants and (ii) witnesses. [149354]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The information requested is not held centrally and cannot be provided in the format required.

Service Discipline Acts (Contractors)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances contractors working for his Department are subject to the Service Discipline Acts. [148204]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 February 2001]: Contractors working for the Ministry of Defence may be subject to the Service Discipline Acts in two instances. The first is where a contractor is authorised by the Defence Council to be attached to or to accompany British Forces not on active service outside the United Kingdom for the purposes of his profession or employment. The other case is in the rare event of members of the regular Armed Forces being on active service, either in the UK or overseas. In this instance, a contractor employed in the service of those forces, or accompanying them, would automatically be subject to Service Law.

Service Pensions

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning inequities in service pensions; and if he will make a statement. [149666]

Mr. Spellar: The Armed Forces Pension Scheme has compared favourably with public and private sector schemes over a number of years, reflecting the particular demands of a service career. This has been confirmed in the reports of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body. Minister and officials receive a steady flow of letters from MPs and members of the public about the Armed Forces Pension Scheme. We also meet representatives of ex-service and widows' organisations on a regular basis.

Royal Auxiliary Fleet (Refit and Repair)

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed refit and repair work for Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels, with particular reference to the share of this work that will be allocated to Rosyth dockyard. [150120]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 15 February 2001]: It is our policy generally to award RFA refit and repair work on the basis of open competition between UK ship repair yards. We currently have no plans to allocate any such work, but we are keeping this under review to ensure value for money is achieved.

Operation Palliser

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many members of the armed forces deployed on Operation Palliser have been discharged from the services on medical grounds; and if he will make a statement; [147563]

(2) how many members of the armed forces who served on Operation Palliser have since been discharged on medical grounds, listing in each case from which regiment and company they have been discharged, and the medical reason for discharge; and if he will make a statement. [148373]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 2 February 2001]: No members of the armed forces who were deployed on Operation Palliser have been medically discharged.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees (Membership)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chairman of the Committee of Selection if he will list those hon. Members on the Government side, excluding Ministers and parliamentary private secretaries, who (a) have not served as a member of a Select Committee since May 1997 and (b) have served on more than one Select Committee in the same time scale, indicating the Committees on which each individual has served. [150858]

Mr. McWilliam: The Committee of Selection is responsible only for the nomination of the departmental Select Committees and the Domestic Committees of the House, under Public Business Standing Orders Nos. 142 and 152. There are many other Select Committees, including the Environmental Audit, European Scrutiny, Public Accounts and Standards and Privileges Committees which are appointed directly by the House without prior nomination by the Committee of Selection, and upon which the Committee of Selection does not hold information. However, for the purposes of this answer, all Select Committees—rather than merely those nominated by the Committee of Selection—have been included; where information is not held by the Committee of Selection it has been drawn from the Sessional Returns for 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000. The lists do not include Select Committees appointed for the consideration of Bills and draft Bills.

(a) The list of hon. Members on the Government side who have not served as members of a Select Committee since May 1997 is as follows. As requested, hon. Members who are known to have served, or be serving, as Ministers or parliamentary private secretaries have been excluded.

Mr. Douglas Alexander
Mr. Adrian Bailey
Mr. Kevin Barron
Mr. Tony Benn
Ms Judith Church
Mr. Frank Cook[1]

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Parliamentary Hours

Mr. Alexander: To ask the President of the Council what information she has collated on (a) sitting hours and (b) times of divisions in other Parliaments. [144422]

Mr. Tipping: Information on sitting hours in certain other legislatures may be found in pages 133–163 of Volume II of the Report of the Select Committee on Sittings of the House, (HC (1991–92)20-II), but I am not aware of any more recent published research.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the President of the Council if the special advisers working for her will relinquish their posts when the next General Election is called. [149311]

Mr. Tipping: I refer the hon. Member to the answer provided to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 130W.

Departmental Expenditure Limit (Privy Council Office)

Mr. Browne: To ask the President of the Council what proposals there are to amend the Privy Council Office departmental expenditure limit and running costs limit for 2000–01. [151188]

Mr. Tipping: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate for Class XVII, Vote 5, the Privy Council Office Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) for 2000–01 will be increased by £318,000 from £2,951,000 to £3,269,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £318,000 from £2,991,000 to £3,309,000.

The increase will be comprised of a transfer from the Cabinet Office, Class XVII, Vote 1 of £20,000 in respect of running costs for 2 Carlton Gardens, and by a claim on the DEL reserve for unexpected increases in accommodation and running costs for the Privy Council Office of £298,000. The increase will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Policies (Bristol, East)

Jean Corston: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Bristol, East constituency, the effects on Bristol of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150557]

Mr. Lock: The Department is in the process of providing a new Civil Justice Centre to deal with all civil and family work in Bristol. The new court is required to replace the existing county court, which is located on a split site at the Guildhall and Greyfriars. The existing accommodation is in need of substantial repair and alteration to bring it in line with current requirements. In addition, leases on both buildings are due to expire in September 2004.

Providing a purpose-built court building on one site will also help improve operational efficiency. The new court will consist of eight civil courtrooms and six District Judge's Justice Rooms. This is based on workload forecasts for the next 25 years. In addition, the new building will accommodate other Court Service administrative staff currently located in other offices in Bristol (including the probate registry and regional administrative support offices).

The scheme for the new Civil Justice Centre is still at a relatively early stage, and negotiations with a provisional preferred bidder are continuing. A potential site in the centre of Bristol has been earmarked for the development, however a number of outstanding issues need to be resolved before this can be confirmed. The current intention is for negotiations to be concluded by September 2001, with the new building being ready for use by the end of 2003.

The Bristol Community Legal Service Partnership (CLSP), which covers Bristol, East, is one of 160 CLSPs throughout England and Wales. Membership of the Bristol CLSP includes representatives of Bristol City Council, Advice Centres for Avon, Bristol Mediation, Disability Advice and Information Service, Age Concern and the LSC. The CLSP has developed a referral system for all advice providers in Bristol that is currently being piloted. Links are being forged with the Health Authority and with other Regeneration Partnerships, especially in relation to advice provision in the Barton Hill area of Bristol, East.

Throughout Bristol, the Legal Services Commission has let contracts to legal and advice service providers with a total first year value in excess of £1.7 million. Specifically, in the Bristol, East constituency, the Legal Services Commission last year let three contracts—to two firms of solicitors:

Ledbury Raskin—Family (plus tolerance) & Immigration

Leung & Co.—Immigration and to one not-for-profit advice agency:

Bristol Debt Advice Centre.

The total first-year value of these contracts amounts to over £120,000.

Credit Referencing

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review the law whereby there is no obligation on a credit card company to alter their credit referencing files after losing a court case [150857]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that credit card companies do not keep credit reference files. Instead they usually obtain such information from credit reference agencies. These agencies have to comply with the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and with the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1998. The latter requires that information is accurate and held no longer than necessary.

I therefore have no current plans to review this subject.

Departmental Policies (Clwyd, South)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Clwyd, South constituency, the effects on Clwyd, South of her Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150915]

Jane Kennedy: The organisation of the magistrates courts in North Wales has been restructured to provide for more efficient and effective management and improve working with other agencies in the criminal justice system.

Clwyd, South is covered by three Community Legal Service Partnerships; Wrexham, Denbighshire and Powys. However, Clwyd, South only partially covers each of these local authority areas. There are currently 165 CLSPs throughout England and Wales, and 15 of these are based in Wales.

Throughout Wrexham 13 agencies have been awarded contracts with the CLS. The suppliers are located in the centre of the city, but provide services to residents of all Wrexham wards. This includes 11 solicitors, one housing specialist and one Citizens Advice Bureau (CAB). The total value of the contracts awarded amount to over £373,000.

Within Denbighshire 10 solicitor firms and two not-for-profit organisations have been awarded contracts whose total value amounts to over £273,000. While many of the law firms draw clients from the more populated areas to the west of the local authority area, people to the south can access advice from South Denbighshire CAB. As there are no law firms in the south of Denbighshire, some people in this area tend to access advice services in Wrexham.

In the north of Powys four agencies have been awarded contracts whose total value exceeds £60,000. Some residents in the north of Powys are likely to access services from Oswestry. There are four organisations in Oswestry awarded CLS contracts and the value of these contracts amount to over £88,000.

Custody and Contact Arrangements

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when she will make proposals to improve court procedures in respect of custody and contact arrangements in cases of family breakdown; if they will include arrangements for better protection of children and vulnerable spouses; and if she will make a statement. [150801]

Jane Kennedy: The Government are currently considering a number of ways in which court arrangements in respect of residence and contact for children could be improved. One area of particular concern is unnecessary delay in children's cases. A scoping study to determine the need for reform of court procedures, in order to reduce delay, is currently being considered. On the specific issue of protecting children and vulnerable spouses, the Lord Chancellor has welcomed the report of the Children Act Sub-Committee on child contact and domestic violence and is currently considering, with the President of the Family Division, what further action may be necessary. The Sub-Committee will also shortly produce a consultation paper on the equally sensitive area of the facilitation and enforcement of contact orders. In all these areas the Government regard the interests and welfare of the child as paramount.

Judicial Behaviour

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions in the last 12 months she has reprimanded members of the judiciary for their behaviour (a) in court and (b) outside; and if she will make a statement. [150891]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor, as head of the judiciary, is responsible for dealing with all matters of judicial conduct. He takes a firm line with any Judge whose behaviour falls short of what both he and the public expects. There have been seven instances in the past 12 months where the Lord Chancellor has had sufficient cause to reprimand a Judge for his or her behaviour. Six of these cases concerned behaviour in court, and one concerned behaviour outside court. These reprimands have either been in the form of a letter from the Lord Chancellor or, at his instigation, at a meeting between the Judge and the Presiding Judge. In a further case, the Lord Chancellor decided not to re-appoint a Deputy District Judge for a final possible year.

Family Graduated Fees Scheme

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the Lord Chancellor will assess the final comments he invited the Family Law Bar Association to provide, before seeking to implement any new family graduated fees scheme. [150663]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor and I are considering the comments made by the Family Law Bar Association in response to the Lord Chancellor's final proposals on the structure of the scheme and rates to be paid and on the draft regulations to bring the scheme into force. The Lord Chancellor has previously agreed revisions to the structure of the scheme to address a number of concerns raised by the Bar Council and the Family Law Bar Association.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consultations the Lord Chancellor has had with the Family Law Bar Association regarding a new family graduated fees scheme. [150662]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor and I have consulted extensively with the Bar Council and the Family Law Bar Association. The main consultation period was extended by a number of weeks at the request of the Bar Council to allow further time for consideration of the Lord Chancellor's proposals. Following the consultation exercise, the Lord Chancellor has met with the chairman of the Bar Council on several occasions to discuss the concerns raised by the Family Law Bar Association.

Departmental IT Projects

Mr. Field: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the IT projects the Lord Chancellor's Department plans to undertake in the next year; and if he will state in each case the (a) expected date of commencement and completion and (b) cost. [151467]

Mr. Lock: The following is a list of the IT projects the Lord Chancellor's Department plans to undertake in the next year. Probity and value for money in contracting for IT projects is ensured through compliance with EC public procurement rules, UK Government domestic procurement policy and best practice guidance, government accounting rules and national audit requirements.

I am pleased to say that the Lord Chancellor's Department has already implemented a number of the recommendations outlined in the report "Successful IT—Modernising Government in Action", which was published in May 2000, and will continue to work towards full implementation.

Project	Commencement padate	Completion date	Cost (£)	Comment
IMS (Itineraries Management System)	Not yet finalised	March 2002	800,000	Currently in the specification stage. No contract awarded, completion and cost figures are estimates only.
CLAT 2 (Centralisation of Crown Court Legal Aid)	Not yet finalised	February 2002	[1]—	Currently in the specification stage, no contract awarded; go-live is an estimate only. No cost information is available, as indicative prices have not yet been sought from suppliers.
XGSI (connection to Government secure Intranet for transmission of confidential material)	April 2001	Not yet known	[1]—	The full scope of the project is currently being finalised. PFI suppliers are preparing design and costs for a range of options and we are therefore not yet in a position to confirm completion date or cost.

[1] Not yet known

Mr. Field: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the IT projects currently undertaken in his Department; and if he will state the (a) expected completion date and (b) cost of each project. [151514]

Mr. Lock: The following is a list of the IT projects currently undertaken in the Lord Chancellor's Department. Probity and value for money in contracting for IT projects is ensured through compliance with EC public procurement rules, UK Government domestic procurement policy and best practice guidance, Government accounting rules and National Audit requirements.

I am pleased to say that the Lord Chancellor's Department has already implemented a number of the recommendations outlined in the report "Successful IT—Modernising Government in Action", which was published in May 2000, and will continue to work towards full implementation.

Project	Completion Date	Cost	Comment
MIS (Management Information System)	Late 2002	£14 million	MIS is being implemented in three phases. The completion date shown reflects the expected implementation date for Phase 3.
CLAT (Criminal Legal Aid Transition)	March 2001	£575,000	—
LIBRA	Late 2003	£318 million	LIBRA is a PFI project. The completion date relates to the physical rollout of the service. The cost shown relates to the provision of the service over the life of the contract (i.e. 2013) and includes physical rollout and ongoing service charges.
CAFCASS (Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service)	April 2001	£5.8 million	IT Infrastructure project initiated by the Lord Chancellor's Department. CAFCASS will become an NDPB from 1 April 2001.

Project	Completion Date	Cost	Comment
CaseMan+	June 2002	£7.5 million	This project is being implemented in two Phases. The date shown relates to the implementation of Phase 2.
The Crown Court Programme	2005	Between £94 million–£125 million	The CCP incorporates a number of projects. These have not been broken down as the exact nature of each has yet to be settled. The Programme covers case progression, in-court workstations, digital audio recording, electronic presentation of evidence and provision of information to court users and the public.
MANIFEST (Estates Management Finance System)	April 2001	£4.23 million	—
JUROR (computerised jury summoning and management system)	May 2001	£3.9 million	—
IRIS (Immigration Appellate Authority database system)	Summer 2001	£10 million	IRIS implemented in four Phases. Completion date shown refers to implementation of Phase 4.
IAA Judicial Support Services (IT for Judiciary and Voice Recognition)	Early 2002	Not yet known	Final costs not yet known as the pilot is still in the very early stages of development.
PREMA PILOT (allows solicitors to apply by email directly to judges about cases proceeding in Preston County Court)	August 2001	£65,000
LINE·ISSUE (allows anyone to commence and progress specified civil cases using the internet)	Early 2002	£2 million	Time scales and costs are indicative only as the project is only just reaching project initiation phase.
ARAMIS (outsource of PGO's IT services to LCD's existing PFI supplier)	Not yet known	Not yet known	Proposals are being sought form PFI providers for the outsourced provision of IT services to Public Guardianship Office, Court Funds Office and Office of the Official Solicitor and Public Trustee (following the re-structuring of the Public Trust Office). Proposals have been submitted but no decision has been taken on whether to proceed or on the scope of proposal to be accepted. Therefore no cost of completion data is available and no contract has been awarded.
MERIS (Mental Health Renaissance Information System)	March 2003	£3.2 million	Costs quoted are estimates based on project investment appraisal.
Electronic Records Management (Public Guardianship Office)	September 2003	£500,000	Costs quoted are estimates based on project investment appraisal.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the contracts that exist between Serco and his Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151339]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor's Department replies on behalf of its agencies and HM Registry, the Public Record Office and the Northern Ireland Court Service.

No contracts exist or have been entered into with Serco in the last three years. However, contracts have been entered into with companies which are similarly named. Details are listed as shown:

Serco Ltd. January 1998 to December 2000

Gross value £6,232.68 (Refuse collection)

Serco Systems Ltd. June 1998 to January 2000

Gross value £80,891.71 (Security Telecommunications equipment)

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) men and (b) women who were appointed justices of the peace for the Greater London area during the last 12 months were from an ethnic minority background. [151016]

Jane Kennedy: In the 1999–2000 financial year (the latest figures available) 38 people (14 men and 24 women) from an ethnic minority background were appointed as justices of the peace in the Greater London area out of a total of 175 appointments made; that is 21.7 per cent. of the total.

Ministerial Visits

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will list the Ministers in her Department who visited any of the constituencies which are in the Peterborough unitary authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001, indicating in each case (a) the date of the visit, (b) the constituencies included in the visit and (c) if the local hon. Member met the Minister. [151030]

Jane Kennedy: No Lord Chancellor's Department Ministers visited any of the constituencies in the Peterborough unitary authority are between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Helen Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals there are to amend the Lord Chancellor's Department departmental expenditure limit and running costs limits for 2000–01. [151285]

Mr. Lock: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class V, Votes 1, 2 and 3 the Lord Chancellor's Department's Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £29,818,000 from £2,638,861,000 to £2,668,679,000.

The increase is the net effect of:

take up of year end flexibility to meet increased capital charges on the civil estate, to fund Change Programme, to meet increased expenditure on the Libra project, for legal aid expenditure and other running costs expenditure (£23,437,000)

funding of the Children and Family Court Advisory Service and Support Service (CAFCASS) from both Home Office (£3,000,000) and Department of Health (£3,000,000) a contribution towards the costs of inspection for the Youth Justice Board from the Home Office (£23,000)

the costs of recruiting and re-appointing panel members for the Unified Appeals Tribunals from the Department of Social Security (£73,000)

funding relating to the Unfair Contract Terms project from the Department of Trade and Industry (£8,000) a transfer relating to the Publication of Local Authority Reports project from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (£11,000) a contribution towards the costs of District Judge redeployment from the Home Office (£467,000) a transfer relating to CMF2 Interface Development funding for the JUROR and the Phoenix interface from the Home Office (£32,000) a transfer in respect of Armed Forces Discipline Act from the Ministry of Defence (£340,000)

following deferral in the responsibility for Warrant Enforcement a transfer to the Home Office (-£860,000) a contribution towards the costs of IBIS (Integrating Business and Information Systems) Criminal Justice Systems Unit to the Home Office (-£200,000) relating to the Group of States Against Corruption (GRECO) a transfer to the Home Office (-£23,000) in respect of modernising the courts, grants from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund (£510,000).

The increase will be offset by transfers from other Departmental Expenditure Limits as stated, and a charge on the DEL Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The running cost limit for Lord Chancellor's Department Class V, Vote 1 will be increased by £30,885,000 from £611,797,000 to £642,682,000. The increase is in respect of:

take up of end of year flexibility arrangements (£20,240,000) release of funds from the Departmental Unallocated Provision (£2,308,000)

additional VAT recoveries on contracted out services (£8,084,000)

transfer from the Home Office in respect of contribution to the costs of inspection for the Youth Justice Board (£23,000) transfer from the Department of Social Security relating to the costs of recruiting and re-appointing panel members for the Unified Appeals Tribunals (£52,000) transfer from the Department of Trade and Industry relating to the Unfair Contract Terms project (£8,000) transfer from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions relating to the Publication of Local Authority Reports project (£11,000) transfer from the Ministry of Defence relating to Armed Forces Discipline Act (£340,000) wider market initiative receipts (£42,000)

transfer to the Home Office relating to contribution towards the costs of the IBIS (Integrating Business and Information Systems) Criminal Justice Systems Unit (–£200,000) transfer to the Home Office relating to the Group of States Against Corruption (GRECO) (–£23,000).

The running cost limit for Northern Ireland Court Service, Class V, Vote 2 will be increased by £3,538,000 from £33,566,000 to £37,104,000. The increase is a result of:

take up of year end flexibility (£122,000)

additional VAT recoveries on contracted out services (£543,000)

costs of Omagh bomb inquest (£1,613,000); and increase in capital charge (£1,000,000) to be sourced from surplus Appropriation in Aid modernising the courts from the Civil Service Modernisation Fund (£260,000).

The running cost limit for Public Records Office, Class V, Vote 3 will increase by £4,778,000 from £27,698,000 to £32,476,000. This increase is as a result of:

take up of year end flexibility (£500,000)

lottery grant from the Heritage Lottery fund in respect of the project to microfilm WW1 Soldiers' Documents (£620,000) wider markets initiative receipts (£450,000)

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

NATO

1. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he discussed the structure, functions and membership of NATO when he met the US President and Secretary of State. [149700]

Mr. Vaz: When my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met Secretary of State Powell in Washington on 6 February both agreed that maintaining NATO as an effective transatlantic military alliance is fundamental to European security.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made it clear in his joint statement with President Bush on 23 February that this Government are committed to a stronger Transatlantic Alliance and that NATO will remain the essential foundation of transatlantic security.

Middle East

9. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet the new Israeli administration to discuss the middle east peace process. [149710]

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet the new Israeli administration to discuss the Middle East peace process. [149735]

Mr. Wilson: I have seen the Israeli Ambassador several times since taking up my post. I hosted a lunch for Eitan Bentsur on 15 February.

23. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process. [149725]

32. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of the prospects for permanent peace in the middle east. [149734]

Mr. Wilson: The cycle of violence is undermining the confidence of both sides in the peace process. I am encouraged by Prime Minister Designate Sharon's statement that he plans to continue with the peace process and to ease the conditions for Palestinians. However, the closures in the Occupied Territories breed resentment and fuel violence. The UK continues to urge both sides to take the steps needed to restore calm and re-engage in whole-hearted peace efforts.

35. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts he has had with the Israeli Government and Palestinian authority since the Israeli prime ministerial election. [149738]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the new Israeli Ambassador on 14 February and Prime Minister Sharon's special envoy, Eitan Bentsur, on 15 February. He also met with the Palestinian General Delegate on 15 February.

Syria

13. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Syrian regime about the sheltering of Aloïs Brunner. [149714]

Mr. Vaz: We have not made representations to the Syrian Government about Aloïs Brunner. There is general agreement that he is almost certainly dead. Inquiries in recent years by the French and German Governments and by journalists have failed to produce evidence of his whereabouts.

Guatemala and Belize

14. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent talks held in Miami on the border dispute between Guatemala and Belize. [149715]

Mr. Battle: We welcome the talks between Belize and Guatemala held under the auspices of the Organisation of American States (OAS). After a constructive meeting in Miami on 16 and 17 January they signed a Plan of Action to implement an Agreement on Confidence Building Measures which they had agreed in Washington on 8 November 2000.

At further talks in Washington on 5–7 February they agreed a process for addressing the substantive aspects of their border dispute. They have agreed to hold a Ministerial meeting in Washington on 21–23 May.

We welcome the constructive spirit in which these talks are being conducted.

Turkey

15. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Government of Turkey. [149717]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary had a bilateral meeting with Foreign Minister Cem in the margins of the OSCE Ministerial Council in Vienna in November. They also met briefly at the NATO Foreign Ministers meeting in Brussels in December, and are both attending the North Atlantic Council in Brussels today. FCO Ministers are also in regular contact with the Turkish Ambassador in London.

India (Export Licences)

16. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's role in processing export licences for sales to India; and how many such applications are currently awaiting processing by his Department. [149718]

Mr. Wilson: As an adviser to the DTI, we consider all export licence applications on a case-by-case basis against the consolidated EU and national export licensing criteria. In 2000, the FCO processed over 1,200 export licence applications for India. As of 20 February, the FCO was considering 34 Standard Individual Export Licence applications for India and 23 Open Individual Export Licences which included India as a destination.

Egypt

17. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the UK's relations with Egypt. [149719]

Mr. Wilson: The British Government have excellent relations with the Government of Egypt. UK/Egypt trade relations are also very strong and continue to grow; we are now the largest non-Arab investor in Egypt. I visited Egypt last month.

Ecuador

18. Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had regarding the political situation in Ecuador. [149720]

Mr. Battle: I spoke to the Ecuadorean Ambassador about the political situation in his country when he called on me on 1 February.

The Permanent Under-Secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Sir John Kerr, also held wide-ranging discussions with Ministers and senior officials when he visited Ecuador on 14–15 January.

We have been following recent events closely and are pleased to note that the recent disputes between the Government and protesters over the economic reform measures have been settled.

Kashmir

19. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Kashmir. [149721]

Mr. Wilson: We have welcomed the recent developments in Kashmir, including the announcement by the Indian Prime Minister on 22 February to extend the ceasefire by Indian security forces until the end of May. We believe this indicates a commitment to finding a peaceful solution to the Kashmir conflict. We hope that the ceasefire, and the Pakistani Government's policy of maximum restraint, will help create the conditions for a settlement to be reached. We call on both Governments to continue to build on the desire for peace in Kashmir and resume their dialogue to find a solution. We also urge the militants to respond positively and end their violence.

NHS Recruitment

20. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations his Department has received from other Governments regarding recruitment on behalf of the NHS of staff in their countries. [149722]

Mr. Wilson: The recruitment of staff for the NHS is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and his Department. However, we have received a number of representations on the international recruitment of medical staff as part of our normal bilateral dialogues with other countries.

Recruiting medical staff from around the world to help improve the NHS presents an opportunity further to encourage international co-operation and exchange. But we also need to ensure that this recruitment does not undermine local health care systems in developing countries. The 1999 NHS Guidance on International Recruitment states that NHS employers should not actively recruit from developing countries that are experiencing shortages of their own.

Pollution and Contamination

21. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps (a) the UK and (b) the European Union are taking to tackle environmental pollution and nuclear contamination problems in the former Soviet central Asian republics. [149723]

Mr. Battle: We are aware that water quality is one of the major environmental problems in Central Asia. The UK, in co-operation with other international donors, is encouraging improved regional water co-operation. We will also be supporting a project in the Nura-Ishim river basin in Kazakhstan to reduce industrial pollution levels.

We will be supporting a £600,000 project to produce a land use plan for the nuclear test site at Semipalatinsk in Kazakhstan. We are also considering funding a decommissioning plan for the Aktau Nuclear Power Plant, and UK experts are transferring technical know-how to the plant.

The EU is supporting various projects to tackle environmental problems in Central Asia, such as water management and air pollution. It is also helping to fund the safe enclosure of the Aktau plant.

Charter of Fundamental Rights

22. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he plans to have with his European counterparts regarding the status of the EU charter of fundamental rights. [149724]

Mr. Vaz: The Charter was proclaimed as a political declaration at Nice in December. It was agreed that the status of the Charter would be reviewed at the next Intergovernmental Conference in 2004.

European Intergovernmental Conference

24. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place on the agenda for the next IGC in respect of European integration. [149726]

26. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place concerning the agenda for the 2004 IGC in relation to institutional reform. [149728]

Mr. Vaz: A Declaration in the Treaty of Nice sets out four issues to be discussed by the next Intergovernmental Conference in 2004. These are a more precise delimitation of competencies between the European Union and member states, the status of the Charter of Fundamental Rights, simplification of the Treaties, and the role of national Parliaments in European architecture.

The Declaration also called for a deeper and wider debate on the future of the European Union, and mandated the Swedish and Belgian Presidencies to initiate a wide-ranging discussion with all interested parties, including representatives of national Parliaments, members of civil society and the candidate states. The Swedish Presidency will report on this process to the Gothenburg European Council in June.

Chile

25. Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the decision of Judge Guzman in Chile to bring charges against ex-President Pinochet in connection with the caravan of death. [149727]

Mr. Battle: On 31 January Judge Guzman charged ex-President Pinochet with being the co-author of 57 deaths and 18 kidnappings perpetrated by the so-called "Caravan of Death" in Chile. We believe that those responsible for such atrocities should be brought to justice and we support the Chilean authorities in their pursuit of the due process of Chilean law.

East Timor

27. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of the international community in East Timor, with particular reference to the international court it has set up there. [149729]

Mr. Battle: With the full support of the international community, the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNAET) is establishing institutions and preparing the ground for elections and independence later in the year.

We welcome recent progress made by the UNAET Prosecutor General in bringing to account those responsible for committing crimes in East Timor. We call on the UN, the East Timorese leadership and the Indonesians to build on their achievements and to maintain momentum.

Philippines

29. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in the Philippines. [149731]

Mr. Battle: We are pleased to see the recent political crisis resolved peacefully, in accordance with the Philippines' democratic traditions. We note President Arroyo's pledges for good governance and poverty alleviation. We welcome her resumption of peace negotiations with the rebel groups. We look forward to working closely with her Administration.

Missile Defence

30. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with the United States Administration on proposed anti-missile defence systems. [149732]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary recently held discussions in Washington with Vice-President Cheney, National Security Adviser Rice and Secretary of State Powell on a range of issues including National Missile Defence.

These discussions, and those my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister had last week with President Bush, clearly demonstrated the constructive approach being taken by the Bush Administration. The US Administration reaffirmed their commitment to a National Missile defence system but stressed their willingness to take their time to consult Allies, Russia and others. They confirmed that no decision had yet been made on the development or deployment of a specific system. It is therefore too early to assess any implications for the UK.

Burma

31. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the emerging dialogue between the Burmese regime and opposition figures. [149733]

Mr. Battle: We cautiously welcome reports that the Burmese regime have had a series of contacts with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi. We hope that these will eventually be broadened to include the ethnic minorities and lead to a lasting peaceful solution to the political problems in Burma. But the UK will not soften its policy until there is real progress in Burma.

Colombia

33. Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the US Government regarding the implementation of Plan Colombia by the Colombian Government. [149736]

Mr. Battle: We have had regular discussions with the US Government regarding the implementation of Plan Colombia. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster intends to discuss developments in Colombia with the new US Administration in March, as well as development of the separate EU package.

Democratic Republic of Congo

34. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the ambassador of the Democratic Republic of Congo; and what topics were discussed. [149737]

Mr. Wilson: My hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) met the Chargé d'Affaires for the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) when the DRC Foreign Minister visited the UK in December. The Special Representative for the Great Lakes met him on 2 February. On both occasions discussions focused on relaunching the Lusaka peace process.

Pakistan

36. Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Pakistani Government concerning the arrest, detention and beating of two Christian young men for distributing the video film "Jesus" in Jacobabad. [149739]

Mr. Wilson: We are aware that Khalid and Nasir Masih were arrested on 11 January for distributing videos and literature to the Christian community in Jacobabad. Our High Commission in Islamabad continues to raise our concerns over the position of religious minorities with the Pakistani authorities and maintains regular dialogue with Christian and human rights groups.

Iraq (Exports)

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what goods subject to strategic export controls have recently been approved for export to Iraq. [151647]

Mr. Battle: Following consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Ministry of Defence, the Department of Trade and Industry recently approved a licence to export computer equipment, including 10 Fujitsu Siemens Scenic ED-1170A computers and two Fujitsu Siemens Lifebook C-6545 Notebook computers, controlled under the Dual Use Items (Export Control) Regulations 2000, to Iraq for the use by the International Telecommunications Union (ITU) in its humanitarian activities. The export of these goods to Iraq has been approved by the UN Sanctions Committee.

Hong Kong

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will publish the next report to Parliament on Hong Kong and the Sino-British Joint Declaration. [151648]

Mr. Battle: The eighth report in this series, covering the period July-December 2000, was published today and copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House. A copy of the report is also available on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website (www.fco.gov.uk). The report includes a foreword by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary. I commend the report to the House.

Council of the European Union

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for March and the major European Union events for the period between 31 March and August. [151649]

Death Penalty

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at what stage it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to make representations against the use of the death penalty in cases of British nationals being tried overseas. [151836]

Mr. Wilson: Our overriding objective is to avoid the execution of British nationals. We will now express our opposition to the death penalty and its use on a British national at whatever stage and level is judged appropriate from the moment when the imposition of a death sentence on a British national becomes a possibility. Our previous policy was to make these representations only when the judicial process had been exhausted.

We have already taken action under the new policy in the case of Krishna Maharaj. Baroness Scotland, the Minister responsible for Consular matters, has written to the Florida State Attorney setting out the UK's opposition to the death penalty and requesting that the death sentence not be pursued in his case.

PRIME MINISTER

Chemical Industry

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings he has had with representatives of the chemical industry in the last 12 months; and what future health and environment legislation was discussed at them. [151298]

The Prime Minister: I have meetings with a wide range of organisations and individuals. As with previous Administrations, it is not my practice to provide details of such meetings.

Downing Street

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister what the total expenditure on 10 Downing street and the Prime Minister's office was, in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000; and what his estimate is for 2000–01. [151372]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 21 July 2000, Official Report, column 347W and on 2 November 2000, Official Report, column 575W. The cost for the full year 1997–98 was £7.3 million. The cost of my Office from 1 April 2000 to 31 December 2000 was £8.3 million.

As a result of a change in accounting policy, figures before 1997–98 and after 1 April 1997 are not exactly comparable, but for completeness, the recorded cost of the Prime Minister's Office in 1996–97 was £7 million.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Policies (North-East Derbyshire)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out, with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the North-East Derbyshire constituency, the effect on North-East Derbyshire of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [150885]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Details of the effects of a range of the Department's policies on the North-East Derbyshire constituency and on Derbyshire LEA have been placed in the Library.

CABINET OFFICE

Devolution

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent guidance has been offered to Government Departments on issues relating to devolution. [151646]

Marjorie Mowlam: I am today placing in the Library two further Devolution Guidance Notes which have recently been completed: DGN5—"The Role of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland Post-Devolution"—and DGN9—"Post-Devolution Primary Legislation Affecting Wales". These guidance notes will be made available on the Cabinet Office internet site at www.cabinet-office.gov.uk.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Pound: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to change the 2000–01 departmental expenditure limit or running costs limit for the Cabinet Office. [151199]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates:

The Departmental Expenditure Limit for Cabinet Office (Class XVII. Vote 1, Vote 3, Vote 4) will be increased by £1,290,000 from £260,259,000 to £261,549,000 and the gross running costs limit will be increased by £6,440,000 from £113,754,000 to £120,194,000.

This is mainly to take account of the following changes:

(a) A transfer payment from Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Class x, Vote 2) (£470,000) for digital certificates; a payment from Home Office (Class IV, Vote 1) (£559,000) for the News Co-ordination Centre and associated contingency arrangements; a payment from Ministry of Defence (Class VI, Vote 1) (£4,000) and Foreign Office (Class VII, Vote 1) (£52,000) for BBC monitoring service; and a payment to Privy Council Office (Class XVII, Vote 5) (£20,000) towards 2 Carlton Gardens.

(b) In addition to these changes additional income from the Confiscated Assets Fund towards the cost of setting a Unit to assist with anti-drugs co-ordination internationally (£225,000).

The increase will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pensions

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times in each of the last five years there have been claims for unpaid pension contributions to company pension funds from the redundancy fund set up under the Employment Rights Act 1996. [150698]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The table shows the numbers of workers for whom claims for pension scheme contributions have been made against the National Insurance Fund.

Year	Number
1998	367
1999	414
2000	387

I regret that corresponding figures are not available for earlier years.

Telehouse West Building

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when a decision will be taken on standby generation for the proposed Telehouse West building in the East India Docks. [151776]

Mr. Hain: I have today given clearance under Section 14(1) of the Energy Act 1976 to Telehouse Europe. Telehouse have been progressively developing their facilities at East India Docks. This standby facility, of around 30 MW, will supply the electricity needs of the proposed Telehouse West building in the event of a supply interruption. Such standby facilities are designed to ensure continuity of electricity supplies in the event of a partial of total interruption.

Copies of the press notice and decision letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will make appointments to the Chemical Weapons Convention National Authority Advisory Committee. [151779]

Dr. Howells: I have appointed Dr. T. D. Inch, formerly Secretary-General of the Royal Society of Chemistry, as chairman of this committee for a further period of four years.

I have also re-appointed four members and appointed three new members to the committee, as follows:

Mr. Ian Kenyon[1]—Formerly Executive Secretary, Preparatory Commission for the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons

Dr. Colin Kinnear[1]—Health, Safety and Environmental Manager, Asahi Glass Fluoropolymers

Mrs. Moira McMillan—Director, British Coatings Federation

Dr. Kenneth Patterson[1]—Site Process Safety Manager, Hickson and Welch

Mr. Julian Perry Robinson—Senior Fellow, Science Policy Research Unit, University of Sussex

Dr. Peter Plant—Formerly Insecticides Manufacturing Manager, Astra Zeneca

Dr. Richard Worswick—Chief Executive, the Laboratory of the Government Chemist

[1] New appointments

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Local Radio Stations

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will relax ownership rules for local radio stations. [151550]

Janet Anderson: The White Paper "A New Future for Communications", which the Government published for consultation in December, states that we will consider, with the Radio Authority, the possibility of devising a new regime for radio ownership to replace the current rules. We will decide how to proceed in the light of responses to the White Paper.

Channel 4

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the proceeds that would be realised from privatising Channel 4. [151547]

Janet Anderson: We have not estimated the proceeds that might be realised from privatising Channel 4.

Television Licences

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people who were previously entitled to a £5 television licence have applied for the free television licence introduced in November 2000. [151447]

Janet Anderson: Applications for free television licences for people living in accommodation which qualifies for the Accommodation for Residential Care (ARC) concessionary licence scheme are made by housing managers when existing ARC licences fall due for renewal, rather than by individual residents. Information provided by the BBC, which is responsible for the administration of both concessionary schemes, indicates that since November 2000 applications have been received from about 10,500 residential and nursing homes and sheltered housing schemes. A number of these applications have still to be processed but approximately 44,500 residents have so far benefited from a free TV licence. The renewal cycle for ARC licences is spread across the year, on a monthly basis, and the BBC expects approximately 500,000 residents to qualify in total.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to amend his Department's expenditure limit and running cost limit for 2000–01. [151777]

Mr. Rooker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class XII, Vote 3, the Department of Social Security Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2000–01 will be increased by £66,361,000 from £3,590,339,000 to £3,656,700,000.

The increase is the net effect of additional Comprehensive Spending Review funding of £30,000,000 (running costs), and an increase of £20,000,000 (running costs) for the additional costs associated with the winter fuel payments. Other changes result from a net transfer of £14,315,000 (running costs), mainly for the administration costs of the ONE project, offset by a corresponding reduction on Class I, Vote 3 (Employment Service), a transfer of £1,334,000 (running costs) for expenditure on New Deal for Communities, offset by a corresponding reduction on Class III, Vote 1 (Housing, construction, regeneration, regional policy, planning and countryside and wildlife, England), a transfer of £1,065,000 (running costs) for the cost of collecting expenses associated with road traffic accidents, offset by a corresponding reduction on Class II, Vote 1 (Hospital, community health, family health and related services, England), a transfer of £200,000 (running costs) towards the administrative costs of the Teenage Pregnancy Unit, offset by a corresponding increase on Class II, Vote 2 (Department of Health administration, miscellaneous health and social services, England), a transfer of £99,000 (running costs) towards the administrative costs of making winter fuel payments, offset by a corresponding increase in Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland) and an increase of £173,000 (running costs) for the cost of collecting expenses associated with road traffic accidents in Scotland and Wales. There is also an increase of £7,206,000 (running costs) associated with services provided to other Government Departments on a repayment basis, an increase of £7,178,000 (running costs) arising from increased payments of Value Added Tax on contracted out services, an increase of £500,000 (running costs) associated with expenditure on sub-let accommodation, a reduction of £1,289,000 (running costs) following a reclassification to other current expenditure and an increase of £1,081,000 (other current expenditure) arising from increased secondments. Appropriation in Aid increased by £32,389,000.

Changes in the Welfare to Work provision arise from an increase of £1,276,000 in the administration costs of measures to help unemployed people move from Welfare to Work, of which £776,000 is under the End Year Flexibility Scheme as set out in Table 7 of the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper, Cm 4812, published on 18 July 2000, an increase of £1,212,000 in the administration costs of measures to help people with a disability or long term illness move into or remain in work, a transfer of £156,000 towards the cost of the innovative scheme lead by the Prince's Trust in respect of the New Deal for Disabled People, offset by a corresponding increase on Class 1, Vote 3 (Employment Service) and a transfer of £306,000 towards the administrative costs of New Deal for Partners of Unemployed People, offset by a corresponding reduction on Class I, Vote 3 Employment Service.

As a result of these changes and the reclassification of £6,500,000 to running cost related receipts the running cost limit of this Department will be increased by £58,799,000 from £3,219,522,000 to £3,278,321,000 and the running costs limit of the Welfare to Work programme will be increased by £2,638,000 from £13,996,000 to £16,634,000.

Increases will be offset by transfers or a charge to the DEL Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are claiming the minimum income guarantee in (a) Great Britain, (b) each region of Great Britain and (c) each parliamentary constituency. [151778]

Mr. Darling: The information has been placed in the Library.

Departmental Policies (Norwich, North)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effect on the Norwich, North constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [151141]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's policies and initiatives have made a significant contribution to the Government's overall objectives of:

Eradicating child poverty in 20 years, and halving it within 10;

Promoting work as the best form of welfare for people of working age while protecting the position of those in greatest need; and,

Combating poverty and promoting security and independence in retirement for today's and tomorrow's pensioners.

These goals are being pursued nationwide and our achievements are set out in our annual "Opportunity for all" reports. Our second report, "Opportunity for all—One year on: making a difference" (CM4865, September 2000) sets out what progress has been made in the past year, as well as highlighting what more needs to be done. Nationwide statistical information is necessarily more complete than constituency level data, but the following provides a comparative guide to the effect of the Department's policies and actions in Norwich, North since May 1997.

Measures in our first four Budgets will lift over 1 million children out of poverty. These include record increases to Child Benefit and Working Families Tax Credit, increases in the income-related benefits, the minimum wage and tax changes.

Child benefit will be worth £15.50 a week for the eldest child and £10.35 a week for other children from April 2001: nationally about 7 million families receive child benefit, and in Norwich, North 11,145 families benefit.

We now have the lowest unemployment rate in 25 years. The New Deals have helped lone parents, the young unemployed, the long-term unemployed, the over 50s and partners of the unemployed to move from benefit into work. In the period since May 1997 the number of people claiming Jobseekers' Allowance nationally has reduced from 1,562,400 to 1,044,900; in Norwich, North the number has reduced from 2,800 to 1,700. Since May 1997 the number of lone parents who claim Income Support has decreased from 1,013,500 to 894,100 nationally and in Norwich, North from 1,600 to 1,100.

Older people are disproportionately affected by fuel poverty. So we have introduced Winter Fuel Payments to help with their heaviest fuel bill. This winter, the payment is £200 for households who qualify. Over 21,000 older people in Norwich, North have received a Winter Fuel Payment for this winter.

To demonstrate our commitment to combating pensioner poverty, this year we will spend £4.5 billion extra in real terms on pensioners. Some 19,400 pensioners in Norwich, North will benefit from the substantial increases in the basic State pension this April and next; this year's increase is £5 a week for single pensioners and £8 for couples. In addition we have introduced free TV licences for the over 75s of whom we estimate there are about 7,800 in Norwich, North. 2,700 pensioner families in Norwich, North are receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee, which we introduced in April 1999 to help our poorest pensioners. From April they will be at least £15 a week, or £800 a year, better off in real terms as a result of Government measures since 1997.

Other reforms in the pipeline include: the new Pension Credit in 2003 designed to ensure that pensioners benefit from their savings; the launch of Stakeholder Pensions in April this year; and the introduction of the State Second Pension in April 2002 both of which will help provide greater security for tomorrow's pensioners.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints were made against the Benefits Agency in regard to Disability Living Allowance in each of the last three years; how many such cases have been investigated by the Ombudsman; in how many cases was compensation awarded; and what the (a) highest and (b) average level of compensation was. [150594]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 26 February 2001:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many complaints were made against the Benefits Agency in regard to Disability Living Allowance (DLA) in each of the lat three years; how many such cases have been investigated by the Ombudsman; in how many cases was compensation awarded; and what the (a) highest and (b) average level of compensation was.

The information you requested is not available in exactly the format you want. The information that is available is as follows.

1. Number of complaints made in respect of DLA by letter, telephone or in person:

	Number
April 1998 to March 1999	4,276
April 1999 to March 2000	10,656
April 2000 to December 2000	10,467

These numbers include complaints about standards of service and cases in which dissatisfaction has been expressed with the outcome of benefit decisions.

There has been a steady increase in the number of complaints throughout this period. Between April 1999 and June 2000, this can be attributed to an increase in work on hand before and after the introduction of DMA and it should be noted that the figures have steadily decreased each month since July 2000. Changes to DLA procedures led initially to a significant increase in the time taken to process each case, which created a temporary backlog of work. This was tackled as a priority and is now under control.

The information about DLA Ombudsman cases and special payments is not kept separately from Attendance Allowance (AA) cases.

2. Number of DLA and AA cases investigated by the Ombudsman:

	Number
April 1998 to March 1999	137
April 1999 to March 2000	119
April 2000 to January 2001	149

3. The total number of DLA and AA Special Payments made:

	Number
April 1998 to March 1999	535
April 1999 to March 2000	659
April 2000 to January 2001	869

4. The value of DLA and AA Special Payments:

	Highest award	Average award
April 1998 to March 1999	10,000	499.00
April 1999 to March 2000	7,134.50	262.14
April 2000 to January 2001	14,556.50	320.75

I hope this is helpful.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. Smith of Ferndown will receive his Winter Fuel Payment; and when Mrs. Smith will receive her Winter Fuel Payment for 1998 and 1999. [151433]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of Winter Fuel Payments is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 26 February 2001:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when Mr Smith of Ferndown will receive his winter fuel payment; and when Mrs Smith will receive her winter fuel payment for 1998 and 1999.

Mr Smith requested his claim on 16 January 2001. His application has now been Processed and is awaiting a decision on entitlement. Mr. Smith will receive notification of his entitlement and any payment due by the end of February.

Mrs Smith's claim form was issued to her on 23 January 2001. Her application has been partially processed, however her date of birth has not been verified. Mrs Smith has been requested to submit her birth certificate so that her claim can be processed in full.

I hope this reply is helpful.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

The hon. Member for Leicester, East

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) discussed potential conflicts of interest with the Permanent Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he was the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department. [150664]

Mr. Lock: It is the normal practice of the Permanent Secretary to discuss with Ministers, when they are appointed, whether they have any potential conflicts of interest. Such discussions took place with my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) when he became Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department. Chapter 9 of the Ministerial Code sets out the circumstances in which Ministers should take the advice of their Permanent Secretary if they identify a potential conflict of interest. Such matters are confidential between the Permanent Secretary and the Minister concerned.

Tribunal Funding

Ms Coffey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans there are to extend public funding for proceedings before the VAT and Duties Tribunal, the General and Special Commissioners of Income Tax and the Protection of Children Act Tribunal. [151775]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor has today issued for consultation a direction which extends publicly funded representation to some tribunals: certain proceedings before the VAT and Duties Tribunal, certain proceedings before the General and Special Commissioners of Income Tax and all proceedings before the Protection of Children Act Tribunal.

The direction will authorise the Legal Services Commission to fund legal help and legal representation in these proceedings, subject to applications passing the statutory tests of an applicant's means and the merits of the case.

The Commission will be able to fund representation in proceedings before the VAT and Duties Tribunal and the General and Special Commissioners of Income Tax, in the minority of those proceedings which concerns the imposition of penalties which may be considered criminal in ECHR terms. This will ensure that the Government's commitments under Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights are met in full.

Although the Protection of Children Act Tribunal does not impose financial penalties, we consider that the overwhelming importance of the proceedings to the individuals involved means that legal representation should be provided at public expense to those who cannot afford it.

The consultation period will last one month. We intend to bring in the new arrangements with effect from 2 April 2001. Copies of the direction have been placed in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

1A Page Street, Westminster

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of works carried out to the building at 1A Page street, Westminster, since his Department took occupation of it; and what proportion of these costs was met at public expense. [151463]

Mr. Morley: Works carried out by the Department at public expense since we took occupation total £615,883 (including fees for surveyors etc. and VAT). Of this, £228,376 will be recovered from the developer for remedial work which we have carried out on his behalf to minimise disturbance to staff in the building. The non-recoverable work was necessary to provide facilities for the workgroups in the building and to meet the changing needs.

The developer and his contractor continue to be responsible for all external areas of the building (including the glazing) and are responsible for correcting defects. We have no details of the cost of this remedial work, which is not at public expense.

Beef Industry

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect on the British beef industry of the EU Commission proposals on beef to go before the Council of Ministers on 26 and 27 February; and if he will make a statement. [151122]

Ms Quin [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The Commission proposals are for a seven point plan to address the serious disruption of the beef and veal market resulting from the BSE crisis.

The Commission's stated aim is to limit production in order to reflect the fall in demand for beef in many EU member states. The impact on the UK beef industry of these proposals is currently being evaluated, taking into account its special characteristics and the importance of safeguarding our extensively reared, grass fed production.

Flood Prevention

Paddy Ashdown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the total expenditure by his Department on flood prevention was for (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02, (c) 2002–03 and (d) 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [150419]

Mr. Morley: Following increases in both of the last two spending reviews and the announcements of an additional £51 million in November and a further £6.6 million in January, the current MAFF spending plans for flood defence and coast protection are as follows:

£ million

	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04
Grant and supplementary credit approvals for capital improvements, catchment plans etc.	71	96	106	114
Emergency response and repair	5	7	—	—
Other (including storm tide forecasting service)	6	6	8	8
Total	82	109	114	122

These increases provide evidence of the Government's commitment to sustaining flood and coastal defences.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reimburse local authorities for their expenditure on supporting unaccompanied asylum-seeking children. [151650]

Mr. Straw: I have today laid before the House a Special Grant Report which sets out the arrangements for reimbursing local authorities in England for the costs of supporting unaccompanied asylum seeking children as a result of their duties under the Children Act 1989.

The Special Grant Report explains the areas of expenditure which will be eligible for the grant and the time scales for local authorities to make their claims.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reasons maternity grants for asylum seekers are issued in the form of vouchers; [150964]

(2) for what reasons maternity grants in the form of vouchers for asylum seekers are deemed to expire after one month. [150965]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 ends asylum seekers' entitlement to all social security benefits and is replaced by a system of support in kind, with small cash payments. The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has on a phase basis assumed responsibility for supporting all new eligible asylum seekers and this support is provided mainly by way of vouchers. The maternity payment is provided in the same way.

The maternity payment vouchers have a four week expiry date because the maternity grant is provided to assist with the initial costs of provision for a new baby.

Policy and Strategy Units

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his strategic policy team was established; which of its reports are placed in the public domain; how many departmental or non-departmental special advisers participate in its work; how many regular (a) non-departmental and (b) departmental staff participate in its work; and how many of these work for the unit on a full-time basis. [150369]

Mr. Straw: The Head of the Strategic Policy Team took up post in April 2000. The rest of the team was then recruited, the last member joining in October 2000.

The team is an integral part of the Home Department, producing research and advice for Ministers. Its first major piece of work has been co-ordinating the production of "Criminal Justice: The Way Ahead", which was laid before Parliament on 26 February.

The team comprises eight departmental members of staff, seven of whom are full time. It employs one full time agency secretary. Where it examines issues cutting across more than one Department, it may involve staff from other Departments or from outside Government on secondment for the length of the project in question. For example, in its current work on criminal justice, it has received secondments for short periods of two officials from the Lord Chancellor's Department and one from the Crown Prosecution Service.

Special advisers contribute to the team's work as necessary in the same way as to that of other parts of the Department, and consistent with the Model Contract for Special Advisers.

Naturalisation Application

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy that time spent considering a previous unsuccessful application for naturalisation should be deducted from the average waiting time for a decision in a subsequent naturalisation application. [150376]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 15 February 2001]: Where the normal criteria for granting priority are met, a subsequent application would normally be started ahead of its turn in the queue. In some instances the work done on the initial application may facilitate determination of a second application.

Departmental Entertainment Costs

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total gross running cost to his Department was in the last 12 months of entertaining by (a) Ministers and (b) officials. [149046]

Mr. Straw: The provisional total gross running cost to my Department in the last 12 months to 31 January 2001 of entertainment by Ministers was £6,234 and by officials was £160,095. Modest hospitality is provided for official visitors and guests, for example overseas delegations, in circumstances which are beneficial to the interests of the Department and in discharge of my responsibilities as a Cabinet Minister.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported cases involving domestic violence there were in England and Wales during the last 12 months. [151013]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Domestic violence is not separately identified in recorded crime statistics collected by the Home Office. However, estimates for the numbers of domestic violence offences in 1999 are available from the 2000 British Crime Survey (BCS). Figures are also available from returns submitted to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary relating to domestic violence 'incidents' notified by police forces in England and Wales (whether or not they are subsequently recorded as crimes).

The best estimate from the BCS is that there were 761,000 offences of domestic violence in 1999. Returns from the police indicate that there were 398,670 incidents notified to the police in 1999–2000. The BCS figure is higher than that from police 'incident' returns because not all victims will report what happened to the police. The BCS figure is an estimate only. As it is derived from a sample, it is subject to sampling error. Also, some respondents may be unwilling to reveal experience of domestic violence to interviewers. A different—more confidential—approach to measuring domestic violence in the 1996 sweep of the BCS produced higher estimates than from the conventional approach, as used to derive the 761,000 incidents in 1999.

The BCS and police figures cover incidents against men and women. In the BCS, 74 per cent. of the offences involved women as victims (around 560,000 incidents). This information is not available from the police 'incident' returns.

Child Abuse

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent reports he has received from Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary on the cost-effectiveness of police trawling investigations relating to child abuse allegations. [151277]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There have been no reports from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary on the cost-effectiveness of child abuse investigations. The police have a duty to investigate all allegations of child abuse fully and thoroughly, and in accordance with the law. It is for individual Chief Constables to decide on the most appropriate methods of investigation in each case.

I have been in discussion with the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary about what more can be done to ensure that the procedures in place for conducting these very difficult investigations are fair and robust.

ACPO are currently drawing up a manual for Senior Investigating Officers working in child abuse cases, which will include a section on good practice in tracing potential witnesses and obtaining corroborative evidence. This will provide detailed operational guidance on how to conduct such investigations, while recognising that investigators must follow emerging evidence and treat each case on its merits. In parallel with this, an inter-agency working group is currently reviewing the procedures for investigating the abuse of children in care or looked after children in the context of taking forward the Government's response to the Waterhouse Report "Lost in Care". This review will lead to the development of practical, procedural guidance to the police and social services on the handling of complex abuse investigations.

Both sets of best practice guidance should be completed by the end of March. Together they will provide a coherent policy framework for how to conduct child abuse investigations, building on best practice drawn from around the country and ensuring that the necessary procedures are in place to safeguard against the risk of false allegations.

Prison Visits

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the Boards of Visitors which have published their annual report in each of the last five years. [151495]

Mr. Boateng: Boards of Visitors annual reports are not published documents. They are made to the Secretary of State who permits the Board to publish their annual report, if they wish, subject to the removal of any material which is confidential. Boards are, however, encouraged to publish their reports and the Boards which have done so over the past five years are shown in the table.

Opposition Policies

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to the answer of the Minister for the Cabinet Office of 11 December 2000, Official Report, columns 47–48W, what costings of (a) Liberal Democrat and (b) Conservative Party policies his Department has (i) undertaken and (ii) co-ordinated in the previous 12 months; and if he will place copies of such costings in the Library; [146673]

(2) if special advisers in his Department have been involved in (a) co-ordinating, (b) costing and (c) presenting costings of policies of opposition parties; and if he will make a statement; [146672]

(3) pursuant to the answer of the Minister for the Cabinet Office of 11 December 2000, Official Report, columns 47–48W, what costings of (a) Liberal Democrat and (b) Conservative Party policies his Department has (i) undertaken and (ii) advised upon in the previous 12 months; and if he will place copies of such costings and relevant background documents in the Library. [146664]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, my right hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith), on 14 February 2001, Official Report, column 183W.

DEFENCE

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts that exist between Serco and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151350]

Dr. Moonie: The information is not readily available in the form requested. However, since 1 April 1998, the Ministry of Defence has placed 107 contracts with Serco companies, of which 69 are extant. I will write separately to my hon. Friend with a list of such contracts and will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House. The information sought on the number of contracts placed by the Department's executive agencies and associated public bodies with Serco companies is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mustard Gas

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence his Department has (a) collated and (b) evaluated regarding the burning of mustard gas at military establishments and its effect upon neighbouring civilian populations. [148906]

Dr. Moonie: Following the decision by the United Kingdom to abandon its offensive chemical weapons capability in 1956 there was a requirement to dispose of the stockpile of the chemical blister agent mustard which had been built up at the time of World War II.

In accordance with the practice of the day these stockpiles were burnt in either open pits or incinerators. No evaluations were made at the time of the effects on neighbouring civilian populations. However, the RAF has conducted extensive research into its historical disposal of chemical weapons.

Today any historical chemical weapons which are recovered are taken to CBD Porton Down for safe disposal. Part of the disposal process of any of these weapons which contain mustard includes incineration. This is undertaken in an on-site incinerator which meets all the standards set by the Environment Agency.

Depleted Uranium

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what checks are carried out on (a) batches of depleted uranium raw material and finished ammunition and (b) imported ammunition; [150081]

(2) what checks are undertaken to ensure that depleted uranium used for ammunition manufacture is not contaminated with other radioactive materials. [150080]

Mr. Spellar: It has long been known in the scientific community, the nuclear industry and by the Ministry of Defence that depleted uranium (DU) might contain minute traces of isotopes other than U-238, U-235 and U-234.

Two types of DU based ammunition are in-service with British Forces: the UK manufactured 120mm anti-armour round and the US manufactured 20mm RN Phalanx round.

My Department procures all ammunition to given specifications. It is the manufacturers' responsibility to establish the suitability of raw materials used in manufacture.

Phalanx ammunition is sold to the UK via the US Department of Defence (DOD). All of DOD's DU comes from three Department of Energy (DOE) gaseous diffusion plants: Paducah, Kentucky; Oak Ridge, Tennessee; and Portsmouth, Ohio. All three of these plants received recycled uranium that contained trace amounts of transuranics.

RO buy their DU from Starmet Corporation who in turn buy it from DOE. They have no practical way of determining exactly where the input material came from. They believe that it was mostly from Paducah, Kentucky, but it was all produced at their plants at Concord and Barnwell in the US.

Starmet have found traces of transuranic elements in their DU. However, the amounts were so small that the US Nuclear Regulatory Commission simply amended Starmet's licence to accommodate the traces. Given that the amounts of contaminates are so small, and pose no additional risk to health, it is not considered worthwhile to try to remove them.

On receipt by my Department, and periodically thereafter, all ammunition, including that containing DU, is subject to inspection in accordance with stringent guidelines. Where appropriate, in-service surveillance, proof and maintenance firing is undertaken to ensure that the ammunition continues to meet the required quality standards throughout its life. Before issue for use, DU ammunition is inspected, and the radiation dose rates are monitored to ensure that it meets transportation criteria. DU ammunition is also subject to regular dose rate monitoring in accordance with Departmental procedures while in storage depots.

There are no specific checks undertaken which determine whether or not the DU contained in UK in-service ammunition is contaminated with other radioactive materials. However, any significant increase in the quantity of high activity radionuclides would be detected by our routine radiation monitoring.

In view of the recent public interest in DU contamination by other radioactive materials, my Department intends to confirm the data provided by the manufacturer which was published on 7 February 2001, Official Report, columns 519–22W. We will analyse the composition of CHARM 3 ammunition using an independent laboratory, and publish the results.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the personnel who have contracted malaria as a result of deployment to Sierra Leone did not receive anti-malarial treatment until they were in Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [150672]

Dr. Moonie: As of 21 February, there were 113 confirmed cases of malaria among Service personnel who deployed to Sierra Leone. On the basis of the investigations undertaken by my Department, of these 113 cases, there are no more than 10 personnel who did not receive their anti-malarial treatment until after arriving in Sierra Leone. In all but one case this was as a result of their deploying at very short notice. Within 24 hours of these personnel arriving in theatre, however, the French drug Savarine was procured locally and distributed. Steps were immediately taken to procure Mefloquine, the preferred anti-malarial treatment, from the UK and all personnel taking Savarine transferred to Mefloquine within four days. The other individual was temporarily absent from his unit on duty just prior to deploying and missed the issue of Mefloquine. He was issued with Mefloquine as soon as the problem came to light between two to five days after his arrival in theatre.

No anti-malarial drug is 100 per cent. effective and the degree of protection can be subject to a wide range of factors; for example, the geographical location, the season, and the activities undertaken by the individuals concerned. Therefore, as well as anti-malarial drugs, other types of protection and environmental controls are used. Even with such precautions, however, malaria is not wholly preventable.

Tank Fleets

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 February 2001, Official Report, column 631W and his subsequent letter, (1) if he will list the serviceability targets for each year from 1995 to 2001 inclusive for (a) Warrior variants, (b) Challenger 1, (c) Challenger 2, (d) Saxon variants, (e) AVF 430 variants, (f) Sabre, (g) Striker, (h) Scimitar, (i) Spartan, (j) Sultan, (k) Samaritan and (l) Samson; and if he will make a statement; [151037]

(2) on what date the decision was made to change the system of fully operational serviceability targets for the Army tank fleet from readiness in 24 hours to immediate availability; for what operational reasons; and if he will make a statement. [151038]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The decision to change the system of reporting equipment availability was taken in May last year. The change was made following the adoption of the Formation Readiness Cycle which places different units in the Army at different readiness states. Some of these states require equipment to be available immediately (ie capable of undertaking the task to which it has been allocated), while for others a much longer lead time will be acceptable.

The serviceability targets for the equipment types listed by the right hon. and learned Member, which reflect this change in the reporting system, are shown in the table.

Percentage

Vehicle type	Serviceability target 1995–2000	Immediate availability target 2000 to date[1]
Warrior Variants	75	75
Challenger 1[2]	80	80
Challenger 2[3]	80	80
Saxon Variants	70	70
AFV430	70	70
Sabre	70	70
Striker	70	70
Scimitar	70	70
Spartan	70	70
Sultan	70	70
Samaritan	70	70
Samson	70	70

[1] This target is set by the Equipment Managers and applies to all vehicles regardless of the readiness state of the Unit to which they are allocated.
[2] Challenger 1 withdrawal programme is almost complete.
[3] Challenger 2 was introduced into service in 1998.

BAE (Redundancies)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning planned job redundancies at BAE military manufacturing plants in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [150724]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Since the announcement by BAE Systems concerning restructuring was made on 10 January 2001, my Department has received a number of representations. At the time of the announcement the company said that it was not in a position to state how their cost reduction measures would effect each site within their business or impact upon employment. We have asked the company to keep us informed, and are monitoring the situation closely.

Armed Forces Pension Scheme

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce the conclusions of the Review of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme. [151044]

Mr. Spellar: We have concluded the internal phase of our Review of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme and I hope to make an announcement shortly on arrangements for public consultation on the resulting proposals.

RAF Fylingdales

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the annual expenditure incurred at RAF Fylingdales has been in each year since 1997; and if he will indicate under which budget heading in his Department's expenditure plans the investment in Fylingdales is listed. [151597]

Mr. Hoon: The annual expenditure incurred at RAF Fylingdales for each year since 1997 was some £12 million for 1997–98, £11 million for 1998–99 and £13 million for 1999–2000. It was charged to the Strike Command Top Level Budget, details of which can be found in the relevant year's Supply Estimates for the Ministry of Defence, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

French Beef

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will take steps to suspend the import of French beef until French herds are proved to be BSE-free; and if he will make a statement; [144101]

(2) if the Government will impose a precautionary ban on French beef imports until an assessment can be made of the risks to the consumer. [144390]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 8 January 2001]: The Government are advised on matters of food safety by the Food Standards Agency (FSA).

The FSA has examined the issue of the safety of beef from France. Dr Christl Donnelly of Imperial College, London has made an assessment of the risks to the consumer from BSE arising from imports of French beef. The results were published in "Nature" on 14 December 2000. The study concluded that if the United Kingdom's over-thirty-month (OTM) rule is fully enforced there is virtually no risk from BSE in French beef imported into the UK. If the OTM rule is only 75 per cent. enforced, then risks posed by British and French meat sold in the UK would be the same. The FSA estimates that OTM enforcement levels in the UK are above 75 per cent.

In these circumstances, the FSA concluded that a ban on the importation of beef from France would not be proportionate to the risk and could not therefore be justified. Nevertheless, the FSA is keeping the position under constant review, taking account of the latest available scientific and other information. The FSA will issue revised advice whenever necessary.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigation the Food Standards Agency has undertaken concerning the scientific grounds for banning French beef imports. [144336]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 8 January 2001]: The Government are advised by the Food Standards Agency (FSA) that its decision not to recommend a ban on the importation of beef from France is based on two key regulatory requirements, namely the controls on specified risk materials (SRM), and the over-thirty-month (OTM) rule, and on a scientific assessment of the risks of BSE associated with French beef.

European Union rules, which took effect from 1 October 2000, now require the removal of SRM from beef carcases in the country of origin, and United Kingdom legislation prohibits the import of beef containing SRM. The OTM rule prohibits the sale for human consumption of beef from animals over the age of thirty months at time of slaughter. This rule applies equally to beef from cattle that are slaughtered in the UK (with minor exceptions) and to imported beef (again with minor exceptions).

The scientific assessment of the risks of BSE to consumers in the UK arising from French beef was given in a study by Dr. Christl Donnelly of Imperial College London. The results of that study were published in "Nature" on 14 December 2000. The study concluded that if the OTM rule is fully enforced there is virtually no risk from French beef imported into the UK. If the OTM rule is only 75 per cent. enforced, then risks posed by British and French meat sold in the UK would be the same. The FSA estimates that OTM enforcement levels in the UK are above 75 per cent.

The FSA continues to keep the position under constant review, taking account of the latest available scientific and other information. The FSA will issue revised advice whenever necessary.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) membership, (b) duration, (c) itinerary and (d) cost were of the recent Food Standards Agency mission to France to investigate BSE controls. [144342]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 8 January 2001]: The Food Standards Agency has advised that the delegation from the agency which met officials of the French Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries to discuss BSE controls in France comprised David Statham (Director of Enforcement), David Noble (then Director of Legal Services), Chris Lawson (then Head of Meat Hygiene Division), Peter Hewson (Head of HQ Veterinary Team), Leonie Austin (then Head of Media Relations), Jane Downes (Acting Director of Veterinary Services, Meat Hygiene Service) and David Carruthers (Head of the Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy food safety branch). The delegation was accompanied by David Barnes (First Secretary (Agriculture)) from the British Embassy in Paris and an interpreter.

The delegation arrived in Paris on the evening of 28 November 2000, stayed overnight at the Hotel Saint James and Albany, and then travelled to the Agriculture Ministry at 251, rue de Vaugirard, arriving at 8.30 am. After the conclusion of the meeting at about 11.30 am, the delegation returned to the British Embassy and from there departed from Paris that afternoon.

The total cost of the visit, including travel expenses, hotel accommodation and the services of the interpreter, was £3,860.

BSE

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those animals besides cattle and sheep, which are being investigated by the Food Standards Agency for the presence of BSE and TSEs. [144871]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 11 January 2001]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that it does not carry out any surveillance for BSE or other Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies in any animals, apart from cattle aged over thirty months entering the food chain. The testing of any other animals for the presence of these diseases is a matter for the Agriculture Departments.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to stop the import of BSE-contaminated meat; and if he will make a statement. [149471]

Ms Stuart: The Government are advised on matters of food safety by the Food Standards Agency (FSA).

British consumers are protected against the dangers of BSE in beef by two key measures: the controls on specified risk materials (SRM), and the over-thirty-month (OTM) rule.

It is illegal to import beef with any SRM attached. Where imported beef with SRM attached is discovered, it is seized by the relevant enforcement authorities and either destroyed or returned to the supplier, depending on the circumstances involved. Following the discovery of remnants of spinal cord in a number of consignments of beef imported recently from Germany, the FSA has instructed the Meat Hygiene Service and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development for Northern Ireland to ensure that all consignments of beef imported from Germany are now inspected in licensed meat plants. The FSA has also written to local authorities to advise them that all meat plants under local authority supervision which are likely to receive consignments of German beef should be subject to further random checks, in which any beef from Germany should be inspected.

The OTM rule prohibits the sale for human consumption of beef from animals over the age of thirty months at time of slaughter. This rule applies equally to home produced and imported beef, with the exception of beef from 14 specified non-EU countries with no history of BSE. In November 2000 the FSA instructed local authorities and the Meat Hygiene Service to step up their OTM rule enforcement checks in respect of imported beef. The responses from the enforcement authorities show a high level of compliance with the OTM rule.

Wheelchairs

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the numbers of wheelchairs (a) supplied and (b) kept in storage in Cornwall in the last year for which figures are available. [147835]

Mr. Hutton: 5,523 residents in Cornwall have a wheelchair issued by the Disablement Services Centre at Derriford Hospital. In 2000, 1,680 wheelchairs were issued of which 50 per cent. were new and 50 per cent. reconditioned. A number of wheelchairs are held in store at any one time, in the course of transfer to new users, or during repair.

Beef Imports

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of beef imports from Germany are subject to BSE checks of the kind that resulted in the recent discovery of specified risk material contamination in Northern Ireland. [147860]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 30 January 2001]: As a general rule, fresh meat imported into the United Kingdom from other European Union member states is subject only to random spot checks at places of destination. The responsibility for ensuring that only meat which complies with EU hygiene and BSE controls is exported to other member States rests with the competent authorities in each member state.

However, following the discovery of remnants of spinal cord in a number of consignments of beef imported recently from Germany, the Food Standards Agency (FSA) has instructed the Meat Hygiene Service and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development for Northern Ireland to ensure that all consignments of beef imported from Germany are now inspected in licensed meat plants. The FSA has also written to local authorities to advise them that all meat plants under local authority supervision which are likely to receive consignments of German beef should be subject to further random checks, in which any beef from Germany should be inspected.

In addition, the FSA has also vigorously taken up the problem of the contaminated beef with both the European Commission and the relevant German authorities.

Blackpool Victoria Hospital Trust

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Blackpool Victoria Hospital Trust will receive the capital investment to develop its new cardio-thoracic facilities. [147240]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 31 January 2001]: The recommendations for developing cardiac services across the north-west have been accepted in full. Discussions are now progressing well with a view to developing the business case for the Specialist Cardio-Thoracic Centre which will be based at the Blackpool Victoria Hospital. It is hoped that the new unit will be operational by 2005, subject to the availability of capital.

Sight Impairment

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many laser treatments took place to correct sight impairment in each health authority in England in each year since 1995. [150199]

Mr. Hutton: Information about laser eye surgery in National Health Service hospitals in England for the years 1995–96 to 1999–2000 has been placed in the Library.

School Dental Service

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many school pupils by health authority were both inspected and reinspected by the school dental service in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [150393]

Mr. Hutton: The information for England has been placed in the Library.

The tables show, for children aged five to 15, the number of screenings by the Community Dental Service (CDS) and the number of episodes of care in the CDS following screening programmes and following recall by the CDS. The number of episodes of care is not available before 1992–93. The information is shown by district health authority up to 1995–96 and by health authority thereafter.

As part of the Dental Strategy we will work with the dental profession to clarify the aims and objectives for school dental screening, so that current best practice in encouraging treatment where necessary after screening becomes routine for all CDS and school dental screening programmes.

Misoprostol

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals which (a) have been, (b) are and (c) plan to be involved in trials of Misoprostol; what evidence he has collated concerning the drug's effects during the first stages of labour; what representations have been made to the Government on the subject of Misoprostal; if he will review the Government's policy on the use of Misoprostol; and if he will make a statement. [150386]

Ms Stuart: Misoprostol is not currently licensed for the induction of labour. The Department has asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to provide clinical guidelines on the induction of labour and their report is expected this summer.

Our view is that until such time as the NICE guidelines are issued, use of misoprostol for the induction of labour should only be administered under properly managed clinical trials where the risks and benefits of the drug are fully explained and understood by women.

Since March 1998, the Medicines Control Agency has received and approved 22 notifications for clinical trials of misoprostol in the United Kingdom from consultant obstetricians and gynaecologists. These notifications have been made under the provisions of the Doctors and Dentists Exemption Scheme. Details of clinical trials, including data collated during trials, are not normally released, without the consent of the parties concerned, as there are legitimate commercial and other confidential interests which cannot be disclosed. Such interests are recognised in the current administrative Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and also in the Freedom of information legislation.

Medicine Ingredients

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to review their policy concerning the listing of ingredients of animal origin on medicine labels; and if he will make a statement. [150430]

Ms Stuart: The labelling of medicinal products for human and animal use is governed by European law, which requires all labels to show certain information including a qualitative and quantitative statement of active ingredients and a list of other key ingredients. It is not possible to introduce a requirement for labels to identify those ingredients of an animal origin without an amendment to European law.

ICD Implants

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what provision he is making to implement the NICE recommendation to increase the use of ICDs from 17 per million population to 50 per million; [150860]

(2) if he will list the number of ICD implants per million population by (a) health authority and (b) regional health authority. [150859]

Mr. Denham: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence guidance on the appropriate use of implantable cardioverter defibrillators (ICDs) has been circulated very widely: copies were sent to health authorities, National Health Service trusts, general practitioners and many other health professionals, as well as to community health councils and patients' groups. Additional resources have been made available within health authority unified allocations to support the implementation of NICE recommendations generally. Implementation of this NICE guidance on the use of ICDs will lead to an increase in the number of ICDs implanted but, as NICE acknowledge, we will need to develop the capacity to achieve this increase in implantation rates. This will be taken forward within the overall programme of work to improve and expand services for coronary heart disease (CHD) in line with the CHD National Service Framework.

Comprehensive data about implantation rates by region or health authority are not available. The most recent national figures relate to 1998 and show the rate then, as stated in the question, as 17 per million population.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 2001, Official Report, column 49W, on the Medicines Control Agency, if he will state for each request for information made under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information since 1997 which was not met under the specified 20 days (a) the specific number of days taken for each request, (b) the reasons each request was not met under the specified time and (c) what steps are being taken to ensure that requests for information are routinely met within the specified time limit. [150455]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 15 February 2001]: The information requested is in the table.

Following a recommendation from the Ombudsman, the Medicines Control Agency is currently reviewing its procedures for handling requests under the Code. In addition the Agency is examining the information held by the MCA (which currently totals around 400 different types) to determine, for example, what can be routinely published or what could be pre-prepared in anticipation of requests. This work will intensify over the coming months in preparation for the implementation of the Freedom of Information legislation. These initiatives will streamline arrangements for dealing with requests for information and enable a greater number of inquiries to be answered within 20 working days.

Pharmaceuticals

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment he has made of the cost of pharmaceuticals in the United Kingdom, the United States of America and other European Union countries; and if he will make a statement. [150666]

Ms Stuart: Regular comparisons are made between the prices of medicines in these countries and the results published in "The Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme: Report to Parliament". The most recent edition of this (the fourth report) was published in December 2000. Copies are in the Library and the text is also on the Department of Health website at www.doh.gov.uk/pprs/pprs-reports.htm.

The medicines compared (which are those with the highest sales to the National Health Service) are branded rather than generic, because in many countries unbranded generic medicines are not available.

Haemophilia

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will estimate the additional cost to the NHS of treating all adults with haemophilia in England who are receiving plasma treatment products with recombinant genetically engineered products; [150862]

(2) how many adults with haemophilia in England are receiving (a) plasma-derived haemophilia treatment products and (b) recombinant treatment products. [150864]

Mr. Denham: Based on figures provided by the United Kingdom Haemophilia Centre Doctors Organisation, we estimate that approximately 13 per cent. of adult haemophilia A patients and 4 per cent. of haemophilia B patients in England are currently receiving recombinant clotting factors. We estimate the additional cost of providing all adult haemophilia patients with recombinant clotting factors at around £50 million per annum.

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what differences there are between the provision of recombinant genetically engineered haemophilia treatment products for (a) adults and (b) children in (i) England, (ii) Scotland, (iii) Wales and (iv) Northern Ireland. [150865]

Mr. Denham: In England, all new haemophilia patients and children under 16 are treated with recombinant clotting factors. Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland provide, or are in the process of providing, recombinant clotting factors for all haemophilia patients.

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what counselling and advice his Department has made available to haemophilia patients who have received treatment products which are traced to a blood donor who has died of vCJD. [150861]

Mr. Denham: The United Kingdom Haemophilia Centre Doctors Organisation, in consultation with the Department, has agreed a policy of giving all haemophilia patients information about such incidents and offering them a choice to know if they or their children received implicated clotting factors. Counselling and advice to patients will be provided by haemophilia centres.

Departmental IT Projects

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the IT projects currently undertaken in his Department; and if he will state the (a) expected completion date and (b) cost of each project. [151506]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The information requested is shown in the table.

There are many smaller projects where the total project costs are less than £100,000. A full-list of these could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the IT projects his Department plans to undertake in the next year; and if he will state in each case the (a) expected date of commencement and completion and (b) cost. [151478]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The Department's programme for 2001–02 has not yet been finalised but priority will be given to projects that support the NHS Plan.

Child Abuse

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued to nurses about reporting to the police cases where, in the course of their duty, a nurse strongly suspects a child of being a victim of sexual abuse. [151355]

Mr. Hutton: Nurses are well placed to identify when a child may be suffering, or be at risk of significant harm. Like any other professional, a nurse must take appropriate action in accordance with locally agreed procedures, if he or she believes that a child is at such risk. This may involve a referral to local child protection services, which may include the police who then inquire as appropriate into the circumstances of the case.

The "Working Together to Safeguard Children" guidance, published by the Government in 1999, and "Child Protection—Guidance for Senior Nurses, Health Visitors and Midwives and their Managers", a report of the Standing Nursing and Midwifery Advisory Committee, published in 1997, together set out in detail the crucial role that nurses play in child protection.

We are currently developing supplementary guidance to "Working Together" which will focus on the role of all health professionals in child protection.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if full multidisciplinary investigations are carried out in accident and emergency departments of all cases where babies have been shaken. [151374]

Mr. Hutton: If a member of staff working in a hospital accident and emergency department believes that a child may be suffering, or may be at risk of suffering, significant harm appropriate action must be taken immediately in accordance with local procedures. This may involve a referral to local child protection services, which may include the police who then inquire as appropriate into the circumstances of the case.

The "Working Together to Safeguard Children" guidance, published by the Government in 1999, sets out how all agencies with child protection responsibilities should work together to safeguard children and promote their welfare. We are currently developing supplementary guidance to "Working Together" which will focus on the role of all health professionals in child protection.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information on specific treatment services provided to children at risk of abusing other children within the Quality Protects Programme is available. [151378]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not seek from local authorities specific information on what services are made available under the Quality Protects Programme to children at risk of abusing other children.

However, children at risk of abusing other children are likely to have considerable, and often complex, needs. Local authorities are expected to work closely with their partner agencies to ensure that such children receive support and treatment based on their assessed needs.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future programme for research into the incidence and prevalence of child maltreatment in the UK. [151380]

Mr. Hutton: We are committed to researching into the nature and extent of child abuse and its causes. Development of policy aimed at tackling child maltreatment is informed and influenced by published research in this complex field such as that carried out by the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. The revised "Working Together to Safeguard Children" (1999) guidance on child protection reflects the key messages from a programme of research studies into child protection issues commissioned by the Department of Health, "Child Protection: messages from research" (1995).

We regularly commission research into the needs of children and the impact of services which aim to promote and safeguard the welfare of children. The total cost of this programme for the current financial year is approximately £2.5 million. Projects considering the causes, directly or in part, of child abuse include: a study of the onset of sexually abusive behaviour in boys who were sexually abused in early childhood; a study aimed at advancing knowledge about the psychological maltreatment of a specific group of children: those singled out from their siblings and rejected by their birth parents and the comparative costs and outcomes of different interventions for sexually abused children.

Meat Cutting Services

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what restrictions exist on butchers to provide meat cutting services to other outlets; and if he will make a statement. [151358]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 26 February 2001]: In order to provide cutting services to other outlets, butchers need to have their premises licensed as cutting plants under the red meat or poultry meat hygiene and inspection Regulations, which implement European Union Directives. The Regulations only exempt butchers who cut meat for sale from their own premises directly to the final consumer.

However, under guidance originally issued by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to cater for trading practices in Great Britain, exempt butchers may supply their other branches or mobile shops with up to 50 per cent. or 1 tonne (whichever is the lesser) of their production per week, provided the rest is sold from the premises where the meat is cut. In England and Wales, exempt butchers may also use shops not in their ownership as subsidiary outlets, provided they retain ownership of the meat until its sale to the final consumer, subject to the overall 50 per cent. or 1 tonne weekly limit.

Physical Punishment (Children)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish a response to the submissions received on his consultation document on the physical punishment of children. [151377]

Mr. Hutton: We will publish our response to the consultation on the physical punishment of children later this year.

Prescription Costs

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was of prescriptions in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [151524]

Ms Stuart: The table gives details of the net ingredient cost of prescriptions dispensed in the community in England. The majority of these will have been prescribed by general practitioners.

Net ingredient cost of prescriptions dispensed in the community in England, 1979 to 1999

Notes:
1. 1979 to 1990 data are from the Prescription Pricing Authority PD1 series of forms.
2. 1991 to 1999 data are from the Prescription Cost Analysis (PCA) system.
3. 1979 to 1981 data for dispensing doctors and personal administration are not available.
4. Net ingredient cost (NIC) refers to the cost of the drug before discounts and does not include any dispensing costs of fees. It does not include any adjustment for income obtained where a prescription charge is paid at the time the prescription is dispensed or where the patient has purchased a pre-payment certificate.

Asylum Seekers (Unaccompanied Children)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if unaccompanied asylum seeking children are supported in the same way as children ordinarily resident in the UK under the Children Act 1989. [151379]

Mr. Hutton: Local authorities have the same duties to safeguard and promote the welfare of unaccompanied asylum seeking children as they do for the indigenous population of children in need. All local authorities have a duty under Section 17 of the Children Act 1989 to provide services for all children in need in their area, including accommodation and support. There are currently approximately 6,000 unaccompanied asylum seeking children in the United Kingdom, the majority of whom are aged 16 and 17. They are generally provided with support under Section 17 of the Children Act, with those aged under 16 being formally looked after under Section 20 of the Act.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were awaiting NHS treatment on 1 January in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [151521]

Mr. Denham: Hospital waiting list information collected centrally shows the position at the end of each quarter. The table shows the number of people waiting for admission to hospital, either as an ordinary or day case, on 31 December each year since 1989.

Patients awaiting admission to hospital

As at 31 December	Number
1989	971,845
1990	965,520
1991	950,098

We promised to reduce NHS waiting lists and this we have done. At the end of December 2000 the waiting list was 123,600 below the March 1997 level we inherited.

Post-natal Depression

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what systems are in place to ensure early detection of post-natal depression in mothers of young babies; and what support is given to such mothers. [151376]

Mr. Hutton: The National Service Framework for mental health sets out at standards two and three the action needed to deliver better primary mental health care, and to ensure consistent advice and help for people with mental health needs, including primary care services for individuals with severe mental illness. The NSF requires health authorities to have protocols agreed and implemented between primary care and specialised services for the management of post-natal depression by April 2001. Work is being taken forward following publication of the NHS Plan and through the Workforce Action Team, to agree the workforce and education requirements to deliver the NSF, and to strengthen mental health in primary care.

Compensation

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the NHS paid in compensation payments in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [151287]

Ms Stuart: Figures on the amounts included in the National Audit Summarised Accounts for clinical negligence payments for the last five years are as follows:

	£ million
1994–95	160
1995–96	173
1996–97	235
1997–98	144
1998–99	221

Figures for 1999–2000 are not yet available.

Because of changes to accounting practice required by the National Audit Office these data are not directly comparable.

Information on the non-clinical schemes is not available.

Accident and Emergency Units

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many accident and emergency units there were in the NHS in each year since 1991–92; [150387]

(2) how many accident and emergency units were in operation in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [151531]

Ms Stuart: The information is not available in the form requested.

The Department collects information centrally on the number of National Health Service trusts with one or more accident and emergency service. Information for 1996–97 to 1999–2000 is available via the annual Körner return KH03 "bed availability and occupancy". Copies are available in the Library.

Eye Tests

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average cost of eye tests was in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [151528]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service sight tests are provided by community opticians at no charge to the patient. Prior to 1989 there was universal entitlement but, from 1 April 1989, eligibility was restricted to children, people on low incomes and people suffering from or predisposed to certain eye diseases. With effect from 1 April 1999 we restored eligibility to everyone aged 60 or over so that less than 50 per cent. of the population now has to pay for private sight tests. The cost of a private sight test varies between optical practices.

Dental Costs

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average cost of a session of dental treatment was in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [151530]

Mr. Hutton: The average gross cost per course of treatment in the General Dental Service is shown separately for children and adults in the table for England for each of the years 1979 to 1999–2000.

General Dental Service: Average gross cost in £ per course of treatment from 1979 to 1999/2000—England

1990–91	17.40	35.13
1991–92	18.81	36.11
1992–93	23.32	34.77
1993–94	25.32	31.93
1994–95	26.39	33.16
1995–96	28.07	33.26
1996–97	28.44	33.58
1997–98	26.05	32.52
1998–99	28.52	33.53
1999–2000	29.88	34.82

The figures from 1990–91 onwards are affected by the introduction of the new dental contract in October 1990. Under the contract, part of dentist's remuneration come from registration payments rather than from treatment fees. For children, certain treatments were covered by these registration payments and no longer claimed for separately in courses of treatment. Since 1996–97, some of these children's items are again claimed for separately.

Nurse Recruitment

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses were recruited in each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement. [151529]

Mr. Denham: Information on the total number of nurses recruited into the National Health Service is not collected centrally.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Highways Expenditure

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the levels of spending on highways per head of population in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years. [150017]

Mr. Hill: The tables showing capital and current expenditure figures by Highways Authorities for the current year available have been placed in the Library of the House. Both tables include Staffordshire. The figures are derived from DETR/Government Office for London capital and revenue estimated outturn figures.

Figures for the three previous years were included in my reply to the hon. Member on 10 November 1999, Official Report, column 601W.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the levels of spending on highways per head of population in (a) Staffordshire and (b) each other county of England (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the last three years, distinguishing in each case the element represented by standard spending assessment. [148292]

Mr. Hill: The tables showing capital and current expenditure figures for the current year available have been placed in the Library of the House. Both tables include Staffordshire. The figures are derived from DETR/Government Office for London capital and revenue estimated outturn figures.

Figures for the three previous years were included in my answer of 10 November 1999, Official Report, column 601W.

Standard Spending Assessment

Funding for current expenditure on local authority highways is provided by central Government through the Revenue Support Grant (RSG). RSG covers routine maintenance on all local authority roads, part of the structural maintenance on non-principal roads, and an element for capital replacement of street lighting.

Highways Maintenance Standard Spending Assessment (HMSSA) is the figure used to calculate the highways element of the Revenue Support Grant (RSG). The largest single factor used in the calculation of HMSSA is the length and class of roads in each local authority's network. Other factors include average winter weather, levels of traffic volume, and population.

RSG provides the financial basis for local authorities to provide essentially similar levels of service. However, it is for local authorities to prioritise their use of the money available to them, and authorities may use part of the highways maintenance element for other services.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money was allocated to local authorities for road maintenance in each of the past five years in (a) North Somerset and (b) England. [150069]

Mr. Hill: The table shows capital allocation figures for highway maintenance, and figures for Highway Maintenance Standard Spending Assessment, for North Somerset and England, for the years in question.

Highway maintenance allocations for North Somerset and England

£ million

	Highway maintenance (capital allocation)		Highway maintenance SSA
	North Somerset	England (total)	North Somerset	England (total)
1996–97	0.591	186	6.416	1,759
1997–98	0.668	200	6.316	1,759
1998–99	0.594	180	6.281	1,767
1999–2000	0.686	240	6.295	1,813
2000–01	0.895	301	6.576	1,858

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what monitoring his Department carries out of local authorities in their provision of best value regarding road maintenance; and if he will make a statement. [150028]

Mr. Hill: We introduced a number of Best Value Indicators in 2000–01 which measure the effectiveness and efficiency of the highway maintenance function, including the condition of principal and non-principal roads, efficiency of street lighting, cost of highway maintenance, duration of temporary traffic controls caused by local authority road works on traffic sensitive roads, and time taken to respond to dangerous defects, in each highway authority.

Local authorities are required to publish details of their performance against these indicators in their annual Best Value Performance Plan (BVPP). They are also required to set realistic targets for all their services. These plans and targets are subject to scrutiny by the District Auditor.

The Government have set specific targets in the 10-Year Plan for Transport for halting the decline in road condition, and have made provision for this in the Local Transport Plan settlement. Best Value Indicators are one method by which the performance of highway authorities will be monitored.

National Air Traffic Services

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that there are sufficient personnel available in NATS to maintain necessary service levels while training occurs for the new en route centre at Swanwick. [149849]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: It is essential that air traffic controllers are trained to a high standard to operate the system at the Swanwick centre.

NATS have told us that the staffing situation with regard to manning of West Drayton while at the same time training for the Swanwick centre is tight but manageable. The training of controllers for the New En Route Centre commenced on 2 January 2001 and will be complete in January 2002. NATS has some 360 air traffic controllers available to meet a budgeted requirement for 300 controllers in the Area Control operation at the London Area and Control Centre at West Drayton and the surplus is participating in the training programme on a rotating basis. By June of this year, the actual number of West Drayton controllers is expected to increase to 374.

A3, Hindhead

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information he has collated about accident rates on the A3 in the Hindhead area in the past three years. [150302]

Mr. Hill: As part of the recently completed road based study of the A3 at Hindhead, accident data were collected for a three-year period from late 1996 to late 1999. There are clusters of accidents on the single-carriageway sections and at the Hindhead crossroads but they are not markedly different from clusters elsewhere on similar roads. The number of accidents along the A3 between the scheme over the past three years is as follows:

Year/location	Fatal	Serious	Slight
1996–97
Single-carriageway section	1	5	24
Hindhead	0	2	1
Total	1	7	25
1997–98
Single-carriageway section	1	5	30
Hindhead	0	0	4
Total	1	5	34
1998–99
Single-carriageway section	0	3	22
Hindhead	0	0	2
Total	0	3	24

Diabetes

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from Phil Gallie MSP about licence restrictions for people with diabetes. [150815]

Mr. Hill: We have received no representations from Phil Gallie MSP on this issue.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his estimate is of the length of time that a vessel could maintain traces of radiation having been used to dump nuclear waste at sea. [150797]

Mr. Meacher: Vessels used for sea dump in the North Atlantic were subject to licence under the Dumping at Sea Act 1974. Such licences contained a provision requiring the ships, on completion of sea dump operations, to be monitored and, if necessary, cleaned by a qualified person until free from significant radioactive contamination to ensure the ships could be returned to unrestricted use with other cargoes. The statutory limits of residual non-fixed radioactive contamination and radiation levels applicable at the time remain essentially the same to date, ie non-fixed contamination limits of 4 Bq/cm^2 (10^{-4} μCi/cm^2) for beta/gamma and low toxicity alpha emitters, 0.4 Bq/cm^2 (10^{-5} μCi/cm^2) for all other alpha emitters, and a surface radiation limit of μ5 Sv/h (0.5 mrem/h).

Sea dump operations ceased in 1982 with the last operation of the MV Gem, which was certified free from significant radioactive contamination on 15 August 1982 by observers from the UK Atomic Energy Authority and the Nuclear Energy Agency of the OECD.

Council Housing (Birmingham)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the resources available to Birmingham city council to improve its council housing stock. [150675]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Capital investment by local authorities is financed by support from central government and from their own resources. The size of their overall programme, the total for housing and the proportion of this spent on the council housing stock are for authorities to decide.

Government support for housing investment by Birmingham for 2001–02 totals £90.2 million, which is two and a half times the allocation for 1997–98. Around half of the 2001–02 allocation is being provided through new Major Repairs Allowance, which provides resources to meet the on-going capital costs of maintaining the council housing stock.

Birmingham are working on proposals for stock transfer. If this proceeds it should secure resources to enable catch-up repair work and modernisation work to be completed in 10 years.

East Coast Main Line

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he expects the decision on the refranchising of the East Coast main line to be taken; [151252]

(2) what steps he is taking to investigate the reasons for the delay in the refranchising of the East Coast main line; and if he will make a statement. [151251]

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if bidding for the East Coast main line franchise has been suspended; and if he will make a statement. [151328]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 February 2001]: On 14 February the Strategic Rail Authority announced a pause in the franchise replacement process for the East Coast main line as a result of the increased cost estimates for upgrading the line that Railtrack has now provided.

My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has asked the Chairman of the SRA, Sir Alastair Morton, to advise him urgently of the reasons for the increase in Railtrack's cost estimates and why this information has only become available at this late stage.

It would be inappropriate to speculate on any implications for the replacement process for the East Coast main line franchise until the SRA has discussed the cost estimates with Railtrack.

A27

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much public money was spent on work relating to (a) possible improvements to the A27 Lewes to Polegate and (b) the A27 Polegate bypass between 1 January 1989 and 30 April 1997. [150833]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 February 2001]: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Tim Matthews, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Kerman to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 27 February 2001:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked the Highways Agency's Chief Executive, Tim Matthews, to reply to your question about the amount of public money which was spent on work relating to (a) possible improvements to the A27 Lewes to Polegate and (b) the A27 Polegate bypass between 1 January 1989 and 30 April 1997. Mr. Matthews is currently on leave and I am replying on his behalf.

I am afraid that the financial records kept before the Agency was established in April 1994 do not allow us to disaggregate expenditure on these two schemes. The amount spent on work on them from 1 April 1994 to 30 April 1997 is:

(a) the possible improvements to the A27 Lewes to Polegate—£935,545

(b) the A27 Polegate bypass—£1,445,572.

Traffic Movements

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his Department's policy to encourage heavy traffic to use local roads as a diversion from trunk roads. [151329]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Trunk roads are intended as through routes for heavy traffic. It is not the Department's policy to encourage heavy traffic to divert to local roads, although in the event of an incident these can be used as a temporary diversion.

Rail Services (Penalties)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money has been levied in fines and penalties for late performance on Railtrack and the train operating companies by the Rail Regulator since May 1997; and if he will set out the date and amount of each fine. [151330]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 February 2001]: On 24 November 1999, the Rail Regulator made an enforcement order imposing a penalty of £10.8 million on Railtrack. Railtrack has sought mitigation and is to provide the Regulator with further information to enable him to make a final decision. The imposition of penalties on train operators for late performance is a matter for the Strategic Rail Authority, not the Regulator.

Cycle Storage Lockers

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to remove cycle storage lockers from main railway stations; and if he will make a statement. [151324]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 February 2001]: No. The provision of cycle storage facilities at their 14 main railway stations is a matter for Railtrack. I understand that their policy is to provide for such facilities wherever possible. Railtrack is currently carrying out an audit of cycle facilities at all their stations to determine whether greater provision is needed.

A36(T)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason he has decided to de-trunk the A36(T); and how much he estimates this will save his Department in the first three years of de-trunking. [150460]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The A36/A46 route was identified as a non-core route for de-trunking in the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport", which set out the factors taken into account in defining the core trunk road network (paragraph 3.130). Following consultation with regional planning bodies on the proposed core/non-core split a further study of the role of the A36/A46 was carried out. This study concluded that the proportion of core route traffic on the route is low although it recognised that the A46/A36 met to some degree the criteria for core route status. In view of the short journey length of the majority of the traffic and in particular the need for local initiatives to manage the impact of heavy goods vehicles on the route the Secretary of State decided to confirm its status as a non-core route.

De-trunking is not an exercise to save money. We are committed to a fair transfer of resources to local highway authorities taking over de-trunked routes and arrangements for ensuring this have been discussed and agreed with the Local Government Association.

Furthermore, in the light of the major study which we commissioned to look at alternative ways of dealing with the city's transport problems following the cancellation of the A36 Salisbury Bypass in 1997, we announced in the local transport settlement last December £13.7 million to be spent over the next five years on integrated transport measures from the Salisbury Package included in Wiltshire County Council's local transport plan. We also provisionally accepted the proposals for the Brunel Link and Harnham Relief Road, estimated to cost £13 million, which are also part of the Package.

Partnership Programme

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of the funds allocated to the Powershift cleaner fuels programme has been spent to date in the 2000–01 financial year, broken down by fuel type of conversion. [150643]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 February 2001]: My Department is providing Powershift with a total of £9.9 million this financial year. In the period 1 April 2000 to 16 February 2001 grants totalling £7.2 million towards the cost of purchasing cleaner fuel vehicles had been offered and accepted with £2.1 million so far actually paid. Information on the detailed breakdown by fuel type is being prepared and I will write to the hon. Member.

Road Traffic Accidents

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many road traffic accidents which have given rise to (a) fatalities and (b) personal injury occurred in each of the past five years for which figures are available; how many of each of the above categories of road traffic accidents occurred in areas subject to (i) a 30 mph speed limit, (ii) a 40 mph speed limit, (iii) a 50 mph speed limit, (iv) subject only to national speed limits for the relevant category of road and (v) on motorways subject only to the 70 mph speed limit; and in how many of each of the above categories of accident excessive speed was a significant cause of the accident. [151283]

Mr. Hill: The information requested is shown in the table. It is not known in how many of the accidents in each category excessive speed was a significant cause.

Road accidents in Great Britain: 1999

Speed limit (mph)	Fatal accidents	Other injury	All personal injury[1]
30	1,077	151,638	152,715
40	267	18,284	18,551
50	91	3,901	3,992
60 or 70
Non-motorways	1,526	48,812	50,338
Motorways	176	8,942	9,118
All roads[2]	3,138	231,910	235,048

[1] Includes fatal accidents

[2] Includes unknown and other speed limits

Farm Vehicles

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if farm vehicles exempt from vehicle excise licences will be required to display a number plate; and if he will make a statement. [151158]

Mr. Hill: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in the pre-Budget statement his intention to exempt tractors and certain other agricultural vehicles from the payment of vehicle excise duty, subject to consultation. There is already a wide range of vehicles exempted from the payment of vehicle excise duty, including vehicles operated by the emergency services and those constructed before 1 January 1973. Generally, the requirement to display a licence, (including, in the case of exempt vehicles, a "nil licence") and the requirement to display number plates are quite separate and there are no plans to alter these arrangements.

Flood Prevention

Paddy Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the total expenditure of his Department on flood prevention work was (a) through local authority finance, (b) through all forms of central Government finance for (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02, (iii) 2002–03 and (iv) 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [150418]

Ms Armstrong: The funding allocated by the Flood Defence and Coast Protection SSA blocks for 2000–01 and 2001–02 is set out in the table. Decisions about the level of the Flood Defence and Coast Protection SSA blocks for subsequent years have not yet been taken; therefore no figures can be provided for 2002–03 or 2003–04.

£ million

Year	Flood defence SSA	Coast protection SSA
2000–01	246.825	10.275
2001–02	257.700	10.700
2002–03	n/a	n/a
2003–04	n/a	n/a

DETR does not provide any other funding for flood prevention work. All other central Government support for flood prevention work is provided by MAFF as set out in an answer to PQ 150419 given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food today, Official Report, column 602W.

Highways Agency

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Highways Agency Business Plan will be published; and what targets he has set for the Highways Agency for 2001–02. [151738]

Mr. Hill: Key targets set for the Highways Agency are included in the Agency's Business Plan which will be published tomorrow. A copy will be placed in the Library.

These targets are:

to maintain the network so that the proportion requiring maintenance within the next year is held between 7 and 8 per cent.;

to upgrade, and have operational with agents, the Highways Agency Pavement Management System; to put in place a computer based road structures asset management system (Structures Management Information System); to reduce the number of people killed and seriously injured on motorways and trunk roads by 416 to 4,575 (compared with the 1994–98 average of 4,991); to reduce the slight casualty rate to 21.59 slight casualties per hundred million-vehicle km (compared with the 1994–98 average of 22.14); to complete at least 10 early action schemes aimed at improving safety; to complete at least 11 early action schemes aimed at tackling congestion;

Install at least 68 motorway Close Circuit TV cameras; to achieve an average annual target of 90 per cent. across the six environment programme sub-indicators; to install automatic hold up warning systems on at least 128km of motorway length; and to achieve at least 13 of the 15 Targeted Programme of Improvements scheme milestones listed in the Business Plan; to put the Agency's property to economic use ensuring that the percentage of vacant residential properties at the end of the year does not exceed 15 per cent. of the residential portfolio, and the percentage of vacant habitable properties empty for more than six months at the end of the year does not exceed 3 per cent. of the residential portfolio.

2001–02 is the first full year of the implementation of the Government's 10-Year Plan for Transport. These targets reflect the progress which the Highways Agency will deliver in contributing to the objectives of providing a safe, well maintained and less congested strategic road network.

National Bus Company (Pensions)

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress being made in the legal proceedings initiated by the National Bus Company pension trustees to determine eligibility of the different categories of beneficiary for a share of the settlement sum paid over by the Government in July 1999. [151739]

Mr. Hill: As I reported to the House in replying to the Adjournment debate held on 25 January, these proceedings were commenced in October 2000. I understand that a case conference was held on 9 February. As a result, the parties concerned are required to participate in discussions during March with a view to agreeing a settlement of the outstanding issues and to report back to the court. I urge all those involved to do their utmost to reach agreement within that time scale.

I also understand that, if—as I hope very much will not be the case—agreement is not reached and a full trial is necessary, a timetable has been set for this to commence in the autumn and to last around five weeks. It would obviously involve significant legal costs which could amount to several million pounds and this, combined with the further potential delay, underlines the need for every effort to be made to reach an early agreement in the forthcoming discussions.

Bus Subsidies

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 2001, Official Report, column 220W, if he will make a statement on the results of the latest round of the rural bus challenge competition, and on the allocations to local authorities. [151774]

Mr. Hill: Following careful consideration of the 137 bids submitted by local authorities to the Rural Bus Challenge 2000, on 19 February we announced approval for the 51 projects as listed. Funding for the successful bids will total up to £21.2 million.

That announcement also detailed increased Local Authority Rural Bus Subsidy Grant allocations for 2001–02, totalling £41.5 million and indicative allocations totalling £47.5 million for 2002–03 and £48.5 million for 2003–04. The full list is as follows:

Fish Farming

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many environmental statements have been submitted under the (a) Environmental Assessment (Salmon Farming in Marine Waters) Regulations 1988 and (b) Environmental Impact Assessment (Fish Farming in Marine Waters) Regulations 1999. [149201]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 6 February 2001]: I have been asked to reply.

Between the regulations coming into force and 1 July 1999 no environmental statements were received. Since July 1999 this has been a matter for the Scottish Executive.

TREASURY

Budget

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many in-year amendments were made to the UK Budget in the latest year for which figures are available, broken down by (a) transfers between Departments, (b) new resources, (c) transfers from reserve and (d) other transfers, across all Departments. [151227]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Changes made to published plans for 1999–2000 are explained in Chapter 2 of "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 2000–01", Cm 4601, April 2000.

Departmental Underspends

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the underspend in each financial year in the total budget of UK Departments as a percentage of the UK Budget; and what the equivalent figures are for the Scottish DEL for each year for which figures are available since 1971. [151223]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Given changes in the system of public expenditure control, comparison of outturn against budgetary measures over time are not meaningful. Under the current system, detailed breakdown of outturn against provision is given in July in "Public Expenditure Provisional Outturn", last published in July 2000 for financial year 1999–2000. There are equivalent tables in previous editions of the same publication for each financial year since 1994–95.

UK Reserve

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) the total amount of the UK reserve in cash and real terms, (b) the annual draw on the reserve in cash and real terms and (c) the annual draw by the Scottish Office and Scotland Office in cash and real terms was in each year since 1971. [151230]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government do not publish figures for allocations from the Reserve overall as it is an administrative tool in controlling overall spending, rather than a budget in its own right. Individual allocations to the Scotland Office and the Scottish Office will be apparent from Estimates laid at the time to draw down those allocations.

Finance Act 1997

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what cost/benefit analysis he has undertaken of the effect of section 42 of the Finance Act 1997; and if he will make a statement. [150541]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 2001]: No such analysis has been undertaken since this was a measure to counter potential tax avoidance.

Labour Costs

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total share of the annual budget of each of the UK departments accounted for by labour costs. [151224]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Treasury publishes aggregate paybill figures which are set out in "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 2000–01" (Cm 4601), a copy of which is in the Library. However, each Department publishes details of its own expenditure in the departmental annual reports, which are also held in the Library.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the basis is for the calculation of the allocation of resource placed at the disposal of the Scottish Executive for meeting capital charges under the new system of resource account budgeting; and how this sum will be accommodated in future years. [151229]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The treatment of capital charges is described in the Statement of Funding Policy published in July 2000.

Capital Projects

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the public sector capital projects involving private finance (a) completed, (b) planned and (c) under way, indicating the start dates and estimated completion dates of each; what total estimated capital investment is included in these projects; what annual public expenditure is required to service these projects in cash terms for each year of their life; and what the total lifetime cost is of (i) each project, (ii) each sector's projects and (iii) in total in cash terms. [151225]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The information sought is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, in line with our normal practice, we shall be publishing in the Budget information on private sector capital deployed in support of PFI signed deals and deals about to be signed, broken down by Department, and on the Government's aggregate service payment commitments under signed PFI contracts.

Earnings (Scotland)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what percentage of taxpayers in Scotland earned income over (a) £30,000, (b) £40,000, (c) £35,000, (d) £45,000, (e) £50,000, (f) £60,000, (g) £70,000, (h) £80,000, (i) £90,000 and (j) £100,000 in the most recent year for which figures are available. [151222]

Dawn Primarolo: A distribution of taxpayers in Scotland is published in Inland Revenue Statistics table 3.11. A copy is in the Library of this House.

Barnett Formula

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the categories are of comparable expenditure by English and other UK Departments used in the calculation of the Barnett formula; what the total expenditure is in each of these categories; what share of that spending is allocated to Scotland; what the spending from each category is allocated to Scotland; and what the total amount in each category is in cash terms in each year for which figures are available. [151221]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Information on categories of comparable spending in UK Departments, expenditure in each category, and the Scotland comparability percentages were set out in Annexe C of the Statement of Funding Policy published in July 2000. Spending is allocated to Scotland in the form of the aggregate Departmental Expenditure Limit, which the Scottish Executive then allocates to programmes according to its own priorities. The Scotland Departmental Expenditure Limits, along with the Departmental Expenditure Limits for UK Departments, were published in the Government's 2000 Spending Review in July 2000.

Tax Credits

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the estimated percentage reduction will be in the total tax bill for an individual earning (a) £10,000, (b) £15,000, (c) £20,000, (d) £25,000, (e) £30,000 and (f) £35,000 as a result of the proposed children's tax credit. [151226]

Dawn Primarolo: A children's tax credit worth up to £8.50 per week will be equivalent to reductions in an individual's income tax as set out in the table.

Earnings	Percentage tax cut
£10,000	44
£15,000	21
£20,000	14
£25,000	10
£30,000	8
£35,000	6

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total cost of administering family credit and the Working Families Tax Credit was in each year since 1988 broken down, where appropriate, into the costs to central Government and the cost to businesses. [151461]

Dawn Primarolo: Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) was introduced in October 1999. For information on costs from that date, I refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 13 February 2001, Official Report, column 103W.

I understand from the Department of Social Security that the estimated annual costs for Family Credit in Great Britain are given in successive DSS Departmental Reports; and that no estimates are available of the cost to businesses.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families are expected to receive the new children's tax credit in the Glasgow parliamentary constituencies in the next financial year. [151619]

Dawn Primarolo: An estimate of the number of families in Glasgow constituencies who will be eligible to claim the children's tax credit (CTC) is unavailable, but an estimate of the number of families in Scotland who will be eligible to claim CTC is 400,000.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases he has been informed of in which an employer has charged employees for the payment of tax credits; and what action he has taken against the companies involved. [151458]

Dawn Primarolo: Unauthorised deductions from wages are prohibited by general employment law. The January 2001 edition of the Inland Revenue's "Employer's Bulletin" reminded all employers that they must not charge their employees for paying tax credits through the payroll.

National Insurance

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in revenue resulting from a reduction in the NIC rate by 1 per cent. assuming (a) the upper earnings limit remains as it is, (b) the upper earnings limit is set at the threshold of the higher rate of income tax at £575 per week and (c) the upper earnings limit is abolished. [151424]

Dawn Primarolo: The full-year effects in 2001–02 of making the changes are set out in the table.

	Full-year effect in 2001–02 of a 1% reduction in the employee rate of National Insurance Contributions	Cost (£ billion)
(a)	With the upper earnings limit at £575 per week	2.80
(b)	With upper earnings limit set at the income tax higher rate threshold (equivalent to £652.60 per week)	2.90
(c)	With no upper earnings limit	3.25

The estimates show the reduction in gross employee contributions only—rebate rates have not been affected.

Widows and Widowers

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy towards the taxation of, and benefits available to, widows and widowers. [150856]

Dawn Primarolo: From 9 April 2001, the Government are introducing a new system of bereavement benefits which for the first time will be available to men as well as women. The new benefits are a lump-sum bereavement payment, bereavement allowance and a widowed parents allowance. Bereavement benefits are payable so long as the deceased spouse has paid enough National Insurance contributions and other conditions are met. Women currently receiving widows' benefits will not be affected by these changes.

Bereavement allowance and widowed parents allowance will be taxable as are the current widows' benefits. The Bereavement Payment is not taxable. Widows and widowers who have children can also be eligible for the Children's Tax Credit and the Working Families Tax Credit.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Tyre Dumping

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he intends to introduce a scheme to help farmers with the cost of removing illegally dumped motor vehicle tyres from agricultural land; [150810]

(2) if he will make a statement on the cost to farmers of removing illegally dumped motor vehicle tyres from agricultural land in the latest year for which figures are available. [150809]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: I have been asked to reply.

Section 59 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 provides the Environment Agency and local authorities with powers to require the removal of waste dumped in contravention of waste controls; or to remove it and recover their costs from those responsible. However, farmers of land which is the subject of fly-tipping cannot be required to remove the waste or to pay for its removal, unless they knowingly caused or permitted its dumping. We have no plans to introduce a scheme to pay the costs incurred by landowners in removing fly-tipped waste.

However, the Fly Tipping Forum is addressing the problem of fly-tipping on farms; and has commissioned research to assess the problem's scale and associated costs. (The Environment Agency chairs the Forum and its members include the NFU and the Country Landowners Association.) It is anticipated that this research project will be completed later in the spring and the Forum will then consider its findings. The Department of Trade and Industry also chairs a joint Government/industry working group which is considering options for recycling tyres in the light of the Landfill Directive, which will ban their disposal in landfill sites.

No data are currently held centrally on the cost to either local authorities or farmers of removing illegally dumped motor vehicle tyres.

Departmental Policies (Blackpool, South)

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effect on the Blackpool, South constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [142229]

Ms Quin: As most of my Department's policies flow from measures agreed within the framework of the EU Common Agricultural Policy, statistical data are normally available on a UK or England basis, but not disaggregated further. However, farmers in the UK have benefited from this Government's policies to the tune of £1.2 billion since 2 May 1997 in addition to the figure of approximately £3 billion per year in direct CAP payments. Farmers in the Blackpool, South constituency will also have available to them all of the schemes available under the England Rural Development Programme, which is backed by funding of £1.6 billion over the period 2000–06. Three of the schemes within this programme—Rural Enterprise, Processing and Marketing, and Vocational Training—have a budget of around £190 million and are being operated on a regional basis; each region has its own allocation.

Policy and Strategy Units

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his policy and corporate strategy unit was established; which of its reports are placed in the public domain; how many departmental or non-departmental special advisers participate in its work; how many regular (a) non-departmental and (b) departmental staff participate in its work; and how many of these work for the unit on a full-time basis. [150366]

Ms Quin: The MAFF Policy and Corporate Strategy Unit was established in November last year. No departmental or non-departmental special advisers participate directly in the unit's work, but one of the departmental special advisers sits, alongside senior officials and a non-executive director of the MAFF management board, on the unit's steering board. This board is chaired by the permanent secretary and is intended to determine priorities for the unit's work.

It is intended that the Policy and Corporate Strategy Unity will provide internal advice to Ministers and the permanent secretary. Typically, resulting reports would be placed in the public domain by the Department. No such reports have yet been produced by the unit.

The unit currently has 10 full time members of staff, including three staff on loan from other Government Departments and Agencies. During the coming months its staff complement is expected to rise to approximately 15 full time staff.

Producers' Organisations

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what review has been carried out by his Department's officials in order that producers' organisations recognised prior to 1995 satisfy EC Regulation 1762/96; and if he will list the proportion of total production by weight, attributable to each producers' organisation for its economic area. [151536]

Mr. Morley: UK Fisheries Departments regularly review the status of producers' organisations in accordance with the provisions of EC Regulation 2939/94, as amended by EC Regulation 1762/96, to ensure that they still meet the recognition criteria. Under EC Regulation 2939/94 a producers' organisation must be responsible for at least 15 per cent. of the production in its area, or at least 30 per cent. of production in a major port in its area. Data from 1999, the latest date for which information is available, for the producers' organisations are set out as follows. It should be noted that the European Commission is currently reviewing the recognition criteria in respect of minimum levels of economic activity.

Producers' organisation	Major port for landings	Proportion of landings at major port (percentage)
Anglo-North Irish FPO Ltd.	Kilkeel	69
Cornish FPO Ltd.	Newlyn	72
South Western FPO Ltd.	Brixham	71

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Hague Convention on Child Abduction

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will place in the Library the Government's response to the questionnaire concerning the practical operation of the Hague Convention on Child Abduction and views on possible recommendations, drawn up by Mr. William Duncan, Deputy Secretary-General, and dated October 2000. [150890]

Jane Kennedy: The response to the questionnaire on behalf of the Central Authority for England and Wales has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

School Sports Co-ordinator

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will name the remaining areas that will benefit from a new school sports co-ordinator from September 2001. [149399]

Kate Hoey: Twelve new areas in the second round of school sport co-ordinators were announced on 16 February. Fifty-five further appointments will be made in these new areas bringing the total number of school sport co-ordinators to 195.

Sports Facilities (Primary Schools)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment his Department has made of the quality of sports facilities in primary schools. [149386]

Kate Hoey: There is need to improve sports facilities in many of our primary schools. Part of our plan to do this is the Space for Sport and the Arts initiative which will provide £130 million for capital projects in 65 LEAs benefiting about 300 schools. In addition, £580 million of New Opportunities Fund money will be invested in strengthening the foundation of sport across England by building and refurbishing PE and sports facilities in over 1,500 schools.

Lottery Funds

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is taking to ensure national lottery funds are distributed in a way that targets areas with the greatest social needs. [149393]

Mr. Chris Smith: Following the 1988 reforms to the national lottery, distributors are required to take into account the need to ensure that all areas have access to funding and the scope for reducing economic and social deprivation. Since then, distributors have increasingly targeted funding on areas of need, on people and activities rather than just capital projects, and on small grants to community groups. All of this means that, more than ever, the communities with the greatest needs are experiencing the positive effects of national lottery funding.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much income for the Dome was generated through (a) merchandising aids and (b) royalties. [150937]

Janet Anderson: The figure provided by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is subject to the Company's necessary external audit scrutiny. That work will begin shortly and will inform the content of the Company's Annual Report and Financial Statements for the period 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000. The Report and Statements will be published in due course. NMEC has advised that income from merchandising was £2 million net, and from licensing was £0.2 million.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the total expenditure was on staffing the Dome from the run up period to the opening until the closure, including the costs of terminating contracts. [150925]

Janet Anderson: The figure provided by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is subject to the Company's necessary external audit scrutiny. That work will begin shortly and will inform the content of the Company's Annual Reports and Financial Statements for the period 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000. The Report and Statements will be published in due course. NMEC has advised that staffing expenditure for the period February 1997 to 31 December 1999 was £34.5 million. Staffing expenditure for the period 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000 was £47.2 million including retention and bonus payments as provided for in staff contracts but excluding bonus payments to Directors.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what revenue was received by NMEC from the catering arrangements at the Dome. [150924]

Janet Anderson: The figure provided by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is subject to the company's necessary external audit scrutiny. That work will begin shortly and will inform the content of the company's annual report and financial statements for the period 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000. The report and statements will be published in due course. NMEC has advised that revenue received from the catering arrangements at the Dome was £2.3 million net.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the ticket revenue received from the Dome was. [150923]

Janet Anderson: The figure provided by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is subject to the company's necessary external audit scrutiny. That work will begin shortly and will inform the content of the Company's Annual Report and Financial Statements for the period 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000. The report and statements will be published in due course. NMEC has advised that ticket revenue received from the Dome was £58.4 million.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the expenditure on utilities was for the Dome until its closure. [150926]

Janet Anderson: The figure provided by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is subject to the Company's necessary external audit scrutiny. That work will begin shortly and will inform the content of the Company's Annual Report and Financial Statements for the period 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000. The Report and Statements will be published in due course. NMEC has advised that expenditure on gas, electricity and water to 31 December 2000 was £4.3 million.

Dome Sponsors

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on what date the £1 million sponsorship payment from the Hinduja foundation for the faith zone was received by the New Millennium Experience Company. [149220]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 6 February 2001]: I understand from the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC), that the Hinduja Foundation first approached NMEC in February 1997 about the possibility of incorporating the "Concordia Project" into the Dome. This was to be an interactive visitor education centre focusing on the world's different cultures. The agreement between NMEC and the Hinduja Foundation governing its £1 million financial support for the Faith zone was signed on 16 February 1999. The first payment of £100,000 was paid on 25 February 1999; the second payment of £450,000 was paid on 18 May 1999 and the final amount of £450,000 was paid on 23 August 1999.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Further and Higher Education Students

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the combined total of students in further and higher education in each of the past five years was expressed as (a) total student enrolments in publicly funded institutions and (b) total full-time equivalents. [150118]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 15 February 2001]: The information requested is contained in the tables.

Higher education student numbers have steadily increased over recent years. Further education student numbers, on the other hand, have fallen slightly. The main reason for this is the large fall in franchised provision. Previous participation figures were artificially inflated by franchising, some of which offered courses of dubious value. I remain determined to raise student numbers in FE at the same time as I raise the quality of the provision on offer.

Notes:

1. All figures are on a whole year basis, and are for England only.

2. In 1998–99, three colleges transferred from the FE sector to the HE sector. Student numbers in these colleges are included in Tables 3 and 4 until 1997–98, and in Tables 1 and 2 from 1998–99.

3. In 1999–2000, one FE sector college merged with an HE institution. Student numbers in this college are included in Tables 3 and 4 until 1998–99; from 1999–2000 this college is considered part of the HE sector.

4. While funding for HNC and HND students in FE sector colleges transferred from FEFC to HEFCE in 1999–2000, their numbers appear in Table 3 throughout (as FEFC-funded students until 1998–99, then as non FEFC-funded students), and in Table 4 until 1998–99. Their numbers do not appear in Tables 1 or 2 in any year.

Table 1

The data include only those students on higher education courses at publicly funded HE institutions. Includes home, EU and overseas students filling places funded by the Higher Education Funding Council for England or by other sources. Includes students on Open University courses.

Table 2

The data include only those students on higher education courses at publicly funded HE institutions. Includes home, EU and overseas students filling places funded by the Higher Education Funding Council for England or by other sources. Includes students on Open University courses. The full-time equivalent factor used for part-time students is 0.35.

Table 3

The data include FEFC-funded and non FEFC-funded students in FE sector colleges and FEFC-funded students in External Institutions, Specialist Designated Institutions and Higher Education Institutions.

Table 4

In line with the normal publishing convention, Further Education FTE data include FEFC-funded and non FEFC-funded FE students in FE sector colleges, FEFC-funded FE students in External Institutions, Specialist Designated Institutions and Higher Education Institutions, and non FEFC-funded FE students in Adult Education Centres. Also included are FEFC-funded HE students in FE sector colleges. FTE figures are not yet available for 1999–2000.

Departmental IT Projects

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the IT projects his Department plans to undertake in the next year; and if he will state in each case the (a) expected date of commencement and completion and (b) cost. [151476]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The major information technology projects to be started in the next year are listed in the table.

Project	Description	Start date	Completion date	Estimated project cost
Correspondence handling	Enhancements to the system introduced in April 2000 for moving and tracking correspondence electronically	April 2001	October 2001	350,000
Infrastructure upgrades	Replacement of PCs and servers	April 2001	March 2002	3,000,000

Following on from the achievements the Employment Service (ES) has made in the last 12 months the ES is committed to improving its main advisory tool, the Labour Market System, which should see major improvements by December 2001 at a cost of £9.2 million.

The Modernising ES programme is already delivering new and exciting ways in helping customers come closer to the labour market, e.g. Jobpoints and Internet Jobbank, and the next steps are for the ES to engage with DSS colleagues on how best to take forward the IT requirements of the new agency. This will occur over the coming months.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the IT projects currently undertaken in his Department; and if he will state the (a) expected completion date and (b) cost of each project. [151502]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The major information technology-enabled projects currently being undertaken by the Department are listed in the following table.

Project	Description	End date	Estimated cost (£)
Teaching and learning initiatives UK Online Centres	Funding for ICT learning centres in disadvantaged communities	Ongoing	100 million
National Grid for Learning (Schools)	Further development of the NGfl programme to equip and connect schools, colleges and other places of learning	Ongoing. All schools to be connected to the internet by 2002	1 billion over 3 years 2001–04
ICT in Further Education Capital Infrastructure (National Learning Network)	The planned investment in ICT will help support colleges as the demand for ICT skills; electronic delivery of learning and access to knowledge and information continues to grow. Colleges will need to take advantage of best practice in the use of ICT, and they will need to exploit ICT to deliver new ways of learning through flexible, attractive and convenient mechanisms	Ongoing	74 million
ICT in Higher Education	Provision to support learning and effective management in HE institutions	Ongoing	300 million

Project	Description	End date	Estimated cost (£)
Connexions card project	To deliver a multi-functional smart card to young people in further learning, which carries discounts and rewards to encourage their participation and attainment. The project includes an underpinning database driven careers and course website	Autumn 2001	6.5 million
Worktrain	To develop an internet portal to job vacancies, careers, work-related learning and training opportunities	Comprehensive service available in 2001	3.2 million
Individual Learning Accounts	This includes: The implementation of policy for individual learning accounts; The creation of a national framework for the administration of individual learning accounts; The marketing and other promotional activity to support and increase take up; Continued development of ILA policy within the framework of funding for adult learners and wider policy developments The development of a partnership between DfEE and Capita; Ensuring consistency between the arrangements in England and the devolved administrations	May 2005 (end of contract)	50 million
Learning and Skills Council Information and Business System Project	To define, build and deliver the information systems and processes necessary to support the Learning and Skills Council	August 2002	38 million
Computers Within Reach	Scheme to give subsidised recycled PCs to low income families and earners	March 2001 (end of contract)	15 million
Wired up communities	To connect homes in a number of deprived communities to the internet and email and to test the impact which this might have to education and employability	February 2002 (end of contract)	10 million
Grid Club	The creation of a fun learning site for children aged 7 to 11. It will help them learn through communicating and participating in joint activities and through improving their IT skills	March 2004 (end of contract)	6 million
Learn Direct	Telephone help line and website run by the University for Industry providing information and advice to adults	Ongoing	10 million
Virtual College of School Leadership	A portal that provides the virtual arm of the National College for School Leadership. The NCSL has been launched to provide leadership and development to the School leadership group. It will deliver both face-to-face programmes, including the existing headship training programmes, as well as online developmental and networking opportunities	May 2003 (end of contract)	2 million
Other departmental systems
European Social Fund	Adapting systems to deliver ESF in accordance with revised payment methodology and business process	March 2001	1.2 million
Sure Start IT System	Sure Start is a cross-departmental initiative aimed at improving local service available to families and young children in disadvantaged areas	Mid 2001	1 million
Overseas Labour Service	To introduce a series of enhancements including the introduction of emailed applications for work permits	March 2002	650,000
New Student Support System	A project to allow students to access an initial application form for financial support electronically	Database and application form available in 2001	550,000

Project	Description	End date	Estimated cost (£)
Special Education Needs Tribunals System Re-write	Re-write of the system to meet new tribunal regulations which will result in a fundamental change to the way that appeals are managed	March 2001	500,000
Voluntary Aided Schools Information System (VASIS) Phase 2	Enhancement to the VASIS system which will provide the capability to receive and approve grant claims electronically and provide on-line access to schools and LEAs	September 2001	350,000
GTC Database (Releases 3–5)	Further releases which will provide for the collection of key data on teachers and fee collection	March 2001	300,000
Standards Fund System	Development of the existing system to enable LEAs to make electronic claims against the Standards Fund	March 2001	250,000
Publications Database (Phase 2)	Enhancements, which will improve our ability to monitor progress against targets	September 2001	150,000
Neighbourhood Support Fund Database	System required to monitor and evaluate the performance of the NSF projects and Managing Agents in delivering the Programme	February 2001	150,000
DfEE Correspondence Handling System	The development and implementation of a computerised system for managing the Department's wide ranging correspondence in order to improve on its performance targets as per the Whitehall Standards	—	2.5 million
DfEE Infrastructure upgrades	Replacement of PCs, fileservers and software	March 2001	4 million

Employment Services

The Employment Service's modernisation programme has made remarkable achievements in less than 12 months. The ES now has a modern IT infrastructure in its 1,000 Jobcentres. A national jobs database has been created with around 400,000 vacancies. That database is available to anyone with internet access through the Employment Service website.

Job points have been installed in 12 Jobcentres. Job points are state-of-the-art touch-screen kiosks through which Jobcentre customers can search the national database. Early indications from these pilots are that job points are popular and successful and it is intended that they will be rolled out nationally to all Jobcentres from March this year.

The Employment Service is also establishing a network of 11 customer services centres to take vacancies from employers through a single telephone number, by fax or by e-mail. They will provide employers with 24-hour electronic access to Jobcentre recruitment services. This new service is expected to come on line in the next few months.

The Employment Service is also managing the transfer of Work Based Learning for Adults in April 2001 from the TECs and this will result in the implementation of a new contracting and funding system in April 2001 which will encourage closer working with ES's programme providers.

These achievements have been part of a fully integrated programme of change valued at some £816 million, which has already seen a vast improvement in the way ES conducts its business.

New Deal (Northern Ireland)

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have benefited from the New Deal, by parliamentary constituency, in Northern Ireland broken down by gender who are (a) young unemployed, (b) long term unemployed, (c) disabled and (d) lone parents. [151000]

Ms Jowell: This subject is a devolved matter. I refer my hon. Friend to the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Fast-track Teachers

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if fast-track teachers will be distributed proportionately between specialist and non-specialist schools; and if he will make a statement. [151133]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Specialist and non-specialist schools will be able to create fast-track teaching posts. Fast-track teachers will not be distributed among schools; they will apply for these posts and be recruited in the usual way.

Environment Agency Learning Initiatives

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what involvement he will have in the implementation of learning initiatives proposed by the Environment Agency in "The Business of Learning—Investing in a Sustainable Future". [150272]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 15 February 2001]: I recently met Sir John Harman and colleagues to hear about their consultation on "The Business of Learning". The Environment Agency is proposing a number of initiatives building on its Pathfinder project and extending its involvement in sustainable development education. The Government's sustainable development education panel has already made a significant contribution towards raising the profile of sustainable development education in schools, further and higher education, and among the general public. I am considering with colleagues at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions the extent to which the proposals outlined in the consultation paper might complement the panel's work.

Civil Servants (Performance-related Pay)

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what basis performance-related pay is awarded to those civil servants within his Department concerned with the outsourcing of LEA services. [150703]

Mr. Wills: DfEE staff up to and including Grade 6 have their performance assessed under the Department's Performance Management System and at the end of each year are awarded an overall performance marking. This performance marking determines the size of their pay increase. Better performance is rewarded with a higher pay increase than weaker performance. The details of these increases are negotiated annually with the unions.

Members of the Senior Civil Service (SCS) (former Grade 5 and above) in DfEE have their performance assessed under the arrangements for the SCS Performance Review set centrally by the Cabinet Office. At the end of each reporting year, members of the SCS are awarded a performance mark, which is the key factor in determining their pay increase. Again, better performance at each level of management within the SCS is rewarded with a higher pay increase than weaker performance. The framework for the SCS pay award is set centrally each year by the Cabinet Office following the Government's response to the Senior Salaries Review Body's Report for that year.

School Funding (Sefton)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the credit approvals allocated to Sefton borough in each year from 1997 to 2004; and if he will specify the projects which received approvals and their associated cost. [151291]

Jacqui Smith: The table lists credit approvals issued to Sefton local education authority for the financial years 1997–98 to 2001–02, and shows those schools for which the credit approvals were allocated, together with details of the projects supported, where this information is known. Credit approvals for local authorities for the years beyond 2001–02 have not yet been issued. Sefton local education authority will have had discretion as to the application of credit approvals to specific projects and will be able to provide more information about the individual projects which have been supported through credit approvals.

Explanation of terms used in table

Commitments—funding to meet commitments that have arisen from allocations made in previous years;

Special Educational Needs (SEN)—funding to meet costs of statutorily approved projects at SEN schools;

Basic Need—allocation towards the cost of providing sufficient numbers of school places;

Formula—allocation made on a per pupil basis;

VA Minor Works—funding to meet LEA liabilities for projects costing less than £250,000 at Voluntary Aided (VA) schools;

Surplus places removal—funding to remove surplus places;

LEA Co-ordinated Voluntary Local Programme (LCVAP)—this has replaced the Minor Works programme, and is broadly similar.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the projects that (a) the New Deal for Schools programme and (b) Seed Challenge funding have supported in the borough of Sefton in each year since 1997; which it will support in each year up to 2004; and how much money (i) has been and (ii) will be allocated to each project. [151290]

Jacqui Smith: The table shows those schools in the borough of Sefton which are benefiting from investment through the New Deal for Schools programme, allocated over the four years from 1997–98 to 2000–01. These allocations total £6.768 million. In the same period, Sefton local education authority has been allocated some £19.536 million of funding in total for capital investment in schools.

A total of £196,000 of Seed Challenge funding was made available to Sefton local education authority in 2000–01. The authority will be able to provide a breakdown of individual projects and costings. 2000–01 is the first year in which Seed Challenge funding has been allocated to local education authorities.

In January this year, we announced that the New Deal for Schools would be extended over the next three years to 2003–04. Allocations which will benefit schools in Sefton local education authority, announced in January 2001 under the New Deal for Schools, total £11.23 million over three years; of this, £1.89 million is for 2001–02, £3.69 million for 2002–03 and £5.65 million for 2003–04.

This funding does not include the new £550 million New Deal for Schools Modernisation programme for which detailed allocations will be announced later this year.

An increase in Seed Challenge funding was also announced in January 2001, with allocations to Sefton local education authority totalling £970,000 over the three years to 2003–04. This comprises £220,000 in 2001–02, £375,000 in 2002–03 and £375,000 in 2003–04. It will be for Sefton local education authority, working with local schools and within guidelines provided by the Department, to allocate this new funding to individual school projects.

[1] Local education authorities (LEAs) were not required to specify individual project costs for phase 1 of the NDS programme, so the amount shown is the total allocation in that year to the LEA. Sefton local education authority holds project level information.
[2] The total allocation made to package projects covering more than one school. Sefton local education authority will be able to advise the value of projects at schools which have benefited from these allocations.

Emergency Contraception

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what steps have been taken to ensure that parents are notified that supply of emergency contraception will be permitted under a school's sex and relationships education policy; [151128]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that parents are properly consulted before a school adopts a policy of supplying emergency contraception; [151127]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of schools which have made emergency contraception available to pupils. [151126]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Our sex and relationship education guidance, published last July, clearly states that governing bodies and head teachers should consult parents in developing their sex and relationship education policy to ensure that they develop policies which reflect the parents' wishes and the culture of the community they serve. All schools must have a policy which is made available for inspection and to parents.

In the few cases where school nurses are dispensing contraception, this should be made clear in a school's sex and relationship policy, which has to be agreed with parents. These arrangements should not proceed until parents have been consulted.

Ofsted is statutorily required to evaluate and comment on a school's sex and relationship policy. From January 2000, as part of its new inspection framework, Ofsted is required to evaluate and report on how well schools work in partnership with parents.

We have made no estimates of the number of schools dispensing emergency contraception. However, Ofsted is aware of a few instances where emergency contraception has been dispensed by school nurses.

Improving teenagers' access to contraceptive advice, including emergency contraception, is a key strand of the Government's teenage pregnancy strategy.

DEFENCE

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99, (d) 1999–2000 and (e) 2000–01, (i) his Department's total spending on advertising campaigns, (ii) the cost of each individual advertising campaign and (iii) the criteria that were established to gauge the effectiveness of each campaign; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of each campaign based on these criteria. [142710]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member of Bath (Mr. Foster) on 15 February 2001, Official Report, columns 196–97. The information sought is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, what information is available was provided on that occasion.

Advertising is used by the Ministry of Defence when it is judged to be the most cost-effective way of delivering the publicity necessary to support a policy or proposal.

Departmental Surveys

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95, (d) 1995–96, (e) 1996–97, (f) 1997–98, (g) 1998–99, (h) 1999–2000 and (i) 2000–01, (I) his Department's total spending on quantitative and qualitative surveys of policy issues by focus groups, opinion polling, task forces or other means and (II) the cost of each individual project. [146583]

Dr. Moonie: As the modernising government White Paper set out, it is important to this Government that we listen to what people have to say about new proposals and policies. Quantitative and qualitative surveys of policy issues by focus groups, opinion polling, task forces and other means are now an integral and important part of departmental work. Public opinion research spending, however, is subject to the usual strict rules that spending must represent good value for money for the taxpayer and must not be used for party political purposes.

Information on quantitative and qualitative surveys of policy issues is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. These standard management tools are now employed across the Department and its many agencies.

Information on task forces, reviews and ad hoc advisory groups is updated and published every six months by the Cabinet Office.

Nancekuke

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information regarding the decommissioning of Nancekuke is contained within the remaining documents held by the Government under the 30-year rule; and if he will place it in the Public Record Office; [148908]

(2) what documents exist regarding Nancekuke that are more than 30-years-old but are not placed in the Public Record Office; and if he will place all remaining documents regarding Nancekuke in the Public Record Office; [148905]

(3) what type of information is contained within the remaining documents regarding Nancekuke held by the Government under the 30-year rule. [149286]

Dr. Moonie: It is not possible to identify the complete holding of records relating to defence activities at Nancekuke in the main MOD repository at Hayes without incurring disproportionate cost. All departmental records are reviewed under well-established procedures and those selected for public preservation are released in accordance with the provisions of the Public Records Act 1958 and 1967.

Following discussions between the Public Record Office (PRO) and the DERA site at Porton Down in the late 1990s, a collection of records that were over 30-years-old was identified and passed to the MOD's records authority for review in accordance with the procedures described above. The records from this collection that are selected for permanent preservation will be released to the PRO once the review process is complete. Some of these records make reference to the work at Nancekuke.

As part of the programme of environmental surveys of RAF Portreath, which have been conducted by the RAF and an independent expert consultant, a number of records have been identified relating to the decommissioning of Nancekuke. It is envisaged that these records will be made available when the conclusions of the current environmental survey have been considered and made public. No decisions have yet to be taken on the need for possible remedial work at the site and I expect this work to reach a conclusion later this year.

Anti-malarial Drugs

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there were sufficient supplies of Mefloquine or equivalent anti-malarial drugs for members of the Parachute Regiment and other service personnel deployed to Sierra Leone in 2000; and if he will make a statement. [149885]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 12 February 2001]: My Department had sufficient supplies of Mefloquine and other anti-malarial drugs to support deployments to Sierra Leone in 2000. There were no known problems in obtaining supplies, either at the start of Operation Palliser or on subsequent deployments. Some 200 Army personnel nevertheless deployed initially without anti-malarial tablets. An Army board of inquiry subsequently concluded that this was due to an oversight in their preparation for an unexpectedly rapid deployment. Within 24 hours of these personnel arriving in theatre, the French drug, Savarine, was procured locally and distributed. Steps were immediately taken to provide Mefloquine, the preferred anti-malarial treatment, from the UK and all personnel taking Savarine transferred to Mefloquine within four days. One other individual is known to have deployed without anti-malarials as a result of being temporarily absent from his unit on duty just prior to deploying and therefore missing the issue of Mefloquine.

He was issued with Mefloquine as soon as the problem came to light between two to five days after his arrival in theatre.

No anti-malarial drug is 100 per cent. effective and the degree of protection can be subject to a wide range of factors', for example, the geographical location, the season and the activities undertaken by the individuals concerned.

Ro-ro Ferries

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what efforts are being made in negotiations with the preferred bidder for ro-ros to ensure that strategic sealift service vessels are crewed by UK officers and ratings; [150908]

(2) what progress has been made in the negotiations with the preferred bidder for the ro-ro ferries. [150903]

(3) if, in the event that negotiations with the preferred bidder for the ro-ros fails, the other short listed bidders remain available to continue the competition. [150902]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Stephen Hepburn, dated 28 February 2000:

I am replying to your three questions to the Secretary of State for Defence regarding the RoRo Strategic Sealift project. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Negotiations continue with the preferred bidder with a view to placing a contract in the near future. In the event that it does not prove possible to place a contract with the preferred bidder, we would consider other options, one of which would be to reopen discussions with the other contractors who submitted proposals last year.

With regard to your question about the crewing of the vessels, when on MOD business the vessels will be manned by British UK officers and ratings. When not on MOD business, the ships will be trading commercially and their manning then will be a commercial matter for the company. However, to meet their potential MOD requirements, AWSR will be required at all times to ensure availability of sufficient British seafarers to man all six vessels.

Office for Standards of Casework

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he established the Office for Standards of Casework; what its mission, purpose and objectives are; and if he will publish its key targets and achievement matrix. [151231]

Dr. Moonie: The Office for Standards of Casework (Army) (OSC(A)) will be formally established by 2 April 2001. Work is currently in progress to develop its outline mission, purpose and goals.

Its mission is to oversee the Army's casework processes in order to achieve the armed forces overarching personnel strategy (AFOPS) goals for discipline.

OSC(A)'s purpose and primary function is to keep the Army's disciplinary and administrative casework processes under constant review and to propose measures that will ensure that these processes are working as efficiently as possible.

OSCA's objectives and associated tasks are:

to eliminate inefficiency and unnecessary delay by monitoring Army disciplinary and administrative casework establish and monitor audit trails for casework progress identify sources of unnecessary delay analyse casework to identify trends and issues propose remedial measures

analyse priorities for the resolution of issues.

It will also seek to ensure a culture of fairness and justice by promoting consistency in resolving casework throughout the Army, enable the swift and appropriate resolution of casework at the lowest level, continually review the documentary guidelines provided for commanders to ensure they are up-to-date and effective, liaise with all agencies involved in Army casework in order to ensure that their activities are co-ordinated and complementary and confirm that appropriate priority is given to casework at all stages and that standards are maintained.

Medical Records

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what measures are taken by his Department to ensure that the medical records of members of the armed forces are not lost; [150262]

(2) what measures he takes to ensure that individual members of the armed services are not disadvantaged in the event of their medical records being lost. [150263]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 14 February 2001]: Every care is taken in my Department to ensure that service personnel medical records are securely stored and not misplaced. A receipt note is used to cover the physical transfer of medical records, which is enclosed with the documents for immediate return by the receiving unit to the sending unit. In the event of a medical record going astray, it could be partially reconstructed from secondary sources.

Juliet McBride

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the telephone and simcard of Juliet McBride are in the possession of the Ministry of Defence Police at Aldermaston; if the text and other messages have been transcribed or recorded; if the Chief Constable of the Ministry of Defence Police has appointed (a) a Ministry of Defence Police officer or (b) an officer from another force to investigate; and if he will make a statement. [151288]

Dr. Moonie: On 18 January 2001, Ms McBride entered the AWE Aldermaston site without authorisation. She was approached and ejected by the Ministry of Defence Police (MDP) officers. Subsequently, Ms McBride reported the loss of her mobile telephone while on the site. This was found in the MDP vehicle used when removing Ms McBride from AWE and was returned to its owner on 19 January 2001. The Deputy Chief Constable of the MDP has appointed a MDP Chief Superintendent to investigate the circumstances surrounding the recovery of Ms McBride's telephone. It would be inappropriate to make any further comment pending the results of this investigation.

HEALTH

Halal Meat

Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has collated on the amounts of surplus halal slaughtered meat being sold in non-halal retail outlets. [147449]

Ms Stuart: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that information on the volumes of halal meat sold in non-halal outlets is not collected centrally. All meat, whether produced to halal requirements or not, must be produced under the relevant meat hygiene or food hygiene regulations, the requirements of which ensure that the meat is fit for human consumption.

Warrington Hospital

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the amount and (b) the purpose of each specific grant allocation made to Warrington Hospital since 1997. [149485]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The information requested is in the tables.

Parkinson's Disease

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Medical Research Council funded trial to compare sub-thalamic nucleus deep brain stimulation for Parkinson's disease with best medical practice will treat all patients that have an unmet need for deep brain stimulation (a) as part of the trial and (b) outside the trial; and if he will make a statement. [151454]

Yvette Cooper: A proposal for a large randomised long-term assessment of the relative effectiveness of surgery for Parkinson's disease patients is being considered by the Medical Research Council (MRC). The funding decision on this trial is due to be made by the MRC in March, following which the council would be happy to provide further details.

I regret that in an Adjournment debate on Parkinson's disease on 2 February 2001, Official Report, column 641, funding of £940,000 for a study into the effectiveness of new and old drugs for Parkinson's disease was incorrectly attributed to the MRC. This specific project is in fact funded by the National Health Service Technology Assessment Programme.

Waiting Lists

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people (a) have died while on the waiting list for an operation and (b) have been removed from the waiting list as a result of death in each of the last three years. [151606]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 27 February 2001]: The Department does not collect statistics on the number of people who have died while on the waiting list for an operation or the number of people who have been removed from the waiting list as a result of death. Data are collected on how many patients are removed from the waiting list without being treated, but these are not broken down in to the reasons why.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Tankers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many tankers registered in the United Kingdom have single hulls; and what percentage of the total this represents. [148401]

Mr. Hill: There are 26 single hulled tankers over 3,000 gross tons registered in the United Kingdom. This figure represents 86% of the total.

London Underground

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government decided to release commercially confidential information concerning the PPP bids for London Underground to Transport for London; and for what reason the Government did not do this previously. [150421]

Mr. Hill: Transport for London has had privileged access to information about the London Underground PPP from the beginning, consistent with the duties to consult and co-operate under the Greater London Authority Act 1999. My answer of 14 December 2000, Official Report, columns 201–02W, set out some of the commercially confidential information which had by that time been made available to Mr. Robert Kiley, the Commissioner of Transport for London. Since the agreement of 2 February between the Deputy Prime Minister and Mr. Kiley, there have been intensive discussions based on full access to information.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions under the Government's proposed PPP for the London Underground, if it is the Government's policy (a) to avoid splitting the operation of trains and the control of infrastructure as originally envisaged and (b) to ensure that London Underground management will have control over programmes for investment, renewal and maintenance of infrastructure, particularly with regard to their timing and priority. [150398]

Mr. Hill: The Government remain committed to securing the best option for long-term and stable investment in the Tube that combines value for money with maintaining and improving safety. We are in discussion with the Commissioner of Transport for London, Bob Kiley, on his proposals. Building on the work already done, we aim together to work out how best to accommodate his thinking within the current framework for the public private partnership competitions.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much London Transport has spent to date on consultancy for the London Underground Public-Private Partnership. [151576]

Mr. Hill: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Pound) on 30 November 2000, Official Report, column 757W. The Government will continue to provide six-monthly updates to Parliament on the cost of the consultancy work for the PPP and restructuring of London Underground.

Waste Management

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the consultation document on changes to the exemptions from waste management licensing. [150452]

Mr. Meacher: The recovery and disposal of waste are subject to control under the Framework Directive on waste; and the main method of control is a waste management licence under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. However, Article 11 of the Directive provides discretion for the provision of licensing exemptions, on the basis of "general rules" and subject to certain conditions. The main purpose of exemptions is to encourage waste recovery in ways which protect the environment and human health.

We are currently reviewing several of the exemptions provided in regulation 17 of Schedule 3 to the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994. The review includes two exemptions subject to allegations of abuse (Schedule 3 paragraphs 9 and 19). We propose to tighten the terms of these exemptions to preclude their use for "sham recovery", to set minimum inspection frequencies by the Environment Agency, and to introduce charges for their registration and inspection.

We are also reviewing the exemptions for the landspreading of waste for "agricultural benefit or ecological improvement"

(paragraph 7); the storage and landspreading of sewage sludge for ecological improvement (paragraph 8); recovery operations at sewage treatment works (paragraph 10); and community composting (paragraph 12). We are considering the provision of new exemptions for the recovery and storage of waste oil, the burning of dunnage at ports and the remediation of contaminated land.

We intend to publish a consultation paper on these proposals this spring. We also intend to consult later this year on the application of waste management controls to agricultural waste—including licensing exemptions. A separate consultation exercise on licensing exemptions for "special waste" is planned for the summer.

Home Improvement Agencies

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will review the performance of Foundations responsible for co-ordinating the work of home improvement agencies. [150848]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: My Department keeps the performance of Foundations, the national co-ordinating body for home improvement agencies, under continuous review in accordance with the procedures established under the contract.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department will be publishing figures on the performance of local home improvement agencies which are in receipt of funding from the Department. [150849]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Under the arrangements for funding home improvement agencies, local authorities are responsible for monitoring the performance of their local agency. The national co-ordinating body collects information on agencies' activities and outputs and, in respect of the current financial year, will be making it available for benchmarking purposes as soon as it has been collated.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the guidelines for the monitoring of the performance of home improvement agencies. [150850]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The national co-ordinating body for home improvement agencies, Foundations, completed the despatch of guidelines to local authorities and agencies on 20 February. I am arranging for copies to be sent to my hon. Friend and placed in the Libraries of the House.

School Transport

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he intends to issue guidance to local education authorities prohibiting the use of vehicles (a) specifically designed to carry standing passengers and (b) without seatbelts, for the transportation of school children. [150806]

Mr. Hill: I have no plans to issue guidance to local education authorities prohibiting the use of vehicles specifically designed to carry standing passengers or those without seat belts for the transportation of school children. As I stated in my answer of 26 February 2001, Official Report, column 315W, it is ultimately for the schools and local education authorities to ensure the vehicles they will be using are appropriate for the type of journeys planned, and in so doing to take the safety benefits of seat belts into account.

Tyre Dumping

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he intends to introduce measures to reduce the number of illegally dumped motor vehicle tyres; [150807]

(2) if he will make a statement on the cost to local authorities of removing illegally dumped motor vehicle tyres for the last five years for which figures are available. [150808]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Section 59 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 provides the Environment Agency and local authorities with powers to require the removal of waste dumped in contravention of waste controls; or to remove it and recover their costs from those responsible. However, farmers of land which is the subject of fly-tipping cannot be required to remove the waste or to pay for its removal, unless they knowingly caused or permitted its dumping. We have no plans to introduce a scheme to pay the costs incurred by landowners in removing fly-tipped waste.

However, the Fly Tipping Forum is addressing the problem of fly-tipping on farms; and has commissioned research to assess the problem's scale and associated costs. (The Environment Agency chairs the Forum and its members include the NFU and the Country Landowners Association). It is anticipated that this research project will be completed later in the Spring and the Forum will then consider its findings. The Department of Trade and Industry also chairs a joint Government/Industry working group which is considering options for recycling tyres in the light of the Landfill Directive, which will ban their disposal in landfill sites.

No data are currently held centrally on the cost to either local authorities or farmers of removing illegally dumped motor vehicle tyres.

Cabin Crew (Security)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to ensure flight security for cabin crew. [150644]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The Civil Aviation Act 1982 and the Air Navigation (No. 2) Order 1995 provide strong powers for dealing with passengers who threaten the safety or personal security of cabin crew or passengers. New powers were introduced in 1999 to ensure that anyone using threatening, abusive or insulting behaviour towards cabin crew or intentionally interfering with the crew during their duties can be punished. The effectiveness of existing measures to deal with disruptive incidents is monitored by the Disruptive Passengers Working Group, which is made up of representatives from Government, the Civil Aviation Authority, the airline industry, the police and other interested parties.

School Crossing Wardens

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the (a) contribution to road safety, (b) recruitment, remuneration and retention and (c) extension of responsibilities to include assistance to people with disabilities of school crossing wardens. [150710]

Mr. Hill: The Government fully recognise that school crossing patrols provide a valuable service to local communities, making it safe and easier for children, parents and other pedestrians to cross busy roads. However, questions as to where they should be provided and to the terms and conditions of employment of the patrol officers, are a matter for individual local authorities. My Department has made no centralised assessment of such matters.

Recent amendments to previous legislation, through the Transport Act 2000, have given school crossing patrols wider powers. When in operation, they now have authority to help anyone who seeks their assistance in crossing the road, and not just children on their way to or from school.

Road Construction (East Sussex)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the compatibility of the stated purpose of the South Coast multi-modal study and the consideration of the construction of bypasses for Hastings. [150875]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The Access to Hastings study reported in November 2000 and considered how transport can contribute to regenerating the local economies in Bexhill and Hastings.

The South Coast multi-modal study is currently out to tender, and aims to investigate congestion, safety and environmental problems on the south coast between Southampton and Ramsgate. The study is strategic in nature and will take into account the Access to Hastings Final Report and decisions by Ministers.

Business Rates

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the system of business rates. [151279]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In September we published our Green Paper "Modernising Local Government Finance". It detailed a number of proposals relating to business rates including a supplementary local rate and rate relief for small businesses. The consultation period ended on 8 December. We are now considering the many responses we have received. We will publish our conclusions in a White Paper later this year.

Ministerial Meeting

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the meeting between the Minister for Local Government and the Regions, the right hon. Member for North-West Durham (Ms Armstrong) and leading members of the Town and Country Finance Issues Group concerning the Green Paper on local government finance will take place. [151132]

Ms Armstrong: We have no record of a formal request for a meeting from the leading members of Town and Country Finance Issues Group. If I receive such a request I would be happy to consider it.

Recycling

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what procedures he has established for auditing the quantities of recyclable material eligible for packaging recovery notes and packaging export recovery notes; and if he will make a statement. [150975]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Only packaging waste handled by accredited reprocessors and exporters is eligible for packaging recovery or packaging export recovery notes. In England and Wales the accreditation is overseen by the Environment Agency, to whom those who are accredited are required to send information regularly on the quantities handled. Accredited reprocessors are subject to an annual inspection at the time of making their application for accreditation. Accredited reprocessors must submit quarterly returns to the Environment Agency and the Agency also makes periodic inspections, some of which are unannounced, to premises to check this information.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the introduction of packaging export recovery notes on the use of recyclate by British manufacturing industry; and if he will make a statement. [150974]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth [holding answer 26 February 2001]: No assessment of this kind has been done to date. However, in the first three quarters of 2000, 93 per cent. of packaging recycled has been recycled in the UK; with the remainder being exported for recycling. Since the packaging regulations came into force, the UK has increased its packaging recovery rate from some 30 per cent. in 1997 to just under 40 per cent. at the end of 1999.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much his Department spent in the last year on raising public consciousness concerning the value of recycling; [151320]

(2) what steps he is taking to improve public awareness of the cost of waste disposal and the importance of recycling. [151316]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Prime activity to raise public awareness of waste reuse and recycling is taken forward under my Department's "are you doing your bit?" publicity campaign, which aims to persuade people to take action to protect the environment. This campaign, which is receiving funding of £9 million in this financial year covers transport, climate change, waste and water conservation. Approximately 15 per cent. of campaign expenditure is devoted to waste issues. Examples of "are you doing your bit?" waste campaign activity are at www.useitagain.org.uk and www.doingyourbit.org.uk, which I commend to the House.

In addition, my Department is providing core funding of £3.7 million to the environmental charity ENCAMS (incorporating Tidy Britain Group and Going for Green), who primarily focus their waste promotional activity around a waste theme month in October. Environmental Action Fund grants totalling approximately £415,000 are also being paid to 13 charities in this financial year to support various waste/recycling projects.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to improve the level of recycling in the United Kingdom. [151353]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Waste Strategy 2000 set out targets for doubling the recycling or composting of household waste in three years and nearly tripling it in five years. These targets will be underpinned by statutory performance standards for each local authority under the Best Value regime. It also set a target of reducing the amount of industrial and commercial waste sent to landfill by 2005, to 85 per cent. of that landfilled in 1998.

We announced in the Spending Review 2000 major extra funding for local authorities and for the new Waste and Resources Action Programme which will operate across all waste streams to foster markets for recycled materials.

Most recently, my right hon Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport consulted on proposals for the next round of lottery funding (the New Opportunities Fund), including a programme to expand community sector waste reuse, recycling and composting.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what incentives his Department plans to introduce to assist in the production of community recycling programmes. [151317]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced in his speech of 24 October a further £50 million from the New Opportunities Fund to support community recycling initiatives for up to 700,000 households.

We will shortly issue guidance to English local authorities on Municipal Waste Management Strategies, which will make it clear that we expect such strategies to include the authorities' plans for partnerships with local community groups.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the contracts that exist between Serco and his Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151337]

Mr. Hill: The following are current contracts between Serco and DETR, its executive agencies and major associated public bodies:

Refuse Collection Service, Canterbury Driving Test Centre;

Integrated Telesales Facility for DVLA;

Additional Message Sign Sub-System and Maintenance of Motorway Communication Equipment;

Midlands Network and Customer Services (West Midlands) Maintenance Contract;

National Motorway Communications System (NMCS) Software Maintenance;

Maintenance of Automatic Traffic Counting Equipment for London.

The following are contracts which have been completed during the last three years:

Drainage System for A43;

Maintenance and Operation of Enforcement Equipment for M25;

Maintenance of Channel Navigation Information System;

Design, Manufacture and Testing of Computing Sub-Systems;

Replacement of Radar Tracking Unit at Fairlight Down;

Managing Agents for HSE Scottish Estates;

NMCS Maintenance Contract for Dartford River Crossing.

The information requested in respect of other associated bodies is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Woodfold Hall and Park

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received concerning the planning application relating to Woodfold Hall and Park, Mellor near Blackburn. [151551]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State has received representations from eight interested parties since he called-in the three applications relating to Woodfold Hall and Park on 15 December 2000.

Departmental Policies (Norwich, North)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effect on the Norwich, North constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [151140]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Norwich, North constituency has benefited from a range of Government initiatives since 2 May 1997 including:

Capital allocations for housing

Year	£ million
1997–98	5.39
1998–99	7.93
1999–2000	7.76
2000–01	9.17
2001–02	12.95

By 2001–02 the resources made available to Norwich city council's housing investment programme will have more than doubled since the Government came to power. In 2001–02 £9.68 million of the allocation is in the form of the Major Repairs Allowance (MRA), paid as revenue, reflecting a shift to providing resources specifically for the cost of works to maintain council housing. It is for the local authority to determine where within its boundaries these resources are invested; it is therefore not possible to give precise amounts used within the Norwich, North constituency.

Single Regeneration Budget

SRB Round 1—Mile Cross, Norwich

A four-year scheme on a run-down peripheral pre-war council estate aimed to improve the quality of life for tenants through investment in the physical environment and community development, including a renovated community centre and an innovative combined heat and power scheme.

SRB total £2.245 million, £1.579 million since 1997–98.

SRB Round 4—Norwich—A Learning City

This seven year scheme aims to raise the education attainment levels and employability of the people in the five most deprived wards in Norwich, where unemployment is 7.4 per cent. against the Eastern Region average of 4.9 per cent. This includes the Mile Cross and Catton Grove wards in Norwich, North. The emphasis will be on young people with low educational achievement and disadvantaged groups.

SRB total £1.188 million, £616,000 of which will be spent by March 2002.

SRB Round 6—Catton and Fiddlewood

£250,000 over thee years has been awarded to the Catton and Fiddlewood Partnership to build community capacity and involvement. This will help them to prepare and submit bids for more regeneration in future years.

SRB total £250,000 for period 2000–01 to 2002–03.

East of England Development Agency (EEDA)

A land and property scheme to redevelop an old wartime concrete area in Mile Cross.

EEDA funding £153,000 since 1997–98.

Local Government Finance Settlement

The following figures show the Government grants to Norwich city council and Norfolk county council as part of the Local Government Finance Settlement.

The information for general grant (Revenue Support Grant, National Non-Domestic Rates and damping grants) is as follows:

£ million

Year	Norwich city council	Norfolk county council
1998–99	12.467	341.529
1999–2000	12.550	362.774
2000–01	12.833	380.676
2001–02	13.112	395.21

These figures have not been adjusted to make year on year comparisons possible. There are no readily available figures for 1997–98.

It is not possible to determine the exact amounts allocated by the two councils to the Norwich, North constituency.

Local transport plans

Year	£ million
1997–98	[1]7.713
1998–99	[1]5.521
1999–2000	[1]7.752
2000–01	[2]9.203
2001–02	29.247

[1] These figures are for Norfolk county council's Transport Policies and Programmes allocation

[2] This figure is from Norfolk county council's Provisional Local Transport Plan settlement

It is not possible to determine exactly how much of these amounts has been spent on Norwich, North constituency. However, the constituency has benefited from Norfolk county council's integrated transport policies.

HMOs (Licensing System)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce a licensing system for houses in multiple occupation; and if he will make a statement. [151554]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: As we indicated in our Housing Policy Statement, we remain committed to introducing a compulsory licensing system for houses in multiple occupation (HMOs). Legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time allows.

London Borough of Camden

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funding allocations his Department has made to the London borough of Camden to support those in temporary housing in each year since May 1997. [150977]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth [holding answer 26 February 2001]: There has been no specific allocation of funding from this Department to support those in temporary housing in the London borough of Camden. It is for local authorities to decide how they should allocate the resources they receive from the Department.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources have been allocated by his Department to the London borough of Camden through regeneration initiatives since May 1997. [150979]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Since 1997 to date, the London borough of Camden has been allocated £58.599 million for regeneration schemes. These resources have been spread over the following five schemes, two of which have been co-ventures with the neighbouring boroughs of Brent and Islington:

Scheme	£ million
Kings Cross	37.5
West Euston	6.5
All Change at Camden Central	7.0
New Commitment to Kilburn (Brent and Camden)	6.599
Young People, Drugs and Crime in Gospel Oak (Islington and Camden)	1.0

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources have been invested by his Department in (a) local authority housing and (b) social housing in the London borough of Camden since May 1997. [150978]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Since May 1997, the London borough of Camden has been allocated a total of £124.937 million to resource local authority social housing. This is broken down into the following areas:

	£ million
Housing Investment Programme:
1998–99	9.271
1999–2000	10.169
2000–01	32.394
2001–02	18.826
Capital Receipts Initiatives:
1997–98	2.658
1998–99	8.612
1999–2000	9.262
Capital Challenge, (Gospel Oak scheme):
1998–99	2.104
1999–2000	3.227

	£ million
Estate Action, (Kings Cross scheme):
1998–99	5.200
1999–2000	1.030
Major Repairs Allowance:
2001–02	22.184

A259/A3 Bypasses

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his policy is on the decisions of South East of England Regional Assembly relating to the (a) proposed A259 Hastings bypass and (b) proposed A3 Hindhead bypass; and if he will make a statement. [151331]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The South East of England's Regional Assembly (SEERA) considered the Final Report for the access to Hastings Study, and for the A3 Hindhead Study, at its plenary meeting of 14 February. I will consider the Assembly's formal recommendations on these studies carefully.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidelines are set by him concerning the minimum distance of telecommunications masts from houses. [151498]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Telecommunications operators have a duty under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Management of the Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1999 to ensure that so far as is reasonably practicable, their work activities—which would include the installation and operation of their equipment—do not expose people to risks to their health and safety.

Following publication of the Stewart report on mobile phones and health in May 2000, the Government accepted that, as a precautionary measure, the emissions from mobile phone base stations should meet the more restrictive International Commission on Non-Ionizing Radiation Protection (ICNIRP) guidelines for public exposure (as expressed in the EU Council Recommendation of 12 July 1999 on the limitation of exposure of the general public to electromagnetic fields (0 Hz to 300GHz)). Most base stations already meet the ICNIRP guidelines and all new base stations will do so.

The Stewart report recommended the establishment of clearly defined physical exclusion zones around base station antennas, which delineate areas within which exposure guidelines may be exceeded, to prevent the public from exposure to radiofrequency radiation above the ICNIRP guidelines. These exclusion zones relate to an area directly in front of and at the height of the antenna. The report did not recommend the introduction of a minimum distance between masts and existing development and we have no plans to introduce such a requirement.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish revised PPG Note 8 on telecommunications development and the Government's conclusions on proposed changes to part 24 of the General Permitted Development Order. [151293]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The consultation exercise seeking views on possible changes to the planning laws relating to mobile phone masts and associated guidance ended on 31 October 2000. The Department is currently analysing the responses. We intend to announce our conclusions as soon as practically possible.

Safer Stations Initiative

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the funding, under the Safer Stations Initiative, the Government have made available for passenger safety improvements to (a) Queenstown Road Station, (b) Battersea Park Station, (c) Wandsworth Town Station, (d) Balham Station and (e) Clapham South Station. [151154]

Mr. Hill: The Safer Stations Initiative is led by the London borough of Wandsworth. It is aimed at improving the safety, accessibility and environmental quality of railway stations in the borough, in partnership with service providers, passenger representatives and the police. The initiative has received no direct funding from central Government.

Departmental Policies (Battersea)

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the effects on Battersea constituency of his Department's transport policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [151155]

Mr. Hill: Specific information about the effects on Battersea constituency is not available. However, since April 1997 my Department has allocated £6.48 million of resources for transport initiatives and schemes to the London borough of Wandsworth under the Local Transport Settlement.

Responsibility for allocations for the financial year beginning April 2001 onwards now belongs to Transport for London.

The London borough of Wandsworth has also benefited from Local Transport Settlement allocations to a number of London-wide initiatives, and to two sub-regional partnerships, SWELTRAC and Wandle Valley. Since April 1997 the following amounts have been allocated:

	£ million
London Cycle Network	20.5
London Bus Priority Network	47.0
SWELTRAC	3.6
Wandle Valley	1.0
Green Areas Initiative	0.6
Bridge Strengthening	64.9

In addition, as part of the Red Route programme a number of road schemes have been carried out in the constituency, including junction improvements, crossings and signing.The franchises for national rail services in the area are currently being replaced with a view to providing a much improved service when the competitions are complete.

East Coast Main Line

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the criteria which are to be used in deciding the award of the East Coast main line franchise and their order of priority and relative weighting. [151553]

Mr. Hill: In considering proposals for franchise replacement the Instructions and Guidance given to the Chief Executive of the Strategic Rail Authority by the Deputy Prime Minister ask him to give due weight to performance, customer services, innovation, investment and efficiency, the extent to which passengers will be given a greater voice in the level and standard of services and affordability and value for money for the taxpayer. The Authority provides the actual evaluation criteria to prequalified parties for each replacement franchise.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department expects to receive the Strategic Rail Authority's recommendations concerning the awarding of the East Coast main line rail franchise; and what are the reasons for the delay announced on 14 February. [151552]

Mr. Hill: On 14 February the Strategic Rail Authority announced a pause in the franchise replacement process for the Inter City East Coast replacement franchise as a result of increased cost estimates for upgrading the East Coast main line provided by Railtrack.

Prior to that date, the Secretary of State was considering a request from the SRA for a direction, under section 26 of the Railways Act 1993, which would allow it to choose a preferred bidder for this replacement franchise. The SRA has now asked the Secretary of State to delay further consideration of whether to grant such a direction until it has discussed the issue of cost estimates with Railtrack and taken a view on any implications for the replacement process.

Water Meters

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 2001, Official Report, column 21W, on water meters, if he will publish Ofwat's letter to water companies on water meters and the responses received. [150661]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth [holding answer 26 February 2001]: I understand from the Director General of Water Services that the letters referred to were not only about metering but dealt with a wide range of issues in companies' charges schemes. Some of this information concerning companies' planning, costs and revenues was discussed in confidence and is commercially sensitive. It would be inappropriate, therefore, to publish the correspondence.

However I have asked the Director General to write to the hon. Member to explain the action taken by Ofwat and he will do so very shortly. A copy of this letter will be placed on public deposit in the Ofwat library.

Liquid Petroleum Gas

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what steps the Government are taking to encourage car manufacturers to make and sell cars that run on liquid petroleum gas; [151263]

(2) what steps the Government are taking to help promote the environmental benefits of liquid petroleum gas to the public; [151265]

(3) what steps the Government are taking to encourage more petrol stations to sell liquid petroleum gas; [151264]

(4) what grants are available to owners of older car models to convert their cars to run on liquid petroleum gas. [151262]

Mr. Hill: The Government have introduced a range of measures to promote the wider use of liquefied petroleum gas (LPG). The Powershift programme, funded by my Department and administered by the Energy Saving Trust, provides grants towards the additional cost of vehicles fuelled by LPG. There is a low rate of duty on LPG and other road gas fuels—around 7.5p per litre, compared to 48.82p per litre for premium unleaded petrol and 48.82p per litre for ultra low sulphur diesel. From 1 March 2001, new LPG cars will benefit from a lower rate, under the new Vehicle Excise Duty system.

The number of LPG refuelling points is growing rapidly. There were around 100 in 1997. There are now around 660 sites in the UK and this number is expected to rise to over 1,000 by the end of this year, thanks to investment from the major fuel suppliers. Many of these new facilities will be on petrol station forecourts. The Government's revised transport planning guidance note (PPG13) will further encourage local authorities to view planning applications for refuelling facilities for cleaner fuels more favourably. This is expected to be published later this year.

My Department's Ministers and officials have met a range of vehicle manufacturers to discuss the development of the gas vehicle market. The Energy Saving Trust is also in close touch with vehicle manufacturers, encouraging them to introduce production line gas vehicles. I am encouraged to know that several vehicle manufacturers are considering doing so.

Grants under the Powershift programme focus on new cars (but also those of up to one year old), encouraging manufacturers to develop high quality production line gas vehicles, so as to reduce the cost and lead to the wider use of gas fuelled vehicles. Also, the older a vehicle is, the harder is it to guarantee that a gas conversion will lead to emission reductions.

Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the Public Service Vehicles (Condition of Fitness, Equipment, Use and Certification) Regulation 1981 (No. 257), regulations 28(1)(d)(ii) and 28(1)(f) following the judgment made at Colchester county court on 5 February against Crusader Holidays of Clacton-on-Sea (claim C0005266). [151157]

Mr. Hill: I have no plans to amend the Public Service Vehicles (Conditions of Fitness, Equipment. Use and Certification) Regulations 1981 as a result of the judgment made at Colchester county court of 5 February. The standards for seat spacing are the minimum requirements that reflect the varied types of operation of buses and coaches. There is nothing to prevent an operator from having a greater space for the seats than that which is set out in the regulations if they so wish.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to seek compensation from the contractors responsible for construction work on the Jubilee Line extension. [151301]

Mr. Hill: This is a matter for London Underground Limited (LUL), who let the contracts for Jubilee Line Extension construction. I understand that the majority of Jubilee Line Extension contracts included liquidated damages clauses. There is a rigorous final accounting process during which these clauses are reviewed against the performance of individual contractors to determine whether or not damages apply. LUL manages this process, supported where necessary by high quality legal and technical advisers. If a contractor is deemed to be liable for any part of the total time and cost overrun this is taken into account in final settlement of the relevant contract. For reasons of commercial confidentiality it would not be appropriate to comment on any individual case.

Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what Government funding has been received by the Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority since 1997; and what it is to be used for. [151125]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Department has not provided funding to the Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority since 1997.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that local authorities have sufficient resources to cover the above-inflation element of the teachers' pay award without having (a) to levy additional council tax and (b) reduce other services. [151170]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We took account of all pressures on local education authorities, including teachers' pay, when setting the level of provision in the spending review. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment announced on 29 January extra funding of £52 million to help certain local education authorities manage funding changes in 2001–02. Local authorities are responsible for their own decisions on budget priorities and council taxes for 2001–02.

Secure Environment

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what strategy he has for ensuring that all council and housing association tenants have a secure environment; and what funds are being allocated to it. [151533]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth [holding answer 27 February 2001]: An important part of the Government's regeneration and neighbourhood renewal strategy is to tackle anti-social behaviour and promote community safety at grass roots level. Neighbourhood Wardens form a key part of the Government's partnership approach to tackling crime and disorder, working with the community, police, local authorities, housing associations and other agencies to reduce crime and the fear of crime and to promote safer and more secure communities.

My Department and the Home Office have jointly allocated £18.5 million until 2003–04 for the Neighbourhood Warden programme. Some of the wardens will perform a "supercaretaker" role on estates; others will have a patrolling function. Both roles will provide a sense of security and personal contact with residents.

More widely, the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 requires local authorities and the police to establish district based crime and disorder reduction partnerships, to develop and implement local strategies for reducing crime and disorder. Each strategy is informed by evidence drawn from an audit of crime and disorder in the locality in consultation with the local community. The recently appointed crime reduction directors in each of the English regions and Wales will be managing the Partnership Development Fund announced as part of the Spending Review 2000 which provides for £3 million in this financial year with a further £20 million in each of the next three financial years. The purpose of the fund is to support the partnership process and to develop improved and more effective ways of working.

Wind-farm Developments

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many wind-farm developments have been granted permission, but are yet to be built by developers in (a) Wales, (b) England and (c) the UK as a whole. [151364]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I understand from information collected by ETSU that, as at December 2000, the following number of wind-farm developments had been granted planning permission but had not commenced construction:

(a) 4 in Wales

(b) 11 in England

(c) 19 in the whole of the UK (the other four being in Scotland).

Agenda 21 Strategies

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what targets have been set for the implementation of Agenda 21 strategies by local authorities; and how the progress of such strategies is being monitored. [151574]

Mr. Meacher: The Prime Minister set a challenge for local authorities to produce a Local Agenda 21 strategy by the end of 2000; over 90 per cent. of English local authorities have met this. Whether a local authority has produced a strategy in line with the Government's guidance will be tested formally via the Best Value performance indicators.

Local authorities should now implement their Local Agenda 21 strategies in order to meet the objectives and targets they have set. With the introduction of Community Strategies, local authorities that have produced Local Agenda 21 strategies in line with the Government's guidance should have gone a long way towards developing effective partnership working, a long term vision for the area and the necessary implementation mechanisms, that they will require in preparing their Community Strategies.

Housing Rents

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to require local authorities to limit increases in housing rents during the period they are seeking convergence with registered social landlord rent levels. [151575]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Local authorities are responsible for deciding the level of their rents. We expect all social landlords to ensure that no tenant will be subject to a change in their rent as a result of the combined influence of restructuring and convergence of more than £2 a week in any year above the normal increase for inflation. We intend to use the Housing Revenue Account Subsidy system to encourage restructuring and convergence and discourage excessive rent increases.

Shared Ownership Schemes

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many do-it-yourself shared ownership schemes have been approved since May 1997. [151183]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: The total number of do-it-yourself shared ownership (DIYSO) schemes approved since May 1997 is 4,117.

Hinduja Brothers

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) representations his Department has received and (b) meetings he and his Department have had with any of the Hinduja brothers since May 1997. [151184]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 15 February 2001, Official Report, column 222W. My right hon. Friend has had no other meetings with the Hinduja family.

It is not the normal practice of the Government to release details of meetings or discussions between officials and private individuals or companies.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what public funds have been spent in each year since 1997 on consultancy fees in relation to the development, production and evaluation of strategies and action plans for regional development agencies. [151185]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The fees paid to consultants' by the nine Regional Development Agencies are detailed in the table. There were no costs incurred for the period 1997 to 1998 as the Regional Development Agencies were established on 1 April 1999.

Year	£
1998–99	59,414
1999–2000	1,226,400
2000–01	312,250

Oceans Statute

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with organisations about the World Wide Fund for Nature's proposals for an oceans statute. [150983]

Mr. Meacher: I understand that the WWF, in discussions in the Working Group of the Review of Marine Nature Conservation, have put forward proposals on the need for further legislation to protect the marine environment. This Working Group was established by the Government to review the options for improving the protection available for the marine environment. An interim report is due to be presented to Ministers soon. This will set out a range of options on possible ways forward and highlight where strategic decisions may be necessary.

Quality Mark Scheme

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made with the Quality Mark scheme; and if he will make a statement. [151886]

Mr. Raynsford: In January a number of measures were put in place to encourage builders to join the Quality Mark (QM) pilot scheme in Birmingham and Somerset. Among these were a time limited discount on the joining fee, joint working with several leading trade associations and commercial organisations, to develop ways of helping their members and sub-contractors achieve the QM standard and easier ways of obtaining the mandatory warranty cover. I am pleased to say these efforts are now beginning to pay off and the number of companies in the two pilot areas now wishing to join the QM has increased from around 40 to over 275. I expect more companies to apply to join the QM in the weeks and months ahead.

Most of these companies should complete the assessment process and attain the QM in the next two-three months. As a result of this, I am able to announce today that subject to satisfactory progress with the assessment process, we shall move to the second stage of the pilot programme by opening the QM to consumers on 22 May. The launch will involve the unveiling of the QM logo and involve a major public information campaign in the pilot areas, co-ordinated with our partners, to alert the public to the QM and the benefits of using QM builders. They will be able to find the names of QM builders and tradesmen through a national call centre of via the Internet.

Householders in the two pilot areas of Birmingham and Somerset will then be able, through this Government-backed scheme, be able to find a reputable builder to do a good job for a fair price. By using a QM builder they will have the comfort of knowing that the company has been subject to a rigorous and independent inspection, including an on-site inspection of their work, will work to a QM code of good practice and give a free six-year warranty on their work. The opening of the QM scheme to the public in this way is a major step forward in the fight against disreputable builders and fulfils a major commitment by this Government to introduce measures to empower consumers and promote reputable companies.

After six months there will be a review of how well the scheme has worked to see what lessons can be learned. This will involve all aspects of the scheme, including how easy it is for the public to locate a QM builder. Following further consultation with QM builders, our partners, the industry and consumers a decision will then be made about whether any modifications need to be made to the scheme and how to extend it to the rest of the country.

Consumers in this country have for too long been at the mercy of disreputable builders and tradesmen. But there are many reputable builders willing and able to do a good job for a fair price. The QM pilot scheme is a first step towards a national scheme to link consumers and reputable builders. I hope that more builders will recognise the benefits of the QM and apply to join now.

Farm Diversification

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what responses he has received to his consultation paper on rate relief for farm diversification; and if he will make a statement. [151887]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We received 68 responses to our consultation paper on rate relief for farm diversification, copies of which are available through the Library of the House.

In the light of our consultation, we are proposing to implement a scheme to allow 50 per cent. rate relief for an initial period for five years to all new small businesses established on property that was previously subject to the agricultural exemption from rates.

We also intend to implement the proposals in "Modernising Local Government Finance: A Green Paper", published last September, for extending the rate relief scheme for village shops to provide mandatory relief to certain food shops, pubs and petrol filling stations.

Legislation to implement these proposals will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time allows. They are a significant contribution to realising the vision set out in the White Paper, "Our countryside: the future".

Pollution

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Framework Document of his Department and the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution will be published. [152059]

Mr. Meacher: The Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution is a non-departmental public body which gives advice on dangers to the environment and priorities for environmental policies.

A key recommendation of the recent five-year Financial Management and Policy Review (FMPR) of the Royal Commission, which Ministers endorsed, was the preparation of a Framework Document to bring greater clarity to the Commission's relationship with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, and to reinforce the Commission's drive towards improved effectiveness.

I am pleased to announce today the publication of a 'Framework Document' which sets out the respective roles and responsibilities of DETR, as sponsor Department, and the Commission, including provisions for more effective forward planning and performance review. It is available on my Department's website www.detr.gov.uk and copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

CABINET OFFICE

British-Irish Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what matters she has recently discussed in the British-Irish Council; and if she will make a statement. [149964]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 20 December 2000, Official Report, column 221W.

The Council had been due to meet in Dublin on 23 January. Many of those who would be expected to attend the Council meeting were involved in continuing political discussions on implementation of the Good Friday agreement. The meeting was therefore postponed to allow more time for these discussions, as was the successor date of 5 February. It is hoped that a summit level meeting can be held as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Committee on Standards in Public Life

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister when he will announce new appointments to the Committee on Standards in Public Life; and if he will make a statement. [151859]

The Prime Minister: I am pleased to announce that I have appointed Sir Nigel Wicks GCB CVO CBE as the new Chair of the Committee on Standards in Public Life in succession to Lord Neill of Bladen QC with effect from 1 March 2001.

In addition, I have appointed two new members to the Committee: Rabbi Julia Neuberger and Rita Donaghy OBE. They are appointed in succession to Sir William Utting and Sir Clifford Boulton. All three appointments are for three years in the first instance with the possibility of renewal. All three appointments were made fully in line with the Guidance of the Commissioner on Public Appointments.

I am very grateful to Lord Neill, Sir William and Sir Clifford for their work on the Committee and for the significant contribution they have made to standards in public life.

Engagements

Mr. Paice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 28 February. [150004]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I will have further such meetings later today.

Students

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason he has not corrected, in line with Chapter I (iii) of the Ministerial Code, the inaccurate answer, concerning the number of extra students in further and higher education since the Government came into office, recorded on 8 February 2001, Official Report, column 1178. [151171]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 February 2001]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Lifelong Learning to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell). In addition, I have written to the right hon. Member for Ross, Skye and Inverness, West (Mr. Kennedy) and have placed a copy in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Youth Activities

3. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what strategies he is pursuing to encourage young people into activities which are considered alternatives to crime. [149950]

Mr. George Howarth: There has, for many years in Northern Ireland, been a wide range of initiatives at local level directed towards encouraging young people into more constructive activity. Most of these initiatives, however, now fall within the responsibility of the devolved Administration in Northern Ireland.

The Community Affairs Branch of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, in partnership with other bodies, carry out work with young people, who either have committed crime or are deemed at risk of offending, aimed at diverting them away from criminal activity.

Security Normalisation

4. Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to create a normal security environment in Northern Ireland. [149951]

Dr. Reid: Normalisation of the security environment depends on the prevailing threat.

7. Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the potential impact of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 2000 on the normalisation of security in Northern Ireland. [149954]

Mr. Ingram: The Police (Northern Ireland) Act will assist normal policing by enabling the police service to operate more effectively and in partnership with the community.

That is what the people of Northern Ireland, including the police, want.

8. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made towards the normalisation of security measures in Northern Ireland, with particular reference to border areas. [149955]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, East (Ms Corston).

12. Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland. [149959]

22. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland. [149970]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the reply my right hon Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland gave earlier to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson), Official Report, columns 892–93.

Peace Process

5. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recent international support for developments in the peace process in Northern Ireland. [149952]

Dr. Reid: There continues to be widespread international support for our attempts to bring about a lasting peace in Northern Ireland.

9. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact of a stable economy on the peace process in Northern Ireland. [149956]

Dr. Reid: The strength and stability of the Northern Ireland economy in recent years has been an important factor in creating the right conditions for advancing the peace process. Political progress has in turn had a positive effect on the economy, bringing tangible benefits to everyone and so helping to encourage support for further progress.

16. Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the peace process in Northern Ireland. [149963]

Dr. Reid: We are continuing to make progress on the implementation of the Belfast Agreement. We still have some way to go, but there is a desire from all quarters to move forward. The Assembly is functioning smoothly and the Programme for Government has been well received, as has the budget announced by the Finance Minister, Mark Durkan.

Paramilitary Violence

10. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the level of paramilitary activity in Northern Ireland. [149957]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson), Official Report, columns 892–93.

17. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) bombings, (b) shootings and (c) physical assaults relating to paramilitary activities have taken place in Northern Ireland this year. [149965]

Mr. Ingram: The tables provide the information requested:

Security situation statistics: Casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks, 1 January 2001 to 25 February 2001

	By Loyalist	By Republican
Assaults	20	12
Shootings	13	9

Security situation statistics: Bombing and shooting

	Number
Bombing incidents	60
Shooting incidents	39

Notes:

1. The following types of shooting incidents are included:
   shots fired by terrorists;
   shots fired by the security forces;
   paramilitary style attacks involving shootings; shots heard (and later confirmed); and other violent incidents where shots are fired (e.g. armed robbery).
2. An individual bombing incident may involve one or more explosive devices. Incidents recorded include explosions and defusing. Incidents involving hoax devices, petrol bombings or incendiaries are excluded.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

11. Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the impact on morale of the level of recruitment to the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [149958]

Mr. Ingram: There has been no recruitment to the Royal Ulster Constabulary since 1 April 2000. It is therefore not possible to make any assessment on the impact this has had on morale within the force. On a wider front, however, the RUC is subject to major change resulting from the Patten Report and, like any other organisation, there is understandable concern among officers until changes are properly implemented and bedded in. Strenuous efforts are being made by force command to ensure all employees are fully informed at each stage of the process.

27. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about his timetable for implementing the reform of the RUC. [149975]

Mr. Ingram: A revised Implementation Plan setting out the position of the recommendations of the Independent Commission on Policing in Northern Ireland, which includes details of the considerable progress already made, will be published shortly.

Decommissioning

13. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent developments have been made towards decommissioning; and if he will make a statement. [149960]

19. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on decommissioning. [149967]

Mr. Ingram: Decommissioning remains an essential part of securing the full implementation of the Good Friday Agreement. The Government continue to work together with the Irish Government and the political parties in Northern Ireland to achieve what we all want—the removal of the gun from Northern Ireland politics for good.

20. Mr. Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the decommissioning of illegally held arms and explosives in Northern Ireland. [149968]

23. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the decommissioning of illegally held arms and explosives in Northern Ireland. [149971]

Mr. Ingram: Mr. Ramaphosa and Mr. Ahtisaari have reported that they have completed their second inspection of several IRA arms dumps. It represents further progress and an honouring of commitments given at the beginning of May. I am confident the inspectors will report any further progress that has been made when they deem it appropriate to do so.

Further progress still needs to be made by both Republican and Loyalist paramilitaries to meet their commitments to bring a lasting peace to Northern Ireland.

Efforts are still continuing to seek a way forward to enable decommissioning to occur as soon as possible.

Victims of Violence

15. Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in offering proper recognition to the families of members of the police service who have been victims of violence in Northern Ireland. [149962]

Mr. Ingram: On 9 November the Government, in welcoming the proposals made by John Steele for a new Police Fund Trust, said that they would establish the trust by April and make lump sum payments to the widows of those killed by terrorists before 25 November 1982 by then too.

Robert Hamill

18. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on establishing a public inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the death of Robert Hamill. [149966]

Mr. Ingram: The Office of the Police Ombudsman is currently supervising on-going investigations into the circumstances surrounding the death of Mr. Hamill.

While the Government do not rule out an inquiry in the future any decision taken now to initiate such a process would lead to a serious risk that any subsequent or contemporaneous prosecution could be compromised.

Sectarian Violence

21. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to tackle sectarian violence in Northern Ireland. [149969]

Mr. Ingram: The security forces are continuing to thwart sectarian attacks. Additional police patrols are being deployed in many areas including Larne, Belfast and Coleraine. The military are acting in support of the police where appropriate. Recent successes include the discovery this month, of what are believed to be a number of loyalist pipe bomb making facilities in Larne, Belfast and Newtownabbey. A number of people have been charged as a result of these operations and other individuals are being sought.

I am confident that the police are doing all that they can to prevent these attacks and to bring those responsible to justice.

26. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Chief Constable of the RUC regarding additional policing within estates which have been subjected to gun, petrol or pipe-bomb attack in recent months. [149974]

Mr. Ingram: The Secretary of State discusses a broad range of issues with the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on a regular basis. He is confident that the Chief Constable is taking all possible measures to tackle incidents of violent crime in the Province.

There has been an increase in the police patrolling profile in those areas subject to attacks of the nature described in the question. Both overt and covert police operations have increased. In addition, Mobile Support Units and military resources have also been deployed where this has been deemed necessary. The situation is kept under constant review.

Good Friday Agreement

24. Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the Good Friday agreement. [149972]

Dr. Reid: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. King), Official Report, column 692W.

Policing Reforms

28. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received concerning the implementation of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 2000. [149976]

Mr. Ingram: The Government are engaged in frequent dialogue with a range of individuals and bodies on the implementation of the Police Act as well as those changes recommended by the Independent Commission on Policing in Northern Ireland (Patten) which do not require legislation. On the Act specifically, some provisions came into force on Royal Assent, others, such as the Police Ombudsman sections, were commenced in December. We are now preparing a further Commencement Order.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on delivering reforms in policing in Northern Ireland. [149961]

Mr. Ingram: The Government and the police have made significant progress in a number of areas. These include the enactment of the Police (NI) Act 2000; the appointment of an Oversight Commissioner; publication of an Implementation Plan, detailing the Government's response on all 175 recommendations made by the Independent Commission on Policing (Patten); establishment of the Police Ombudsman's Office; appointment of a recruitment agency; launch of recruitment advertising; and closure of two of the three holding centres.

Drug Crime

29. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent assessment he has made of the criminal activity involving illegal drugs in Northern Ireland. [149977]

Mr. Ingram: The drugs scene in Northern Ireland is composed of a network of importers, distributors, street level dealers and users. Paramilitary organisations are involved to differing degrees both in the procurement and supply of controlled drugs. The extent to which these groups are involved is cloudy and may be on an individual member basis rather than sanctioned by the respective leadership of these groups.

The Royal Ulster Constabulary continues, with other organisations, to combat drug related crime within the resources available to it.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Information

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will (a) list the circulars, advice and guidelines that have been issued to local Benefits Agency offices in respect of each benefit since May 1997 and (b) place copies in the Library; [148493]

(2) if he will list the adjudication and operations circulars and guidelines that have been issued to local Benefits Agency offices since May 1997 and place copies of these in the Library. [151452]

Angela Eagle: The Benefits Agency issues guidance to its local offices on decision-making (formerly adjudication) on benefits for which it is responsible. The Agency also issues a wide range of material providing technical support to staff and guidance on operational issues affecting the day-to-day administration of benefits.

Since May 1997, the Agency has issued 232 items of adjudication and decision-making guidance. Copies of this guidance are held in the Library.

It is impractical to list or place copies in the Library of all items of technical support and operational guidance that have been issued because of the range and diversity of the material. However, if the hon. Member can indicate particular areas of interest, documents can be listed or obtained in line with Open Government principles.

Benefits Statistics

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the table, using the latest statistical information his Department has, stating sources in each case, published on 9 November 1998, Official Report, column 96W. [150877]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The table gives uprated estimates for the Social Security benefits included in the previous table. Working Families Tax Credit is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The estimated number of households in receipt of Income Support, Jobseekers Allowance (income related), Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit in 2000–01

Thousand

	Income Support/ Jobseeker's Allowance (income related)	Housing Benefit	Council Tax Benefit

Couple (no children)	450	690	1,080
Lone parent (one child)	510	450	450
Lone parent (two children)	320	310	310
Lone parent (three or more children)	230	210	210
Couple (one child)	120	130	140
Couple (two children)	150	150	160
Couple (three or more children)	170	150	160
Total benefit units with at least one person receiving benefit	4,560	4,300	5,160
Total number of adults in benefit units where at least one person receiving benefit	5,440	5,420	6,700
Total number of children in benefit units where at least one person receiving benefit	2,960	2,800	2,860

Notes:

1. All figures are rounded to the nearest 10,000 and totals may not sum due to rounding.
Households may be in receipt of more than one of the benefits shown. Consequently, the sum of the totals will not represent an overall estimate for adults and children on income-related benefits.
2. The Income Support column of the original table also included Jobseeker's Allowance recipients, and has been updated accordingly.
3. Figures are derived from the Department policy simulation model, and are based on the 1997–98 Family Resources Survey uprated to 2000–01 prices, benefit levels and caseloads. Actual data are not available for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit beyond May 1999.
4. Total numbers in receipt of the above benefits are consistent with the Department's 2000 post budget forecasts.
5. The total number of adults represents those aged 16 and over, except for those 16 to 18 year olds in full time education. The total number of children represents those aged under 16, and 16 to 18 year olds in full time education.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the (a) number and (b) percentage of single pensioners with gross weekly incomes of between (i) £78 and £134, and (ii) £122 and £134; and if he will estimate the (1) number and (2) percentage of pensioner couples with gross weekly incomes of between (A) £124 and £200 and (B) £188 and £200. [151137]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Gross income between:	Number	Percentage
Single pensioners with gross income falling in selected bands—1998–99
£78 and £134	1,960,000	44
£122 and £134	490,000	11
Pensioners couples with gross income falling in selected bands—1998–99
£124 and £200	1,080,000	27
£188 and £200	170,000	4

Notes:

1. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 10,000 or 1 per cent. but are not necessarily accurate to that degree since they are subject to sampling error.
2. Gross weekly income includes benefit income and is at July 1998 prices.
3. Single pensioners are defined as anyone aged over 60.
4. Pensioner couples are defined as married or cohabiting couples where either partner is aged over 60.

Child Poverty (Jarrow)

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the child poverty levels in the Jarrow constituency were in (a) 1997 and (b) 2001. [151006]

Mr. Bayley: Poverty and social exclusion are complex multi-dimensional issues, affecting many aspects of children's lives—their families' income, health, housing, the quality of their environment and opportunities to learn. There is no single measure that can capture the complex problems that need to be overcome.

However, a number of these aspects have seen significant improvement in Jarrow since 1997. For example, the proportion of 11-year-olds achieving level four or above at Key Stage 2 has risen in both english and mathematics from around 60 per cent. to over 70 per cent. in 2000. Over the same period the number of children in families in receipt of out of work benefits has fallen from 4,900 to 4,500.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend the heating allowance paid to pensioners on Income Support to those pensioners who have small private or occupational pensions. [151186]

Mr. Rooker: Winter Fuel Payments, this winter £200 for eligible households, are not means-tested and are paid to the majority of people from age 60. People eligible for a payment and who might be in receipt of a small private or occupational pension would already be included in the scheme.

Cold Weather Payments are paid to people who are in receipt of Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance and get either a disability or pensioner premium or have a child under five. A payment of £8.50 is made automatically when the average temperature at the specified weather station linked to their postcode has been recorded as, or is forecast to be, 0°C or below over seven consecutive days. There are no plans to extend this scheme.

Benefit Take-up

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the Benefits Agency's role is in promoting benefits take-up. [151365]

Angela Eagle: We are keen to ensure that people are in an informed position to make choices on whether to claim benefit and we are the first Government to encourage the active pursuit of take-up initiatives as a means of tackling pensioner poverty. The Benefits Agency was instrumental in running the national take-up campaign for the minimum income guarantee. Additionally, it is involved in a wide range of national and local initiatives to ensure accurate and accessible information is available, including leaflets, information officers, liaison with local groups, and talks.

Adjudication and Operations Circulars

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reason he has released a Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit Adjudication and Operations Circular numbered F00. [151450]

Angela Eagle: We have no record of issuing a circular numbered F00.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the general and compensation levies payable under the Pension Schemes Act 1993 by occupational and personal pension schemes. [151891]

Mr. Rooker: I am pleased to announce that the General Levy rates for 2001–02 will be frozen at the 2000–01 level as set out in the table. We have been able to do this as a result of good housekeeping by Opra and buoyant levy receipts. Opra's costs will increase due to new responsibilities for Stakeholder and Personal pensions but will be met from existing levy rates.

Furthermore I am pleased to announce that it will not be necessary to raise a Compensation Levy in 2001–02.

The General Levy covers the costs of the bodies that safeguard the rights of pension scheme members or provide them with help, advice and information. These bodies are the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (Opra), the Pensions Ombudsman, the Pensions Advisory Service and the Pension Schemes Registry.

The Compensation Levy covers the cost of expenditure by the Pensions Compensation Board.

Compensation can be paid up to a limit set out in legislation to occupational schemes of insolvent employers who have suffered a reduction in their assets through dishonesty such as theft or fraud.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Montserrat

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what future levels of development assistance her Department intends to provide to Montserrat. [151895]

Clare Short: We have informed the Government of Montserrat (GoM) that approximate future levels of assistance will be as follows:

	£ million
2001–02	24.4
2002–03	17.0
2003–04	13.6
2004–05	9.5
2005–06	7.5

These amounts include both budgetary aid and development assistance. The 2001–02 figure is firm, subject to parliamentary approval. Figures for subsequent years are for planning purposes and are subject to the normal processes of resource allocation and review in the light of changing circumstances.

By the end of March 2001, DFID will have provided over £135 million to Montserrat since the onset of volcanic activity in 1995. A substantial amount of work has been completed during this period, with much of the essential economic and social infrastructure now in place in the previously under-developed north of the island.

DFID's assistance to Montserrat in the next five years will focus on building the capacity of GoM to deliver effective and efficient public services, with a reduced requirement for significant external budgetary assistance.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mercenaries

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 2001, Official Report, column 351W, on mercenaries, what the target date is for the completion and publication of a Green Paper on options for regulation of mercenaries. [150385]

Mr. Battle: As I said in my written answer on 2 February 2001, Official Report, column 351W, work is continuing on the preparation of the Green Paper outlining options for the regulation of mercenaries and private military companies. This is a complex issue and it is important to work carefully through the details.

UK Citizens (Overseas Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of (a) men and (b) women from the United Kingdom who are detained in prisons overseas. [151014]

Mr. Wilson: At the end of January 2001 we were aware of 2,827 British men and 423 British women detained in prisons overseas.

Brazil

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to his Brazilian counterpart concerning the issue of bonded labour. [151182]

Mr. Battle: Bonded labour is a serious problem in some parts of Brazil, particularly remote rural areas where there are many poor and unemployed people who are easily exploited by unscrupulous employers.

The British Embassy in Brasilia monitors closely the human rights situation in Brazil and is in regular contact with the Brazilian authorities on all aspects of human rights, including bonded labour. Officials last raised our concerns about bonded labour in Brazil at the human rights talks held between the FCO and the Brazilian Government in December 2000.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts that exist between Serco and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151344]

Mr. Wilson: Neither the FCO, nor its executive agency or associated public bodies have existing contracts with Serco. Within the last three years, the BBC World Service has contracted with Serco for internet consultancy services at a total cost of £25,971.03 plus VAT.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Council for the Central Laboratory of the Research Councils

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the outcome of the First Stage of the Quinquennial Review of the Council for the Central Laboratory of the Research Councils will be announced; and what the principal recommendations are for the future governance and organisation of CCLRC. [151890]

Mr. Byers: I am today able to announce the outcome of the First Stage of the Quinquennial Review of the Council for the Central Laboratory of the Resarch Councils.

Reviews of Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs) are a key part of our programme to modernise Government. The Government are committed to achieving better public services that are of higher quality and are more responsive to the needs of the people who use them. Regular NDPB reviews are an important element in ensuring that we have in place the right structures to deliver the Government's agenda effectively and to provide a strong focus on improving future performance.

The Terms of Reference for the Review required the First Stage to examine the role, composition and funding mechanisms for CCLRC, by reference to its Charter and mission, its past performance, recent CCLRC instigated studies on future vision and funding, current best practice for NDPBs and its contribution to the work of other Research Councils. The Review was further required to consider all relevant options for the future of the Council, including abolition, continued NDPB status, rationalisation, privatisation or strategic contracting out.

The Review has been conducted in accordance with the lastest Cabinet Office guidance (published on 31 January 2000) and has included consultation with members of Council, the Executive and CCLRC's customers and key stakeholders. The Review Boad, chaired by Sir Peter Williams, met on six occasions, including visits to the Rutherford Appleton and Daresbury laboratories.

The principal recommendation is that the relationship of the Research Councils and CCLRC as customer and supplier has proved to be sub-optimal and should be changed to a Strategic Ownership model, in which CCLRC is brought under the joint ownership of the grant awarding Research Councils. To facilite this change, CCLRC should be reconstituted, as soon as practicable, as a Limited Company, to provide a similar governance structure to existing Research Council Institutes.

This model ensures a clear commitment by the Research Councils to meet the planned funding needs of CCLRC based on scrutiny of strategic and operating plans, and should provide efficiency savings. Within this framework, CCLRC should seek to fulfil a more strategic role in the provision of access to leading edge, large-scale facilities for UK researchers. Investment in new facilities should be based on long-term requirements agreed by all the different research communities.

Stage Two of the Review will now examine the issues associated with the implementation of the Strategic Ownership model, addressing in particular the implications for the status of CCLRC and its accountability to Ministers and Parliament. Stage Two will also examine how the strategic role can be implemented, such that it is not compromised by CCLRC's role as a facilities operator.

I warmly welcome these recommendations and offer my thanks to Sir Peter Williams and the rest of the Review Board.

British Aerospace - GEC Marconi

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the meetings the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), as Secretary of State for Trade Industry, and his officials had with representatives of British Aerospace and GEC Marconi to discuss (a) their joint sponsorship of the Mind Zone at the Millennium Dome and (b) their merger. [149477]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The commitment to support the Millennium Dome by British Aerospace and GEC Marconi was announced by the previous Administration in 1996. The offer by the companies jointly to sponsor the Dome's Mind Zone was announced on 26 November 1998.

I am advised that neither my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) nor his officials had meetings with the companies to discuss their sponsorship of the Dome.

As the Prime Minister had made clear since his statement with the French and German Heads of Government in December 1997, there was an urgent need to restructure the aerospace and defence industries in Europe to compete in world markets. The right hon. Member for Hartlepool, in his capacity as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, and his officials discussed this issue at a number of meetings with representatives of British Aerospace and GEC during 1998.

The Government's position was at all times that it was for industry itself, not the Government, to make specific proposals for restructuring. Any resulting merger would be considered on its own merits by the relevant competition authorities.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if (a) the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), (b) officials at his Department and (c) representatives of British Aerospace and GEC Marconi, informed him of the joint sponsorship by British Aerospace and GEC Marconi of the Mind Zone at the Millennium Dome before he approved the merger of the two companies. [149478]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 8 February 2001]: (a) No; (b) No; (c) No.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons he turned down the advice of the Director General of the Office of Fair Trading when reaching a decision on the merger of British Aerospace and GEC Marconi. [149481]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 8 February 2001]: The Boards of British Aerospace and GEC announced on 19 January 1999 that they had reached agreement on the principal terms of a proposed reconstruction under which Marconi Electronic Systems would be separated from GEC and merged with British Aerospace.

The civil aspects of the proposed merger were cleared by the European Commission on 25 June 1999. I considered the military aspects of the proposed merger under the merger control provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973. The reasons for my decision to seek and subsequently to accept from BAE Systems undertakings in lieu of reference to the Competition Commission are set out in my announcements of 9 September 1999 and 28 March 2000.

Science Funding (North-west)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 2001, Official Report, column 652W, if he is in a position to report on the recommendations of the North-West Science and Daresbury Development group. [151284]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry met with the North-West Science and Daresbury Development Group on 31 January to discuss their report. As a result of the meeting the Group submitted supplementary information concerning their recommendations on 16 February for his consideration. He hopes to be able to respond around the end of February.

Credit Company Blacklists

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to investigate credit companies' power to blacklist individuals. [150852]

Dr. Howells: I do not have any current plans to investigate such companies. The Director General of Fair Trading has a duty under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 to review and advise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry about developments in the UK credit market. If he makes any recommendations, I will study them carefully.

Departmental Policies (Norwich, North)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effect on the Norwich, North constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [151144]

Mr. Caborn: The Department does not maintain statistical information at constituency level.

My hon. Friend's constituents, like many others throughout Norfolk, will have benefited from my Department's Employment Rights policies which include the National Minimum Wage, Working Time Directive, Part Time Working Regulations and improved Maternity Leave.

In addition, the wards of Catton Grove, Coslany, Crome, Mile Cross and Mousehold are eligible for the Enterprise Grant Scheme.

In the East of England region, my Department's policies have contributed to growth in employment by 62,000 and a fall in unemployment by 45,539; reductions in youth employment (under 24) by 46 per cent. and long-term unemployment (over 26 weeks) by 65 per cent.

In the constituency of Norwich, North there has been a drop in unemployment by 2.7 per cent. (964 people), a reduction in youth unemployment (under 24) by 46 per cent, in line with the region as a whole and a reduction in long term unemployment (over 26 weeks) by 44 per cent.

Postal Services Act

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has laid the draft order defining turnover for the purposes of the 10 per cent. limit on financial penalties as required by section 30 of the Postal Services Act 2000; and if he will make a statement. [151888]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has today laid a draft order defining turnover for the purposes of section 30 of the Postal Services Act 2000. A consultation document on this draft order was published on the DTI website www.dti.gov.uk on 19 December. The consultation came to an end on 31 January. The Department is grateful to those who responded. The policy behind the draft order has not altered but a number of minor changes have been made. The reference to "enforcement action" has been removed as it was deemed to be unnecessary. Some minor changes to annualisation in the first year have been made to minimise unfairness. Finally, the multi-year calculation has been simplified so that whole years are used rather than fractions of years. Subject to the approval of both Houses, the draft order will enable the Postal Services Commission to impose appropriate financial penalties in support of its enforcement of the new postal licensing regime.

Strategic Arms Exports Bill

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the content and timetabling of the forthcoming draft bill on strategic arms exports; and what discussions he has had with non-governmental organisations. [150970]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Full details of the Government's proposals for new export control legislation will be set out when the draft Export Control Bill is published. It is not possible at this stage to give a precise date but we hope to be in a position to publish the Bill within the next few months.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of non-governmental organisations last November to discuss issues relating to the proposed Export Control Bill, including the Government's proposals for new controls on arms trafficking and brokering. Ministers and officials have also held other meetings with NGOs to discuss these issues.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if monitoring of the end-use of UK arms will be covered in the forthcoming draft legislation on strategic arms exports. [150971]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The Government have already taken steps to minimise the risk of UK arms exports being diverted from the stated end-use or end-user. These include new measures to strengthen the process of risk assessment at the export licensing stage. We also regularly seek additional details of proposed end-use and end-users, including through our overseas posts.

UKAEA

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the Quinquennial Review of the UKAEA. [151889]

Mr. Hain: In line with Cabinet Office guidance, the review is being carried out in two stages. I am now in a position to make an announcement about the outcome of Stage 1 and the basis on which work will be taken forward.

The review team recognises the progress which UKAEA has made since 1996 and commends its performance and commitment to improvement across the full range of its activities. However, it identifies a number of options for organisational change and raises fundamental issues relating to UKAEA's primary role in managing nuclear liabilities on behalf of the taxpayer and restoring the environment at the sites for which it is responsible over the next 60 years—for example about funding arrangements, the regulatory framework and the way in which it operates, waste management and the long-term availability of relevant knowledge and skills.

The Government consider it essential that nuclear liabilities should be dealt with safely, cost effectively and in a way which inspires public confidence. Significant challenges are involved and there is an absolute requirement that the public should have confidence in the arrangements in place for dealing with them. The ideas and issues raised by the review team will therefore be explored further with a view to establishing whether there is a case for changing present management arrangements. The review team will also consider what action might be taken to attract more companies into the nuclear decommissioning market and to promote competition for decommissioning contracts let by UKAEA.

As regards other UKAEA activities, Stage 2 of the review will focus on testing options for:

accelerating the commercial re-development of UKAEA's Harwell and Winfrith sites through partnership arrangements with the private sector and for further improving UKAEA's performance in property management;

the future management of the fusion programme at Culham;

the future organisation of the UKAEA Constabulary;

further improving administration of the UKAEA pension schemes, which will continue to be run from Thurso for the foreseeable future, and for securing additional work for the Thurso pensions office.

This represents a considerable work programme which will take some time to complete. Given the importance of these issues, it is essential that the correct conclusions are arrived at. UKAEA staff, Trade Unions and other interested parties will have the opportunity to contribute views as the work proceeds.

I will make a further announcement once the Stage 2 work has been completed and decisions have been taken on the review team's recommendations.

Enterprise and Investment

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in the Northern Ireland Assembly about the number of (a) business start ups and (b) amount of inward investment in each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland since the signing of the Belfast Agreement; and if he will make a statement. [151047]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has had no official discussions with the Minister for Enterprise in the Northern Ireland Assembly. Minister and officials are, however, in regular contact with colleagues in each of the devolved Administrations.

The main source of business start up information is VAT registration data. Not all businesses are VAT registered, however, in particular, if they do not have a turnover above £52,000 per annum. Taking this into account, for 1998 and 1999 the number of such start-ups with a turnover of more than £52,000 per annum in Northern Ireland is 3,685 and 3,565 respectively. Such information is not readily available by parliamentary constituency.

Ministerial Visits (Peterborough)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Ministers in his Department who visited any of the constituencies which are in the Peterborough Unitary Authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001, indicating in each case (a) the date of the visit, (b) the constituencies included in the visit and (c) if the local hon. Member met the Minister. [151034]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 26 February 2001]: My right hon. Friend the Minster for Trade, visited the Peterborough constituency on 24 February 2000 when he met the local hon. Member. On 25 January 2001 he visited the North-East Cambridge constituency but did not meet the local hon. Member.

Company Relocations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the Government are taking to encourage major companies to locate their sites in the North West Region. [150630]

Mr. Caborn: The Government established the Northwest Development Agency in April 1999. It has a clear objective to attract investment and encourage major companies to locate in the region.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what conditions were attached to the grant of £250 million to Rolls-Royce. [151149]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government's investment of £250 million in Rolls-Royce is not a grant, but is a repayable investment which is expected to secure a substantial real rate of return for the taxpayer as well as securing wider economic benefits for the UK.

The conditions of the investment are commercially confidential under exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Testing (Immigration Detainees)

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he plans to make to the random mandatory drug-testing programme for immigration detainees. [151893]

Mr. Boateng: Immigration detainees rarely test positive for drugs. As a result from 1 April 2001 detainees held at Her Majesty's Prison Haslar and within discrete units at Her Majesty's Prisons Lindholme and Rochester will no longer be subject to the random mandatory drug-testing programme. Other security measures to prevent the smuggling and misuse of drugs will remain unchanged. These new arrangements will not apply to detainees dispersed more widely across the prison estate and who therefore have regular contact with prisoners. The policy will be reviewed at three and six-month intervals to ensure that the low level of drug abuse in these establishments continues.

Toxicology and Safety Evaluation Studies

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made on the preparation of guidance on the conduct of regulatory toxicology and safety evaluation studies; and if he will make a statement. [151892]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have today published guidance on the conduct of regulatory toxicology and safety evaluation studies and a copy has been placed in the Library.

The guidance has been prepared by the Home Office working with the British Toxicology Society, the British Society of Toxicological Pathologists and the Department of Health and takes account of consultation with the scientific community and animal welfare and animal protection groups.

Copies of the guidance will be issued shortly to all establishments licensed under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, and it will also be available on the Home Office website.

The guidance will not impact significantly on the numbers of animals used, but will ensure that all possible refinement strategies are considered in the design of these studies.

Terrorist Organisations

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional terrorist organisations he intends to proscribe, following the coming into force of the Terrorism Act 2000. [151894]

Mr. Straw: I have today laid a draft Order, under section 123(4)(a) of the Terrorism Act, recommending to Parliament that the following organisations be added to the list of proscribed organisations in Schedule 2 to the Act:

Al-Qa'ida

Egyptian Islamic Jihad

Al-Gama'at al-Islamiya

Armed Islamic Group (Groupe Islamique Armé) (GIA)

Salafist Group for Call and Combat (Groupe Salafiste pour la Prédication et le Combat) (GSPC)

Babbar Khalsa

International Sikh Youth Federation

Harakat Mujahideen

Jaish e Mohammed

Lashkar e Tayyaba

Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE)

Hizballah External Security Organisation

Hamas-Izz al-Din al-Qassem Brigades

Palestinian Islamic Jihad—Shaqaqi

Abu Nidal Organisation

Islamic Army of Aden

Mujaheddin e Khalq

Kurdistan Workers' Party (Partiya Karkeren Kurdistan) (PKK)

Revolutionary Peoples' Liberation Party—Front (Devrimci Halk Kurtulus Partisi—Cephesi) (DHKP-C)

Basque Homeland and Liberty (Euskadi ta Askatasuna) (ETA)

17 November Revolutionary Organisation (N17).

Under section 3(3)(a) of the Act, I may by order add an organisation to schedule 2, where I believe that it is concerned in terrorism, as defined in section 1 of the Act. I am entirely satisfied that the organisations named above are "concerned in terrorism" as set out in section 3(5) of the Act, and have, after careful consideration, decided to exercise my discretion to proscribe them. The draft Order is subject to the affirmative resolution procedure. There will therefore be a debate in both Houses on my recommendations. If approved by Parliament, the proscriptions will take effect on the day after I sign the Order. To assist consideration by both Houses, I have placed in the Libraries, the Vote Office, and the Printed Paper Office copies of a Note setting out a brief summary in respect of each organisation named in the draft Order.

The Act provides for an appeal process. After the Order comes into force, it will be open for any of the organisations so proscribed, or any person affected by their proscription, to make application to me for deproscription. If that application is refused, the Act provides for an appeal to a new independent tribunal, the Proscribed Organisations Appeal Commission, established by the Terrorism Act.

Reconviction Rates

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent research his Department has undertaken into the relationship between the prison where a sentence is served and the incidence of the individual concerned being convicted of a crime once he or she has served the original sentence. [151537]

Mr. Boateng: The latest research into reconviction rates following discharge from prison was published in chapter 9 of Prison Statistics England and Wales 1999, Cm 4805, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Since a prisoner can move between a number of prisons during his or her sentence, from the data centrally held it is not possible to establish a relationship between the prison establishments where an inmate served any part of their sentence and convictions once the original sentence has been served.

Volunteers

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the numbers of paid staff needed to train and support volunteers as part of the Government's plan to increase volunteering. [151181]

Mr. Boateng: The Government place a great deal of importance on the training and support provided to volunteers, whether this is provided by paid staff or by unpaid volunteer managers.

A major package to encourage more people to get involved in their communities was announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 11 January. The £300 million package almost doubles the Government's commitment to the voluntary sector and will help, among other things, to develop the infrastructure of the voluntary sector, to assist community groups in deprived areas, and to fund a new National Experience Corps making use of the talents of the over-50s.

Some of this money will be used in support of paid staff who will be funded by Government through grant aid to volunteering and community organisations in support of volunteering objectives. However, there is no ready source of information on the number of paid staff who are currently, or who will in the future be, supported in this way.

CM (M693939)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision will be made in the case of CM (M693939); and for what reason there have been delays in processing the case since 26 October 2000. [150694]

Mrs. Roche: As HIV/AIDS cases involve careful consideration due to their compassionate nature, I am unable to give a definitive date for completion of this application.

Due to the fact that guidelines in dealing with HIV/AIDS cases have until recently been under review, there has been a delay in the handling of such applications. I am sorry that my hon. Friend was not made aware of such a likely delay in the handling of this application in the reply he received.

Asylum Seekers

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to change conditions of eligibility for asylum seekers to apply for maternity provision; [150967]

(2) in which languages advice for asylum seekers making an application for maternity benefits is published; [150963]

(3) what plans he has to change the provision afforded to asylum seekers who apply for maternity grants; [150966]

(4) what assistance is afforded to asylum seekers wishing to make an application for maternity benefits. [150962]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 26 February 2001]: In line with the maternity grant paid from the social fund to those on low incomes, the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) on 13 November 2000 introduced a maternity payment for eligible asylum seekers. The mother or father completes an application form within the time scale to qualify. The voluntary sector one-stop shops will assist asylum seekers to complete the maternity payment application form if required.

There are no plans to change the conditions of eligibility. We consider that the NASS application time scale is reasonable. This allows asylum seekers to apply for the maternity payment between one month before the estimated date of delivery and two weeks after the birth. Additionally, a payment may be made if a child was born outside the United Kingdom to a person who, on application, qualifies for NASS support and the child is three months of age or less.

Written advice on applications for the maternity payment is available from the NASS in English. The voluntary sector one-stop shops are funded by the Home Office to provide relevant advice in other languages to asylum seekers if required.

There are no plans at present to change the NASS maternity provision. However, the Government are currently reviewing the operation of the NASS voucher scheme. If serious problems are found they will be properly addressed.

Immigration Controls (Eurostar)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in relation to his plan to introduce juxtaposed entry controls at Eurostar terminals, when the first immigration officers will be stationed in France; if the scheme requires new manpower for the Immigration Service Ports Directorate; from which areas officers will be redeployed to staff the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [151211]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 28 February 2001]: We intend to introduce juxtaposed entry controls on Eurostar trains arriving from Paris, Lille and Calais-Frethun as soon as legislation will allow. The timing of the deployment of United Kingdom immigration officers will depend upon ratification by the French Parliament of the Additional Protocol to the Sangatte Protocol governing the control of international traffic through the Channel Tunnel. We understand this will now take place in early summer 2001.

The United Kingdom Immigration Service proposes to staff juxtaposed controls from within its agreed staffing allocations for 2001–2002. It will have 1,000 more operational staff, (Assistant Immigration Officers, Immigration Officers and Chief Immigration Officers) in post in May this year than it did in April 2000. Waterloo will provide the immigration officers to operate the juxtaposed controls at Paris and Lille. Controls at Calais-Frethun will be conducted by staff deployed at the Channel Tunnel site at Coquelles. We do not intend to use staff from other areas of the Home Office.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much families have benefited from the Working Families Tax Credit, by parliamentary constituency, in Northern Ireland, broken down by gender of claimant. [151002]

Dawn Primarolo: The following table provides estimates of the number of recipients of the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) in each constituency at the end of August 2000, based on the postcodes as captured from the application forms.

Recipients of WFTC in each Northern Ireland constituency August 2000

	Gender of applicant
	Female	Male	All
Belfast, East	1.4	0.2	1.5
Belfast, North	2.2	0.2	2.4
Belfast, South	1.1	0.1	1.2
Belfast, West	2.6	0.2	2.9
East Antrim	1.6	0.2	1.8
East Londonderry	2.0	0.3	2.3
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	1.9	0.3	2.3
Foyle	2.4	0.4	2.8
Lagan Valley	1.5	0.2	1.7
Mid-Ulster	1.9	0.3	2.2
Newry and Armagh	2.2	0.3	2.5
North Antrim	2.0	0.3	2.4
North Down	1.2	0.2	1.4
South Antrim	1.9	0.3	2.1
South Down	2.0	0.3	2.3
Strangford	1.6	0.3	1.9
Upper Bann	2.2	0.3	2.5
West Tyrone	2.0	0.3	2.4
Unknown	0.8	0.1	0.9
All	34.4	5.0	39.4

Note:
Based on an analysis of all awards, using the 2000 Version 1 Postcode Directory supplied by the Office for National Statistics, which allocates postcodes to constituencies according to their definitions at January 2000. Cases with incomplete postcodes are allocated if the constituencies are nevertheless indicated with certainty.

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown of all Working Families Tax Credit awards to those in (a) couple families showing the gender of the recipient of the payment and (b) couple families with children aged under one, showing the gender of the recipient of the payment. [151004]

Dawn Primarolo: In couple families the applicants receive the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) payments in their wage packets, or into accounts nominated by them, or as order books which can be cashed by either partner. It is estimated that, in the 548,000 couples receiving WFTC at the end of August 2000, 412,000 of the applicants were female and 136,000 male.

116,000 of these couples had at least one child aged under one year at the application dates of the awards. 85,000 of the applicants in these couples were female and 31,000 male.

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion families receiving Working Families Tax Credit are also entitled to (a) Housing Benefit and (b) Housing Benefit and Council Tax benefit. [150999]

Dawn Primarolo: Applicants for the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) are not required to supply information on Housing Benefit (HB) and Council Tax Benefit (CTB). Claimants for HB and CTB are however required to supply information on WFTC, and I understand from the Department of Social Security that estimates of the numbers involved are expected to be available in the coming months.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the take-up level of the Working Families Tax Credit in (a) Glasgow, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom. [151616]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the number of families in each of these areas in receipt of the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) at August 2000 appear in the WFTC Quarterly Enquiry, a copy of which is in the Library.

Family Taxation

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of families with children aged three or under pay the highest rate of income tax. [150998]

Dawn Primarolo: Of families with children aged three or under it is estimated that 15 per cent. pay higher-rate tax.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the changes to the tax system that have benefited working families since 1997. [151618]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have put in place a series of measures aimed at families with children, including: record increases in Child Benefit, with a 26 per cent. real increase in the rate for the first child since 1997; the new Children's Tax Credit, worth up to £442 a year for around 5 million families from April 2001; the introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit in October 1999, to make work pay for low and middle income working families with children.

These measures, together with the new 10p income tax band, the cut in the basic rate of income tax to 22p and reforms to National Insurance Contributions, mean that by April this year the tax burden on the typical family will be at its lowest level since 1972.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

People's Peers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council what the value was of the interview expenses of applicants for a people's peerage; and how many applicants declined to be reimbursed. [151201]

Mrs. Beckett: All nominees invited for interview will be offered full reimbursement for expenses they incur, although overall costs are not available yet.

I understand, however, that no nominee has stated that he or she will decline reimbursement.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will make it her policy for the application forms of applicants for a people's peerage in future rounds to be deposited in the Library. [151218]

Mrs. Beckett: No. People should be able to make an application to the Appointments Commission in confidence.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if those selected as people's peers are expected to be broadly representative of the social class and educational background of the population of the United Kingdom. [151203]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government hope that the new method of selecting non-political peers will increase the extent to which the House of Lords is representative of the country as a whole.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will make it her policy to require the House of Lords Appointments Commission to consider and invite for interview applicants for a people's peerage who are or were engaged in a manual occupation. [151204]

Mrs. Beckett: No. The Appointments Commission should make its nominations on the overall criteria set out in its application process.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will make it her policy to require the House of Lords Appointments Commission to request details from applicants for a people's peerage of how many domestic properties they own. [151217]

Mrs. Beckett: No.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will make it her policy to require the House of Lords Appointments Commission to include in its recommendations for people's peerages, in the next round of applications, individuals who live in council or social housing. [151219]

Mrs. Beckett: No.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the first part of the postcodes of (a) applicants for a people's peerage and (b) those invited to interview. [151202]

Mrs. Beckett: The Appointments Commission made it clear to applicants that their applications would be treated in confidence.

However, the Commission's website shows the following regional breakdown of applications:

Region	Percentage of applicants	Percentage of population
South West	9	8
South East	18	14
East Anglia	6	9
London	27	12
East Midlands	6	7
West Midlands	6	9
Wales	4	5
North West	9	12
Yorkshire	4	8
North East	3	4
Scotland	5	9
Northern Ireland	2	3
Other	1	—

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will make it her policy to require the House of Lords Appointments Commission to give to rejected applicants for the people's peerage the reasons for their rejection if so requested. [151200]

Mrs. Beckett: No. As stated in the information pack, the Commission does not undertake to provide reasons as to why a nomination has been unsuccessful but it has made clear that nominations will be assessed fairly and consistently against its stated criteria.

Ministerial Visits (Peterborough)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the Ministers in her Department who visited any of the constituencies which are in the Peterborough Unitary Authority area between 1 January 2000 and 14 February 2001, indicating in each case (a) the date of the visit, (b) the constituencies included in the visit and (c) if the local hon. Member met the Minister. [151032]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The information requested is as follows.

I have made no such visits to the Unitary Authority.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Privy Council Office: (a) undertook two engagements on Monday 5 February 2001 to constituencies within the Peterborough Unitary Authority. The MPs for both these constituencies were forewarned; (b) undertook one political engagement to the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton) and one official engagement to the constituency of the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Moss); (c) met my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton).

SCOTLAND

Eurozone

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent advice she has given to the Prime Minister regarding the readiness of the Scottish economy for the entry into the eurozone. [145644]

Mrs. Liddell: I have regular discussions with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on a wide range of issues. The determining factor underpinning any Government decision is whether the economic case for the UK joining the single currency is clear and unambiguous. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has clearly set out the Five Economic Tests, which must be met before any decision to join can be taken. The Government will make another assessment of the Five Economic Tests early in the next Parliament. The Five Tests will assess the economic case for entry of the whole of the UK, including Scotland.

Vehicle Fuel Duties

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will make a statement on the impact of the vehicle fuel duties on the rural economy in Scotland. [145640]

Mrs. Liddell: Vehicle fuel duty is only one of many factors that have an impact on Scotland's rural economy and needs to be seen in the context of overall UK fiscal policy. The measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his pre-Budget report to reduce fuel duties for cleaner fuels and vehicle excise duty will benefit all Scottish motorists and bring significant financial benefits to Scotland's economy. In particular, the abolition of Vehicle Excise Duty for Tractors and agricultural vehicles will benefit up to 20,000 agricultural producers in Scotland.

Independent research commissioned by my Department has shown that the level of taxation paid by private motorists in Scotland is lower than in other European countries such as Netherlands, Finland, Ireland and Portugal. The average Scottish driver pays £1,000 a year less than in Denmark.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pensioners in Glasgow, Pollok are now receiving the Minimum Income Guarantee. [147870]

Mr. Foulkes: In August 2000, there were around 3,400 recipients of the Minimum Income Guarantee in Glasgow, Pollok.

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) men and (b) women were serving a life prison sentence for murder in Scotland on 1 February. [150448]

Mrs. Liddell: This is a devolved mater and is therefore the responsibility of the Scottish Executive.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Adult Literacy and Numeracy

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to improve adult literacy and numeracy skills in England. [152260]

Mr. Blunkett: The standard of literacy and numeracy skills in England has been too poor for too long. Claus Moser's report found that up to 7 million adults in England have weak literacy and numeracy skills. This is disastrous for the individuals concerned, weakens business competitiveness and places a huge burden on society.

The Government will shortly launch their strategy to tackle this problem. Our priority is to improve the skills of those groups where literacy and numeracy needs are greatest and where we can make most impact. We will spend £1.5 billion over the next three years and focus the work of all relevant organisations on ensuring that 750,000 adults improve their literacy and numeracy by 2004, and that we reach the literacy and numeracy levels of our international competitors.

Our strategy will deliver radical quality improvements. New national standards, a common core curriculum and National Tests will make sure that best teaching and learning practice is adopted across the country. And we are training teachers, establishing a research centre and introducing more rigorous national inspections so that standards remain high.

The Government themselves will be setting an example with my Department working with other Government Departments and agencies such as the MOD and the Prison Service to bring about radical improvements in standards of adult skills.

Our literacy and numeracy strategy will mark a decisive step in addressing this country's poor literacy and numeracy skill levels and will give adults the opportunity to acquire the skills they need to participate in modern society.

New Deal

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people have found employment through the New Deal in (a) the north-west region and (b) Lancashire. [150650]

Ms Jowell: Figures to the end of November 2000 show that the following numbers of young people have found employment through New Deal in the north-west region and Lancashire:

	North-west region	Lancashire
Total jobs	39,666	5,171
of which are sustained	30,132	3,894
Other	9,534	1,277

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what his most recent estimate is of the take up of the New Deal for (a) young people, (b) lone parents, (c) people with disabilities and (d) older people in Copeland; and if he will make a statement on its operation. [150684]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 26 February 2001]: Latest figures, to the end of November 2000, for Copeland parliamentary constituency show the following take-up of the New Deal:

	Numbers starting New Deal
New Deal for Young People	1,375
New Deal for Lone Parents	234
New Deal for 25+	1,103

Statistics on New Deal for People with Disabilities are not available at constituency level. To date the New Deal for Disabled People has operated only in a limited number of locations, not including Copeland. 24 innovative schemes have been testing new ways of helping disabled people into work and 12 Personal Adviser pilots have helped disabled people to overcome their particular barriers to work.

The New Deal for Disabled People will be extended on a national basis, with services for disabled clients beginning from July 2001.

The approach which underpins the New Deal programmes is one which links equality of opportunity and investment in skills to economic prosperity and labour market expansion.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Departmental IT Projects

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the IT projects currently undertaken in his Department; and if he will state the (a) expected completion date and (b) cost of each project. [151501]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The tables list IT projects currently undertaken within DETR(C) and its agencies where costs are estimated to be equal to or exceed £50,000.

Small projects where the total cost falls below £50,000 have not been listed as the collection of information and collation of these projects could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Local Transport Plans

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if local authorities can bid for additional funding to that in their full local transport plan in their first annual progress reports for (a) major road schemes, (b) major public transport schemes and (c) integrated transport packages. [151556]

Mr. Hill: Authorities may bid for additional major road, public transport or integrated transport schemes as part of the process of submitting their first annual progress reports (APRs) on their local transport plans. In certain circumstances, authorities will also be able to bid for additional funding for smaller-scale integrated transport schemes. Details will be provided in the guidance on APRs that we will issue to authorities shortly.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on reform of the planning appeals process contained in DETR circular 05/200 relating to rights of third parties to see and comment on the submissions of others made to the Planning Inspectorate. [151607]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Five representations have been received.

Following public consultation streamlined statutory procedures for handling planning appeals—on which guidance is given in DETR Circular 5/2000—were introduced last year. These require third parties to submit their comments or statements of case to the Secretary of State on the same timescale as that for local planning authorities and appellants. Thus third parties have the opportunity at both planning application stage and at planning appeal stage to comment on the proposed development.

The operation of the new procedures is being monitored and we shall review them in the light of experience, taking account of representations received.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of waste was recycled in (a) Great Britain and (b) each local authority in 2000. [151299]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth [holding answer 27 February 2001]: Recycling levels in Scotland are a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland. The Department collects information on waste management and recycling from local authorities in England and Wales on an annual basis through the Municipal Waste Management Survey. National and regional level information for the financial year 1998–99 was published in the Municipal Waste Management 1998–99 Bulletin in September 2000. We expect to publish provisional results for 1999–2000 in early April 2001 and a more detailed analysis later in the year. We intend to publish figures showing the percentage of household waste recycled by individual local authorities in England during the financial year 1998–99 shortly in the "Guidance on Municipal Waste Management Strategies".

Telecommunications Masts

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made following the closure of consultation on the regulation of mobile telecommunications masts; and if he will make a statement. [151612]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The consultation exercise seeking views on possible changes to the planning laws relating to mobile phone masts and associated guidance ended on 31 October 2000. The Department is currently analysing the responses. We shall announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Home Energy Efficiency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many grants have been awarded under the home energy efficiency scheme in the City of Newcastle upon Tyne since 2000–01; and what was (a) the total and (b) the average value of such grants. [151835]

Mr. Meacher: The number of grants and their total value and average value for the City of Newcastle upon Tyne for 2000–01 is as shown.

[1] The previous HEES scheme (which started in 1991) continued to run for the first two months of 2000–01. Only one 'main' measure was offered up to a grant limit of £315.

[2] The average value of grant has increased substantially in the current year following the launch of the new Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) for England on 1 June 2000. It replaced the more basic scheme that operated since 1991. HEES provides packages of insulation and heating measures, linked to the condition of the property and the type of householder. The grant maximum increased from £315 up to £2,000.

Halewick Lane Waste Transfer Station

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the inspector's report on the public inquiry into the Halewick Lane waste transfer station at Sompting, West Sussex. [151677]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions will publish the inspector's report when he determines the planning application for a waste management centre at Halewick Lane, Sompting, West Sussex. This decision will be issued as soon as possible.

Bog Sites

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he intends to agree the request for the raised bog sites at (a) Hatfield Moor, (b) Thorne Moor, (c) Bolton Fell Moor, (d) Solway Moor and (e) Wedholme Flow to be designated special areas of conservation under the habitats and species directive. [151382]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: In August 2000, English Nature began public consultations on proposals for new and amended Special Areas of Conservation (SACs). Those proposals included new SACs at Bolton Fell Moss, Solway Moss and Hatfield Moor, boundary amendments to the existing candidate SACs at Thorne Moor and South Solway Mosses, plus the addition of a new qualifying interest on the site encompassing Wedholme Flow. English Nature is currently considering the scientific justification for each new or amended site. The Government will consider their recommendations as soon as they are made.

GM Sugarbeet

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the 24 GM sugarbeet trials scheduled for this year involve expenditure by the Government. [151543]

Mr. Meacher: There will be up to 26 fields of beet taking part in the Farm Scale Evaluations of herbicide tolerant GM crops this spring. As was the case last year, the Government will pay only for the ecological studies associated with the evaluations. It is expected that, for the beet sites, this will cost approximately £445,000 this year.

Local Government Finance

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the analysis of responses to the local government finance Green Paper. [152126]

Ms Armstrong: An analysis of the 16,321 responses we received will be posted on the DETR website at www.local.detr.gov.uk/greenpap/analysis/index.htm on Monday 5 March. Copies of the analysis will also be placed in the Library.

We were very pleased with the excellent response to consultation. We are carefully considering the responses and will publish our decisions in a White Paper later this year.

SSSIs

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is taking to ensure payments for management agreements on sites of special scientific interest are directed towards conservation and enhancement of the special features of these sites. [152127]

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: Tomorrow, together with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, we shall be issuing new guidance on management agreement payments in England to replace that in DOE/MAFF Circular 4/83. English Nature will use the guidance to determine the amount of payment under a management agreement.

The guidance reflects the substantially strengthened powers to protect and manage SSSIs introduced by the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000. It will emphasise the future priority for agreements to be directed at positive management designed to bring the special features of sites into favourable condition. It will also ensure that agreements are in line with the European Rural Development Regulation.

Copies of the Guidelines will be freely available and will be placed in the House Libraries.

DEFENCE

Defence Secondary Care Agency Unit (Organ Parts)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 February 2001, Official Report, column 523W, on organ parts, if he will list the specimens held; and for what purposes they are kept. [150814]

Dr. Moonie: Pursuant to my answer of 7 February 2001, Official Report, column 523W, further investigation has revealed that the Defence Secondary Care Agency holds approximately 60 pathological specimens relating to 26 patients, rather than "26 specimens". These specimens are all held at the Royal Hospital Haslar and for each, patient consent has been given for organ retention for both diagnostic and medical research purposes. In total there are 14 organs and approximately 46 tissue samples:

	Number
Brain	4
Heart	0
Lungs	4
Other organs[1]	5
Body Parts	0
Stillbirths or pre-viable foetuses	1
Tissues[2]	46
Total	60

[1] Not include above
[2] Approximate
Note:
The data are recorded in the format provided to the Chief Medical Officer for his report in 2000 entitled "Retention of Organs at Post-Mortem: Census of Hospitals in England".
Definition of terms:
Tissues: samples of organs or body parts
Organs: whole organs
Body parts: limbs, heads or the entire contents of either the thorax or abdomen.

Armed Forces (Death in Service)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) men and (b) women serving in (i) the Army, (ii) the Royal Navy and (iii) the Royal Air Force have died in active service in each month over the past 10 years; and how many of those listed were married at the time of death. [151011]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 26 February 2001]: The term "active service" is used wildly in connection with the Services, with various meanings in different contexts. However the Service Discipline Act contains specific definitions for the purposes of that legislation. In order to avoid a more restrictive interpretation than may be intended by the question, we set out figures based on a wide range of deaths on duty. The circumstances covered by the figures are explained more fully immediately after the table.

Between 1 January 1991 and 31 December 2000 there have been 394 service personnel who have died of injuries sustained on duty. Out of this total, 132 were married at the time of death. The table provides details of these deaths for each service:

Deaths of armed forces personnel in on duty due to injury: 1991 to 2000

	Navy deaths	Navy married	Army total	Army married	RAF total	RAF married	Tri-service total	Tri-service married
1991	5	3	64	23	14	1	83	27
1992	3	2	35	9	9	2	47	13
1993	13	6	22	5	11	3	46	14
1994	5	2	39	19	9	2	53	23
1995	7	1	20	8	12	5	39	14
1996	3	2	12	5	4	1	19	8
1997	5	2	8	2	3	0	16	4
1998	4	1	30	7	6	2	40	10
1999	2	1	23	8	6	0	31	9
2000	4	1	15	8	1	1	20	10

Note:
Deaths on duty are defined as those personnel who have died as a result of injuries categorised as: Battle wounds or injuries; injuries inflicted internationally during peacekeeping and similar operations (e.g. Kosovo and Northern Ireland); injuries sustained from terrorist activity, and accidental injuries sustained while on duty.

Royal Ordnance

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the terrorist threat to the Royal Ordnance sites at (a) Bridgwater, (b) Chorley, (c) Glascoed, (d) Nottingham and (e) Radway Green; and if he will make a statement. [151589]

Dr. Moonie: A comprehensive assessment of the threat to security at the Royal Ordnance sites was undertaken. It is not the practice to discuss threat assessments publicly for reasons of national security, but the threat assessment was taken fully into account in reaching the decision to withdraw Ministry of Defence police officers from Royal Ordnance sites.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost per annum to Royal Ordnance is of employing Ministry of Defence Police at (a) Bridgwater, (b) Chorley, (c) Glascoed, (d) Nottingham and (e) Radway Green; and if he will make a statement. [151590]

Dr. Moonie: I am withholding details of the sums paid by Royal Ordnance to the Ministry of Defence for the services of the MOD police under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information as they are a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence Police are deployed at the Royal Ordnance sites in (a) Bridgwater, (b) Chorley, (c) Glascoed, (d) Nottingham and (e) Radway Green; what plans there are to withdraw cover and on what dates; and if he will make a statement. [151591]

Dr. Moonie: There are 15 Ministry of Defence police (MDP) posts complemented at each of the five RO sites. MDP officers will be withdrawn from RO Bridgwater, Chorley, Glascoed and Radway Green on 31 May 2001. MDP officers will be withdrawn from RO Nottingham when the MOD weapons have been removed from the Pattern Room, which is currently expected to take place in February 2002.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the proposed withdrawal of Ministry of Defence police at Royal Ordnance sites will result in (a) compulsory and (b) voluntary redundancies within the Ministry of Defence police; and if he will make a statement. [151592]

Dr. Moonie: It is very unlikely that the withdrawal of the Ministry of Defence police (MDP) from the five RO sites will lead to any compulsory redundancies, unless officers substantiate a case for a Limited Mobility Waiver, and there are no other employment opportunities with the MDP in the local area. We anticipate that all will be offered alternative postings.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what powers private security companies will have to (a) patrol beyond perimeters and (b) carry weaponry at Royal Ordnance sites once Ministry of Defence police protection is withdrawn; and if he will make a statement. [151593]

Dr. Moonie: Once Ministry of Defence police protection is withdrawn, the deployment of company guards will be the responsibility of the Royal Ordnance. The guards will not have constabulary powers.

Private security company guards will not be armed. Section 54 of the Firearms Act 1968 limits the authority to carry firearms on duty to Crown Servants (which includes Service personnel and the Ministry of Defence police). The Firearms Act Amendment 1997 lists pistols as prohibited items, the carriage of which requires a personal licence issued by the local Chief Constable; no such licences are issued to private security companies. Home Department police will provide an armed response force, as required, at the RO sites.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what obligations service units have to implement Child Support Agency instructions for attachment of earnings in relation to Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force personnel. [149480]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 8 February 2001]: Under the terms of a Memorandum of Understanding between the two organisations, the Ministry of Defence will, at the request of the Child Support Agency, make appropriate deductions from pay to meet the maintenance obligations of Service personnel. Deductions are made in full, except in less than 1 per cent. of cases where this would breach minimum rates of pay set in Ministry of Defence legislation.

Operation Palliser

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many members of the armed forces deployed on Operation Palliser are in a medically downgraded category; what percentage of forces deployed on Operation Palliser this represents; and if he will make a statement; [147562]

(2) how many members of the armed forces who serviced on Operation Palliser are categorised as medically downgraded; and if he will make a statement. [148377]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 2 February 2001]: Some 4,500 armed forces personnel deployed to Sierra Leone on Operation Palliser. It is not possible to identify, from the information currently available, the number of Royal Navy personnel who deployed on any operation to Sierra Leone who are currently medically downgraded. However, of the approximate 2,100 Army and RAF personnel who deployed to Sierra Leone at the time of Operation Palliser, 54 are currently medically downgraded. This represents 2.5 per cent. of the Army/RAF personnel who deployed.

Far East Prisoners of War

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many widows of former Japanese prisoners of war have claimed their compensation entitlement. [150627]

Mr. Bayley: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available as at 19 February shows that 8,272 claims under the ex-gratia payments scheme had been received from widows and widowers of deceased ex-far east prisoners of war.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Tanzania

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to reassess her aid programme to Tanzania following recent unrest in Zanzibar. [151588]

Clare Short: The Government of Tanzania, as part of their qualification for HIPC debt relief, are pursuing a broad-based national poverty reduction strategy and are in receipt of UK development assistance. We do not believe that the poor of Tanzania should suffer because of the abuse of human rights in Zambia. However, Her Majesty's Government have made clear to the Government of Tanzania UK concerns following the recent unrest in Zanzibar. Sir John Vereker recently visited Dar es Salaam and discussed these concerns directly with President Mkapa.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her EU counterparts regarding EU funding for aid programmes in Tanzania since the Zanzibar elections in 2000. [151587]

Clare Short: There have been no high-level discussions related to EU development assistance to Tanzania since the national elections last November although I have discussed the situation with my Utstein group colleagues.

EU development assistance to Tanzania is under review following the conclusion of the Cotonou agreement last year.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the projects her Department supports in Tanzania. [151586]

Clare Short: Our development assistance to Tanzania last year was £65 million. This included £40 million to support pro-poor sectors of the national budget and reward the maintenance of continued macro economic stability. We are also funding projects in health, education, improved public sector management and public sector reform. In addition, we are undertaking initiatives to strengthen civil society and encourage pro-poor growth and private sector development.

Afghanistan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the humanitarian situation in Afghanistan. [151585]

Clare Short: Afghanistan is suffering its worst drought in 30 years, which has combined with continuing conflict to lead to a dramatic deterioration in the humanitarian situation. At least 12 million people are affected, 3–4 million of them seriously, and the number of displaced Afghans seeking relief from drought and conflict is now over 500,000. Winter weather conditions are reported to be severe, and a shortage of food, shelter and clothing has led to an increase in mortality rates.

We remain extremely concerned about the situation in Afghanistan. This financial year, DFID has provided over £7.5 million of humanitarian assistance to Afghans through UN agencies, the Red Cross and NGOs. As well as drought relief assistance, this includes a regular programme of longer-term humanitarian assistance to the Afghan population—both in Afghanistan and to Afghan refugees in neighbouring countries.

In addition, due to the severity of conditions in Afghanistan, DFID has recently agreed a further £3 million for the provision of drought relief and emergency relief goods to displaced people. This will be channelled through UN agencies and the Red Cross.

Sub-Saharan Africa (School Fees)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the extent of fees being charged to pupils attending schools in countries in Sub-Saharan Africa. [151665]

Clare Short: We believe that primary education should be free and that no child should be denied access to a basic education because the costs, direct or indirect, cannot be met by the household. School fees are an example of a direct cost, but there may be indirect charges for books, uniforms and exams which can make education unaffordable to many.

The equitable financing of education is a key issue for achieving universal primary education by 2015. Accordingly, assessments are made by DFID at country level of the extent to which fees or indirect costs are charged to primary school pupils. Support for the planned transition to free primary education is a priority for us. We have seen some progress. In Zambia, the Government have recently announced the abolition of fees for primary school children, including those for examination entry. Tanzania has committed to abolishing primary school fees by 2001, but there are still significant challenges. In Malawi, for example, primary schooling is nominally free but there are still hidden costs which need to be addressed. In Kenya parents do not pay primary school fees, but instead must pay for books, school levy, uniforms and examination fees.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Policies (Tooting)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out with statistical information relating as directly as possible to the Tooting parliamentary constituency, the effect of his Department's policies and actions since 1 May 1997. [149867]

Mr. Caborn: The parliamentary constituency of Tooting, Wandsworth has benefited from a range of initiatives since 1 May 1997. Direct business advice and support to small and medium sized enterprises (SMEs) has been provided by the DTI through core programmes and the Business Links. While my Department does not collect detailed statistical information on a constituency basis, over 5,800 requests for advice, information and support from SMEs in Tooting, Wandsworth have been handled by the Business Links since May 1997. During the same period, grants totalling over £300,000 have been awarded to SMEs for innovation and technology development under the Smart scheme.

United Kingdom Accreditation Service

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent consideration he has given to the accreditation and the status of the United Kingdom Accreditation Service; and if he will make a statement. [151629]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 28 February 2001]: During the course of 2000, my noble Friend the Minister for Science reviewed the Department's existing policy on accreditation. He decided to re-confirm the existing policy of recognition for the United Kingdom Accreditation Service (UKAS) as the sole national body for the accreditation, against the recognised international standards, of testing and calibration laboratories and certification and inspection bodies. He confirmed the terms of the memorandum of understanding which my Department, on behalf of the Government as a whole, has with UKAS and which sets out the activities for which UKAS is recognised along with a number of rights and obligations on both parties.

While my noble Friend concluded that no major structural changes to the UK accreditation system were desirable, he did agree that there would be benefit in a well-targeted, UKAS-driven publicity campaign to raise the profile of UKAS accredited conformity assessment to ensure that the benefits of using UKAS accredited conformity assessment services are properly understood.

Accreditation by UKAS ensures that conformity assessment bodies have been independently assessed to agreed international standards of competence and impartiality by a body which is itself subject to regular assessment and to oversight by Government. For these reasons, while there is no legal requirement for the providers of conformity assessment services to be accredited, the Government recommend the use of UKAS accredited conformity assessment wherever this is an option. The Government also advise purchasers to look for the National Accreditation Marks, which UKAS and UKAS accredited organisations are able to use under a licensing agreement with my Department, as a sign of Government recognition.

My Department and a number of other Government Departments are therefore supporting the UKAS Accreditation Awareness Campaign which was launched by my noble Friend on 27 November 2000. The campaign is expected to run for the next 18 months and is aimed at increasing the understanding of accreditation within Government itself and, through a series of briefings aimed at business support agencies, within the business community in general and SMEs in particular.

Steel Industry

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the decision by Corus to cut jobs and close plants in the UK; what estimate his Department has made of the effect on local employment that the closures will have; and what measures he is taking to support the steel industry in the UK. [151673]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I have received representations from a variety of sources, including from many Members of Parliament, trade unions and members of the public about the implications of Corus's announcement on 1 February.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has urged Corus to reconsider its decision and pressed the company to engage in a constructive dialogue to identify a better way forward. I am pleased to say that Corus is now talking to the trade unions about their plans.

If Corus proceed with the job cuts announced on 1 February then the Government and the National Assembly for Wales will not walk away from the innocent victims. We are assessing the possible consequences on a contingency basis and will provide help to any individual affected and to the communities in which they live. This will include new job opportunities, retraining and economic regeneration.

The steel industry is a vital part of UK manufacturing and the Government will continue to work closely with all parts of the industry to help ensure its future competitiveness. We and the National Assembly for Wales stand ready to work alongside Corus, other steel companies and the trade unions to identify a way forward that builds on the strengths of the industry and secures its long-term future in the UK.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many withdrawals of nuclear materials from safeguards applied under the tripartite UK-Euratom-IAEA Voluntary Safeguards Agreement there have been since 1 February 2000; and if he will indicate the number which were permanent. [151600]

Ms Hewitt: Information on advance notifications of withdrawals from safeguards made since the start of 2000 is contained in the following table. Data are shown in the same format as in the paper provided on 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 1094W. The withdrawals involved only very small quantities of material to be used for analytical purposes and are all regarded as permanent. Annual updates of information on withdrawals in future years will be made available on the non-proliferation section of the DTI website www.dti.gov.uk/non-proliferation.

Summary of notifications of withdrawals from safeguards (January 2000 to February 2001)

Number of withdrawal notifications (by type of nuclear material involved[1])	Reason for withdrawal
Two notifications involving plutonium (Pu), mg quantities One notification involving depleted natural and low enriched uranium (DNLEU), mg quantities Three notifications involving thorium (Th), mg quantities	Material to be used for analytical purposes (eg samples, standards/tracers and/or in instrument calibration)[2] (from NPL Teddington)

[1] The tabulated information covers advance notifications of withdrawal approved by DTI and which resulted in the eventual withdrawal of nuclear material from safeguards.

[2] There are no facilities outside safeguards which manufacture material in such quantities and forms, and defence establishment requirements for these specialist materials have therefore been met by supply from civil organisations.

British Association for Shooting and Conservation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he (a) has taken and (b) plans to take to determine the accuracy of the annual returns made in each of the last six years by the British Association for Shooting and Conservation Ltd., Industrial and Provident Societies Act 1965 Registration No. 28488 R. [151267]

Ms Hewitt: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of Companies House. I have asked him to reply direct to the hon. Gentleman.

Letter from J. S. Holden to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 1 March 2001:

I have been asked to reply to your recently tabled Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in respect of Companies House Executive Agency.

The British Association for Shooting and Conservation Ltd is an industrial and provident society, and therefore is not required by law to file annual return and accounts with Companies House but instead with The Registry of Friendly Societies. The only entry with Companies House is on the index of names as required by the legislation.

The Registry of Friendly Societies, 25 The North Colonnade, Canary Wharf, London E14 5HS, is the government department which has responsibility under the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts for the registration of industrial and provident societies.

Credit Company Blacklists

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the Lord Chancellor about re-examining the role of the courts in relation to the black-listing of individuals by credit companies. [150853]

Ms Hewitt: I have not had any discussion with my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor.

Serco Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the contracts that exist between Serco and the Department, its executive agencies and associated public bodies; and if he will list those which have existed in the last three years. [151346]

Ms Hewitt: The Department has a contract with NPL Management Ltd., a wholly owned subsidiary of Serco, to operate the National Physical Laboratory. Serco is also a partner in Laser (Teddington II) Ltd., the consortium who will be providing serviced accommodation for the National Physical Laboratory, under a PFI arrangement.

Information on contracts with suppliers is not held centrally, and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I have asked the Chief Executives of our Executive Agencies and associated public bodies to reply separately to this question.

Ceramic Products Imports

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will undertake an inquiry into the practice of companies importing manufactured ceramic products from outside the EU, decorating such products and adding to them a made in England back stamp; and if he will make a statement. [151544]

Ms Hewitt: It is already a criminal offence under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 for a person in the course of a trade or business to apply false or misleading statements to goods, including statements about the origin of those goods. For the purposes of the Act goods are deemed to have been manufactured or produced in the country in which they last underwent a treatment or process resulting in a substantial change. The Act is enforced by the local authorities' trading standards service and any instances of false or misleading back-stamping should be brought to their attention.

Combined Heat and Power Stations

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decisions on the proposals by Dalkia Services plc to build combined heat and power stations at the Zeneca Agrochemicals works at Huddersfield and the AstraZeneca works at Macclesfield. [152259]

Mr. Hain: I have today given clearance under section 14(1) of the Energy Act 1976 to Dalkia Utilities Services plc to build a 20 megawatt gas-fired combined heat and power station at the Zeneca Agrochemicals works at Huddersfield and a 13 megawatt gas-fired combined heat and power station at the AstraZeneca works at Macclesfield.

Combined heat and power plants are designed to produce both electricity and usable heat. They have environmental benefits due to their high levels of energy efficiency.

The decision demonstrates the Government's continuing commitment to promote CHP, wherever practicable, and our commitment to reduced emissions of carbon to fulfil the promises we gave at Kyoto.

Copies of the Press Notice and decision letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

Trans-Balkan Oil Pipeline

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has provided export credits for the Trans-Balkan oil pipeline. [151583]

Mr. Caborn: ECGD has not been approached for support and no export credits have been provided for this project.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Southern Africa (Peacekeeping)

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom support for regional peacekeeping training in Southern Africa. [152324]

Mr. Robin Cook: In view of the deteriorating situation in Zimbabwe, the British Military Advisory and Training Team (BMATT) for Southern Africa will relocate from Harare to the UK at the end of March 2001. The team has played an important role in enhancing the capacity of the countries of the Southern Africa Development Community to contribute to international peace support operations. We will continue to look for alternative locations from which the team can carry on this work with the countries of the region.

Trans-Balkan Oil Pipeline

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his EU counterparts concerning the Trans-Balkan oil pipeline; and if he will make a statement. [151584]

Mr. Vaz: The Foreign Secretary has had no discussions on this matter with EU or other colleagues.

Arms Exports (Western Sahara)

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions took place between his Department and the United Nations in New York concerning the granting of UK arms export licences for the refurbishment of guns situated in Western Sahara; on what date; and who took part in the discussions; [148691]

(2) if the mandate of MINURSO includes a duty to oversee the refurbishment of Moroccan guns in Western Sahara; and what discussions his Department has had on this subject with (a) the United Nations and (b) other interested parties; [148690]

(3) what reports he has received concerning direct approaches from UK arms manufacturers to the United Nations concerning (a) Her Majesty's Government's refusal to permit the sale of spare parts for the refurbishment of Moroccan guns on Western Sahara and (b) the subsequent appeal against this refusal; [148687]

(4) what correspondence has passed between his Department and the United Nations staff in (a) New York, (b) Morocco and (c) Tindouf concerning UK arms export licences for the provision of spare parts to refurbish Moroccan guns for use in Western Sahara; [148693]

(5) what discussions have taken place between his Department and the United Nations, including MINURSO, in (a) Morocco, (b) Western Sahara and (c) Tindouf concerning the granting of UK arms export licences for the refurbishment of guns situated in Western Sahara; on what dates; and who was involved in the discussions; [148692]

(6) what (a) discussions have taken place and (b) correspondence been exchanged between his Department and the United Nations concerning the capability of MINURSO to oversee the refurbishment of Moroccan guns situated in Western Sahara; [148688]

(7) what objections have been made by the United Nations to the Government concerning the Government's refusal of arms export licences for spare parts to refurbish Moroccan guns situated in Western Sahara; on what date; what the nature of the representations was; and what his Department's response was. [148689]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 5 February 2001]: Foreign and Commonwealth Office and United Nations officials routinely discuss a wide range of issues relating to Western Sahara in New York and the region.

As set out in the Secretary of State's evidence to the Quadripartite Committee on 30 January, in 1998 a British company applied for an export licence in order, inter alia, to refurbish Moroccan guns in Western Sahara.

In late 1998, as a result of contacts between Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials and MINURSO in the region, Ministers came to the preliminary view that, if Moroccan guns were refurbished, this would not violate the terms of the UN-sponsored cease-fire between Morocco and the Polisario Front which has been in place since 1991. The UN told FCO officials in April 1999 that refurbishment could be considered as neutral. Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials also understand that, under the terms of the Military Agreement signed between MINURSO and Morocco and MINURSO and Polisario, MINURSO would play a role in monitoring the process of refurbishing the guns.

In discussions between Foreign and Commonwealth Office and United Nations officials in New York this subject was referred to on 1 February 1999, 16 February 1999, 23 February 1999, 3 March 1999, 21 and 28 May 1999 and 21 June 1999.

On 21 June 1999, the United Nations Department for Peace Keeping Operations in New York confirmed that refurbishment of the guns would not be in breach of the existing military arrangements between MINURSO and the two parties; and that, in accordance with these arrangements, MINURSO would be in a position to monitor the procedure of the refurbishment of the Moroccan guns on the ground. This is set out in Military Agreement between the two parties and MINURSO of 1997.

It is not for the United Nations to object or not to any refusal by HMG of an arms export licence. The United Nations role is to monitor the cease-fire between the two parties.

We are not aware of any direct approaches from the UK arms manufacturers to the United Nations concerning refurbishment of Moroccan guns in Western Sahara. However, in their letter of appeal of 1 October 1998, the applicant asserted that refurbishment did not contravene the cease-fire and that MINURSO could monitor any refurbishment.

"Bridges into the Future"

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what events were organised as part of the "Bridges into the Future" strategy in 2000; and what events are planned for 2001. [148885]

Mr. Wilson: The FCO organised over 20 promotional events around the country in 2000 targeted on visible minority ethnic communities as part of its Minority Ethnic Strategy, "Bridges into the Future". We also hosted events in the Foreign Office main building, took part in careers fairs and organised a work shadowing scheme targeted on young members of minority ethnic communities. A similar programme of events is being organised this year.

Sathya Sai Movement

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to publicise the UNESCO Clarification of 15 September 2000 relating to allegations of sexual abuse involving youths and children at the ashram of the Sathya Sai movement in Puttaparthi, India. [151562]

Mr. Wilson: The text of the UNESCO Clarification can be found on the UNESCO website at: http://unesco.org/education/highlights/media—advisory.htm, and can be made available to Members through the Library of the House.

Israel

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates representations were made by the European Union to the Government of Israel in the context of the EU-Israel Association Agreement, on human rights related issues since the start of the Al Aqsa intifada; and what responses have been received. [151136]

Mr. Wilson: The European Union delivered demarches to the Government of Israel on Israeli obstacles to humanitarian assistance (5 February) and on the Israeli policy of targeted physical eliminations (21 January). The EU made a further statement on 13 February which deplored the practice of eliminations or extra judicial killings of Palestinians by the Israeli security forces. The General Affairs Council has repeatedly called for closures to be lifted, most recently on 26 February. Within the framework of the EU-Israel dialogue on the Palestinian economy, the EU has also urged Israel to lift the closures and resume the payment of revenues withheld from the Palestinian Authority.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for the period between the commencement of the Home Detention Curfew scheme and 31 January 2001 inclusive (a) the total number of prisoners released on the scheme, (b) the number of prisoners convicted of each specific offence who were released on the scheme, with a breakdown of the offences committed, including specific offences committed by prisoners normally classified under the categories (i) other homicide and attempted homicide, (ii) other violence against the person, (iii) drug offence, (iv) assaults and (v) other offences, including a breakdown of the prisoners normally classified in the sub-category of other offences called other offences, (c) the average sentence (i) received and (ii) served, and the average period spent on the scheme, in respect of each specific offence, (d) the number of prisoners released on the scheme, with a breakdown of the offences committed, who (i) breached the conditions of the curfew, (ii) disappeared and were recaptured, (iii) disappeared and remain unlawfully at large and (iv) had their licences revoked, and for what reasons, (e) a breakdown of the specific offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme while on the scheme, including all offences committed by prisoners who committed more than one offence and (f) a breakdown of the specific offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme who committed a further offence while on the scheme that was similar in character to that for which they were originally convicted, including all offences committed by prisoners who committed more than one offence; and if he will make a statement. [148089]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 1 February 2001]: I have written to the right hon. Member, and placed a copy of the letter in the Library.

South Yorkshire Police Authority

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the value was of (a) the Government's financial settlement for the South Yorkshire Police Authority and (b) additional Government support for crime reduction in the Doncaster borough in each year since 1995–96. [149065]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Central Government supported funding for South Yorkshire Police Authority in each year since 1995–96 is shown in the table.

	£ million (cash terms)
1995–96	147.2
1996–97	154.7
1997–98	158.8
1998–99	165.4
1999–2000	171.3
2000–01	177.2

In addition in 2000–01 South Yorkshire will receive a total of £984,978 from the Crime Fighting Fund. For 2001–02, the Authority will receive a total of £2,538,000. (All Crime Fighting Fund allocations are provisional and dependent on forces meeting recruitment targets).

Projects to the value of £2,050,997 are currently being funded under the Government's Crime Reduction Programme. Three types of project are being funded, Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) and Reducing Burglary schemes (over the period 1999–2000 to 2001–02) and a Neighbourhood Wardens Scheme (for the period 2001–02 to 2002–03). £1.395 million is being invested in CCTV, £0.607 million in Reducing Burglary and £0.049 million in the Neighbourhood Warden Scheme.

Several smaller sums have been provided for the Doncaster Community Safety Partnership and the New Deal for Communities Partnership. Doncaster Regeneration Partnership has also invested in crime reduction projects via its Single Regeneration Budget Schemes.

Records are not maintained of funding which has contributed specifically to crime reduction in Doncaster prior to the launch of the Crime Reduction Programme in 1999.

Police Grant

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 2001, Official Report, column 72W, to the hon. Member for Stourbridge (Ms Shipley) if he will express the percentage change in funding allocation to each police authority per head of resident population in each police authority. [149180]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The percentage change in funding allocation for 2001–02 compared with 2000–01 to each police authority per head of resident population is given in the table.

Resident population is one of a number of indicators used in the calculation of the police funding formula. Details of the indicators and their value in determining the allocation for individual forces are set out in The Police Grant Report (England and Wales) 2001–02, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Street Robberies

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of street robberies which (a) involved and (b) did not involve the theft of a mobile phone for every quarter since 1999 in Battersea; and if he will make a statement. [151150]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information in the table has been provided by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, and represents the details for Wandsworth borough of which area Battersea forms a part.

Street crime in Wandsworth

Number of offences

Period	Street crime[1] in Wandsworth involving the theft of telephone equipment (including mobile phones)	Other street crime in Wandsworth	Total street crime[1] in Wandsworth

July to September 2000	162	214	376
October to December 2000	165	200	365

[1] The Metropolitan police define street crime as robberies and thefts from the person.

Armenian Massacre

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide for a memorial day in recognition of the Armenian massacre in the early 20th century. [151438]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The British Government have always condemned the appalling massacre of Armenians in 1915–16. Armenians already commemorate that tragic episode in their history on 24 April each year. This is not a national memorial day throughout Britain and we have no plans to make it one but this should not be seen as failing to acknowledge and sympathise with the victims and descendants of that atrocity.

Prison Visiting Regulations

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will re-classify grandchildren as family members for the purposes of the regulations governing visits to prisoners. [151442]

Mr. Boateng: Prison Service guidance on visits does not define the term "family member", although it lists family members who should be regarded as "close relatives", whose visits to a prisoner should be refused only in exceptional circumstances. The position of grandchildren and grandparents, who do not currently fall within this definition, is being considered as part of the Prison Service's current review of visits policy.

Police Authorities

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the amounts of annual payments for 2000–01 made to police authorities will be published. [150686]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 26 February 2001]: I understand that the hon. Member's question relates to the payments made to police authorities for the additional policing costs incurred by forces as a result of the fuel distribution emergency last year.

Where details of actual expenditure incurred by forces were submitted by 31 January, grant covering 90 per cent. of the approved cost will be paid by the end of this financial year. The balance will be paid on receipt of a statement certified by the police authority's external auditor. Grant payments in 2000–01 are likely to be of the order of £5.3 million. I will place details of the payments made to individual police authorities in the Library once they have been finalised following audit.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, dated 27 December 2000, with regard to Mrs. Vida Obiri (Vida Obiri Yeboah-Burgess). [151278]

Mr. Straw: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 16 February.

Passport Fraud

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 February 2001, Official Report, column 606W, on passport fraud, in how many cases of fraudulent issuing of British passports his Department's staff were involved. [151357]

Mrs. Roche: The statistics provided in my answer of 7 February 2001, Official Report, column 606W, on passport fraud related to customer frauds only and did not include cases in which members of staff were complicit.

From 1991 to 2000, eight members of Passport Agency staff were convicted for fraudulently issuing passports. A further five members of staff were subject to internal disciplinary procedures as a result of their involvement in passport fraud. The Passport Agency's records indicate that these cases involved the fraudulent issue of 117 passports in total.

Community Relations Councils

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the future funding of the community relations councils in Scotland. [151555]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Race Equality Councils (REC's) are co-funded by the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE), local authorities and other bodies. I understand that the CRE is consulting with REC's in Scotland as elsewhere about how to improve delivery of race equality.

Departmental Policies (Norwich, North)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, including statistical information relating as directly as possible to the constituency, the effect on the Norwich, North constituency of his Department's policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [151142]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Home Office is working to build a safe, just and tolerant society in which the rights and responsibilities of individuals, families and communities are properly balanced, and the protection and security of the public are maintained. Detailed information on the impact of Home Office policies across the full range of responsibilities is set out in Home Office annual reports. A copy of the most recent report, Home Office Annual Report 1999–2000, is available in the Library. Information on recorded crime and policing is also published. 'Recorded Crime England and Wales, 12 months to September 2000' and 'Police Service Strength England and Wales, 30 September 2000' can be found in the Library. The recorded crime statistics include information on recorded crime by Basic Command Unit and Crime and Disorder partnerships.

The impact of Home Office policies and actions is not normally examined by constituency and the statistics which the Department collects, such as recorded crime, cannot be matched in the way requested although set out are examples relating to the Norwich, North constituency or the immediate locality:

Targeted Policing

One scheme for £600,000 joining the Norfolk, Lincolnshire and Cambridgeshire police forces will cover the Fenlands area. The scheme will address rural crime and burglary.

Close Circuit Television (CCTV)

One scheme, an extension to the existing Norwich city centre system, has been submitted under round two of the CCTV initiative. The bid for £200,000 covering Norwich, North and Norwich, South is currently under consideration.

Reducing Burglary Initiative

One scheme for £38,000 covering Coslany ward, Norwich, has been received under round three of the Reducing Burglary Initiative.

Youth Offending Teams (YOTs)

The Norfolk YOT covers the constituency of Norwich, North. The YOT is making a full contribution to reducing delays within the court process for young offenders by producing 80 per cent. of all courts reports within agreed timescales. The YOT is also working in partnership with Youth Court Panels in order to establish a joint approach to tackling youth crime.

To ensure that the needs of victims of youth crime are met through restorative justice measures, the YOT is working in partnership with the Norfolk Victim Support Charitable Trust. A joint working protocol has been agreed and implemented benefiting victims and 70 per cent. of all intervention work with young offenders includes a focus on victim issues. The YOT is also working in partnership with the National Society of Prevention of Cruelty to Children in the delivery of programmes for parents of young offenders to assist them to manage difficult behaviour with confidence, consistency and reliability. Links have also been established by the YOT with the local Drug Action Team in order to commission services for young substance misusers. The YOT is already having a significant impact on youth crime in Norfolk as a whole: 60 per cent. of all young people referred to the YOT have completed court orders without reoffending, while 80 per cent. of all young offenders released from prison have not reoffended.

Norfolk (including the Norwich area) is benefiting from the Youth Justice Board's development fund which has awarded grants of approximately £1.1 million over three years for one bail support scheme and four intervention programmes across the county.

More generally, all of the policies of the Home Office will impact on the residents of Norwich, North to a greater or lesser extent. For example:

376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships have been established;

racial harassment and racially motivated crimes have been made criminal offences by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998;

the asylum backlog has been cut from 103,495 at the end of January 2000 to 66,195 by the end of December 2000;

good progress is being made in reducing the incidence of fire deaths in England and Wales. They have dropped from 605 in 1997 to 534 in 1999.

Information on the Home Office and its policies is also published on its website (www.homeoffice.gov.uk).

Animal Cruelty

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were charged with cruelty to animals in England and Wales in each of the last three years. [151015]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the number of persons charged with an offence is not collected centrally.

However, information taken from the Home Office's Court Proceedings Database showing the number of persons prosecuted and convicted of offences relating to animal cruelty during the period 1997–99 is given in the table.

Smoking (Prisons)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the rules which operate within prisons with regard to smoking by (a) prisoners and (b) prison officers on duty; [151163]

(2) what arrangements are made to prevent prisoners from being exposed to tobacco smoke against their will. [151162]

Mr. Boateng: The policy on smoking in Prison Service premises is set out in "Instruction to Governors 16/1996", issued on 21 March 1996 (a copy of which can be found in the Library). It seeks to ensure that prisoners are not exposed to tobacco smoke against their will.

In particular, smoking is banned in all visits areas and governors are asked to consider bans in other communal areas and make arrangements to prevent smoking in consulting rooms in health care centres. There should also be provision for prisoners who smoke to smoke away from non-smoking prisoners within patient areas. So far as is reasonably practicable, non-smoking prisoners are not expected to share a cell with smokers.

The policy is under review and it is expected to follow that of health authorities which are required to operate a smoking cessation service to support those who want to give up.

New Prison (Peterborough)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the economic benefits to Peterborough from the siting of a new prison in the city in terms of (a) direct and (b) indirect employment. [151567]

Mr. Boateng: The assessment made in 1997 and reiterated at the public inquiry into the new prison in 1998 was that it would create an estimated 400 direct and 440 indirect jobs during construction and 350 direct and 190 indirect jobs once the prison opens. However, these can only be indicative estimates and precise staffing figures will be dependent on the design and operational policies of the contractor selected to design, build and run the prison.

Police Constables (Benefits)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of serving police constables who are in receipt of Working Families Tax Credit. [151238]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 26 February 2001]: I have made no such estimate.

Prison Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on agreeing Service Level Agreement standards for Prison Service establishments; and if he will make a statement. [151623]

Mr. Boateng: Service Level Agreements (SDAs) have been developed and piloted during this financial year. The purpose of the SDA is to provide three year business plan agreements between the Area Manager and Governor of a prison, and to integrate Prison Service Performance Standards into the business planning process.

SDAs covering all prison establishments are scheduled to be agreed by the end March for 2001–02.

Reconvictions

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the reconviction rates were for (a) all prisoners, (b) male prisoners and (c) young offenders for each year from 1992 to 2000; and if he will make a statement. [151762]

Mr. Boateng: Two year reconviction rates for standard list offences following release from prison between 1992 and 1997 are shown in the tables. Figures for subsequent years are not yet available. Changes in the standard list of offences recorded are estimated to have increased the 1994 figure by about 1 per cent., the 1995 figure by about 1.4 per cent. and the 1996 and 1997 figures by about 1.9 per cent.

Immigration Officers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers there were for each function in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [151763]

Mrs. Roche: The numbers of immigration officers for each function (Ports and Enforcement) are set out in the table.

Safe Cells

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many safe cells have been installed since 7 July 2000; [151825]

(2) how many people have committed suicide since 7 July 2000; how many of them were (a) female, (b) male, (c) remand prisoners and (d) aged under 21 years; and how many suicides took place in safe cells. [151824]

Mr. Boateng: No safer cells have been installed since 7 July 2000, but 1,000 are planned in the three years from April 2001. Rye Hill prison which opened in January this year and Dovegate prison (which will open later this year) will have over 1,000 cells in which elements of the safer cell are incorporated.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 5 February a new three-year strategy to reduce prisoner suicide and self-harm in prisons. One strand of the strategy will be physical improvements to reception and induction areas, including the creation of more safer cells, crisis suites and gated cells that enable staff to watch closely at-risk prisoners.

There have been the following numbers of self-inflicted deaths since 7 July 2000: (a) female—3; (b) male—46; (c) remand prisoners—28; and (d) aged under 21 years—11. There have been no self-inflicted deaths in safer cells.

DNA Testing

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requirements he sets for the accurate monitoring of DNA testing. [151681]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The DNA database is a national database which currently holds details of individuals suspected, cautioned and convicted of a recordable offence, together with their DNA profiles.

The Home Office Circular 16/95: National DNA Database sets out the general conditions relating to the establishment and use of the National DNA database.

DNA profiling technologies have developed rapidly over the last 10 years. Significant advances have been made resulting in improved sensitivity and these enable DNA to be extracted from increasingly smaller crime scene stains. The current technique, FSS SGMplus™, analyses 11 areas on the DNA molecule. FSS SGMplus™ has been in use since September 1999 and has a discriminatory power of 1 in a billion. This has a considerable advantage over the SGM technique previously used, which had a discriminatory power of 1 in 50 million.

The reliability of DNA evidence is assured through the internal quality assurance measures adopted by the Forensic Science Service and through their external accreditation by the British Standards Institute and the United Kingdom Accreditation Service to the BS EN ISO 9000 and M10 National Standards. This independent accreditation of the DNA process involves regular audit to ensure the standards are maintained.

Hinduja Brothers

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what communications related to the immigration and nationality status of the Hinduja family the Home Office has received from (a) Conservative and (b) Liberal Democrat Members of either House as well as other (i) elected representatives and (ii) office holders of each party; and if he will make a statement. [149114]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 7 February 2001]: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 24 January that he had asked former Treasury Solicitor, Sir Anthony Hammond QC, to review the full circumstance surrounding approaches to the Home Office in connection with the possibility of an application for naturalisation by Mr. S. P. Hinduja in 1998. Sir Anthony started his review on Thursday 25 January. After an initial reading of the papers, Sir Anthony decided that, in order to fulfil the terms of reference of his review of the application for naturalisation of S. P. Hinduja, it is appropriate for him to look at the circumstances of the granting of naturalisation in respect of G. P. Hinduja because the circumstances of both applications are closely related. For the same reason, he also decided that it is appropriate for him to look at the circumstances surrounding the inquiries about naturalisation in respect of Prakesh Hinduja. I understand that Sir Anthony hopes to complete his review shortly. The report will be published and copies will be placed in the Vote Office and the Library. It would be inappropriate for me to pre-empt the outcome of this review.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on the granting of exceptional leave to remain for asylum seekers from the Democratic Republic of Congo. [151268]

Mrs. Roche: Each asylum application is considered individually on its merits. In cases where asylum has been refused, exceptional leave to remain may be granted on a discretionary basis in individual cases. Exceptional leave may be granted to a person for a wide number of reasons, but it is most usually granted for compassionate or humanitarian reasons, or to protect from ill treatment a person who does not otherwise qualify for asylum under the terms of the 1951 United Nations Refugee Convention.

Postal Votes

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that electoral registration officers will use only new postal and proxy voting forms which accord with the provisions of the Representation of the People Act 2000. [150726]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 26 February 2001]: There is no prescribed form for making absent vote applications. My Department has provided a specimen postal vote application form to electoral registration officers but it is for them to determine whether absent vote applications meet the requirements as set out in the Representation of the People Regulations 2001.

The Home Office will, however, be writing to these officers encouraging them to consider making their forms available to all political parties and to be proactive in bringing absent voting arrangements to the attention of voters locally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Veterans

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the procedures for granting tribunals to disabled war veterans claiming a war pension. [151595]

Mr. Bayley: Most decisions concerning entitlement to or the assessment of a war pension can be appealed to an independent Pensions Appeal Tribunal. The notification of a decision tells war pensioners if there is a right of appeal and the procedure for doing so.

Regulations laid on 26 February will, additionally, ensure that war pensioners have appeal rights which are similar to those provided for in the Social Security scheme. They provide for war pensioners to be able to appeal, from 9 April 2001, against the majority of decisions that affect their war pension, including for the first time, most decisions in respect of supplementary allowances.

Far East Prisoners of War

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many widows and widowers will lose benefits due to the receipt of compensation payable to former Japanese prisoners of war and their families. [151294]

Mr. Bayley: No widow or widower of a former Japanese prisoner of war should lose benefit as a result of their or their late partner's receipt of this special payment. The Income Support, Jobseeker's Allowance, Housing Benefit, and Council Tax Benefit Regulations were amended from 1 February 2001 to ensure the payments are disregarded in the calculation of benefit entitlement.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many new Severe Disablement Allowance awards were made each month since March 2000. [151166]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Severe Disablement Allowance awards

	Number
2000
April	1,100
May	800
June	1,300
July	1,200
August	900

Note:
Figures are taken from a 5 per cent. sample of the benefit computer system and exclude a small number of cases held clerically. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred.

Pensioners' Incomes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the average nominal increase in pensioners' incomes since 1990 (a) in total and (b) by source of income. [151640]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested.

Medical Malpractice

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what investigations have been conducted over the past two years into allegations of malpractice by doctors involved with certifying benefit claims. [150530]

Mr. Bayley: Medical Services have identified six cases of alleged malpractice by doctors involved in providing medical reports for benefit claims in the past two years. The Medical Services' Serious Complaints Investigations Team is currently investigating all six cases.

National Insurance Rebates

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the primary and secondary contracted-out National Insurance rebates will be in the financial year starting in April 2002. [151765]

Mr. Rooker: Reports by the Government Actuary and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on the proposed level of contracted-out National Insurance rebates for the five years from 6 April 2002 have been laid before both Houses today, together with draft Rebate Orders.

New Deal (Jarrow)

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operation of the New Deal for (a) older people, (b) lone parents and (c) disabled people in the Jarrow constituency. [150465]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

The New Deals benefit the labour market because participants leave the programme better equipped, motivated and skilled for the rest of their working lives. For the period ending November 2000, 824 people have joined the New Deal 25+ programme, resulting in 122 jobs. Also, 47 people have started work with the New Deal 50+ employment credit. 540 people have started New Deal for Lone Parents in Jarrow, resulting in 275 jobs. We know that many other people will have left the New Deal for employment without telling the Employment Service—these people are not included in the figures. Figures for New Deal for Disabled People are not yet available at constituency level. The South Tyneside pilot area of the New Deal for Disabled People (NDDP) includes the constituency of Jarrow. All the NDDP pilots are making a valuable contribution to our learning and experience of which forms of extra help and support work best.

PRIME MINISTER

Prime Ministerial Apartments

Mr. Chope: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the public expenditure incurred on refurbishment of the Prime Minister's private apartments at Nos. 10 and 11 Downing street in each of the last 10 years. [151430]

The Prime Minister: Figures are only available since 1993.

For the years 1993–98, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 66W. For 1998–99 I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 28 July 2000, Official Report, columns 969–70W. For 1999–2000 I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes on 5 June 2000, Official Report, columns 49–50W.

The cost of works in the No. 11 flat (expenditure paid or committed) to date this financial year is £44,063 including recoverable VAT. No further work is planned for this financial year.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister how much was spent on (a) renovation, (b) repair, (c) improvements and (d) additions to the residential flats for his occupation at Nos. 10 or 11 Downing street in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000; and what his estimate is for 2000–01. [151373]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 February 2001]: It is not possible to disaggregate expenditure in the manner requested as no distinction is made between maintaining, decorating and otherwise improving residential accommodation at Nos. 10 or 11 Downing street as projects frequently cover two or more of these categories of work. For details of expenditure on refurbishment of the flat at No. 11 Downing street, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) today.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the potential savings arising from the Community Legal Service receiving a portion of the damages awarded in civil cases funded by legal aid. [151548]

Mr. Lock: A contingency fund was considered during the passage of the Access to Justice Act 1999, and the Act contains a power to create one. However, the Government have no plans to do so.

It would be virtually impossible to operate a contingency fund in relation to family litigation or cases where victims are seeking injunctions to prevent domestic violence. Costs are often not awarded at the end of these cases, or they are unlikely to be enforced, or there may be no damages out of which costs could be recovered from the funded client. Such a fund cannot operate where funding is provided for some Children Act cases, since funding is granted without a merits test. It would also be impossible to operate Legal Help (formerly Green Form advice) on a contingency fund basis, since cases rarely become formal proceedings where costs or damages would become recoverable.

The Government believe that, as far as possible, litigants should receive the full amount of compensation to which they are entitled. That would not be the case with a contingency fund.

The Government also doubt the practicality of operating a contingency fund where the private funding of litigation through conditional fee agreements and after-the-event insurance is possible. Adverse selection would result in cases with higher prospects of success funded privately on a conditional fee basis, leaving cases with weaker prospects of success to be supported by the contingency fund. That would leave the fund vulnerable to significant financial problems.

Accordingly, and while not ruling out the possibility of operating a contingency fund in any circumstances, the Government have no plans to introduce such a fund in England and Wales.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what his estimate is of the total financial awards from successful civil cases funded by legal aid in the latest financial year for which figures are available. [151549]

Mr. Lock: Due to changes to the Legal Services Commission's computer systems the latest available figures are for 1997–98. The total amount of moneys awarded or agreed in publicly funded civil cases was £1.37 billion. This information relates principally to one-off payments, and excludes most payments by instalment, whether in matrimonial or non-matrimonial cases.

Jury Service

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) men and (b) women were selected for jury service at courts covering the Greater London area during the last 12 months. [150442]

Jane Kennedy: Jurors are selected on a random basis from among those people who are registered on the electoral rolls for England and Wales. The total number of people summoned for jury service at courts covering the Greater London area in the last 12 months was 135,858. The breakdown of how many men and how many women were summoned is not recorded, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Deputy Stipendiary Magistrates (General Election)

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what instructions (a) she and (b) her Department have given to deputy stipendiary magistrates concerning the avoidance of party political activity during the next General Election; and if she will make a statement. [151771]

Jane Kennedy: Neither I nor my officials have given any instructions to Deputy District Judges (Magistrates Courts), as they are now called, specifically in relation to political activity during the next General Election. However, the memorandum on conditions of appointment and terms of service issued to every Deputy District Judge (Magistrates Courts) states plainly that they are expected to refrain from any activity, political or otherwise, which would conflict with their judicial office or be seen to compromise their impartiality. They are advised that in the event of any doubt they should contact my officials in the Judicial Group for advice.

CABINET OFFICE

GM Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the assessment was by MISC6 of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food report on separation for GM field trials; which Ministers were given it; and if she will make MISC6's assessment of the report publicly available. [151538]

Marjorie Mowlam: It is established practice under exemption two of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees.

HEALTH

Flu Vaccine

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the take-up rates for flu vaccine as at (a) 1 November and (b) 1 December for each health authority. [141403]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is in the table.

These figures are based on returns sent by health authorities to the Department and represent data collected to 30 November 2000. Uptake on 1 November in several health authorities was affected by delays in supplies from one manufacturer. Nevertheless, the data before 30 November do not reflect the work done by HAs and in primary care to promote uptake.

NHS Trusts (Borrowing Costs)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much each NHS trust has paid for the cost of borrowing in each year since its inception; and if he will make a statement. [149348]

Mr. Denham: The information has been placed in the Library.

The vast majority of National Health Services trust borrowing is internal to the public sector.

Ambulance Services

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funding is being made available to Oxfordshire Ambulance NHS Trust and surrounding trusts to facilitate mergers with neighbouring trusts; [151569]

(2) when he received the South East Region ambulance review; and when he made a decision on it. [151571]

Ms Stuart: No decision has yet been taken about merging ambulance trusts in the south-east.

The ambulance trusts have been reviewing the way in which ambulance services in the south-east are provided to ensure that they are delivered in a way which is consistent with the modernisation of the National Health Service and which ensures they can play a full role in the delivery of emergency and pre-hospital care. Proposals for the future of the service have been produced which will require public consultation. I will be meeting the chairs and chief executives of the ambulance trusts shortly to discuss these proposals.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding will be provided to Oxfordshire Ambulance NHS Trust for paramedic training and the enhancement of skill levels of paramedics. [151570]

Ms Stuart: Funding for paramedic training, both new recruits and refresher training for qualified paramedics, is incorporated in the total budget for providing emergency ambulance services. For 2000–01 the total budget for Oxfordshire Ambulance National Health Service Trust was £10 million.

General Surgery Waiting Lists

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been waiting for general surgery in (a) England, (b) the Southend, West parliamentary constituency and (c) South Essex health authority area for eight weeks or more in (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–01. [151254]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is in the tables.

Data are not available on the number of people waiting longer than eight weeks. Data are collected in time-bands of three months. The Department does not collect data by parliamentary constituencies, so data has been given on England and South Essex health authority.

Expenditure

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the percentage of gross domestic product that Britain spent on health expenditure was in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement. [151525]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 27 February 2001]: Table one shows gross National Health Service expenditure for the United Kingdom as a percentage of gross domestic product from 1979–80 to 2003–04. This shows that, based on latest forecasts, public expenditure on health as a percentage of GDP is set to rise to 6.6 per cent. by 2003–04.

The Department does not produce figures for expenditure on private healthcare. According to Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) data, private healthcare represents about 1 per cent. of GDP. Table two shows total healthcare expenditure as a percentage of GDP from 1979–99, using information from OECD. The OECD does not produce forecast data, but assuming that private healthcare spend as a proportion of GDP remains stable at around 1 per cent., then this percentage will rise to 7.6 per cent. by 2003–04.

Patient Referrals

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health since the publication of the NHS Plan in July 2000, how many health trusts have refused to accept referrals from adjacent primary care groups. [151008]

Mr. Denham: Details on referrals that are not accepted by National Health Service Trusts are not collected centrally and are a matter for local commissioners and the National Health Service Trust concerned.

Medical Mistakes

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the adverse events in NHS hospitals involving the use of (a) an anaesthetic and (b) nitrous oxide in (i) 1998, (ii) 1999 and (iii) 2000; [151604]

(2) if he will list adverse events in NHS hospitals involving (a) erroneous intrathecal injections that should have been given intravenously, (b) erroneous intravenous injections that should have been given intrathecally and (c) other injection errors in (i) 1998, (ii) 1999 and (iii) 2000. [151605]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 27 February 2001]: The information requested is not currently collected centrally.

An expert group, which Ministers asked the Chief Medical Officer to chair, has examined how the National Health Service could more effectively learn from and prevent adverse events in health care. The group's report, "An Organisation with a Memory" was published last year and is available at: www.doh.gov.uk/orgmemreport.

Ministers agreed all 10 recommendations, including the four key categories of serious recurring adverse events initially identified for action. The NHS Plan includes the establishment of a national reporting system for adverse events as a key initiative intended to help protect patients and improve health care.

Detailed proposals are now being developed to establish a national reporting system, which we aim to establish by the end of 2001.

Staff Numbers

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) nurses and (b) ancillary workers there were in each year from 1979 to 1997; and if he will make a statement. [151526]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 27 February 2001]: The data requested are in the tables.

Figures are rounded to the nearest ten. Due to rounding totals may not equal the sum of component parts. Figures exclude agency staff. A new classification of the non-medical workforce was introduced in 1995. Information based on this classification is not directly comparable with earlier years. Decrease in learners due to transition from traditional learners to Project 2000 students from 1990.

NHScat

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce a decision on the creation of NHScat. [151577]

Mr. Denham: The project to create NHScat has been under way since June last year.

NHScat will be available to use by the National Health Service from 1 October 2001.

Norfolk Area Health Authority

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that targeted moneys from Government to the Norfolk area health authority are not diverted from such targets. [151680]

Mr. Denham: Norfolk health authority's allocation for 2001–02 is £550 million of which £15 million has been designated for policy programmes to support the implementation of the NHS Plan.

This will all be used to support NHS Plan initiatives. Negotiations about exactly how this money will be allocated will form part of the discussions surrounding the Norfolk health economy service and financial framework for 2001–02.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Norfolk area health authority on (a) the running costs of and (b) the purchase of equipment for the new PFI hospital in Norwich. [151682]

Mr. Denham: The Eastern Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive is in discussion with the Norfolk health system regarding the funding of the increased running costs of the new Norfolk and Norwich hospital as part of the 2001–02 service and financial framework negotiations.

In addition a package of funding has already been agreed with the Norfolk health system for new and replacement equipment. This will be funded from a combination of trust block allocation, regional strategic capital, equipment leasing and a proportion of the sales proceeds from the old hospital site.

Primary Care Groups (Norfolk)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that primary care groups in Norfolk are not disadvantaged by the development of the new PFI hospital in Norwich. [151764]

Mr. Denham: The decision to proceed with the private initiative scheme was a health economy decision that all relevant health organisations were involved in.

Although primary care groups had not been established when the first business case for the new Norfolk and Norwich hospital was agreed, they subsequently ratified their support for the new hospital by approving the supplementary business case for 144 extra beds, and its financial consequences.

The National Health Service Executive is providing smoothing and transitional support for the higher initial costs of the new hospital. This is in accordance with the undertakings given at the time of approval to ensure other local services would not suffer.

Barnet General Hospital

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what annual interest is paid by the Barnet and Chase Farm Hospitals NHS trust to the consortium developing Barnet general hospital's phase 1b project. [151772]

Mr. Denham: The Barnet hospital phase 1b private finance initiative project will not be completed and brought into use until April 2002. There is no payment made to the consortium in respect of phase 1b until the facilities are available for use, and therefore no annual interest is being paid.

NHS Recruitment

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the annual (a) salary and (b) support costs are of his Department's Director of International Recruitment for Health Services. [151791]

Mr. Denham: The Director of International Recruitment is on detachment from her post as executive nurse director at Hammersmith Hospitals National Health Service Trust. The trust publishes salary details of its senior staff in its annual report. A budget of £37,000 has been secured this year to fund salary, travel and subsistence, support and conference costs.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what targets have been set for the Director of International Recruitment for Health Services for the number of foreign recruited nurses working in the NHS. [151790]

Mr. Denham: The level of international nurse recruitment required will be assessed in the light of the impact on staffing levels of the increased training places since 1997, and the success of the retention and returner initiatives already in place.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to ensure that nurses are not recruited by the NHS from developing countries where there are shortages of trained nursing staff. [151789]

Mr. Denham: The Department issued guidance on the recruitment of nurses from developing countries in the international nurse recruitment guidance published in November 1999. A copy was placed in the Library. The guidance will be reinforced for all healthcare professions in the Code of Practice for International Recruitment which is due to be published shortly.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the representations he has received from foreign Governments about recruitment for the NHS of (a) nurses and (b) doctors in their countries. [148276]

Mr. Denham: Over the last year we have received representations from the Spanish Government with regards to the possibility of recruiting both doctors and nurses from Spain to work in the National Health Service.

A Government to Government agreement was signed with Spain in November 2000 to promote closer working between the two countries. As part of this agreement, the first 63 nurses arrived in the north-west from Spain on 19 January 2000 to work in four NHS trusts. Following this successful recruitment, the initiative is being extended to medical staff through a pilot project also being led by North West Region.

I am also aware that the Department has received representations over the last year from:

Latvia
Philippines
Russia
China
Tunisia Caribbean
South Africa
Zimbabwe.

Representations made by South Africa and Zimbabwe stipulated that both health sectors need the services of nurses and stressed that their recruitment outside of the country could not be supported.

Guidance was issued by the Department on international recruitment stressing how essential it is that all NHS employers ensure that they do not actively recruit from developing countries who are experiencing nursing shortages of their own.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on his plans to create a new CAP paying agency; and if he will make a statement. [150866]

Ms Quin: We have received no recent representations on the Ministry's plans to create a new CAP paying agency. A summary of the responses to the consultation exercise which we carried out last summer is available on the MAFF website.

Plans for creating the new CAP paying agency are progressing well. We are providing monthly updates to staff affected by the creation of the new agency, and will shortly be inviting key external stakeholders to the first meeting of a CAPPA users' group. This group will provide a forum to help us to ensure that the new agency takes full account of the needs of its customers.

We will be writing to all our customers next months with details of how the restructuring of MAFF's presence in the regions will affect them.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Relations (Expenditure)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure was in his Department for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000, and what the planned expenditure and breakdown of expenditure for 2000–01 is on (i) public opinion research, (ii) television, radio and newspaper advertising and (iii) direct mail. [149267]

Dr. Reid: The total expenditure and the breakdown of expenditure for the Department for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000 can be obtained from the Northern Ireland Office 2000 Departmental Report (CM 4621).

The planned expenditure for 2000–01 is as follows:

(i) £340,000

(ii) £1,378,000

(iii) £169,000[1]

[1] Figure relates to the total budget for postage. A provision for direct mail is covered within this figure.

Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what discussions have taken place with the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission about current powers; what problems they have encountered; and what action is being taken to address such problems; [150652]

(2) if the review to be undertaken into the powers of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission will (a) be independent, (b) assess the work of the Commission against the United Nations agreed principles and (c) seek views from the public and interested parties; [150654]

(3) what plans have been made to review the powers of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission. [150653]

Mr. George Howarth: The Northern Ireland Office is in regular contact with the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission on a range of issues, including the extent of its powers under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. Section 69(2) of the Act requires the Commission to submit to the Secretary of State at the end of its first two years of operation recommendations for improving the adequacy and effectiveness of its functions. We have not yet received these recommendations, but expect to do so shortly. We have made clear that we will give full consideration to the Commission's recommendations at that stage. Any subsequent proposals for change will be subject to consultation in the normal way.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what resources have been provided to the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission for the public consultation about the scope of the Bill of Rights. [150645]

Mr. George Howarth: The annual budget of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission was initially set at £750,000, three times that of the Commission's predecessor, to reflect its increased powers and functions. The consultation on the scope for a Bill of Rights was envisaged as an integral part of the Commission's functions and resources for the consultation have therefore been provided within the Commission's core budget. However, we made clear from the outset that we would be prepared to consider bids for increased funding, provided they were accompanied by a properly costed business case. The Commission's first bid for additional funds—including for the consultation on the scope for a Bill of Rights—was received during the Christmas break. It is currently under consideration, and we hope to meet the Commission shortly to discuss their bid more fully.

TREASURY

New Deal (Young People)

14. Mr. Joyce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the New Deal on the employment prospects of young people. [150148]

Mr. Timms: By last November, nearly 270,000 young people had moved from welfare to work through New Deal, already well ahead of the manifesto target of 250,000 in the lifetime of this Parliament. Recent independent evaluation has found that long term youth unemployment is about 40 per cent. lower than it would have been without New Deal.

Working Families Tax Credit

15. Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the impact of the Working Families Tax Credit on reducing child poverty. [150149]

Dawn Primarolo: The introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit, along with other changes to the tax and benefit system made during this Parliament, will lift more than a million children out of poverty.

37. Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what average weekly payment is received by those in receipt of Working Families Tax Credit. [150173]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates are contained in the Working Families Tax Credit Quarterly Enquiries, copies of which are in the Library.

Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

16. Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the monitoring of the performance of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions by the Treasury. [150150]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The performance of the DETR is of course the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister. It is regularly monitored against PSA targets and an assessment is published in the Departmental Annual Report.

Children's Tax Credit

17. Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families in South Swindon will benefit from the children's tax credit. [150151]

Dawn Primarolo: An estimate of the number of families in South Swindon who could benefit from the Children's Tax Credit is not available, but an estimated 475,000 families in the South West area could do so.

21. Ms Keeble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to encourage take-up of the Children's Tax Credit. [150156]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Davidson) on 5 February 2001, Official Report, column 412W.

31. Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the impact of the Children's Tax Credit on family incomes. [150167]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Bradley) on 14 December 2000, Official Report, column 247W.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families will benefit from the Children's Tax Credit in Chorley. [150122]

Dawn Primarolo: An estimate of the number of families in Chorley who will be eligible to claim the Children's Tax Credit (CTC) is unavailable, but an estimate of the number of families in the north-west who will be eligible to claim CTC is 625,000.

Single Parents (Employment Prospects)

18. Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the Government's policies on the employment prospects of single parents. [150152]

Dawn Primarolo: Improving the employment prospects of lone parents is a key priority for the Government. The lone parent employment rate has risen from 44 per cent. in 1997 to over 50 per cent. now—the highest rate for 20 years. Many more lone parents say that they would like to work and so the Government has set a new objective: that 70 per cent. of lone parents are in employment by the end of the decade. Policies such as the New Deal for lone parents, the Working Families Tax Credit and the National Childcare Strategy are already helping the Government to achieve this aim.

Public Service Investment

19. Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what real terms increases he plans in investment in public services relating to health and education in each of the next three years. [150153]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Chancellor announced in last year's Budget real terms growth in UK NHS expenditure of 5.6 per cent, 5.5 per cent. and 5.6 per cent. respectively over the three years to 2003–04.

For UK education expenditure the Chancellor has provided for real terms growth of 4.8 per cent, 5.3 per cent. and 5.4 per cent. for the three years to 2003–04.

Occupational Pension Schemes

20. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the purchase of annuities for occupational pension schemes. [150155]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government keep all areas of the tax system under review.

Euro

22. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the number of retailers planning to accept the euro in advance of any decision to make it legal tender in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [150158]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is entirely a commercial decision for UK businesses to determine whether or not they wish to accept euro, or any foreign currency. The fourth Report on Euro Preparations provides updated information on help available to UK businesses preparing for the introduction of euro cash in the euro area on 1 January 2002.

29. Mr. Syms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on the timing of British participation in the European single currency. [150165]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) on 25 January 2001, Official Report, column 702W.

33. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on economic policy formulation of membership of the European single currency. [150169]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government have said they will only recommend joining a successful single currency if it is in our national economic interest to do so, and if the economic case for the UK joining is clear and unambiguous.

Working Families Tax Credit (Wales)

23. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families in (a) Wales and (b) Bridgend receive Working Families Tax Credit; and how much has been paid to date from public funds. [150159]

Dawn Primarolo: For the number of families in Wales and Bridgend receiving the Working Families Tax Credit, I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) on 22 January 2001, Official Report, column 425W.

Estimates of national expenditure on the WFTC and the Disabled Person's Tax Credit (DPTC) are contained in Table B20 on page 190 of the pre-Budget report, published in November 2000. It is estimated that almost 6 per cent. of total WFTC and DPTC expenditure is paid to recipients in Wales. There are too few cases in the 5 per cent. sample used for analyses of the WFTC to yield a reliable separate estimate for Bridgend.

Disadvantaged Areas

24. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to encourage investment in enterprises in disadvantaged areas. [150160]

30. Mr. Colman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to encourage investment in enterprises in disadvantaged areas. [150166]

Mr. Timms: The Government have set up the Phoenix Fund, under the Small Business Service, to encourage and stimulate enterprise and business creation in disadvantaged areas. The Government are also taking forward the recommendations of the Social Investment Task Force, for example the proposal for a community investment tax credit. The Government are also supporting the Inner City 100, which celebrates the fastest-growing companies in the most disadvantaged areas of 15 inner cities.

Child Poverty

25. Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made towards achieving the target of halving child poverty in 10 years. [150161]

Dawn Primarolo: As a result of tax and benefit measures introduced in this Parliament it is estimated that more than a million children will be lifted out of poverty.

Over 1.1 million families are now receiving the Working Families Tax Credit, nearly 300,000 more than its predecessor, Family Credit, at its peak. Families receiving the WFTC are receiving on average £30 a week more than under Family Credit. A lone parent on Income Support with two children under 11 will be over £25 a week better-off in real terms than in 1997, and a couple nearly £30 a week better-off. In addition, there are now over 300,000 fewer children living in workless households compared to 1997.

Child poverty is a complex problem that requires a multi-dimensional approach. The Government's second annual report on poverty and social exclusions, "Opportunity for All" published in September last year, sets out a further range of child poverty indicators and progress to date. These indicators include the number of children living in low-income households, living in workless households and living in housing below the set standard of adequacy, as well as indicators on education and on health inequalities.

Savings Ratio

26. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the ratio of savings to income over the last four years; and if he will make a statement. [150162]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The November 2000 pre-Budget report gave an assessment of developments in household saving and borrowing in Box A4, page 155.

Taxation

27. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the level of taxation. [150163]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Chancellor receives a large number of representations on tax policy.

VAT (Church Repairs)

28. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has completed his consultation about the relief from VAT for repairs to places of worship. [150164]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 7 February 2001, Official Report, column 662W.

Departmental Performance Targets

32. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the role of the Treasury in setting performance targets for other Departments. [150168]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Performance management is integral to the management of every Government Department and public sector body. Most Departments will set performance targets at a range of levels within the organisation.

As part of the spending review process the discussion of allocation of resources (inputs) is now accompanied by discussion of the level of service that can be achieved (outcomes). Departments set strategic objectives and targets in the form of public service agreements (PSAs). These are discussed at the Cabinet Committee on Public Services and Public Expenditure (PSX) and with the Treasury.

Interest Rates and Mortgages

34. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the effect of the Government's economic policies has been on the level of interest rates and the average cost of mortgages; and if he will make a statement. [150170]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Government policies have delivered economic stability and historically low interest rates. Payments on the average mortgage are over £1,000 a year lower than on average between 1979 and 1997.

World Recession

35. Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is preparing to guard the UK from the effects on the economy of a possible world recession. [150171]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Under the Government's macroeconomic framework, policy-makers are able to react proactively to global developments in a manner that will promote economic stability. The forthcoming Budget, on March 7, will provide an updated assessment of domestic and international developments.

Self-Assessment

36. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what savings have been made as a result of the introduction of self-assessment by the Inland Revenue. [150172]

Dawn Primarolo: The introduction of self-assessment was a long-term investment involving significant costs for the Inland Revenue and savings will emerge by 2005. By the year 2000–01, however, cash savings of £145 million have already been deducted from the Revenue baseline.

Renewal Technologies

38. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on fiscal incentives for renewal technologies. [150174]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government have a range of policies to support renewable energy, including exemption for most renewables from the Climate Change Levy, the proposed Renewables Obligation and £100 million of grants over the next three years to support offshore wind and energy crops.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional cost to manufacturing industry of the introduction of the climate change levy, broken down sector by sector. [150121]

Mr. Timms: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 18 December 2000, Official Report, columns 81–82W.

Unemployment

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of his measures designed to reduce youth and long term unemployment. [150154]

Mr. Timms: Through the New Deal for Young People we have helped nearly 270,000 young unemployed people into jobs, further building upon the Government's manifesto commitment to help 250,000 into jobs this Parliament. In addition, over 60,000 long-term unemployed people have been helped to move from welfare and into work through the New Deal for the Long-Term Unemployed.

Recent independent evaluation of the New Deal for Young People has shown that over 200,000 young people left unemployment earlier than they would have done without the programme, with 60,000 entering into employment.

The New Deal helps the young and long-term unemployed to secure jobs as the most effective way of enhancing their earnings, increasing their skills and securing their future economic independence. Furthermore, New Deal is just part of the Government's package of measures aimed at providing employment opportunity for all, by helping people to compete effectively for jobs, increasing work incentives and addressing the specific labour market problems of particular groups of people or local areas.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many workers were being paid less than £3.70 per hour in real terms in each of the last 20 years. [141681]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 11 February 2001]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 28 February 2001:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your question about the number of workers being paid less than £3.70 per hour in real terms in the past 20 years (141681).

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) has published estimates of the number of jobs paid at less than specific hourly low pay thresholds, in 10p bands, for all workers in the United Kingdom for 1998, 1999 and 2000. These estimates are based on an improved methodology using data from the New Earnings Survey (NES) and Labour Force Survey (LFS). This methodology provides the best estimates for the number of jobs in the UK paid below low hourly rate thresholds.

The equivalent value of £3.70 in real terms has been calculated, using the all items Retail Price Index, as £3.50 for April 1998 and £3.60 for April 1999 to the nearest 10p pay band. The table below gives the number of jobs for workers aged 22 and over paid at less than £3.50, £3.60 and £3.70 for 1998, 1999 and 2000.

Table 1: Number of jobs in the United Kingdom for workers aged 22 and over paid at less than £3.50, £3.60 and £3.70 per hour

Hourly paid less than	Number of jobs (thousands)
	Spring 1998	Spring 1999	Spring 2000
£3.50	1,150	430	180
£3.60	1,400	540	250
£3.70	1,640	1,290	850

This improved methodology cannot be used to produce estimates before spring 1998 because it makes use of an LFS variable that is not available for earlier years. The introduction of the National Minimum Wage (NMW) has changed the distribution of pay rates across the lower pay bands. The NMW was introduced in April 1999 with an adult rate for workers aged 22 and over of £3.60 per hour. The rate was increased to £3.70 per hour in October 2000. The impact of this increase is not reflected in figures for spring 2000 as they relate to an earlier period.

The estimates cannot be used as a measure of non-compliance with the NMW legislation because it is not possible from either the LFS or the NES to identify whether an individual is eligible for NMW rates. For example, it is not possible to identify people such as apprentices, those undergoing accredited training or those with accommodation supplied who are exempt from the NMW or are entitled to lower rates.
